"The chief components of such a program include the firm enforcement of laws relating to equal housing opportunity; the development of appropriate equal housing opportunity criteria for participation in programs affecting housing; the development of information programs; and the development of policies relating to housing marketing practices."

I think it would be most useful if I cover briefly the "equal housing opportunity criteria for participation in programs affecting housing," and "policies relating to housing marketing practices."

In discussing program criteria I will first cover policies involving sites for federally-assisted housing, and then cover policies involving community development projects affecting housing, such as urban renewal and water and sewer grants.

Last August, when I appeared before Senator Mondale's Select Committee, I called attention to the huge new volume of federally-assisted housing and indicated that we were working with the Department of Justice to develop site selection policies governing FHA assisted housing programs. I testified that:

"Pending adoption and publication of such policies the FHA is pursuing an informal policy designed to avoid further concentrations of federally-assisted housing in large, institutional settings or in areas of minority racial concentration."

The President has now spoken with respect to this point, and has said:

"As a major part of our national effort to meet these housing needs -- an effort which is both private and governmental -- federally-assisted housing is being built at a rate approaching 3/4 of a million units a year. These units are needed. They are being built. And they must be built someplace. The question is where."

"If all the federally-assisted units are packed together in one type of community or one kind of location, we will only exacerbate the social and, in all probability the racial isolation of our people from each other."

"If we build federally-assisted instant ghettos, we fail both our communities and the people we are trying to help."

"If we impact or tip the balance of an established community with a flood of low-income families, we do a disservice to all concerned."

"The answers to these practical considerations are not simple -- but they are of great importance."

"Based on a careful review of the legislative history of the 1964 and 1968 Civil Rights Acts, and also of the program context within which the law has developed, I interpret the 'affirmative action' mandate of the 1968 Act to mean that the administration of a housing program should include, among the various criteria by which applications for assistance are judged, the extent to which a proposed project, or the overall development plan of which it is a part, will in fact open up new, nonsegregated housing opportunities that will contribute to decreasing the effects of past housing discrimination. This does not mean that no federally-assisted low- and moderate-income housing may be built within areas of minority concentration. It does not mean that housing officials in Federal agencies should dictate local land use policies. It does mean that in choosing among the various applications for Federal aid, consideration should be given to their impact on patterns of racial concentration."

We have now developed project selection criteria for use by our field personnel which will enable them to apply these policies. Because of their importance, we will not make them immediately effective, but will first circulate them for 30 days for public comment. Copies are available for your review.

There are separate forms for use in evaluating homeownership projects under Section 235, for rental projects under Section 236 or rent supplement, and for public housing. While there are some variations resulting from program differences (the homeownership form has no management criterion, for example) the basic format and approach is the same in each case.

A proposed project will be rated "superior", "adequate" or "poor" with respect to criteria ranging from "community need" to "improved environmental location for low income families" to "effect of proposed housing upon neighborhood environment." A key item is "non-discriminatory location." Here a proposed project will earn a "superior" rating if it is outside an area of minority concentration. It can earn a "superior" or "adequate" rating if it is inside an area of minority concentration only if it is either a part of a major new development like Fort Lincoln or the Southwest urban renewal area (where this building is located), which will be racially inclusive, or if it responds to overriding need which can't feasibly be met any other way. If a project doesn't rate at least "adequate" on the non-discriminatory location criterion it will be disapproved.

This clear statement of policy should be very helpful both to our field personnel in rating proposed housing projects, and to developers and sponsors in guiding them as to project characteristics which will enhance the prospects for approval. I think I can anticipate a question by saying that as a general proposition, all other factors being equal, projects outside areas of minority concentration will be given preference.

Now let me turn to community development projects such as urban renewal and water and sewer. Here again, I think it is instructive to note that when I appeared before the Mondale Committee last August, I called attention to such statutory requirements as the "workable program" and the "housing element" in federally financed local planning. I then said:

> "Except where statutes, operating in combination, impose conditions of eligibility, HUD has not adopted the approach recommended by a recent Presidential Task Force, of denying Federal funds to a community which does not take steps to make housing available to low- and moderate-income families. However, most HUD grant programs have far more applications for grants than can be accommodated with available funds. Project selection criteria have been developed for some programs, and are being developed for others, as appropriate, which will take account of the local effort to meet housing needs in assigning relative priority to otherwise qualifying applications."

The President's statement also contains a careful review of these statutory requirements. And while the President has made clear (and I have also consistently sought to make clear) that the Federal Government will not force a reluctant community to accept low income housing, he has also said:

> "To qualify for Federal assistance, the law requires a local housing or community development project to be part of a plan that expands the supply of low- and moderate-income housing in a racially non-discriminatory way."

That is the policy we have followed, are following and will follow. It was this legal requirement that was applied in considering the workable program submitted by Warren, Michigan in connection with its urban renewal application last Summer.

The President has also said:

> "We will carry out our programs in a way that will be as helpful as possible to communities which are receptive to the expansion of housing opportunities for all of our people."

To implement that policy with respect to the water and sewer grant program, we have a project selection system which takes into account, in addition to such factors as public health and financial need, the accessibility of low- and moderate-income housing in the area to be served by the project. Copies are available for your review.

Before I leave this discussion of program criteria I want to call attention to two other points in the President's statement which will guide us in our relationships with local communitites:

> "We will be vigorous in enforcing both the constitutional mandate and the statutory requirements that there not be housing discrimination on grounds of race. In the more complex and difficult area of providing subsidized housing in areas where it is needed, we will encourage communities and local developers to take into account the broad needs of the various groups within the community and of the metropolitan area."

> "We will not seek to impose economic integration upon an existing local jurisdiction; at the same time, we will not countenance any use of economic measures as a subterfuge for racial discrimination."

Finally, I'd like to cover the matter of policies relating to marketing of federally-assisted housing. As some of you may know, we recently published in the Federal Register for comment guidelines which we propose governing the advertising of housing for sale or rent. These guidelines are directed to newspapers, but they will also be helpful to housing sponsors, owners, sellers and renters.

We have for many years imposed a general requirement of non-discrimination in the sale or rental of FHA assisted housing. But in response to the "affirmative action" requirement of Title VIII of the 1968 Civil Rights Act, and in furtherance of the equal opportunity policies set forth in the President's statement, we now propose additional regulations designed to ensure that there truly is equal opportunity for eligible persons of all races to buy or rent federally-assisted housing. These regulations govern such things as advertising practices, non-discrimination in the employment of sales personnel, informing relocation agencies of housing availability, consideration of persons referred by HUD, and the like. The requirements cover subdivisions, multifamily projects, and mobile home courts wherever 25 or more units are involved. One further significant requirement is that HUD field offices will make available to interested persons and groups (including for example, minority brokers and fair housing organizations) upon request, every 30 days, lists of FHA subdivisions or projects on which FHA has issued commitments. This should help to spread the word regarding availability of FHA assisted housing more broadly, as recommended by the United States Commission on Civil Rights in its report last week.

These affirmative marketing guidelines are also being published for 30 days for comments before they become effective. Copies are available for your review.

Now, another aspect of our effort to expand housing opportunities relates to the availability of low- and moderate-income housing in the vicinity of newly located Federal facilities. Last week GSA and HUD signed an agreement covering this matter which we think is significant, and I'm pleased that the Administrator of the General Services Administration, Mr. Robert L. Kunzig, is here to tell you about it. After Mr. Kunzig's statement, the Attorney General will have a statement.

2 SECRETARY ROMNEY: Ladies and gentlemen: I am
3 going to make a few opening remarks and then we will open
4 up for questions.
5 I would like to outline the procedure first here.
6 But first, as you know, the Department of Justice and our 7 Department have been working for about a year on policy
8 questions relating to equal opportunity in housing.
9 Now, we have passed out to you the full text of 10 my statement, and we have also given you the new regulations
11 that have been prepared and that will be issued for comment
12 during a 30-day period before finalization.
13 And I am not going to go through all of those 14 proposed regulations, and I am not going to go through my full 15 statement, but I will hit just a few of the high points.
16 Now that the President has issued his statement.
17 why, the Attorney General and the General Services Administra-
18 tor, Robert Kunzig, and I are pleased to be able to discuss 19 with you actions which our respective organizations will be 20 taking to implement the President's statement.
21 I will lead off and then Mr. Kunzig will make a 22 statement, and the Attorney General will follow.
23 Now first, I am delighted with the President's 24 policy statements and decisions. He has forthrightly faced 25 our most complex, emotionally sensitive and explosive domestic

h-d

1 situation. That situation arises from the combination of
2 the Nation's long overdue racial revolution, the crisis in 3 our metropolitan areas, and our desperate need for a greater 4 supply of less costly housing for American families, partic-
5 ularly the poor and those of below average income.
6 The President's policy statement is a positive
7 meshing of two inalienable constitutional rights -- equal 8 opportunity for all and freedom of choice for all. In 9 pointing the way toward what ought to be, it is a timely and 10 superior example of statesmanship in defining what can be.
11 And I will certainly always be proud of the part our Depart-
12 ment has had in the development of this statement of policy.
13 And I want to emphasize my enthusiasm for the 14 President's very positive statement, because some of the early 15 reports suggested that it was at variance with my earlier
16 views and actions, and represented a retrenchment of this 17 Department's policies or activities. Such reports are not 18 based on accurate knowledge and could not have been based 19 on a careful reading of the Presidential statement.
20 Now, I hope that one product of this conference 21 may be to prompt some of those who rushed to judgment to 22 re-check the record and re-check the statement with care.
23 Now, as the President said, the statement does not 24 announce new policies, but seeks to define and explain those 25 we have.

ajh-d

In discussing program criteria I will first cover policies involving sites for Federally-assisted housing, and then cover policies involving community development projects affecting housing, such as urban renewal and water and sewer grants.

Now, last August, when I appeared before Senator Mondale's Select Committee, I called attention to the huge new volume of Federally-assisted housing and indicated that we were working with the Department of Justice to develop site selection policies governing FHA housing programs.

Now, I am not going to read my testimony before the Mondale Committee, but the purpose for including it in there is to indicate the full agreement between what I said then and between the President's statement of policy.

We now have developed project selection criteria for use by our field personnel. Because of their importance, we will not make them immediately effective, but will first circulate them for 30 days for public comment. And you have copies.

Now, a key item in these housing regulations, proposed regulations, is non-discriminatory location. Here a proposed project will earn a "superior" rating if it is outside of an area of minority concentration. It can earn a "superior" or "adequate" rating if it is inside an area of minority concentration only if it is either a part of a major new development like Fort Lincoln or the Southwest urban renewal area, where this building is located, and the area must be racially inclusive, or if it responds to an overcrowding need, which can't reasonably be met in any other way.

Now, if a project doesn't rate at least "adequate" on the nondiscriminatory criteria, it will be disapproved.

Now, this clear statement of policy should be very helpful both to our field personnel in rating proposed housing projects, and to developers and sponsors in guiding them as to project characteristics which will enhance the prospects for approval.

Now, I think I can anticipate a question by saying that, as a general proposition, all other factors being equal, projects outside of minority concentration areas will be given preference.

Now, let me turn to community development projects such as urban renewal and water and sewer. Here again, I think it is instructive to note that when I appeared before the Mondale Committee last August, I called attention to such statutory requirements as the "workable program" and the "housing element" in Federally-financed local planning.

Again, I won't repeat my statement of last summer.

Now, the President's statement contains a very careful review of the statutory requirements. And while the President has made clear, and I have also consistently sought to make clear, that the Federal government will not force a reluctant community to accept low income housing.

He has also said: "To qualify for Federal assistance the law requires a local housing or community development project to be part of a plan that expands the supply of low and moderate income housing in a racially nondiscriminatory way."

Now, that is the policy we have followed, are following and will follow. It was this legal requirement that was applied in considering the workable program submitted by Warren, Michigan in connection with its urban renewal application last summer. The action taken then will be taken now.

The President has also said: "We will carry out our programs in a way that will be as helpful as possible to communities which are receptive to the expansion of housing opportunities for all of our people."

To implement that policy with respect to the water and sewer grant programs, we have a project selection system which takes into account, in addition to such factors as public health and financial need, the accessibility of low and moderate income housing in the area to be served by the project. And, again, you have copies of the proposed regulation.

policies relating to marketing of Federally-assisted housing. As some of you may know, we recently published in the Federal Register for comment guidelines which we propose governing the advertising of housing for sale or rent. These guidelines are directed to newspapers, but they will also be helpful to housing sponsors, owners, sellers, and renters.

We now propose additional regulations designed to ensure that there is truly equal opportunity for eligible persons of all races to buy or rent Federally-assisted housing. These regulations cover such things as advertising practices, discrimination in the employment of sales personnel, informing relocation agencies of housing availability, consideration of persons referred by HUD, and the like.

One further significant requirement is that HUD field offices will make available to interested persons and groups including minority brokers and fair housing organizations et cetera, upon request, every 30 days, lists of FHA subdivisions or projects on which FHA has issued commitments.

This should help to spread the word regarding availability of FHA assisted housing more broadly, as recommended by the United States Commission on Civil Rights in its report last week.

Now, another aspect of our effort to expand housing opportunities relates to the availability of low and moderate income housing in the vicinity of newly-located Federal

1 facilities.

2 Last week GSA and HUD signed an agreement covering
3 this matter which we think is significant, and I am pleased
4 that the Administrator of the General Services Administration,
5 Mr. Robert Kunzig, is here to talk about it.

6 And after you hear from Mr. Kunzig, the Attorney
7 General may have some comments, and then we will all be
8 glad to answer questions.

9 MR. KUNZIG: Let me first add my words to those of 10 Secretary Romney in praise for the President's statement, and 11 particularly in praise now for the agreement, which I think is 12 a practical, workable agreement, a Memorandum of Understanding
13 between the Department of HUD and the General Services
14 Administration.

15 I will explain this in detail very briefly here.

16 The Memorandum of Understanding between the Depart-
17 ment of Housing and Urban Development and the General Services
18 Administration is intended to provide an effective, systematic 19 arrangement for implementation of those provisions of Executive 20 Order 11512 designed to promote the availability of low and 21 moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis.

22 The Memorandum deals both specifically with adequacy
23 of accessible housing for Federal employees who will be working 24 in a new facility, and generally with housing as one factor 25 in improving social and economic conditions in the community

in which the facility is to be located.

The Memorandum provides that GSA will consult with HUD and rely upon HUD's advice and expertise in making both of these determination. The agreement contains five basic points, and there are two others added to that.

One: HUD will advise GSA on the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis in connection with all substantial Federal construction and leasing actions. The emphasis there is on advising on the availability.

Second: HUD will participate with GSA in the investigation of prospective sites for both public building projects and leased space. The emphasis there is on the participation in the investigation.

Third: GSA will rely principally upon the advice of HUD with respect to the adequacy of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis in making the determinations required under Executive Order 11512. The emphasis there is the fact that we rely principally on what HUD tells us.

Fourth: In the event GSA determines a Federal facility or leased space is to be located in an area where HUD has found the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis to be inadequate, GSA will provide HUD with a written explanation of the reasons for the selection of that location. An example of that sort of situation is a border station, which has to be in a certain place and can't be in the middle of Iowa. It has to be on a border, and there may or may not be housing available. And then we would provide a written explanation of the reasons for the selection of that location.

Five: GSA and HUD will develop an affirmative action plan to assure Federal personnel access to low and moderate income housing where HUD has advised that such housing is inadequate. HUD has agreed to give priority -- six and seven, I mentioned there were two others -- HUD has agreed to give priority to applications for assistance under its housing programs for the housing to be provided under the action plan.

And seventh, Federal agencies who will occupy the space will also provide a counseling and referral service to assist personnel in obtaining housing.

Now, these are the specific main points in the Memorandum, which I believe they all have copies of, which has been distributed to all of you.

ATTORNEY GENERAL MITCHELL: Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to join the Secretary and Mr. Kunzig in expressing my complete approval of the contents and the thrust of the President's statement.

With respect to the participation and functions of

1 Justice that are delineated under that statement. I would like
2 to point out what the Secretary has said, that it is not
3 announcing a new policy.
4 We will, in Justice, continue to carry out what we
5 have been doing before under the mandate of the President's 6 statement. This, of course, provides that Justice strive in 7 the area of open housing, and we have been doing this, and we
8 will continue to do so through lawsuits and through the neg-
9 otiation of voluntary compliance, which is becoming more and 10 more extensive now that we have established a program of 11 litigation and principles of law.
12 Also, as the statement says, we will continue to 13 use the powers that we have available to us, to eliminate 14 unlawful racial discrimination which is brought about by 15 community action in the field of zoning or land-use regulations.
16 And thirdly, to carry out these endeavors, we will 17 continue to work very closely with the Department, with the 18 people in HUD, because in the last analysis, they have the 19 prime responsibility in these areas; certainly in the initia-
20 tion of them, and in many cases we act as their lawyer.
21 There are other cases which are referred to us
22 through other means, and we will continue to use our legal 23 powers to accomplish the desired results as set forth in the 24 President's statement.
25 Thank you.

QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, what are you going to do about Blackjack, Missouri?

MR. MITCHELL: I was afraid nobody would ask me.

I can say that, as of today, I have authorized the filing of a suit in the Blackjack case, along with eight other housing discrimination cases. You can get those from the Department.

QUESTION: Why? What was your reason, Mr. Mitchell? Could you summarize it for us?

MR. MITCHELL: The reason for what?

QUESTION: What were the transgressions that required the Federal action?

MR. MITCHELL: In what particular area ? Which of the nine cases?

QUESTION: Give us a summary of some of the reasons in these cases. You don't have to name them all.

QUESTION: You will have to give us the locations, Mr. Mitchell, for us to conduct an intelligent conference. Let's have the locations.

(Laughter.)

MR. MITCHELL: I will get back at Barry(Shillicoe) if you don't be quiet.

QUESTION: That's all right with me, sir. That is all right with me. We will have Barry(Shillicoe)too.

MR. MITCHELL: Mr. Stern.

QUESTION: Will you just cite some of the reasons, some of the transgressions that were involved, the major of cases.

MR. MITCHELL: They are pattern of practice suits basically involving the various means they used of racial discrimination to keep people from enjoying open housing.

QUESTION: Such as zoning regulations?

MR. MITCHELL: No. The zoning regulations, as you know, of course, relate basically to the Blackjack case. Most of the other ones are patent or practice suits that eliminate the availability of open housing to minority groups.

QUESTION: Those do not involve municipal governments, do they?

MR. MITCHELL: Only the Blackjack case.

QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, could you detail for us how you think the Blackjack case differentiates from the (Valtiera) case?

MR. MITCHELL: Well, there is a substantial difference between the (Valtiera) case because the Court in the Valtiera case found that there was no basis for finding racial discrimination in the record.

The basis of our suit in the Blackjack case will be based on racial discrimination.

QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, is there no other case --

MR. MITCHELL: Don't let me harp this.

(Laughter.)

QUESTION: Is there no other case involving zoning, such as Blackjack, pending, or --

MR. MITCHELL: Not to the point where we are ready to file litigation. I am sure there will be others for consideration.

QUESTION: What kind of relief are you asking in the Blackjack?

MR. MITCHELL: We are asking, of course, that the project be allowed to be built under whatever legal basis it is necessary to set aside the governmental action that is prohibiting it.

QUESTION: May we ask Mr. Romney a question?

MR. MITCHELL: Sure, by all means.

QUESTION: Mr. Romney, I don't understand the priorities that the President announced the other day. Where you have a community -- let's say, you've got project developers that have submitted four different possible sites, and this isn't a community where there is some minority concentration, and none of those sites would seem to further the objective of breaking up that concentration of the minorities. Would you fund for any of those four sites?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Well, we are not going to deal with this just on a community-by-community basis. We are dealing with it on an area basis, through our area offices; we are dealing with it on a regional basis, and on a national basis.

Now, it is inconceivable to me that in light of the tremendous demand that there is for our housing funds, we would find ourselves in the very near future -- foreseeable future -- where we wouldn't have projects outside as well as inside, and, therefore, in a position to select not just community-by-community, but on an area or regional or national basis.

QUESTION: Are towns that do absolutely nothing to further the cause of integration going to get Federal money for their projects?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Not housing money, because, after all, as I have indicated, the housing programs all depend on local application. But if you don't have local applications in one community that is outside an area of minority concentration, you have them in other communities.

Now, really, this particular point has been built up excessively from the standpoint of the degree of controversy that exists. The facts are that we are funding hundreds and hundreds of programs, week after week, here, and most of them involve no controversy. And the dispersal of the housing project is increasing, as I expect to show tomorrow with some maps that I will use in the Civil Rights Commission hearing.

QUESTION: Mr. Romney, could the problems that you recently detailed have happened if your project selection criteria program had been in operation a year ago?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: No, no, they would not. They could not have happened under the project selection system that we have outlined here.

Now, keep this in mind, Bob: The Department has been

1 somewhat handicapped here during some months -- almost a year
2 now -- because we have a highly decentralized organization and
3 we haven't been able to give them specific policy directions.
4 Now, the big thing that comes out of this, as far as
5 the Department is concerned, is that the President has forth-
6 rightly and courageously outlined policies in highly contro-
7 versial areas and this now enables us to give our field
8 personnel specific instructions along the lines of the project
9 selection system that will prevent that sort of a situation
10 to develop.
11 QUESTION: Mr. Romney, you say, at the bottom of 12 page 8 -- you say, as a general proposition, all other factors
13 being equal, projects outside areas of minority concentration 14 be given preference.
15 What do you mean by "general proposition" or what 16 do you mean by "all other factors being equal?" It sounds to 17 me --
18 SECRETARY ROMNEY: I mean, if you take that project 19 selection system, with respect to the housing program, and if 20 housing projects are equal in all aspects except their loca-21 tion, and one is located outside of an area of minority con-22 centration, and another one is located within an area of 23 minority concentration, obviously the one outside of the area 24 of minority concentration has a preferred rating and, therefore,
25 would get preferred fundings.

QUESTION: So it isn't a priority matter at all?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Sure, it is a priority matter.

QUESTION: Only if everything is equal.

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Well, you can't limit the consideration in these housing programs to just one consideration. There are many factors; and if you will take a look at the factors involved, there are seven. They are all basic factors. There are eight in connection with public housing because you have the problem of housing management.

QUESTION: Mr. Secretary, on the statement that he would not use Federal leverage, which you just cited --

SECRETARY ROMNEY: The President didn't say he wouldn't use Federal leverage. The President said he wouldn't use leverage of Federal money to force communities to accept the subsidized housing.

Now, that is quite a different thing from using the leverage of Federal programs to encourage the acceptance of low or moderate income housing. He made it very clear that he is going to encourage low and moderate income housing.

As a matter of fact, I think one statement that many reports overlook was a very important statement. On page 2 of the President's statement, the third paragraph, he said, "To qualify for Federal assistance, the law requires the local housing or community development project to be part of a plan that expands the supply of low and moderate income housing in a racially nondiscriminatory way."

Now, this is a very positive program and goes just as far as I have ever advocated the program going.

QUESTION: Will water and sewer, Mr. Secretary, be considered a part of community development programs?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Yes, sir, water and sewer are. If you look at the requirements and consider the application of the law to water and sewer grants, you will find that housing is a prerequisite in most water and sewer cases to being even considered, because they have to conform with the comprehensive planning requirements of Section 701 and Section -- and most of these water and sewer projects are financed -- the plans are financed from money from Section 701, and the Section requires a housing element even for consideration.

Now, housing is also one element in the project selection system.

QUESTION: Could you two gentlemen detail for us, more specifically, how you are going to differentiate between economic and racial discrimination? After all, Blackjack maintains that it is only dealing in economic discrimination against public housing.

MR. MITCHELL: Well, with respect to Blackjack, as I stated before, we are filing a suit on the basis that it does constitute racial discrimination, and that will be the

1 policy of the Department, pursuant to the President's state-
2 ment, "Where there is racial discrimination, and where we have 3 the proper power, we will continue to litigate in cases where 4 there is community action."

5 QUESTION: Well, how will you discriminate between 6 a community that says we are dealing with economic discrimina-
7 tion and where you say, yes, you are, and a community that 8 says we are dealing in economic discrimination and you say, 9 no, you're not?

10 MR. MITCHELL: Well, as you may surmise, we don't 11 always take "lip" service for determining the facts. We do 12 our own investigation and our own determinations; and after 13 the litigation is brought, the Court will make those determi-14 nations.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, why is it, or what are the 16 considerations in the filing of a new suit rather than joining 17 in a suit that has been filed?

18 MR. MITCHELL: Well, we decided that this would be 19 the better course for the Federal Government to keep the 20 issues, that the Federal Government is involved in, perfectly 21 clear.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, do I understand from your 23 statement that HUD determines when a case should be filed, and 24 defers it to you, and you act as their lawyer? In other words, 25 the decision is with HUD; is that correct?

MR. MITCHELL: Well, the final decision in whether a case is filed or not, rests with the Justice Department. But they are involved in many of these instances through their administrative process, which brings about the questions that should be litigated in these cases, and they refer them to us for our determination. Frequently we make further investigation and then we make the determination as to whether litigation should be brought.

SECRETARY ROMNEY: You also have the Lackawanna situation, now, where the Court refused to grant a writ of certiorari because of a subterfuge used in that instance.

QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, would you discuss the facts in the Blackjack case, that it is subterfuge and there is racial discrimination?

MR. MITCHELL: I would prefer to have you read the complaint, which will be available to you, and you make your own determination.

QUESTION: Where and when will it be available?

MR. MITCHELL: At the Justice Department as soon as you can get the Public Information Officer to make it available to you.

QUESTION: Failing that, Mr. Mitchell, would you please give us general terms -- I'll go back to the previous question -- give us in general terms how you -- take and example, how you differentiate between racial and economic

1 discrimination?

2 Now, the subject is brought up very vividly in

3 Mr. Hunzig's statement, but I want to direct the question at 4 you because that is the heart of it.

5 MR. MITCHELL: Well, let me point out that in the 6 President's statement -- I think this is important -- the

7 statement is made there that they would not -- he would not,

8 nor will the Government, allow the subterfuge of economic

9 discrimination to be used where actual racial discrimination

10 exists.

11 With respect to a matter of economic discrimination,

12 I would refer you back to the Valtiera case, where the defini-

13 tion of persons of low income was the center of the litigation

14 and the determination by the Court.

15 The racial discrimination cases can take any number 16 of forms. I can't explain all of them to you today. But

17 where there is a purpose and effect of having racial discrimi-

18 nation, that is the area which we can move.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, what kind of practices

20 though would you be suspect; for example, large lot zoning,

21 failure to tie in sewer lines, non-high density zoning, what?

22 MR. MITCHELL: It is the very intention of the party

23 involved, such as existed in the Lackawanna case where you had

24 a combination of physical factors, actual statements and 25 actual actions on the part of the governmental body that

evidenced the racial discrimination.

QUESTION: You have the staff to investigate this for every application that is coming in?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Well, we collect information in that area and turn it over to the Department. So we play a part there, too.

QUESTION: Do you have the staff, Mr. Romney, for that?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Well, like we have to approve all these projects, and we have people who are familiar with these projects and familiar with the situation. So we are in a position to develop facts, not the full facts. Obviously, the Department will go forward and develop more complete information in a situation that we may bring to their attention. But we certainly are in a position to bring to their attention instances where we feel there have been racial discrimination under the subterfuge of the economic.

MR. MITCHELL: Carl, let me point out that this is governmental action that we are talking about, and after the Lackawanna case and the Shannon case, there is not any great likelihood that we will have a great number of these cases, because it does take governmental action. And a Secretary, as you know, under Title 8 of the Housing Act of '68, has power to investigate, ameliorate, or work out the problem before it ever gets to the point of litigation, either by the private party or Department of Justice.

QUESTION: But you will end up looking into the machines of the various zoning boards and so forth. Do you have an appetite to do that?

MR. MITCHELL: We have an appetite to ferret out any possibility of racial discrimination in any way that we can to be able to prove it before Courts.

QUESTION: Mr. Kunzig, may I ask you, your statement here, you indicate -- in your statement you indicate that you would check with HUD and be guided by them on military -- on placing future construction, Federal projects. What about the old Federal projects that are already there with a new application for FHA? Will you go the same route?

MR. KUNZIG: Well, old, you mean old Federal buildings?

QUESTION: Old Federal installations are there, but new applications for FHA.

MR. KUNZIG: Well, that has nothing to do with General Services Administration. FHA has nothing to do with us.

QUESTION: New application for housing.

MR. KUNZIG: We have nothing to do with housing. We are talking about Federal buildings.

QUESTION: Appropriations of money for Federal installations that are already there, would you go the same route through HUD?

CHA does not come under GSA.

(Laughter.)

MR. KUNZIG: Flat statement.

QUESTION: Mr. Romney, in determining what is slum refuge and what is not, what criteria, generally, would you use in making your determinations?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Well, the actions taken, the facts in the situation, what has happened in cases to date.

QUESTION: Mr. Romney, under the area of non-discriminatory location, can you tell us how a project can get an "adequate" rating even though it doesn't serve to end racial concentration? What is the criteria there?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: It can't get an "adequate" rating unless it does, sir. It has to have at least an "adequate" rating in that category to even be eligible for approval. You will note the regulation. It is proposed that that be one of the requirements. It doesn't have to have a "superior" rating, but it does have to have an "adequate" rating, as defined in the regulation.

QUESTION: How does it get an "adequate" rating?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Well, it is defined there. I would be glad to read it to you. Let me look it up for you.

If you will turn behind that first long form, instruction sheet, and look at non-discriminatory location, bottom of the first page, point 3, "A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project (1) will be located in an area with respect to which there is no present likelihood, in the judgment of the area or insuring office director, that it will become one of minority group concentration, or (2) will be located in an area of minority concentration but is to be located in a major comprehensive development which will include a range of housing at various income levels and where experience and judgment indicate that the area will have a racially inclusive residential pattern."

Now, the second paragraph defines the "adequate" rating.

"An adequate rating shall be given (1) if the proposed project will be located in an area which is substantially racially mixed and on the basis of existing demographic trends it appears that the project will have no significant effect on the proportion of minority to non-minority families, or (2) if the proposed project will provide housing in or near an area of minority concentration in response to an overriding need which cannot otherwise feasibly be met."

"In the case of an "adequate" rating based on (2), the rating shall be accompanied by documented findings based upon relevant racial and socio-economic information supporting both the overriding need and the availability of alternate housing."

QUESTION: Mr. Romney, back to workable plan, are you saying that no community will get community development sewer-water renewal unless they are accepting and building subsidized housing?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Unless they have a plan for such purpose and we are convinced it's a meaningful plan, that is correct.

QUESTION: Mr. Secretary, how does that differ then from forcing them to accept subsidized housing?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: They have free choice.

QUESTION: They can build their own sewerage or they can be subsidized?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Sure; they don't have to take it. Now that's leverage, but that's not forcing. They have complete freedom to do it or not do it.

QUESTION: Mr. Secretary, I recall that the handbook that you spoke about in front of the Mundell Committee -- the old handbook -- talked about keeping communities homogeneous, and I remember your remark that it --

SECRETARY ROMNEY: You mean the old FHA Handbook? That's right.

QUESTION: I'm looking now on the 235 form, under paragraph 5, where it says, "An adequate rating shall be given if the project design is compatible with the neighborhood, and if the project will maintain or improve the quality of life."

SECRETARY ROMNEY: What that has reference to is the character of the buildings going in there. It does not have the reference to the people going in there, but it has reference to the character of the building going in there, because what happened in past years is that, as a result of lack of good design, as a result of buildings that would be attractive in a community, it has impaired the situation in the community. And that is what that basically has reference to.

QUESTION: But would the amount of money that you put in 235 housing -- it is much less than the average suburb. I mean, the housing is not quite up to the standard.

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Go out and look at Columbia. You will see a mix of 235 and 236.

QUESTION: Columbia is a new community and I am talking about established suburbs as pertains to the 235 housing.

SECRETARY ROMNEY: I'm talking about the same thing, and there isn't any reason why the subsidized projects shouldn't be well designed and be attractive units and not detract from that standpoint. And that's what that has reference to.

QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, I was wondering if you would elaborate on points you made earlier, that I am not sure as to your meaning.

The question was whether you were going to go into cwr-r

1 the modus of zoning boards; and what I wanted to know was 2 whether your answer applied only to the narrow question of
3 zoning or whether it applies to the other eight cases.
4 Your answer was that we are not likely to have a
5 great many of these cases because it does take Government 6 action.
7 MR. MITCHELL: My reference was to the zoning and 8 land-use cases.
9 While I have the microphone, so that the record can 10 be straight, the Blackjack case was filed at 3:40 Daylight
11 Savings Time.
12 QUESTION: Mr. Attorney, other cases -- are they 13 all against builders, big builders and developers?
14 MR. MITCHELL: They are real estate operators of 15 different types, yes.
16 QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, where did you file it?
17 QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, I have a vision of the 18 distinction between economic and racial discrimination of 19 great new euphemisms coming up in racial discrimination. How 20 will you get around that?
21 A community says, "Well, we just don't want low 22 income housing, moderate incoming housing." How will you go 23 about determining whether this is actual racial discrimination?
24 MR. MITCHELL: Like I said, like we had to do in the 25 Lackawanna case, we will in the Blackjack case, prove that there was racial discrimination, and that their motives were racial motives and not economic motives.

SECRETARY ROMNEY: You know, there is one thing in the President's statement that is worth noting, and that is, in more than one place, he emphasizes the importance of undertaking to deal with this need on a metropolitan basis rather than a community-by-community basis. And the reason for that is, as I discussed in Philadelphia this morning, at the Conference of Mayors, you have real cities today and then you have these central cities.

Now, the real cities today embrace all the countless local jurisdictions that constitute a metropolitan area. The central city, in most cases, is less than half of that real city.

You take the city of Chicago. That is one of the extreme examples. But there are 1,110 separate autonomous units of local government in the Chicago metropolitan area.

Now, what is indicated in the President's statement is that this need should be encouraged on a metropolitan basis and locational factors should be taken into consideration, and so on. And I think that's an important element.

QUESTION: Mr. Romney, on your memorandum on the GSA the points 4 and 5, it seems to me that you do equate economic with racial segregation. Those two points together say to me, that if you locate a building in a segregated neighborhood, then the Federal officials will find low and middle cost housing for employees.

Now, could you clarify that, because that, to me, equates the two?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Well, that is the case of GSA establishing a new facility, and it's a policy between the two departments with respect to the responsibility that we feel should exist on the part of the Government as an employer in that situation, to take into consideration the housing needs of the families that are going to be affected by the Federal personnel that is going to be affected by the shift in the location of their jobs.

Now, I am hopeful personally that this example will be picked up by other employers and recognized as a very sound thing to do.

QUESTION: You regard that as a particularly affirmative action, to give black minorities houses, on the basis of building low and middle cost housing?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Sure, I think it's a very affirmative action on the part of an employer to do what this agreement says; and that is, with respect to an area site that if the supply of low and moderate income housing, on a nondiscriminatory basis, was found to be inadequate to meet the needs of the personnel of the agency involved, GSA and HUD will develop an affirmative action plan to assure that an adequate supply of such housing will be available for the building or places to be occupied, or within a period of six months thereafter.

Now, certainly I don't know of anyone saying that an employer shouldn't be concerned about the housing of employees, and that's what the Government is indicating.

QUESTION: Does that seem to you to indicate economic or racial discrimination?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: No; it does indicate a recognition on the part of the Departments, but the housing needs of the employees should be met. And, in that respect, it is an affirmative action that deals with an economic aspect of their situation, as well as the racial aspect.

QUESTION: When do these go into effect, Mr. Secretary? When does the regulation go into effect? Why does the criteria go into effect, Mr. Romney?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: These criteria?

QUESTION: You said you would circulate it for thirty days?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: No; we will circulate them for thirty days. We will await comments, and after we get comments, then we will put them in final form, and it shouldn't be too long after the thirty-day period it will go into effect. But that is a required procedure.

Now, look, the Attorney General has got to leave,

and if you want to ask him one, well, shoot.

QUESTION: If I may, please, sir? You and Secretary Romney both spoke directly about present and future discrimination. The President's message gave high priority to correcting the affects of past discrimination. What action does the Administration plan to do that?

MR. MITCHELL: Well, I think the whole program is laid out here for implementation by the Department of HUD. It is designed to correct that, and as far as the Justice Department is concerned, we deal with current discrimination and address ourselves to that.

QUESTION: In the field of voting education, does the Department take a course of action to correct the affects of past discrimination with voter registration, for example. If you haven't registered Blacks before -- the President's statement talks --

MR. MITCHELL: I understand your point. Let me say, that if there exists in any type of housing, covered by the Statute, leaving out Mrs. Murphy's exception -- if any discrimination exists, whether it be old or new, past or future housing, then we are authorized, and will address ourselves to that discrimination.

QUESTION: Mr. Romney --

SECRETARY ROMNEY: We will take two more questions, then we will call it quits.

ewr-r

QUESTION: I want to make sure I understand this. If you have two communities that refuse to permit low-income housing to be built, then do I understand that if those -- if applications were to come from those communities for other projects that might be funded by HUD, such as water and sewer applications, and so on, those communities would not be eligible because they did, in effect, take an action that permitted concentrated minority pockets?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: If you will take a look at the President's statement, under Discussion of Statutory Requirements, you will find considerable development of the housing element requirement, with respect to other programs as well as just housing. And most of our other programs require housing elements, as well as the housing program. So, it would affect the availability of funds for other programs.

QUESTION: In other words, they could not get such funds having taken that action with respect to low-income housing; is that correct?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: They couldn't meet the requirements, that's correct, and, therefore, they would not be eligible, under the workable program, for urban renewal grants. They wouldn't be eligible in the case of open space and water and sewer, unless they had comprehensive planning grants for such purposes.

QUESTION: So there is a penalty attached to not having low-income housing?

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Absolutely, absolutely, absolutely; and there's real leverage for the programs. And this idea that there is no leverage is not accurate. There is great leverage, because the leverage is that they can freely decide whether or not they want to qualify; but if they don't qualify, they don't get the money.

Just one more question and then we will quit.

Yes, sir?

QUESTION: Mr. Mitchell, some details on the Blackjack case. What is the name of the defendant and where was it filed?

MR. MITCHELL: City of Blackjack, and it was filed in the appropriate District Court in Missouri.

SECRETARY ROMNEY: Thank you very much. I apologize for the heat.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT
GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

Office of Information — Room 6128 — 18th and F Streets, NW. — Washington, D.C. 20405 — (202) 343-4511

FOR RELEASE
3:00 p.m., Monday, June 14, 1971

GSA #5260

Administrator of General Services, Robert L. Kunzig, today issued the following statement in announcing the execution of an agreement with the Department of Housing and Urban Development regarding housing and federal facilities:

"The Memorandum of Understanding between the Department of Housing and Urban Development and General Services Administration is intended to provide an effective, systematic arrangement for implementation of those provisions of Executive Order 11512 designed to promote the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis.

"The Memorandum deals both specifically with adequacy of accessible housing for Federal Employees who will be working in a new facility, and generally with housing as one factor in improving social and economic conditions in the community in which the facility is to be located.

"The Memorandum provides that GSA will consult with HUD and rely upon HUD's advice and expertise in making both of these determinations. The agreement contains five basic points:

1. HUD will advise GSA on the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis in connection with all substantial Federal construction and leasing actions.

2. HUD will participate with GSA in the investigation of prospective sites for both public buildings projects and leased space.

3. GSA will rely principally upon the advice of HUD with respect to the adequacy of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis in making the determinations required under Executive Order 11512.

4. In the event GSA determines a Federal facility or leased space is to be located in an area where HUD has found the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis to be inadequate, GSA will provide HUD with a written explanation of the reasons for selection of that location.

5. GSA and HUD will develop an affirmative action plan to assure Federal personnel access to low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis if it becomes necessary to select a site where HUD has advised that such housing is inadequate. HUD has agreed to give priority to applications for assistance under its housing programs for the housing to be provided under the action plan. Federal agencies who will occupy the space will also provide a counseling and referral service to assist personnel in obtaining housing.

"We believe this agreement represents clear, concrete progress towards the President's goal of affirmatively encouraging the creation of needed low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis."

GSA MEMO OF UNDERSTANDING

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE
DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT AND THE GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION CONCERNING LOW AND MODERATE INCOME HOUSING

PURPOSE: The purpose of the Memorandum of Understanding is to provide an effective, systematic arrangement under which the Federal government, acting through HUD and GSA, will fulfill its responsibilities under law, and, as a major employer, in accordance with the concepts of good management, to assure for its employees the availability of low and moderate income housing without discrimination because of race, color, religion or national origin, and to consider the need for development and redevelopment of areas and the development of new communities and the impact on improving social and economic conditions in the area, whenever Federal government facilities locate or relocate at new sites, and to use its resources and authority to aid in the achievement of these objectives.

1. Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 (42 USC 3601) states, in Section 801, that "It is the policy of the United States to provide, within constitutional limitations, for fair housing throughout the United States." Section 808(a) places the authority and responsibility for administering the Act in the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. Section 808(d) requires all executive departments and agencies to administer their programs and activities relating to housing and urban development in a manner affirmatively to further the purposes of Title VIII (fair housing) and to cooperate with the Secretary to further such purposes. Section 808(e)(5) provides that the Secretary of HUD shall administer the programs and activities relating to housing and urban development in a manner affirmatively to further the policies of Title VIII.

2. Section 2 of the Housing Act of 1949 (42 USC 1441) declares the national policy of . . . "the realization as soon as feasible of the goal of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family. . . ." This goal was reaffirmed in the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 (Sections 2 and 1601; 12 USC 1701t and 42 USC 1441a).

3. By virtue of the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended; the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended; and Reorganization Plan No. 18 of 1950, the Administrator of General Services is given certain authority and responsibility in connection with planning, developing, and constructing Government-owned public buildings for housing Federal agencies, and for acquiring leased space for Federal agency use.

4. Executive Order No. 11512, February 27, 1970, sets forth the policies by which the Administrator of General Services and the heads of Executive agencies will be guided in the acquisition of both federally-owned and leased office buildings and space.

5. While Executive Order No. 11512 provides that material consideration will be given to the efficient performance of the missions and programs of the Executive agencies and the nature and functions of the facilities involved, there are six other guidelines set forth, including:

   - the need for development and redevelopment of areas and the development of new communities, and the impact a selection will have on improving social and economic conditions in the area; and

   - the availability of adequate low and moderate income housing, adequate access from other areas of the urban center, and adequacy of parking.

6. General Services Administration (GSA) recognizes its responsibility, in all its determinations with respect to the construction of Federal buildings and the acquisition of leased space, to consider to the maximum possible extent the availability of low and moderate income housing without discrimination because of race, color, religion or national origin, in accordance with its duty affirmatively to further the purposes of Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 and with the authorities referred to in paragraph 2 above, and the guidelines referred to in paragraph 5 above, and consistent with the authorities cited in paragraphs 3 and 4 above. In connection with the foregoing statement, it is recognized that all the guidelines must be considered in each case, with the ultimate decision to be made by the Administrator of General Services upon his determination that such decision will improve the management and administration of governmental activities and services, and will foster the programs and policies of the Federal Government.

7. In addition to its fair housing responsibilities, the responsibilities of HUD include assisting in the development of the nation's housing supply through programs of mortgage insurance, home ownership and rental housing assistance, rent supplements, below market interest rates, and low-rent public housing. Additional HUD program responsibilities which relate or impinge upon housing and community development include comprehensive planning assistance, metropolitan area planning coordination, new communities, relocation, urban renewal, model cities, rehabilitation loans and grants, neighborhood facilities grants, water and sewer grants, open space, public facilities loans, Operation BREAKTHROUGH, code enforcement, workable programs, and others.

8. In view of its responsibilities described in paragraphs 1 and 7 above, HUD possesses the necessary expertise to investigate, determine, and report to GSA on the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis and to make findings as to such availability with respect to proposed locations for a federally-constructed building or leased space which would be consistent with such reports. HUD also possesses the necessary expertise to advise GSA and other Federal agencies with respect to actions which would increase the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis, once a site has been selected for a federally-constructed building or a lease executed for space, as well as to assist in increasing the availability of such housing through its own programs such as those described in paragraph 7 above.

9. HUD and GSA agree that:

(a) GSA will pursue the achievement of low and moderate income housing objectives and fair housing objectives, in accordance with its responsibilities recognized in paragraph 6 above, in all determinations, tentative and final, with respect to the location of both federally-constructed buildings and leased buildings and space, and will make all reasonable efforts to make this policy known to all persons, organizations, agencies and others concerned with federally-owned and leased buildings and space in a manner which will aid in achieving such objectives.

(b) In view of the importance to the achievement of the objectives of this memorandum of agreement of the initial selection of a city or delineation of a general area for location of public buildings or leased space, GSA will provide the earliest possible notice to HUD of information with respect to such decisions so that HUD can carry out its responsibilities under this memorandum of agreement as effectively as possible.

(c) Government-owned Public Buildings Projects:

(1) In the planning for each new public buildings project under the Public Buildings Act of 1959, during the survey preliminary to the preparation and submission of a project development report, representatives of the regional office of GSA in which the project is proposed will consult with, and receive advice from, the regional office of HUD, and local planning and housing authorities concerning the present and planned availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis in the area where the project is to be located. Such advice will constitute the principal basis for GSA's consideration of the availability of such housing in accordance with paragraphs 6 and 9(a). A copy of the prospectus for each project which is authorized by the Committees on Public Works of the Congress in accordance with the requirements of Section 7(a) of the Public Buildings Act of 1959, will be provided to HUD.

2. When a site investigation for an authorized public buildings project is conducted by regional representatives of GSA to identify a site on which the public building will be constructed, a representative from the regional office of HUD will participate in the site investigation for the purposes of providing a report on the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis in the area of the investigation. Such report will constitute the principal basis for GSA's consideration of the availability of such housing in accordance with paragraphs 6 and 9(a).

(d) Major Lease Actions Having a Significant Socio-Economic Impact on a Community:

At the time GSA and the agencies who will occupy the space have tentatively delineated the general area in which the leased space must be located in order that the agencies may effectively perform their missions and programs, the regional representative of HUD will be consulted by the regional representative of GSA who is responsible for the leasing action to obtain advice from HUD concerning the availability of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis to the delineated area. Such advice will constitute the principal basis for GSA's consideration of the availability of such housing in accordance with paragraphs 6 and 9(a). Copies of lease-construction prospectuses approved by the Committees on Public Works of the Congress in conformity with the provisions of the Independent Offices and Department of Housing and Urban Development appropriati acts, will be provided to HUD.

(e) GSA and HUD will each issue internal operating procedures to implement this memorandum of understanding within a reasonable time after its execution. These procedures shall recognize the right of HUD, in the event of a disagreement between HUD and GSA representatives at the area or regional level, to bring such disagreement to the attention of GSA officials at headquarters in sufficient time to assure full consideration of HUD's views, prior to the making of a determination by GSA.

(f) In the event a decision is made by GSA as to the location of a federally-constructed building or leased space, and HUD has made findings, expressed in the advice given or a report made to GSA, that the availability to such location of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis is inadequate, the GSA shall provide the DHUD with a written explanation why the location was selected.

(g) Whenever the advice or report provided by HUD in accordance with paragraph 9(c)(1), 9(c)(2) or 9(d) with respect to an area or site indicates that the supply of low and moderate income housing on a nondiscriminatory basis is inadequate to meet the needs of the personnel of the agency involved, GSA and HUD will develop an affirmative action plan designed to insure that an adequate supply of such housing will be available before the building or space is to be occupied or within a period of six months thereafter. The plan should provide for commitments from the community involved to initiate and carry out all feasible efforts to obtain a sufficient quantity of low and moderate income housing available to the agency's personnel on a nondiscriminatory basis with adequate access to the location of the building or space. It should include commitments by the local officials having the authority to remove obstacles to the provision of such housing, when such obstacles exist, and to take effective steps to assure its provision. The plan should also set forth the steps proposed by the agency to develop and implement a counseling and referral service to seek out and assist its personnel to obtain such housing. As part of any plan during, as well as after its development, HUD agrees to give priority consideration to applications for assistance under its housing programs for the housing proposed to be provided in accordance with the plan.

10. This memorandum will be reviewed at the end of one year, and modified to incorporate any provision necessary to improve its effectiveness in light of actual experience.

Proposed Rule Making

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

[24 CFR Part 8]

[Docket No. R-71-111]

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY UNDER HUD CONTRACTS AND HUD ASSISTED CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Notice of Proposed Rule Making

The Department of Housing and Urban Development is considering amending Title 24 of the Code of Federal Regulations to include a new Part 8 entitled "Equal Employment Opportunity under HUD Contracts and HUD Assisted Construction Contracts." The proposed amendment, issued pursuant to 41 CFR 60-1.6(c) and Executive Order No. 11246, Equal Employment Opportunity, 31 F.R. 12319, establishes procedures for HUD administration of the equal employment opportunity policy in cases where HUD funds are involved.

Generally, under the proposed regulations, HUD would adopt the applicable provisions of 41 CFR Part 60-1 promulgated by the Department of Labor. However, in addition, § 8.25 Award of contracts sets forth specific steps to be followed by HUD with respect to the award of construction contracts in excess of $100,000, and nonconstruction contracts in excess of $50,000. Also, § 8.35 requires the filing of written affirmative action compliance programs in connection with construction contracts of $1 million or more. Section 8.100 sets the effective date as 60 days after publication in the FEDERAL REGISTER, applicable to all contracts which have not been executed as of that date.

Accordingly, interested persons are invited to participate in the making of the proposed rule by submitting written data, views, or statements with regard to the proposed regulations. Communications should identify the proposed rule by the above docket number and should be filed in triplicate with the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D.C. 20410, not later than July 16, 1971. All relevant material will be considered before adoption of a final rule. Copies of comments submitted will be available for examination during business hours, both before and after the specified closing date, at the above address.

The proposed rule is issued pursuant to section 7(d) of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act, 42 U.S.C. 3535(d).

The proposed Part 8 reads as follows:

PART 8—EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY UNDER HUD CONTRACTS AND HUD ASSISTED CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

AUTHORITY: The provisions of this Part 8 issued under sec. 201, Executive Order 11246 30 F.R. 12319; and 41 CFR 60-1.6(c).

§ 8.1 Purpose.

This part prescribes standards and procedures for the Department of Housing and Urban Development in the implementation of its responsibilities as a compliance agency under Executive Order 11246; the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Labor, codified in 41 CFR Part 60, prescribed thereunder; and other rules, orders, instructions, designations, and directives issued by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, Department of Labor.

§ 8.5 Definitions.

(a) "Administering agency" means any department, agency, and establishment in the Executive Branch of the Government, including any wholly owned Government corporation, which administers a program involving federally assisted construction contracts.

(b) "Agency" means any contracting or any administering agency of the Government.

(c) "Applicant" means an applicant for Federal assistance from the Department involving a construction contract, or other participant in a program involving a construction contract as determined by the Department. The term also includes such persons after they became recipients of such Federal assistance.

(d) "Compliance Agency" means the agency designated by the Director on a geographical, industry, or other basis to conduct compliance reviews and to undertake such other responsibilities in connection with the administration of the order as the Director may determine to be appropriate. In the absence of such a designation, the Compliance Agency will be determined as follows:

(1) In the case of a prime contractor not involved in construction work, the Compliance Agency will be the agency whose contracts with the prime contractor have the largest aggregate dollar value;

(2) In the case of a subcontractor not involved in construction work, the Compliance Agency will be the Compliance Agency of the prime contractor with which the subcontractor has the largest aggregate value of subcontracts or purchase orders for the performance of work under contracts;

(3) In the case of a prime contractor or subcontractor involved in construction work, the Compliance Agency for each construction project will be the agency providing the largest dollar value for the construction projects; and

(4) In the case of a contractor who is both a prime contractor and subcontractor, the Compliance Agency will be determined as if such contractor is a prime contractor only.

(e) "Construction work" means the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, extension, demolition or repair of buildings, highways, or other changes or improvements to real property, including facilities providing utility services. The term also includes the supervision, inspection, and other onsite functions incidental to the actual construction.

(f) "Contract" means any Government contract or any federally assisted construction contract.

(g) "Contractor" means, unless otherwise indicated, a prime contractor or subcontractor.

(h) "Department" means the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

(i) "Director" means the Director, Office of Federal Contract Compliance, U.S. Department of Labor, or any person to whom he delegates authority under the regulations of the Secretary of Labor.

(j) "Equal opportunity clause" means the contract provisions set forth in § 8.15 (a) or (b), as appropriate.

(k) "Facilities" as used in § 8.75, includes, but is not limited to waiting rooms, work areas, restaurants and other eating areas, time clocks, restrooms, wash rooms, locker rooms and other storage or dressing areas, parking lots, drinking fountains, recreation or entertainment areas, transportation, and housing facilities provided for employees.

(l) "Federally assisted construction contract" means any agreement or modification thereof between any applicant and any person for construction work which is paid for in whole or in part with funds obtained from the Government or borrowed on the credit of the Government pursuant to any Federal program involving a grant, contract loan, insurance, or guarantee, or undertaken pursuant to any Federal program involving such grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee, or any application or modification thereof approved by the Department for a grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee under which the applicant itself participates in the construction work.

(m) "Government" means the Government of the United States of America.

(n) "Government contract" means any agreement or modification thereof between any contracting agency and any person for the furnishing of supplies or services or for the use of real or personal property, including lease arrangements. Services, as used in this section includes, but is not limited to, the following services: Utility, construction, transportation, research, insurance, and fund depository. Government contract does not include (1) agreements in which the parties stand in the relationship or employer and employee, and (2) federally assisted construction contracts.

(o) "Hearing officer" means the individual or board of individuals designated to conduct hearings.

(p) "Modification" means any alteration in the terms and conditions of a contract, including supplemental agreements, amendments, and extensions.

(q) "Order" means Parts II, III, and IV of Executive Order 11246, dated September 24, 1965 (30 F.R. 12319), as amended by Executive Order 11375 dated October 13, 1967 (32 F.R. 14303), and any Executive Order amending or superseding such orders.

(r) "Person" means any natural person, corporation, partnership, unincorporated association, State or local government, and any agency, instrumentality, or subdivision of such a government.

(s) "Prime contractor" means any person holding a contract, and for the purposes of Subpart B (General Enforcement, Compliance Review, and Complaint Procedure) of the "rules and regulations", any person who has held a contract subject to the order.

(t) "Recruiting and training agency" means any person who refers workers to any contractor or subcontractor, or who provides or supervises apprenticeship or training for employment by any contractor or subcontractor.

(u) "Rules, regulations, and relevant orders" of the Secretary of Labor used in paragraph (4) of the equal opportunity clause means rules, regulations, and relevant orders of the Secretary of Labor or his designee issued pursuant to the order.

(v) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(w) "Site of construction" means the general physical location of any building, highway, or other change or improvement to real property which is undergoing construction, rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, extension, demolition, or repair and any temporary location or facility at which a contractor, subcontractor, or other participating party meets a demand or performs a function relating to the contract or subcontract.

(x) "Subcontract" means any agreement or arrangement between a contractor and any person (in which the parties do not stand in the relationship of an employer and an employee):

(1) For the furnishing of supplies or services or for the use of real or personal property, including lease arrangements, which, in whole or in part, is necessary to the performance of any one or more contracts; or

(2) Under which any portion of the contractor's obligation under any one or more contracts is performed, undertaken or assumed.

(y) "Subcontractor" means any person holding a subcontract and, for the purposes of Subpart B (General Enforcement; Compliance Review, and Complaint Procedure) of the "rules and regulations," any person who has held a subcontract subject to the order. The term "First-tier subcontractor" refers to a subcontractor holding a subcontract with a prime contractor.

(z) "United States" as used herein shall include the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone, and the possessions of the United States.

§ 8.10 Responsibilities.

(a) General. The Department of Housing and Urban Development is responsible for: (1) Implementing the requirements of the order, the "rules and regulations," OFCC directives and all other rules, regulations, and orders issued pursuant thereto, and (2) obtaining the compliance of all contractors for which the Department is the Compliance Agency.

(b) Contract Compliance Officer (CCO). The Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity has been designated the Contract Compliance Officer (CCO) for the Department by the Secretary (35 F.R. 7138, May 6, 1970), and is responsible for developing and administering the Department's program under the order.

(c) General Deputy Contract Compliance Officer (GDCCO). The Deputy Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity has been designated the General Deputy Contract Compliance Officer (GDCCO) for the Department by the Secretary (35 F.R. 7138, May 6, 1970), to assist the Contract Compliance Officer in the performance of his duties. He is authorized to exercise the authority delegated to the Contract Compliance Officer.

(d) Deputy Contract Compliance Officer (DCCO). Each Assistant Regional Administrator for Equal Opportunity has been designated by the Contract Compliance Officer as Deputy Contract Compliance Officer (DCCO) for the Region in which he serves. Deputy Contract Compliance Officers are responsible for field administration of programs of contract compliance in conformity with directives and guidelines promulgated by the Contract Compliance Officer.

(e) Heads of Program Areas. Assistant Secretaries of the Department who are authorized to extend Federal financial assistance which involves construction work shall be responsible for effectuating the Order, "rules and regulations," OFCC directives, this Part 8, directives of the Department and all other rules, regulations, and orders issued pursuant thereto as they relate to construction contracts financially assisted by the Department.

§ 8.15 Equal opportunity clause.

(a) Government contracts. Except as otherwise provided, the following equal opportunity clause contained in section 202 of the Order shall be included in each Government contract entered into by the Department (and modification thereof if not included in the original contract):

During the performance of this contract, the contractor agrees as follows:

(1) The contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. The contractor will take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that employees are treated during employment, without regard to their race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Such action shall include, but not be limited to, the following: Employment, upgrading, demotion, or transfer, recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship. The contractor agrees to post in conspicuous places, available to employees and applicants for employment, notices to be provided by the contracting officer setting forth the provisions of this nondiscrimination clause.

(2) The contractor will, in all solicitations or advertisements for employees placed by or on behalf of the contractor, state that all qualified applicants will receive consideration for employment without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

(3) The contractor will send to each labor union or repesentative of workers with which he has a collective bargaining agreement or other contract or understanding, a notice to be provided by the Department's contracting officer, advising the labor union or workers' representative of the contractor's commitments under section 202 of Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and shall post copies of the notice in conspicuous places available to employees and applicants for employment.

(4) The contractor will comply with all provisions of Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and of the rules, regulations, and relevant orders of the Secretary of Labor.

(5) The contractor will furnish all information and reports required by Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and by the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary of Labor, or pursuant thereto, and will permit access to his books, records, and accounts by the Department and the Secretary of Labor for purposes of investigation to ascertain compliance with such rules, regulations, and orders.

(6) In the event of the contractor's noncompliance with the nondiscrimination clauses of this contract or with any of such rules, regulations, or orders, this contract may be canceled, terminated or suspended in whole or in part and the contractor may be declared ineligible for further Government contracts in accordance with procedures authorized in Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and such other sanctions may be imposed and remedies invoked as provided in Executive Order 11246 of September 25, 1965, or by rule, regulation, or order of the Secretary of Labor, or as otherwise provided by law.

(7) The contractor will include the provisions of paragraphs (1) through (7) in every subcontract or purchase order unless exempted by rules, regulations, or orders of the Secretary of Labor issued pursuant to section 204 of Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, so that such provisions will be binding upon each subcontractor or vendor. The contractor will take such action with respect to any subcontract or purchase order as the Department may direct as a means of enforcing such provisions including sanctions for noncompliance: Provided, however, That in the event the contractor becomes involved in, or is threatened with, litigation with a subcontractor or vendor as a result of such direction by the Department, the contractor may request the United States to enter into such litigation to protect the interests of the United States.

(b) Federally assisted construction contracts. Except as otherwise provided, the following language shall be included as a condition of any grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee involving federally assisted construction which is not exempt from the requirements of the equal opportunity clause:

The applicant hereby agrees that it will incorporate or cause to be incorporated into any contract for construction work or modification thereof, as defined in the regulations of the Secretary of Labor at 41 CFR Chapter 60, which is paid for in whole or in part with funds obtained from the Federal Government or borrowed on the credit of the Federal Government pursuant to a grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee, or undertaken pursuant to any Federal program involving such grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee, the following equal opportunity clause:

During the performance of this contract, the contractor agrees as follows:

(1) The contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. The contractor will take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that employees are treated during employment, without regard to their race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Such action shall include, but not be limited to the following: Employment, upgrading, demotion, or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship. The contractor agrees to post in conspicuous places, available to employees and applicants for employment, notices to be provided setting forth the provisions of this nondiscrimination clause.

(3) The contractor will send to each labor union or representative of workers with which he has a collective bargaining agreement or other contract or understanding, a notice to be provided advising the said labor union or workers' representatives of the contractor's commitment under this section, and shall post copies of the notice in conspicuous places available to employees and applicants for employment.

(4) The contractor will comply with all provisions of Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and of the rules, regulations, and relevant orders of the Secretary of Labor.

(5) The contractor will furnish all information and reports required by Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and by rules, regulations and orders of the Secretary of Labor, or pursuant thereto, and will permit access to his books, records, and accounts by the Department and the Secretary of Labor for purposes of investigation to ascertain compliance with such rules, regulations, and orders.

(6) In the event of the contractor's noncompliance with the nondiscrimination clauses of this contract or with any of the said rules, regulations, or orders, this contract may be cancelled, terminated, or suspended in whole or in part and the contractor may be declared ineligible for further Government contracts or federally assisted construction contracts in accordance with procedures authorized in Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, or by rule, regulation, or order of the Secretary of Labor, or as otherwise provided by law.

(7) The contractor will include the portion of the sentence immediately preceding paragraph (1) and the provisions of paragraphs (1) through (7) in every subcontract or purchase order unless exempted by rules, regulations, or orders of the Secretary of Labor issued pursuant to section 204 of Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, so that such provisions will be binding upon each subcontractor or vendor. The contractor will take such action with respect to any subcontract or purchase order as the Department may direct as a means of enforcing such provisions, including sanctions for noncompliance: Provided, however, That in the event a contractor becomes involved in, or is threatened with, litigation with a subcontractor or vendor as a result of such direction by the Department, the contractor may request the United States to enter into such litigation to protect the interest of the United States.

The applicant further agrees that it will be bound by the above equal opportunity clause with respect to its own employment practices when it participates in federally assisted construction work: Provided, That if the applicant so participating is a State or local government, the above equal opportunity clause is not applicable to any agency, instrumentality or subdivision of such government which does not participate in work on or under the contract.

The applicant agrees that it will assist and cooperate actively with the Department and the Secretary of Labor in obtaining the compliance of contractors and subcontractors with the equal opportunity clause and the rules, regulations, and relevant orders of the Secretary of Labor; that it will furnish the Department and the Secretary of Labor such information as they may require for the supervision of such compliance; and that it will otherwise assist the Department in the discharge of its primary responsibility for securing compliance.

The applicant further agrees that it will refrain from entering into any contract or contract modification subject to Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, with a contractor debarred from, or who has not demonstrated eligibility for, Government contracts and federally assisted construction contracts pursuant to the Executive order and will carry out such sanctions and penalties for violation of the equal opportunity clause as may be imposed upon contractors and subcontractors by the Department or the Secretary of Labor pursuant to Part II, Subpart D of the Executive order. In addition, the applicant agrees that if it fails or refuses to comply with these undertakings, the Department may take any or all of the following actions: Cancel, terminate, or suspend in whole or in part this grant (contract, loan, insurance, guarantee); refrain from extending any further assistance to the applicant under the program with respect to which the failure or refusal occurred until satisfactory assurance of future compliance has been received from such applicant; and refer the case to the Department of Justice for appropriate legal proceedings.

(c) Subcontracts. Each nonexempt prime contractor or subcontractor shall include the equal opportunity clause in each of its nonexempt subcontracts.

(d) Incorporation by reference. The equal opportunity clause may be incorporated by reference in Government bills of lading, transportation requests, contracts for deposit of Government funds, contracts for issuing and paying U.S. savings bonds and notes, contracts and subcontracts less than $50,000 and such other contracts as the Director may designate.

(e) Incorporation by operation of the order and departmental regulations. By operation of the order, the equal opportunity clause shall be considered to be a part of every contract and subcontract required by the order, the "rules and regulations" and these regulations to include such a clause whether or not it is physically incorporated in such contracts. The clause is applicable to every nonexempt contract where there is no written contract between the Department and the contractor.

(f) Adaptation of language. Such necessary changes in language may be made in the equal opportunity clauses as shall be appropriate to identify properly the parties and their undertakings.

§ 8.20 Exemptions.

(a) General—(1) Transactions of $10,000 or under. Contracts and subcontracts not exceeding $10,000, other than Government bills of lading, are exempt from the requirements of the equal opportunity clause. In determining the applicability of this exemption to any federally assisted construction contract, or subcontract thereunder, the amount of such contract or subcontract rather than the amount of the Federal financial assistance shall govern. The Department, applicants, contractors, and subcontractors shall not procure supplies or services in less than usual quantities to avoid applicability of the equal opportunity clause.

(2) Contracts and subcontracts for indefinite quantities. With respect to contracts and subcontracts for indefinite quantities (including, but not limited to, open-end contracts, requirement-type contracts, Federal Supply Schedule contracts, "call-type" contracts, and purchase notice agreements), the equal opportunity clause shall be included unless the purchaser has reason to believe that the amount to be ordered in any year under such contract will not exceed $10,000. The applicability of the equal opportunity clause shall be determined by the purchaser at the time of award for the first year, and annually thereafter for succeeding years, if any. Notwithstanding the above, the equal opportunity clause shall be applied to such contract whenever the amount of a single order exceeds $10,000. Once the equal opportunity clause is determined to be applicable, the contract shall continue to be subject to such clause for its duration, regardless of the amounts ordered, or reasonably expected to be ordered in any year.

(3) Work outside the United States. Contracts and subcontracts are exempt from the requirements of the equal opportunity clause with regard to work performed outside the United States by employees who were not recruited within the United States.

(4) Contracts with State or local governments. The requirements of the equal opportunity clause in any contract or subcontract with a State or local government (or any agency, instrumentality or subdivision thereof) shall not be applicable to any agency, instrumentality or subdivision of such government which does not participate in work on or under the contract or subcontract. In addition, State and local governments are exempt from the requirements of filing the annual compliance report provided for by § 8.50 and maintaining a written affirmative action compliance program prescribed in §§ 8.30 and 8.35.

(b) Specific contracts and facilities not connected with contracts. The equal opportunity clause will not be required to be included in any contract or subcontract exempted by the Director under the provisions of 41 CFR 60–1.5(b) (1) or (2) provided such exemption has not been withdrawn under the provisions of 41 CFR 60–1.5(d).

(c) National security. Any requirement set forth in the regulations in this part shall not apply to any contract or subcontract whenever the Secretary determines that such contract or subcontract is essential to the national security and that its award without complying with such requirement is necessary to the national security. Upon making such a determination, the Secretary will notify the Director in writing within 30 days.

§ 8.25 Award of contracts.

(a) All Contracting Officers and all officers who approve applications for Federal financial assistance involving a construction contract, shall prior to approval follow either of the procedures in subparagraphs (1) or (2) of this paragraph:

(1) Notify the Contract Compliance Officer or appropriate Deputy as soon as practicable of the impending award of each nonexempt construction contract in excess of $100,000, the name and address of the prime contractor, anticipated time of performance, name and address of each known subcontractor and whether the prime contractor and known subcontractors have:

(i) Participated in any previous contract subject to the equal opportunity clause, and

(ii) Filed with the Joint Reporting Committee, the Director, an agency, or the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission all reports due under the applicable filing requirements.

(2) Consult a list (supplied by the Contract Compliance Officer) of contractors who have previously been found to be in noncompliance with equal opportunity requirements. In the event of an impending award to any contractor on such list, the Contract Compliance Officer or appropriate Deputy shall be advised and the procedures of paragraph (b), (c), and (d) of this section shall be followed.

(b) The Contract Compliance Officer or appropriate Deputy shall review the available information relative to the prospective prime contractor's equal opportunity compliance status and notify the Contracting Officer or Approving Officer of any deficiencies found to exist. A copy of such report shall be forwarded to the Director.

(c) Contracting Officers or Approving Officers shall: (1) Notify the bidder, offeror, or applicant of any deficiencies found to exists by the Contract Compliance Officer or appropriate Deputy, and (2) direct any bidder, offeror, or applicant so notified to negotiate with the Contract Compliance Officer and to take such actions as the Contract Compliance Officer may require.

(d) The award of any such contract shall be conditioned upon the Contract Compliance Officer's notification to the Contracting Officer or Approving Officer that the bidder, offeror, or applicant has taken action or has agreed to take action satisfactory to the Contract Compliance Officer, appropriate Deputy, or the head of the agency as provided in § 8.55(a). Any such agreement to take action shall be stated in the contract, if the Contract Compliance Officer so requires.

(e) In the case of nonconstruction contracts, all Contracting Officers shall:

(1) Notify the Contract Compliance Officer as soon as practicable of the impending award of each nonexempt, nonconstruction Government contract in excess of $50,000, the name and address of the prime contractor, anticipated time of performance, name and address of each known subcontractor and whether the prime contractor and known subcontractors have:

(i) Participated in any previous contract or subcontract subject to the equal opportunity clause;

(ii) Filed with the Joint Reporting Committee, the Director, an agency, or the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission all reports due under the applicable filing requirements; and

(iii) Developed and have on file at each establishment affirmative action programs pursuant to Part 60–2 of the "rules and regulations."

(2) The Contract Compliance Officer shall notify the Compliance Agency (designated pursuant to the Director's Order No. 1 and 41 CFR 60–1.3(d)) of the impending award of each contract covered by subparagraph (1) of this paragraph. Based upon the information furnished by the Compliance Agency, the Contract Compliance Officer shall advise the Contracting Officer to take such action with respect to the impending award as may be appropriate pursuant to the rules, regulations, and relevant orders of the Secretary of Labor and this Part 8.

(f) The invitation for bids for each formally advertised nonconstruction contract, shall include a notice, and Department officials shall state at the outset of negotiations for each negotiated contract, that if the award, when let, should exceed the amount of $1 million, the prospective contractor and his known first-tier subcontractors with subcontracts of $1 million or more will be subject to a compliance review before the award of the contract. No such contract shall be awarded unless a preaward compliance review of the prospective contractor and his known first-tier $1 million subcontractors has been conducted by the Compliance Agency within 12 months prior to the award. If an agency other than the Department is the Compliance Agency, the Department will notify the Compliance Agency and request appropriate action and findings in accordance with this paragraph. In order to qualify for the award of a contract, a contractor and such first-tier subcontractors must be found to be in compliance pursuant to Part 60–2 of the "rules and regulations."

(g) A preaward compliance review may be conducted prior to award of contracts in any case where the CCO has reasonable grounds, based on a complaint, the Department's own investigation, or otherwise, to believe that the contractor or subcontractor is unable or unwilling to comply with the requirements of the equal opportunity clause. (Such reviews are in addition to those required pursuant to paragraph (f) of this section.)

§ 8.30 Affirmative action compliance programs—nonconstruction contracts.

Order No. 4 (41 CFR Part 60–2), issued by the Secretary of Labor, sets forth requirements for the development of affirmative action compliance programs for nonconstruction contractors.

§ 8.35 Affirmative action compliance programs—construction contracts.

(a) Requirements of programs. The Department or the applicant shall require each Federal or federally assisted construction prime contractor on projects costing $1 million or more, regardless of the number of employees, and each Federal or federally assisted construction prime contractor and subcontractor shall require each subcontractor on projects costing $1 million or more with a subcontract of $100,000 or more, regardless of the number of employees, to develop a written affirmative action compliance program.

(b) Purposes. The purposes of the written affirmative action program are:

(1) To identify areas of employment, employment policies and practices which require action by the contractor or subcontractor to assure equal employment opportunity to all employees and applicants for employment without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or national origin;

(2) To analyze these areas, policies, and practices to determine what actions by the contractor or subcontractor will be most effective in assuring equal opportunity; and

(3) To establish a plan to achieve employment opportunity through those actions identified as potentially most effective.

§ 8.40 Prebid requirements and conferences.

(a) In any area or for any class of contracts designated by the Director, or by the CCO, no bid invitations will be issued for any Federal or federally assisted construction contract unless such bid invitation contains definite minimum standards for affirmative action and a statement that contractors and subcontractors must meet such minimum standards to be eligible for award.

(b) Whenever the submission of a written affirmative action program is required before the award of a contract, definite minimum standards for such program shall be incorporated in the bid invitations or requests for proposal issued in connection with such contracts.

(c) When the Director or CCO so requires, a prebid conference will be held in which the minimum standards for affirmative action will be explained to those in attendance. All known prospective bidders will be notified of the date, time, and place of the prebid conference.

(d) Bids which fail to meet the standards prescribed shall be deemed nonresponsive and will not be considered for award.

§ 8.45 Participation in areawide equal employment opportunity programs.

Any contractor who is a participant in, or is a member of an organization or association which participates in, an areawide equal employment opportunity program which is approved by the Department and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance for the purpose of effectuating the goals of Executive Order 11246, may be deemed to be in compliance with the order by virtue of such participation and shall be exempt from the requirement of developing and maintaining a written affirmative action program, unless required to do so under the areawide equal employment opportunity program.

(a) Requirements for prime contractors and subcontractors. (1) Each prime contractor shall file, and each prime contractor and subcontractor shall cause its subcontractors to file annually, on or before the 31st day of March, complete and accurate reports on Standard Form 100 (EEO–1) promulgated jointly by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and Plans for Progress or such form as may hereafter be promulgated in its place if such prime contractor or subcontractor (i) is not exempt from the provisions of the "rules and regulations" in accordance with 41 CFR 60–1.5; (ii) has 100 or more employees; (iii) is a prime contractor or first-tier subcontractor; and (iv) has a nonexempt contract, subcontract or purchase order, serves as a depository of Government funds, or is a financial institution which is an issuing and paying agent for U.S. savings bonds and savings notes: Provided, That any subcontractor below the first tier which performs construction work shall be required to file such a report if it meets requirements of subdivisions (i), (ii), and (iv) of this subparagraph.

(2) Each person required by subparagraph (1) of this paragraph to submit reports shall file such a report with the Department within 30 days after the award to him of a contract or subcontract, unless such person has submitted such a report within 12 months preceding the date of the award. Subsequent reports shall be submitted annually in accordance with subparagraph (1) of this paragraph, or at such other intervals as the CCO or the Director may require. The Department, with the approval of the Director, may extend the time for filing any report.

(3) The Director, the CCO, or the applicant, on his own motion, may require a prime contractor or subcontractor to keep employment or other records and to furnish, in the form requested, within reasonable limits, such information as the Director, CCO or the applicant deems necessary for the administration of the order.

(4) Failure to file timely, complete and accurate reports as required constitutes noncompliance with the prime contractor's or subcontractor's obligations under the equal opportunity clause and is grounds for the imposition by the Department, the Director, an applicant, prime contractor or subcontractor, of any sanctions as authorized by the order and the "rules and regulations." Any such failure shall be reported in writing to the Director by the CCO as soon as practicable after it occurs.

(b) Requirements for bidders or prospective contractors—(1) Previous reports. Each bidder or prospective prime contractor and proposed subcontractor, where appropriate, shall state in the bid or in writing at the outset of negotiations for the contract: (i) Whether it has developed and has on file at each establishment affirmative action programs pursuant to 41 CFR Part 60–2; (ii) whether it has participated in any previous contract or subcontract subject to the equal opportunity clause and (iii) if so, whether it has filed with the Joint Reporting Committee, the Director, an agency, or the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission all reports due under the applicable filing requirements.

(2) Additional information. A bidder or prospective prime contractor or proposed subcontractor shall be required to submit such information as the CCO, the Deputy CCO, or the Director requests prior to the award of the contract or subcontract. When a determination has been made to award the contract or subcontract to a specific contractor, such contractor shall be required, prior to award, or after the award, or both, to furnish such other information as the Department, the applicant, or the Director requests.

(c) Use of reports. Reports filed pursuant to this section shall be used only in connection with the administration of the order and the Civil Rights Act of 1964, or in furtherance of the purposes of the order and said Act.

§ 8.55 Compliance reviews.

(a) General. The purpose of a compliance review is to determine if the prime contractor or subcontractor maintains nondiscriminatory hiring and employment practices and is taking affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed and that employees are placed, trained, upgraded, promoted, and otherwise treated during employment without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. It shall consist of a comprehensive analysis and evaluation of each aspect of the aforementioned practices, policies, and conditions resulting therefrom. Where necessary, recommendations for appropriate sanctions shall be made. Where deficiencies are found to exist, reasonable efforts shall be made to secure compliance through conciliation and persuasion. Before the contractor can be found to be in compliance with the order, it must make a specific commitment, in writing, to correct any such deficiencies. The commitment must include the precise action to be taken and dates for completion. The time period allotted shall be no longer than the minimum period necessary to effect such changes. Upon approval of the Contract Compliance Officer, the appropriate Deputy, or the Secretary of such commitment, the contractor may be considered in compliance, on condition that the commitments are faithfully kept. The contractor shall be notified that making such commitments does not preclude future determinations of noncompliance based on a finding that the commitments are not sufficient to achieve compliance.

(b) Regular compliance reviews. Each Deputy Contract Compliance Officer shall institute a program of regular compliance reviews of those contractors and subcontractors for which he is assigned responsibility.

(c) Special compliance review. The special compliance review of bidders, applicants, offerors, contractors, or subcontractors will be conducted at the request of the CCO or the Director, OFCC to determine compliance or ability to comply with the order, the "rules and regulations," these rules and regulations and directives issued pursuant thereto.

(d) Reports—(1) Special compliance review reports. A special compliance review report shall be provided to the CCO or the Director, OFCC, as directed.

(2) Regular compliance review reports. A report of each compliance review shall be forwarded to the CCO within 30 days after the regular review is conducted unless otherwise provided.

(3) Preaward compliance review report. A written report of every preaward compliance review required by the "rules and regulations," or otherwise required by the Director including findings, will be forwarded to the Director by the CCO within 10 days after the award for a postaward review.

(4) Additional reports. A written report of every other compliance review or any other matter processed by the Department involving an apparent violation of the equal opportunity clause shall be submitted to the Director. Such report shall contain a brief summary of the findings, including a statement of conclusions regarding the contractor's compliance or noncompliance with the requirements of the order, and a statement of the disposition of the case, including any corrective action taken or recommended and any sanctions or penalties imposed or recommended.

§ 8.60 Complaint procedure.

(a) Who may file complaints. Any employee of any contractor or applicant for employment with such contractor may, by himself or by an authorized representative, file in writing a complaint of alleged discrimination in violation of the equal opportunity clause. Such complaint is to be filed not later than 180 days from the date of the alleged discrimination, unless the time for filing is extended by the CCO or the Director upon good cause shown.

(b) Where to file. Complaints may be filed with the Director of OFCC or at any HUD Regional or Area Office, FHA Insuring Office or with the CCO. Any HUD employee receiving a complaint shall forward the complaint directly to the CCO or his designee. The CCO shall transmit a copy of the complaint to the Director within 10 days after the receipt thereof.

(c) Contents of complaint. (1) The complaint should include the name, address, and telephone number of the complainant, the name and address of the prime contractor or subcontractor committing the alleged discrimination, a description of the acts considered to be discriminatory, and any other pertinent information which will assist in the investigation and resolution of the complaint. The complaint shall be signed by the complainant or his authorized representative.

(2) Where a complaint contains incomplete information, the CCO shall seek promptly the needed information from the complainant. In the event such information is not furnished to the CCO within 60 days of the date of such request, the case may be closed.

(d) Investigations. For each complaint filed against a prime contractor or subcontractor for which HUD is the Compliance Agency, the CCO shall institute a prompt investigation and shall be responsible for developing a complete case record. A complete case record consists of the name and address of each person interviewed, and a summary of his statement, copies or summaries of pertinent documents, and a narrative summary of the evidence disclosed in the investigation as it relates to each violation revealed. When a complaint is filed against a prime contractor or subcontractor for which the Department is not the compliance agency, the CCO shall transmit the complaint to the Director for disposition.

(e) Resolution of complaints. (1) If the complaint investigation by the CCO shows no violation of the equal opportunity clause, he shall so inform the Director. The Director may request further investigation by the CCO.

(2) If any complaint investigation or compliance review indicates a violation of the equal opportunity clause, the matter should be resolved by informal means whenever possible. Such informal means may include the holding of a compliance conference. Each prime contractor and subcontractor shall be advised that the resolution is subject to review by the Director, and may be disapproved if he determines that such resolution is not sufficient to achieve compliance.

(3) Where any complaint investigation or compliance review indicates a violation of the equal opportunity clause and the matter has not been resolved by informal means, the CCO with the approval of the Director shall afford the contractor an opportunity for a hearing. If the final decision reached in accordance with the provisions of § 60–1.26 of the "rules and regulations" is that a violation of the equal opportunity clause has taken place, the CCO with the approval of the Director, may cause the cancellation, termination, or suspension of any contract or subcontract, cause a contractor to be debarred from further contracts or subcontracts, or may impose such other sanctions as are authorized by the order.

(4) When a prime contractor or subcontractor, without a hearing, shall have complied with the recommendations or orders of the CCO or the Director and believes such recommendations or orders to be erroneous, he shall, upon filing a request therefor within 10 days of such compliance, be afforded an opportunity for a hearing and review of the alleged erroneous action by the CCO or the Director.

(5) For reasonable cause shown, the CCO may reconsider or cause to be reconsidered any matter on his own motion or pursuant to a request.

(f) Report to the Director. Within 60 days from receipt of a complaint or within such additional time as may be allowed by the Director for good cause shown, the CCO shall process a complaint and submit to the Director the case record and summary report containing the following information:

(1) Name and address of the complainant.

(2) Brief summary of findings, including a statement as to the CCO's conclusions regarding the contractor's compliance or noncompliance with the requirements of the equal opportunity clause.

(3) A statement of the disposition of the case, including any corrective action taken and any sanctions or penalties imposed or, whenever appropriate, the recommended corrective action and sanctions or penalties.

§ 8.65 Hearings and sanctions.

(a) The Secretary with the approval of the Director may convene formal or informal hearings as he may deem appropriate for inquiring into the status of compliance by any prime contractor or subcontractor with the terms of the equal opportunity clause.

(b) The Secretary may propose or apply sanctions in the event of noncompliance by a contractor or subcontractor with the requirements of the equal opportunity clause, subject to the limitations of the "rules and regulations," particularly § 60–1.27.

(c) The conduct of hearings and the proposal and application of sanctions shall be in accordance with the requirements of the order and of the "rules and regulations."

§ 8.70 Intimidation and interference.

The sanctions and penalties contained in Subpart D of the order may be exercised by the CCO or the Director against any prime contractor, subcontractor or applicant who fails to take all necessary steps to ensure that no person intimidates, threatens, coerces, or discriminates against any individual for the purpose of interfering with the filing of a complaint, furnishing information, or assisting or participating in any manner in an investigation, compliance review, hearing, or any other activity related to the administration of the order or any other Federal, State, or local laws requiring equal employment opportunity.

§ 8.75 Segregated facilities certificate.

Prior to the award of any nonexempt Government contract or subcontract or federally assisted construction contract or subcontract, the Department or the applicant shall require the prospective prime contractor, and each prime contractor and subcontractor shall require each subcontractor, to submit a certification, in the form approved by the Director, that the prospective prime contractor or subcontractor does not and will not maintain any facilities he provides for his employees in a segregated manner, or permit his employees to perform their services at any location under his control where segregated facilities are maintained; and that he will obtain a similar certification in the form approved by the Director, prior to the award of any nonexempt subcontract.

§ 8.80 Solicitations or advertisements for employees.

In solicitations or advertisements for employees placed by or on behalf of a prime contractor or subcontractor, the requirements of paragraph (2) of the equal opportunity clause shall be satisfied whenever the prime contractor or subcontractor complies with any of the following:

(a) States expressly in the solicitations or advertising that all qualified applicants will receive consideration for employment without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or national origin;

(b) Uses display or other advertising, and the advertising includes an appropriate insignia prescribed by the Director. The use of the insignia is considered subject to the provisions of 18 U.S.C. 701;

(c) Uses a single advertisement, and the advertisement is grouped with other advertisements under a caption which clearly states that all employers in the group assure all qualified applicants equal consideration for employment without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or national origin;

(d) Uses a single advertisement in which appears in clearly distinguishable type the phrase "an equal opportunity employer."

§ 8.85 Access to record of employment.

Each prime contractor and subcontractor shall permit access during normal business hours to his books, records, and accounts pertinent to compliance with the order, and all rules and regulations promulgated pursuant thereto, by the Department or the Director for purposes of investigation to ascertain compliance with the equal opportunity clause of the contract or subcontract. Information obtained in this manner shall be used only in connection with the administration of the order and the administration of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and in furtherance of the purposes of the order and that Act.

§ 8.90 Notices to be posted.

Contractors and subcontractors required to do so by paragraphs (1) and (3) of the equal opportunity clause shall post notices to be provided by the CCO. Such notices shall be in compliance with the requirements of § 60–1.42 of the "rules and regulations."

§ 8.95 Program directives and instructions.

Appropriate program officials may issue such directives, procedures, and instructions as they consider necessary to achieve equal employment opportunity in programs administered by them, provided such issuances are not inconsistent with the provisions of the order, the rules, regulations, and directives of the Secretary of Labor or the Director, and these regulations. A copy of such directives, procedures, and instructions shall be submitted to the CCO for approval prior to issuance.

The regulations contained in this part shall become effective _____ (60 days after publication in the FEDERAL REGISTER) for all contracts, solicitations, invitations for bids, or requests for proposals which shall be sent by the Department or an applicant on or after said effective date and for all negotiated contracts which have not been executed as of said effective date.

INSTRUCTION SHEET

EVALUATION OF APPLICATIONS FOR LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING
(Form)

RAL - Appropriate Area Office staff shall review the criteria which relate to their onsibilities. Statements and other evidence of intent on the part of the applicant to ly at a "superior" or "adequate" level may be accepted in the absence of specific rmation needed to rate a criterion. If the terms of a statement of intent are not met, scheduling of the application for future action shall be affected accordingly. Final ication approval is dependent upon satisfying all statutory and administrative require-s which are a normal part of processing.

Community Need for Low Income Housing.

A superior rating shall be given under the following conditions: proposed unit types conform to the needs of the low income population; there is a shortage of standard housing to meet the needs of the low income population of the housing market area, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities; waiting lists for existing projects are substantial; and the ratio of the number of families within public housing admission income limits to the existing and potential supply of public and rent supplement housing units is greater than 5:1; or, the housing will serve as a relocation resource for families displaced by Governmental action.

An adequate rating shall be given if the proposed unit types conform to the needs of the low income population; there is not a substantial supply of standard housing available to the low income population, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities; and the ratio of the number of families within public housing admission income limits to the supply of public and rent supplement housing units is greater than 2:1 (An exception to this required ratio is allowed for suburban communities willing to provide public housing for central city poor).

A poor rating shall be given if the proposed unit types do not conform to the needs of the low income population; or if there exists a substantial supply of standard housing available to the low income population, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities; or the ratio of eligible families to the supply of subsidized low-rent housing is less than 2:1.

Efficient Production.

A superior rating shall be given if it appears likely that the established Production Milestones will be met, and that the housing will be produced at a cost at least 10 percent below the applicable prototype costs.

An adequate rating shall be given if it appears likely that the start of construction or rehabilitation will occur within 18 months from approval of program reservation, and that the housing will be produced at a cost which does not exceed the prototype costs by more than 5 percent (unless the Area Director, through the Regional Administrator, secures the approval of the Assistant Secretary, HPMC, for a specific project).

A poor rating shall be given if it appears likely that more than 18 months will be required from approval of program reservation to start of construction or rehabilitation, and the housing will be produced at a cost which exceeds the prototype costs by more than 10 percent.

Nondiscriminatory Location.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project (1) will be located in an area with respect to which there is no present likelihood, in the judgment of the area director, that it will become one of minority group concentration, or (2) will be located in an area of minority concentration but is to be located in a major comprehensive development which will include a range of housing at various income levels and where experience and judgment indicate that the area will have a racially inclusive residential pattern.

An adequate rating shall be given (1) if the proposed project will be located in an area which is substantially racially mixed and on the basis of existing demographic trends it appears that the project will have no significant effect on the proportion of minority to non-minority families, or (2) if the proposed project will provide housing in or near an area of minority concentration in response to an overriding need which cannot otherwise feasibly be met. In the case of an "adequate" rating based on (2), the rating shall be accompanied by documented findings based upon relevant racial and socio-economic information supporting both the overriding need and the availability of alternate housing.

A poor rating shall be given to any proposed project if the conditions specified above are not met.

Improved Environmental Location for Low Income Families.

A superior rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized housing to the total number of housing units in the neighborhood will be less than 15 percent, and travel time via adequate public transportation from the neighborhood to commercial and industrial job centers is less than 30 minutes and the proposed housing will be located in a neighborhood with good educational, commercial, and recreational facilities.

An adequate rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized units is less than 25 percent, and travel time to job centers is less than 60 minutes, and the proposed housing will be located in a neighborhood with average educational, commercial, and recreational facilities.

A poor rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized units is more than 25 percent, or if travel time to major job centers is more than 60 minutes, or if adequate educational, commercial, and recreational facilities are not available in the neighborhood or are not easily accessible via low cost public transportation.

For the purposes of the above determination, the term "neighborhood" generally should not exceed a one-half mile radius from the site of a proposed project.

Effect of Proposed Housing Upon Neighborhood Environment.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project will result in a substantial improvement in the quality of life within the neighborhood, and the proposed housing will improve the neighborhood in which it is located.

An adequate rating shall be given if the project design is compatible with the neighborhood, and if the project will maintain or improve the quality of life.

A poor rating shall be given if the project design is likely to reduce living standards and conditions in the neighborhood.

Relationship to Orderly Growth and Development.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project (1) will be located in and is consistent with plans for a neighborhood that is undergoing comprehensive improvement via Urban Renewal, Model Cities, or Project Rehab -- either Federal, State or locally assisted; (2) has been requested by residents of the neighborhood who have participated in and planned an improvement program for their neighborhood, or (3) will affirmatively contribute to orderly growth and development in the metropolitan area, either in reference to A-95 planning or otherwise.

An adequate rating shall be given if the project is part of an improvement program to stabilize or upgrade the neighborhood or its equivalent, or is compatible with ongoing growth trends in the metropolitan area, either by reference to A-95 planning or otherwise.

A poor rating shall be given if the project is not part of an established improvement program, or is inconsistent with sound growth patterns.

Employment and Utilization of Employees and Business in Project Area.

A superior rating shall be given if the LHA has definite plans to: (1) actively encourage developers, contractors and subcontractors to train and employ lower income persons residing in the proposed project area; (2) actively seek out business concerns located in or owned in substantial part by persons living in the proposed project area; and (3) actively implement plans for the training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area in the management of the project.

An adequate rating shall be given if the LHA has agreed to give special consideration to: (1) proposals from developers, etc., providing opportunities for training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area; (2) proposals from business concerns located in or owned in substantial part by persons living in the proposed project area; and (3) the training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area in the management of the project.

A poor rating shall be given if training opportunities will not be provided and if [illegible]

8. Provision for Sound Housing Management.

Rank separately as superior, adequate, or poor, the following specific criteria; (1) administrative capacity; (2) financial position; (3) maintenance; (4) crime prevention encouragement; (5) provision of community services; (6) administration of HUD-approved tenant selection plan and good faith efforts to achieve desegration; and (7) management-tenant relations. If the rating of an LHA is poor on any of these items, no application should be approved unless: (1) the LHA has a satisfactory plan to improve in its area of deficiency; (2) it can be shown that the new project will not be plagued by this deficiency; or (3) the provision of the new project will aid the LHA in overcoming this deficiency. Under no circumstances should a project be approved when an LHA is ranked poor in administrative capacity. The definitions of superior, adequate, or poor for these criteria shall be consistent with Housing Management policy.

In the case of an application from an LHA with no units under management, an adequate rating ordinarily will be given, unless there is information available which would justify a superior or poor rating. A poor rating shall always be assigned if there is any question regarding management feasibility. This is an especially important consideration in connection with a new LHA proposing a small program.

9. Homeownership.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project is to be developed as an authority-owned (Turnkey III) or leased (Turnkey IV) homeownership project.

An adequate rating shall be given if the LHA has other homeownership projects in some stage of development, or if it can be determined that the design of the poject is such that eventual ownership by the tenants would be facilitated (e.g.,detached, semi-detached, townhouse construction).

A poor rating shall be given if it appears unlikely that the proposed project will be converted to a homeownership program, and the design of the project is such that eventual ownership by the tenants will not be facilitated.

CIRCULAR

SUBJECT: Public Housing Application Approval Rating System

---

1. PURPOSE. This Circular transmits HUD Form No. "Evaluation of Applications for Low Rent Housing" which shall be used in accordance with the Instruction Sheet attached to the form for the following purposes:

   a. To determine the order in which public housing applications are to be approved.

   b. To help in the screening of approved program reservations for further actions.

   It replaces RHA Circular 12-20-67 titled "Priority Considerations in Approval of Applications for Low-Rent Housing Programs" and HAA Circular 3-26-69 titled "Housing the Elderly and the Family with Children--A Need for Balance".

2. SCOPE. It is intended that those applications which best fulfill the basic objectives of the Department's subsidized housing programs be scheduled to receive program reservations ahead of lower rated applications. Applications which do not receive an acceptable rating in meeting the basic objectives shall be identified and returned to the LHA's for corrective actions. Final application approval is dependent, of course, upon satisfying all statutory and administrative requirements which are a normal part of processing.

   The evaluation form attached to this Circular shall be used to screen all applications which are currently on hand or subsequently received in Area or Regional Offices. It shall be attached to each copy of the Application routed through the Area Office.

3. USE OF THE RATING SYSTEM. All applications meeting the minimum requirement for assignment to a priority group shall be separated by the category of housing applied for (e.g., conventional, turnkey, leased-new construction). Within each production category, applications in higher ranking priority groups shall be processed ahead of those in the lower ranking priority groups. Within each priority group, applications shall be ordered by the date the applications were received in the office.

The Multifamily Housing Representative shall obtain the information necessary to evaluate the criteria, and shall arrange for review by appropriate Area Office staff of the criteria which relate to their responsibilities. If sufficient information is not available to determine how well a particular criterion is met, that criterion shall not be rated, except for Nondiscriminatory Location which shall be rated as to every proposed project. Of course, if an application does not meet the minimum score, it must be returned to the LHA.

4. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RATING SYSTEM.

a. At the discretion of the Area Office Director, an application meeting the minimum score may be placed in a higher priority group. The reasons for such special consideration shall be recorded.

b. Lower ranking applications for Indian Housing or Homeownership Programs may be processed out-of-turn when necessary to meet the production targets in these categories.

c. Applications for units to be used as a resource for relocating displacees from urban renewal projects may be processed out-of-turn when necessary to assure that an Annual Contributions Contract will be executed by the time the Part II Loan and Grant Application is ready for approval.

d. Applications for units to be located in an urban renewal area may be processed out-of-turn when necessary to meet the urban renewal requirement that evidence of a Program Reservation must be submitted with the Part II Loan and Grant Application.

e. Lower ranking applications may be processed out-of-turn when necessary to meet our national goal of a balanced public housing program consisting of two-thirds family units and one-third elderly units.

INSTRUCTION SHEET

EVALUATION OF REQUESTS FOR RESERVATION OF CONTRACT AUTHORITY -- SECTION 235(i)
(Form 3122b)

ENERAL - Appropriate Area or Insuring Office staff shall review the criteria hich relate to their responsibilities. Final feasibility approval is dependent pon satisfying all statutory and administrative requirements which are a normal art of processing.

. Community Need for Lower Income Housing.

A superior rating shall be given under the following conditions: proposed unit types conform to the needs of the lower income population; there is a shortage of standard housing to meet the needs of the lower income population of the housing market area, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities; waiting lists for existing projects are substantial; or, the housing will serve as a relocation resource for families displaced by Governmental action.

An adequate rating shall be given if the proposed unit types conform to the needs of the lower income population; there is not a substantial supply of standard housing available to the lower income population, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities.

A poor rating shall be given if the proposed unit types do not conform to the needs of the lower income population; or if there exists a substantial supply of standard housing available to the lower income population, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities.

2. Efficient Production.

A superior rating shall be given if it appears likely that the targeted production dates will be met, and that the housing will be produced at a cost at least 10 percent below the cost of comparable units being produced in the area.

An adequate rating shall be given if it appears likely that the start of construction or rehabilitation will occur within 9 months from approval of program reservation, and that the housing will be produced at a cost which does not exceed the cost of comparable units being produced in the area by more than 5 percent.

A poor rating shall be given if it appears likely that more than 9 months will be required from date of approval of reservation to start of construction or rehabilitation, and/or the housing will be produced at a cost which exceeds the comparable costs by more than 10 percent.

3. Nondiscriminatory Location.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project (1) will be located in an area with respect to which there is no present likelihood, in the judgment of the area or insuring office director, that it will become one of minority group concentration, or (2) will be located in an area of minority concentration but is to be located in a major comprehensive development which will include a range of housing at various income levels and where experience and judgment indicate that the area will have a racially inclusive residential pattern.

An adequate rating shall be given (1) if the proposed project will be located in an area which is substantially racially mixed and on the basis of existing demographic trends it appears that the project will have no significant effect on the proportion of minority to non-minority families, or (2) if the proposed project will provide housing in or near an area of minority concentration in response to an overriding need which cannot otherwise feasibly be met. In the case of an "adequate" rating based on (2), the rating shall be accompanied by documented findings based upon relevant racial and socio-economic information supporting both the overriding need and the availability of alternate housing.

A poor rating shall be given to any proposed project if the conditions

Improved Environmental Location for Lower Income Families.

A superior rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized housing to the total number of housing units in the neighborhood will be less than 15 percent, and travel time via adequate public transportation from the neighborhood to commercial and industrial job centers is less than 30 minutes and the proposed housing will be located in a neighborhood with good education, commercial, and recreational facilities.

An adequate rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized units is less than 25 percent, and travel time to job centers is less than 60 minutes, and the proposed housing will be located in a neighborhood with average educational, commercial, and recreational facilities.

A poor rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized units is more than 25 percent, or if travel time to major job centers is more than 60 minutes, or if adequate educational, commercial, and recreational facilities are not available in the neighborhood or are not easily accessible via low cost public transportation.

For the purposes of the above determination, the term "neighborhood" generally should not exceed a one-half mile radius from the site of a proposed project.

Effect of Proposed Housing Upon Neighborhood Environment.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project will result in a substantial improvement in the quality of life within the neighborhood, and the proposed housing will improve the neighborhood in which it is located.

An adequate rating shall be given if the project design is compatible with the neighborhood, and if the project will maintain or improve the quality of life.

A poor rating shall be given if the project design is likely to reduce living standards and conditions in the neighborhood.

Relationship to Orderly Growth and Development.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project (1) will be located in and is consistent with plans for a neighborhood that is undergoing comprehensive improvement via Urban Renewal, Model Cities, or Project Rehab -- either Federal, State or locally assisted; (2) has been requested by residents of the neighborhood who have participated in and planned an improvement program for their neighborhood; or (3) will affirmatively contribute to orderly growth and development in the metropolitan area, either by reference to A-95 planning or otherwise.

An adequate rating shall be given if the project is part of an improvement program to stabilize or upgrade the neighborhood or its equivalent, or is compatible with ongoing growth trends in the metropolitan area, either by reference to A-95 planning or otherwise.

A poor rating shall be given if the project is not part of an established improvement program, or is inconsistent with sound growth patterns.

Employment and Utilization of Employees and Business in Project area.

A superior rating shall be given if the developer, contractors and subcontractors have definite plans to train and employ lower income persons residing in the proposed project area; and to actively seek out business concerns located in or owned in substantial part by persons living in the proposed project area; and if the developer has plans for the training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area in the management of the project.

An adequate rating shall be given to proposals which provide some opportunities for training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area; or which will provide opportunities for business concerns located in or owned in substantial part by persons living in the proposed project area; or which will provide for the training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area in the management of the project.

A poor rating shall be given if training or employment opportunities will not be provided and it is unlikely that area businesses will perform any work on the project.

INSTRUCTION SHEET

EVALUATION OF REQUESTS FOR RESERVATION OF CONTRACT AUTHORITY FOR RENT SUPPLEMENT OR SECTION 236 PROJECTS

(Forms 3126a and 2500a)

GENERAL - Appropriate Area or Insuring Office staff shall review the criteria which relate to their responsibilities. Final feasibility approval is dependent upon satisfying all statutory and administrative requirements which are a normal part of processing.

1. Community Need for Lower Income Housing.

A superior rating shall be given under the following conditions: proposed unit types conform to the needs of the lower income population; there is a shortage of standard housing to meet the needs of the lower income population of the housing market area, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities; waiting lists for existing projects are substantial; or, the housing will serve as a relocation resource for families displaced by Governmental action.

An adequate rating shall be given if the proposed unit types conform to the needs of the lower income population; there is not a substantial supply of standard housing available to the lower income population, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities.

A poor rating shall be given if the proposed unit types do not conform to the needs of the lower income population; or if there exists a substantial supply of standard housing available to the lower income population, taking into account existing employment and employment opportunities.

2. Efficient Production.

A superior rating shall be given if it appears likely that the targeted production dates will be met, and that the housing will be produced at a cost at least 10 percent below the cost of comparable units being produced in the area.

An adequate rating shall be given if it appears likely that the start of construction or rehabilitation will occur within 9 months from approval of program reservation, and that the housing will be produced at a cost which does not exceed the cost of comparable units being produced in the area by more than 5 percent.

A poor rating shall be given if it appears likely that more than 9 months will be required from date of approval of reservation to start of construction or rehabilitation, and/or the housing will be produced at a cost which exceeds the comparable costs by more than 10 percent.

3. Nondiscriminatory Location.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project (1) will be located in an area with respect to which there is no present likelihood, in the judgment of the area or insuring office director, that it will become one of minority group concentration, or (2) will be located in an area of minority concentration but is to be located in a major comprehensive development which will include a range of housing at various income levels and where experience and judgment indicate that the area will have a racially inclusive residential pattern.

An adequate rating shall be given (1) if the proposed project will be located in an area which is substantially racially mixed and on the basis of existing demographic trends it appears that the project will have no significant effect on the proportion of minority to non-minority families, or (2) if the proposed project will provide housing in or near an area of minority concentration in response to an overriding need which cannot otherwise feasibly be met. In the case of an "adequate" rating based on (2), the rating shall be accompanied by documented findings based upon relevant racial and socio-economic information supporting both the overriding need and the availability of alternate housing.

A poor rating shall be given to any proposed project if the conditions specified above are not met.

4. Improved Environmental Location for Lower Income Families.

A superior rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized housing to the total number of housing units in the neighborhood will be less than 15 percent, and travel time via adequate public transportation from the neighborhood to commercial and industrial job centers is less than 30 minutes and the proposed housing will be located in a neighborhood with good educational, commercial, and recreational facilities.

An adequate rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized units is less than 25 percent, and travel time to job centers is less than 60 minutes, and the proposed housing will be located in a neighborhood with average educational, commercial, and recreational facilities.

A poor rating shall be given if the percentage of subsidized units is more than 25 percent, or if travel time to major job centers is more than 60 minutes, or if adequate educational, commercial, and recreational facilities are not available in the neighborhood or are not easily accessible via low cost public transportation.

For the purposes of the above determination, the term "neighborhood" generally should not exceed a one-half mile radius from the site of a proposed project.

5. Effect of Proposed Housing Upon Neighborhood Environment.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project will result in a substantial improvement in the quality of life within the neighborhood, and the proposed housing will improve the neighborhood in which it is located.

An adequate rating shall be given if the project design is compatible with the neighborhood, and if the project will maintain or improve the quality of life.

A poor rating shall be given if the project design is likely to reduce living standards and conditions in the neighborhood.

6. Relationship to Orderly Growth and Development.

A superior rating shall be given if the proposed project (1) will be located in and is consistent with plans for a neighborhood that is undergoing comprehensive improvement via Urban Renewal, Model Cities, or Project Rehab — either Federal, State or locally assisted; (2) has been requested by residents of the neighborhood who have participated in and planned an improvement program for their neighborhood, or (3) will affirmatively contribute to orderly growth and development in the metropolitan area, either by reference to A - 95 planning or otherwise.

An adequate rating shall be given if the project is part of an improvement program to stabilize or upgrade the neighborhood or its equivalent, or is compatible with ongoing growth trends in the metropolitan area, either by reference to A - 95 planning or otherwise.

A poor rating shall be given if the project is not part of an established improvement program, or is inconsistent with sound growth patterns.

7. Employment and Utilization of Employees and Business in Project Area.

A superior rating shall be given if the developer, contractors and subcontractors have definite plans to train and employ lower income persons residing in the proposed project area; and to actively seek out business concerns located in or owned in substantial part by persons living in the proposed project area; and if the developer has plans for the training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area in the management of the project.

An adequate rating shall be given to proposals which provide some opportunities for training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area; or which will provide opportunities for business concerns located in or owned in substantial part by persons living in the proposed project area; or which will provide for the training and employment of lower income persons residing in the project area in the management of the project.

A poor rating shall be given if training or employment opportunities will not be provided and it is unlikely that area businesses will perform any work on the project.

8. Provision for Sound Housing Management.

A superior rating will be given if the sponsor presents an outstanding plan to assure good management of the project when completed, and to provide social services and tenant counseling; and provides evidence of ability to carry out the proposed management plan.

An adequate rating shall be given if an acceptable plan is presented to accomplish the objectives outlined above.

A poor rating shall be given if there is any question regarding management capability to accomplish the above objectives.

CIRCULAR

CIRCULAR

Subject: Affirmative Marketing To Advance Fair Housing Objectives Under HUD-FHA Subsidized and Unsubsidized Housing Programs

1. Purpose.

The purpose of this circular is to set forth for the guidance of HUD personnel and persons and organizations dealing with HUD the Department's equal opportunity guidelines for affirmative marketing under FHA subsidized and unsubsidized housing programs.

2. Legal Authority.

Discrimination because of race, color, religion, or national origin with regard to FHA housing programs is forbidden under Executive Order 11063, issued November 20, 1962; under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; or under Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968.

Executive Order 11063 directs all Federal departments and agencies to take all necessary and appropriate action to prevent such discrimination insofar as their functions relate to the provision, rehabilitation or operation of housing and related facilities.

Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 provides that no person shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 forbids discrimination on account of race, color, religion, or national origin in the sale or rental of housing, in the financing of housing, or in the provision of brokerage services. Section 808(e)(5) requires the Secretary of HUD to administer the programs relating to housing and urban development in a manner affirmatively to further the policies of Title VIII.

3. Policy.

Pursuant to this authority, it is the policy of HUD to administer its FHA housing programs so as to achieve a condition in which individuals of similar income levels in the same housing market area have a like range of housing choices available to them regardless of their race, color, religion or national origin.

Each sponsor of a proposed HUD-FHA project or subdivision shall pursue affirmative fair housing marketing policies in the solicitation of eligible buyers and tenants.

4. Requirements.

Each sponsor shall meet the following requirements:

a. Carry out an affirmative program to attract applicants of all races. Such a program shall typically involve publicizing the availability of housing opportunities, including advertising in minority media if minority publications or other media are available in the area from which the market potential will be drawn. All advertising shall include either the HUD-approved Equal Housing Opportunity logo or slogan and all advertising depicting persons shall depict persons of majority and minority races.

b. Maintain a nondiscriminatory hiring policy in recruiting from both minority and majority races for staff engaged in the sale or rental of properties.

c. Instruct all employees and agents in the policy of nondiscrimination and fair housing.

d. Specifically inform local housing authorities and relocation agencies of the development of projects and subdivisions and data pertinent thereto.

e. Specifically solicit eligible buyers or tenants reported to the sponsor by the HUD area or insuring office.

f. Prominently display in the sales or rental office of the project or subdivision and include in any printed material used in connection with sales or rentals information concerning its nondiscriminatory fair housing policy.

The affirmative fair housing marketing requirements, as set forth in 4(a) to 4(f) above, shall apply, as of the effective date of this policy, to all subdivisions, multifamily projects and mobile home parks of 25 or more lots, units or spaces, hereafter developed under FHA subsidized and unsubsidized housing programs.

5. Affirmative Fair Housing Marketing Plan.

Each sponsor of a project or subdivision shall provide on a form to be supplied by HUD information indicating his affirmative fair housing marketing plan to comply with the requirements set forth above.

6. Notice of Housing Opportunities.

Upon request, the Director of each Area and Insuring Office shall provide monthly a list of all projects or subdivisions covered by this circular on which commitments have been issued during the preceding 30 days to all interested individuals and groups.

7. Compliance.

Sponsors failing to comply with the requirements of this circular will make themselves liable to sanctions authorized by law and regulations.

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

[Docket No. R-71-108]

ADVERTISING GUIDELINES FOR FAIR HOUSING

Notice of Proposed Statement of Policy

In order to facilitate and promote compliance with the requirements of title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, and particularly section 804(c) thereof (42 U.S.C. 3601, 3604(c)) regarding advertising acts and practices, the Department of Housing and Urban Development has prepared guidelines to indicate materials, both graphic and written, that are appropriate for the preparation, publishing, and general use of advertising matter with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling as defined by the Act. These guidelines, and an explanatory discussion of them, are set forth below in a proposed policy statement being issued by the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity under authority delegated to him by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (35 F.R. 6877, April 30, 1970).

Interested persons are invited to submit such written comments and suggestions concerning the proposed statement as they may desire. Communications should identify the subject matter by the above title and should be submitted in triplicate to the Office of Equal Opportunity, Department of Housing and Urban Development, 451 Seventh Street SW., Washington, DC 20410. All communications received on or before June 21, 1971, will be considered before taking action on the proposal. The proposals contained in this notice may be changed in light of comments received. A copy of each submittal will be available for public inspection during business hours, both before and after the closing dates set forth above, in the HUD Information Center at the above address.

The proposed Statement of Policy reads as follows:

PUBLICATION GUIDELINES FOR COMPLIANCE WITH TITLE VIII OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1968

POLICY STATEMENT

Section 804(c) of title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, 42 U.S.C. 3604(c), makes it unlawful to make, print, or publish, or cause to be made, printed, or published any notice, statement, or advertisement, with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling (any building, structure, or portion thereof which is occupied as, or designed or intended for occupancy as, a residence by one or more families, and any vacant land which is offered for sale or lease for the construction or location thereof of any such building, structure, or portion thereof) that indicates any preference, limitation, or discrimination based on race, color, religion, or national origin, or an intention to make any such preference, limitation, or discrimination.

These advertising guidelines are being issued by the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity who has been delegated the power vested in the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development with respect to the administration of title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, for the purpose of assisting the newspaper industry and all persons who use advertising to make, print, or publish or cause to be made, printed or published any classified or display advertisement with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling to comply with these provisions of title VIII.

A. The use of words, phrases, and sentences which control discriminatory response. The following words, phrases, symbols, and forms are those most typically used in residential real estate advertising to convey either overt or tacit discriminatory intent. In considering a complaint under title VIII, the Assistant Secretary will normally consider the use of such words, phrases, symbols, and forms to indicate possible violation of the title and to establish a need for seeking resolution of the complaint, unless it is apparent from the context of their usage that discrimination within the meaning of the title is not involved.

1. Words descriptive of dwelling, landlord, and tenant. White private home; Colored home; Jewish home; Black man seeks apartment.

2. Words indicative of race, color, religion, or national origin. Negro, Hispano, Mexican, Indian, Oriental, Black, White, WASP, Hebrew Irish, Italian, European, etc.

3. Catch words. Restricted, ghetto, disadvantaged, and also words such as "private", and "traditional" when used in a discriminatory context.

4. Symbols or logotypes. Symbols or logotypes which imply or suggest race, color, religion, or national origin.

5. Colloquialisms. Locally accepted words or phrases which imply or suggest race, color, religion, or national origin.

6. Directions (maps or written instructions). Use of racially significant landmarks such as an existing black development (signal to Blacks) or existing development known for its exclusion of minorities (signal to Whites). Specific directions from racially significant areas.

B. Use of human models. The use of human models in photographs, drawings, or other graphic techniques indicating race, color, religion, or national origin may violate the provisions of the Act relating to discriminatory advertising. For example, if black models were used alone in display advertising, the possibility of discriminatory intent is immediately raised. The models, if used, should indicate to the general public that the housing is open and available to all persons regardless of race, color, religion, or national origin, and not for the exclusive use of one such group. If models are used in display advertisements the models should reasonably represent both blacks and whites and other appropriate minority groups in the community.

C. Policy and practice guidelines. The following guidelines are offered as suggested methods of assuring equal opportunity in real estate advertising. Conformance with these guidelines will be considered in evaluating compliance with title VIII in connection with investigations by the Assistant Secretary of advertising policies and practices under the title.

1. Guideline for use of logotype or slogan. All advertising of residential real estate for sale or rent can contain an Equal Housing Opportunities logotype or slogan as a means of educating the homeseeking public, particularly nonwhite buyers or renters, that the property is available to all persons irrespective of race, color, religion, or national origin. Table 1 (see appendix) indicates the suggested size of logotype that can be used. In all space advertising which is less than 4 column inches of a page in size, the EHO slogan can be used. The advertisement may be grouped with other advertisements under a caption which states that the housing is available to all without regard to race, color, religion, or national origin.

Table 2 (see appendix) contains copies of the suggested EHO logotype, statement and slogan.

2. Guidelines for notification of Fair Housing Policy—(a) Employees. All publishers of advertisements should provide a printed copy of their nondiscrimination policy to each employee and officer of the firm.

(b) Clients. All publishers of advertisements should post a copy of their nondiscrimination policy in a conspicuous place so that it is readily apparent to prospective advertisers and provide a copy to all firms and persons using their advertising services.

SAMUEL J. SIMMONS,
Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity.

APPENDIX

The following two tables may serve as a guide for the use of the Equal Housing Opportunities Logotype, Statement and Slogan for display advertising:

TABLE I

A simple formula can guide the real estate advertiser in using the Equal Housing Opportunities Logotype, Statement, or Slogan or a combination of these. If other logotypes are used in the advertisement, then the Equal Housing Opportunities Logotype should be of a size equal to the largest of the other logotypes; if no other logotypes are used, then the following guidelines can be used.

Approximate size of advertisement	Size of logotype (square inch)	Approximate point size of type to be used
		Statement	Slogan
½ page or larger	2	Same as newspaper editorial matter.	(1)
¼ to ½ page	1	do	(1)

SECTION 3 REGULATIONS

Proposed Rule Making

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

[24 CFR Part 76]

[Docket No. R-71-100]

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR LOWER INCOME PERSONS IN CONNECTION WITH ASSISTED PROJECTS

Notice of Proposed Rule Making

The Department of Housing and Urban Development is considering amending Title 24 of the Code of Federal Regulations to include a new Part 76 entitled "Employment Opportunities for Lower Income Persons in Connection with Assisted Projects." The proposed amendment, issued pursuant to section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, 12 U.S.C. 1701u, would establish procedures to encourage the employment on assisted projects of lower income persons residing in the project locale, and the award of project-related contracts to businesses similarly located.

The proposed regulations, the purpose of which is more fully set forth under § 76.1, relate to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts, and are not subject to the rule making requirements of 5 U.S.C. 553. However, recently announced Department policy provides that rules and regulations, as broadly defined by the promulgating notice, 36 F.R. 4291, will be published for proposed rule making. Accordingly, interested persons are invited to participate in the making of the proposed rule by submitting written data, views, or statements with regard to the proposed regulations. Communications should identify the proposed rule by the above docket number and title and should be filed in triplicate with the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D.C. 20410. All relevant material received on or before July 19, 1971, will be considered by the Assistant Secretary before taking action on the proposal. Copies of comments submitted will be available during business hours, both before and after the specified closing date, at the above address, for examination by interested persons.

The proposed rule is issued pursuant to section 7(d) of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act, 42 U.S.C. 3535(d).

§ 76.1 Purpose and scope of part.

(a) The regulations set forth in this part contain the procedures established by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development for carrying out his responsibilities under section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, 12 U.S.C. 1701u. That section requires that:

In the administration by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development of programs providing direct financial assistance in aid of housing, urban planning, development, redevelopment, or renewal, public or community facilities, and new community development, the Secretary shall—

(1) Require, in consultation with the Secretary of Labor, that to the greatest extent feasible opportunities for training and employment arising in connection with the planning and carrying out of any project assisted under any such program be given to lower income persons residing in the area of such project; and

(2) Require, in consultation with the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, that to the greatest extent feasible contracts for work to be performed in connection with any such project be awarded to business concerns, including but not limited to individuals or firms doing business in the field of planning, consulting, design, architecture, building construction, rehabilitation, maintenance, or repair, which are located in or owned in substantial part by persons residing in the area of such project.

(b) In the development of these regulations the Secretary has consulted with the Secretary of Labor and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration and mutual agreement has been reached with respect to the coordination of employment and training efforts and contracts awards under these regulations by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Department of Labor, and the Small Business Administration.

(c) The Secretary will issue such further regulations in connection with his responsibilities under section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as he finds appropriate and may, as needed, amplify any regulations issued pursuant to section 3, through guidelines, handbooks, circulars, or other means.

As used in this part—

(a) "Applicant" means any entity seeking assistance for a section 3 covered project including, but not limited to, mortgagors, developers, local public bodies, nonprofit or limited dividend sponsors, builders, or property managers.

(b) "Business concerns located within the section 3 covered project area" means those individuals or firms located within the relevant section 3 covered project area as determined pursuant to § 76.15 which are small and owned by persons considered by the Small Business Administration to be socially or economically disadvantaged.

(c) "Business concerns owned in substantial part by persons residing in the section 3 covered project area" means those business concerns which are 51 percent or more owned by persons residing within the relevant section 3 covered project as determined pursuant to § 76.15 and which are small and owned by persons considered by the Small Business Administration to be socially or economically disadvantaged.

(d) "Contracting party" means any entity which contracts with a contractor for the performance of work in connection with a section 3 covered project.

(e) "Contractor" means any entity which performs work in connection with a section 3 covered project.

(f) "Department" means the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

(g) "Lower income resident of the area" means any individual who resides within the area of a section 3 covered project and whose family income does not exceed 80 percent of the median income in the Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area (or the county, if not within an SMSA) in which the section 3 covered project is located.

(h) "Political jurisdiction" means a politically organized community with a governing body having general governmental powers.

(i) "Recipient" means any entity who received assistance for a section 3 covered project including, but not limited to, mortgagors, developers, local public bodies, nonprofit or limited dividend sponsors, builders or property managers.

(j) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(k) "Section 3" means section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, 12 U.S.C. 1701u.

(l) "Section 3 clause" means the contract provisions set forth in § 76.20(b).

(m) "Section 3 covered project" means any project assisted by any program administered by the Secretary in which loans, grants, subsidies, or other financial assistance are provided in aid of housing, urban planning, development, redevelopment, or renewal, public or community facilities, and new community development (except where the financial assistance available under such program is solely in the form of insurance or guaranty).

(n) "Subcontractor" means any entity (other than a person who is an employee of the contractor) which has agreed or arranged with a contractor to undertake a portion of the contractor's obligation or the performance of work in connection with a section 3 covered project.

§ 76.10 Delegation to Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity.

Except as otherwise provided in this part, the functions of the Secretary referred to herein will be delegated to the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity.

§ 76.15 Determination of the area of a section 3 covered project.

(a) The area of a section 3 covered project shall be determined as follows:

(1) The boundaries of a section 3 covered project located within a geographic area designated pursuant to the provisions of title I of the Housing Act of 1949, 42 U.S.C. 1450, or pursuant to the provisions of title I of the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966, 42 U.S.C. 3301, shall be coextensive with the boundaries of that geographic area.

(2) The boundaries of a section 3 covered project not located within a geographic area designated pursuant to title I of the Housing Act of 1949, or title I of the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966 shall be coextensive with the boundaries of the smallest political jurisdiction in which the project is located.

(3) To the extent that goals (established pursuant to Subparts B, C, and D of this part) cannot be met within a section 3 covered project area as determined pursuant to subparagraph (1) of this paragraph, the boundaries of the smallest political jurisdiction in which the section 3 covered project is located shall be designated as the relevant section 3 covered project area.

(b) The Department's Regional Administrator, Area Office Director, or FHA Insuring Office Director, as appropriate, shall determine the boundaries of each section 3 covered project; develop a "Project Area Map" if the project area is determined pursuant to paragraph (a)(1) of this section, showing the section 3 covered project area, and the smallest political jurisdiction in which it is located, except where the project area is a Model Cities area which is coextensive with the city itself; and publish the "Project Area Map" in a newspaper serving the community in which the section 3 covered project area is located.

§ 76.20 Assurance of compliance with regulations.

(a) Every contract or agreement for a grant, loan, subsidy, or other direct financial assistance in aid of housing, urban planning, development, redevelopment, or renewal, public or community facilities, and new community development, entered into by the Department of Housing and Urban Development shall contain provisions requiring the applicant or recipient to carry out the provisions of section 3, the regulations set forth in this part, and any applicable rules and orders of the Department issued thereunder prior to approval of its application for assistance for a section 3 covered project.

(b) Every applicant, recipient, contracting party, contractor, and subcontractor shall incorporate, or cause to be incorporated, in all contracts for work in connection with a section 3 covered project, the following clause (referred to as a section 3 clause):

A. The work to be performed under this contract is on a project assisted under a program providing direct Federal financial assistance from the Department of Housing and Urban Development and is subject to the requirements of section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended, 12 U.S.C. 1701u. Section 3 requires that to the greatest extent feasible opportunities for training and employment be given lower income residents of the project area and contracts for work in connection with the project be awarded to business concerns which are located in, or owned in substantial part by persons residing in the area of the project.

B. The parties to this contract will comply with the provisions of said section 3 and the regulations issued pursuant thereto by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development set forth in 24 CFR ------, and all applicable rules and orders of the Department issued thereunder prior to the execution of this contract. The parties to this contract certify and agree that they are under no contractual or other disability which would prevent them from complying with these requirements.

C. The contractor will send to each labor organization or representative of workers with which he has a collective bargaining agreement or other contract or understanding, if any, a notice advising the said labor organization or workers' representative of his commitments under this section 3 clause and shall post copies of the notice in conspicuous places available to employees and applicants for employment or training.

D. The contractor will include this section 3 clause in every subcontract for work in connection with the project and will, at the direction of the applicant for or recipient of Federal financial assistance, take appropriate action pursuant to the subcontract upon a finding that the subcontractor is in violation of regulations issued by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, 24 CFR ------. The contractor will not subcontract with any subcontractor where it has notice or knowledge that the latter has been found in violation of regulations under 24 CFR ------ and will not let any subcontract unless the subcontractor has first provided it with a preliminary statement of ability to comply with the requirements of these regulations.

E. Compliance with the provisions of section 3, the regulations set forth in 24 CFR ------, and all applicable rules and orders of the Department issued thereunder prior to the execution of the contract, shall be a condition of the Federal financial assistance provided to the project, binding upon the applicant or recipient for such assistance, its successors, and assigns. Failure to fulfill these requirements shall subject the applicant or recipient, its successors, and assigns to those sanctions specified by the grant or loan agreement or contract through which Federal assistance is provided, and to such sanctions as are specified by rules, regulations, or applicable policy of the Department of Housing and Urban Development governing the program under which Federal assistance to the project is provided.

§ 76.25 Bidding and negotiation requirements.

(a) Every applicant and recipient shall require prospective contractors for work in connection with section 3 covered projects to provide, prior to the signing of the contract, a preliminary statement of work force needs (skilled, semiskilled, unskilled labor and trainees by category, where known; where not known, such information shall be supplied prior to the signing of any contract between contractors and their subcontractors.

(b) When a bidding procedure is used to let the contract, the invitation or solicitation for bids shall advise prospective contractors of the requirements of these regulations. When the contract is let pursuant to negotiation or method other than formal bidding procedures, prospective contractors shall be advised by the contracting party of the requirements of these regulations as part of the contract specifications.

Every applicant and recipient shall assist and actively cooperate with the Secretary in obtaining the compliance of their contractors and subcontractors with the requirements of these regulations, including cooperation and assistance in distributing and collecting forms and information, and in notifying contracting parties and contractors of violations of these regulations, and shall refrain from entering into any contract with any contractor after notification by the Department that the contractor has been found in violation of these regulations pursuant to § 76.110(j).

§ 76.35 Effectuation of applicant obligations in direct and indirect relationships.

(a) Where the applicant for assistance under a section 3 covered project and the recipient of such assistance are not one and the same, the recipient shall be regarded as the successor in interest of the applicant and shall have the same obligations as the applicant with respect to compliance with these regulations. These obligations shall be incorporated, specifically or by reference in the loan or grant agreement or other contract or agreement through which the assistance is provided to the recipient.

(b) Where the applicant or recipient itself will perform all or part of the work in connection with a section 3 covered project within the meaning of these regulations, with either permanent or temporary staff by force account, it will provide the Department with all forms and assurances required of a contractor or subcontractor by these regulations prior to the execution of any loan or grant agreement or other contract or agreement through which assistance is provided.

(c) Where the applicant, recipient or contractor sells, leases, transfers or otherwise conveys land upon which work in connection with a section 3 covered project within the meaning of these regulations is to be performed (for example, under the Urban Renewal or Neighborhood Development program), it shall include in each contract or subcontract for work on such land a clause requiring the purchaser, lessee, or redeveloper to assume the same obligations as a contractor for work under section 3 of these regulations (including the incorporation of the Assurance of Compliance language specified in § 76.20).

(d) Each such purchaser, lessee, or redeveloper shall be relieved of such obligations upon satisfactory completion of all work to be performed under the terms of the redevelopment contract.

§ 76.40 General.

Each applicant, recipient, contractor or subcontractor undertaking work in connection with a section 3 covered project shall fulfill his obligation to utilize lower income project area residents as trainees to the greatest extent feasible by:

(a) Utilizing the maximum number of persons in the various training categories in all phases of the work to be performed under the section 3 covered project; and

(b) Filling all vacant training positions with lower income project area residents except for those training positions which remain unfilled after a good faith effort has been made to fill them with eligible lower income project area residents.

§ 76.45 Establishing number of trainees.

(a) For the building construction occupations, the number of trainees or apprentices for each occupation shall be determined pursuant to regulations issued by the Secretary of Labor.

(b) For nonconstruction occupations or for any building construction occupations for which ratios are not determined pursuant to regulations of the Secretary of Labor, the number of trainees for each occupation shall be that number which can reasonably be utilized in each occupation on each phase of a section 3 covered project. The applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor shall initially determine the maximum number of trainees for each occupation and submit that determination along with its justification to the Department.

§ 76.50 Good faith effort.

(a) Each applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor seeking to establish that a good faith effort as required by § 76.40 has been made to fill all training positions with lower income area residents shall, as a minimum, set forth evidence acceptable to the Secretary that it has:

(1) Obtained from the Department's Regional Administrator, Area Office Director, or FHA Insuring Office Director having jurisdiction over the section 3 covered project, the "Section 3 Project Area Map," if available; and

(2) Attempted to recruit from the appropriate areas the necessary number of lower income residents through: Local advertising media, signs placed at the proposed site for the project, and community organizations and public or private institutions operating within or serving the project area such as Service Employment and Redevelopment (SER), Opportunities Industrialization Center (OIC), Urban League, Concentrated Employment Program, or the U.S. Employment Service.

(3) Maintain a list of all lower income area residents who have applied either on their own or on referral from any source, and employ such persons, if otherwise eligible and if a trainee vacancy exists. If the contractor has no vacancies, the applicant, if otherwise eligible, shall be listed for the first available vacancy.

(b) Any applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor which fills vacant apprentice or trainee positions in its organization from sources other than those specified in paragraph (a), subparagraph (2) of this section immediately prior to undertaking work pusuant to a section 3 covered project shall set forth evidence acceptable to the Secretary that its actions were not an attempt to circumvent these regulations.

Each applicant, recipient, contractor or subcontractor undertaking work in connection with a section 3 covered project shall fulfill his obligation to utilize lower income project area residents as employees to the greatest extent feasible by:

(a) Identifying the number of positions in the various occupational categories including skilled, semiskilled, and unskilled labor, needed to perform each phase of the section 3 covered project;

(b) Identifying, of the positions identified in paragraph (a) of this section, the number of positions in the various occupational categories which are currently occupied by regular, permanent employees;

(c) Identifying, of the positions identified in paragraph (a) of this section, the number of positions in the various occupational categories which are not currently occupied by regular, permanent employees;

(d) Establishing, of the positions identified in paragraph (c) of this section, a goal which is consistent with the purpose of this subpart within each occupational category of the number of positions to be filled by lower income residents of the section 3 covered project area; and

(e) Making a good faith effort to fill all of the positions identified in paragraph (d) of this section with lower income project area residents.

(a) Each applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor seeking to establish that a good faith effort as required by paragraph (e) of § 76.55 has been made to fill all employment positions identified in paragraph (d) of § 76.5 with lower income project area residents shall, as a minimum, set forth evidence acceptable to the Secretary that it has

(1) Obtained from the Department's Regional Administrator, Area Office Director, or FHA Insuring Office Director having jurisdiction over the section covered project, the "Section 3 Project Area Map", if available; and

(2) Attempted to recruit from the appropriate areas the necessary number of lower income residents through: Local advertising media, signs placed at the proposed site for the project, and community organizations and public or private institutions operating within or serving the project area such as Project Area Committees (PAC) in urban renewal areas, Model Cities citizen advisory boards, Service Employment and Redevelopment (SER), Opportunities Industrialization Center (OIC), Urban League, Concentrated Employment Program, or the U.S. Employment Service.

(b) Any applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor which fills vacant § 76.55(d) employment positions in its organization immediately prior to undertaking work pursuant to a section 3 covered contract shall set forth evidence acceptable to the Secretary that its actions were not an attempt to circumvent these regulations.

(c) When lower income resident workers apply, either on their own initiative or on referral from any source, the recipient, contractor, or subcontractor shall determine the qualifications of such persons and shall employ such persons if their qualifications are satisfactory and the contractor has openings. If the recipient, contractor, or subcontractor is unable to employ the workers, such persons shall be listed for the first available opening.

Each applicant, recipient, contractor or subcontractor undertaking work on section 3 covered project shall assure that to the greatest extent feasible, contracts for work to be performed in connection with the project are awarded to business concerns located within the section 3 covered project area or business concerns owned in substantial part by persons residing in the section 3 covered area. The Department, in consultation with the Small Business Administration will establish for the section 3 covered project area a registry of business concerns which meet the definition contained in § 76.5 (b) and (c) of these regulations. Each applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor undertaking work in connection with a section 3 covered project shall fulfill his obligations to utilize business concerns located within or owned in substantial part by persons residing in the section 3 covered project area by developing and implementing an affirmative action plan.

In developing an affirmative action plan, each applicant, recipient, contractor, and subcontractor preparing to undertake work pursuant to a section 3 covered contract shall:

(a) Set forth the approximate number and dollar value of all contracts proposed to be awarded to all businesses within each category (type or profession) over the duration of the section 3 covered project in question.

(b) Analyze the information set forth in paragraph (a) of this section and the availability of eligible business concerns within the project area doing business in professions or occupations identified as needed in paragraph (a), of this section, and set forth a goal or target number and estimated dollar amount of contracts to be awarded to the eligible businesses and entrepreneurs within each category over the duration of the section 3 covered project.

(c) Outline the anticipated program to be used to achieve the goals for each business and/or professional category identified. This program should include but not be limited to the following actions:

(1) Insertion in the bid documents, if any, of the affirmative action plan of the applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor letting the contract; and

(2) Identification within the bid document, if any, of the applicable section 3 project area.

(d) Indicate the anticipated process and steps which have been taken and/or will be taken to secure the cooperation of contractors, subcontractors, and unions in meeting the goals and carrying out the affirmative action plan developed pursuant to this subpart.

(e) Take steps to insure that the appropriate business concerns included in the Department's registry for the section 3 covered project area are notified of pending contractual opportunities either personally or through locally utilized media.

(f) Take steps to insure that contracts which are typically let on a negotiated rather than a bid basis in areas other than section 3 covered project areas, are also let on a negotiated basis, whenever feasible, when let in a section 3 covered project area.

(g) Where competitive bids are solicited, require the bidders to submit their utilization goals, and their affirmative action plans for accomplishing their goals, and in evaluating each bid, to determine its responsiveness, carefully evaluate the bidders' submission to determine whether the affirmative action plan proposed will accomplish the stated goals.

(h) Where advantageous, seek the assistance of local officials of the Department in preparing and implementing the affirmative action plan.

Subpart E—Participation in Approved Programs

§ 76.75 Participation as evidence of compliance with section 3 requirements.

Any applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor may fulfill his obligations under Subparts B, C, and D of this part, respectively, to utilize lower income project area residents as trainees or employees on section 3 covered projects, and to award contracts to business concerns located in, or owned in substantial part by residents of, section 3 covered project areas by presenting evidence satisfactory to the Secretary that he is a cooperating participant in a federally assisted or other public program approved by the Department of Housing and Urban Development which provides training, employment, and/or business opportunities to lower income persons and business concerns which meet the definition in § 76.5 (b) and (c). The Secretary shall, from time to time, make public a list of those training, employment, and/or business opportunity programs approved by the Department.

Any lower income resident of the project area, for himself or as a representative of persons similarly situated, seeking employment or training opportunities with an applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor, or any business concern located in, or owned in substantial part by persons residing within a project area seeking contract opportunities from any applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor, for itself or as a representative of persons or firms similarly situated, may personally or by an authorized representative file a grievance alleging noncompliance with section 3, these regulations, or obligations undertaken pursuant thereto.

(a) The grievance should include: (1) The name and address of the grievant, (2) the name and address of the grievant's business, if applicable, (3) the name and address of the applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor (in this subpart called "respondent"), (4) a description of the acts or omissions giving rise to the grievance, and (5) the corrective action sought.

(b) Where a grievance contains incomplete information, the Secretary shall seek promptly the needed information from the grievant. In the event such information is not furnished to the Secretary within sixty (60) days of the date of such request, the grievance may be closed.

Each grievance shall be in writing and signed.

§ 76.95 Place of filing.

A grievance may be filed by mailing it to the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D.C. 20410, or by presenting it at any Regional Office, Area Office, or FHA Insuring Office of the Department. Any employee of the Department receiving a grievance shall forward the same directly to the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity.

§ 76.100 Time of filing.

A grievance must be filed not later than ninety (90) days from the date of the action (or omission) upon which the grievance is based, unless the time for filing is extended by the Secretary upon good cause shown.

§ 76.105 Processing of grievance filings.

(a) Upon receipt of a grievance a copy thereof shall be furnished the respondent by certified mail or through personal service.

(b) The Secretary shall conduct an investigation of each grievance filed, and shall give notice in writing to the grievant and the respondent as to whether he intends to resolve it.

(c) Notwithstanding paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section, where the allegations of a grievance on their face, or as amplified by the statements of the grievant, disclose that the grievance is not timely filed or otherwise fails to state a valid claim for relief under these regulations or any other authority within the jurisdiction of the Department, the Secretary may dismiss the grievance without further action. To the extent that Executive Order 11246 relating to Equal Opportunity in Employment applies to the subject matter of the grievance, the procedures required by applicable regulations implementing that order shall be followed.

(d) If the Secretary decides not to resolve a grievance, or to dismiss it under paragraph (c) of this section, he shall advise the grievant of the disposition of his grievance. Respondent shall also be notified in any case where he has been served with a copy of the grievance.

(e) Any party adversely affected by a determination under paragraph (b) or

(c) of this section may, within 5 days of receipt of a notice of determination, request that the Secretary reconsider his action. Such request for reconsideration will be granted only on the basis of additional material evidence not previously available to the party requesting reconsideration or for other good cause shown.

(f) If the Secretary decides to resolve a grievance, he shall endeavor to eliminate or correct the matters complained of in the grievance by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion.

(g) In conciliating a grievance, the Secretary shall attempt to achieve a just resolution of the grievance including (1) specific relief for the grievant, (2) affirmative actions by the respondent to relieve the effects of past violation and preclude the occurrence of future violation, and (3) appropriate reporting requirements. Notice of a proposed disposition of a grievance and of the terms of a proposed settlement, if any, shall be given to the parties, or their representatives, by the Secretary, in writing. If satisfactory, the proposed settlement shall be signed by the grievant and the respondent, or their representatives, and approved by the Secretary. The Secretary may, from time to time, review compliance with the terms of any settlement agreement and may, upon a finding of noncompliance, reopen the grievance or take such enforcement action as is provided for under the settlement agreement or as may otherwise be appropriate.

(h) Should a respondent fail or refuse to confer with the Secretary or fail or refuse to make a good faith effort to resolve the grievance, or should the Secretary find for any other reason that voluntary agreement is not likely to result, the Secretary may terminate his efforts to conciliate the dispute. In the latter event the parties shall be notified promptly, in writing, that such efforts have been unsuccessful.

(i) If the Department is unable to obtain voluntary compliance, the Secretary shall advise the parties in writing of his proposed resolution of the grievance. Such resolution shall become final and binding on the parties, unless within 15 days after the receipt of notification, either party files with the Secretary a written request for a hearing on the matter.

(a) Whenever a hearing is requested, reasonable notice shall be given by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the parties. This notice shall advise the parties of the action proposed to be taken, the specific provision under which the proposed action is to be taken, and the matters of fact or law asserted as the basis for this action. In addition, it shall either (1) fix a date not less than 20 days after the date of such notice within which the parties may request of the Secretary that the matter be scheduled for hearing or (2) advise the parties that the matter in question has been set down for hearing at a stated time and place. The time and place so fixed shall be subject to change for cause. The requesting party may waive a hearing and in lieu thereof submit written information and argument for the record. The failure of the requesting party to appear at a hearing for which a date has been set shall be deemed to be a waiver of the right to a hearing and consent to the making of a decision on the basis of such information as is available.

(b) Hearings shall be held in or near the section 3 covered project area in question, or at such other location as will serve the convenience of parties and witnesses, at a time fixed by the Secretary. Hearings shall be held before the Secretary or, at his discretion, before a hearing examiner designated in accordance with 5 U.S.C. 3105 and 3344.

(c) In all proceedings under this section, the respondent and grievant, if any, shall have the right to be represented by counsel.

(d) The hearing, decision, and any administrative review thereof shall be conducted in conformity with 5 U.S.C. 554–557, and in accordance with such rules of procedure issued by HUD as are proper relating to the conduct of the hearing, the issuance of notice except that provided in paragraph (a) of this section, the taking of testimony, exhibits, arguments, and briefs, requests for findings, and other related matters. HUD, the respondent, and the grievant, if any, shall be entitled to introduce all relevant evidence on the issues as stated in the notice of hearing or as determined by the officer conducting the hearing at the outset of or during the hearing.

(e) Technical rules of evidence shall not apply to hearings conducted pursuant to this paragraph but rules or principles designed to assure production of the most credible evidence available and to subject testimony to test by cross-examination shall be applied where deemed reasonably necessary by the officer conducting the hearing. The hearing officer may exclude irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence. All documents and other evidence offered or taken for the record shall be open to examination by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the respondent, and the grievant, if any, and opportunity shall be given to refute facts and arguments advanced on either side of the issues. A transcript shall be made of the oral evidence except to the extent the substance thereof is stipulated for the record. All decisions shall be based upon the hearing record and written findings shall be made.

(f) If the hearing is held by a hearing examiner, he shall either render an initial decision, if so authorized, or certify the entire record, including his recommended findings and proposed decision to the Secretary for a final decision. A copy of such initial decision or certification shall be mailed to the respondent and the grievant, or their representative, by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested. Where the initial decision is made by the hearing examiner, the respondent or grievant may within 30 days of the mailing of such notice of initial decision file with the Secretary exceptions to the initial decision, with reasons therefor. In the absence of exception, the Secretary may on his own motion, within 45 days after the initial decision, serve on the respondent and grievant, a notice that he will review the decision. Upon the filing of such exceptions or of such notice of review, the Secretary shall review the initial decision and issue his own decision thereon including the reasons therefor. If no exception is taken or notice of review issued, the initial decision shall constitute the final decision of the Secretary.

(g) Whenever a record is certified to the Secretary for decision or he reviews the decision of a hearing examiner pursuant to paragraph (f) of this section, or whenever the Secretary conducts the hearing, the respondent and grievant shall be given reasonable opportunity to file briefs or other written statements of their contentions, and a copy of the final decision of the Secretary shall be given in writing to the respondent, and to the grievant by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested.

(h) Whenever a hearing is waived pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section, a decision shall be made by the Secretary on the record and a copy of such decision shall be given in writing to the respondent, and to the grievant, by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested.

(i) Each decision of a hearing examiner or the Secretary shall set forth his ruling on each finding, conclusion, or exception presented, and shall identify the requirement or requirements of section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 or the regulations which the respondent has not complied with.

(j) The final decision may contain such terms, conditions, and other provisions as are consistent with, and will effectuate the purposes of section 3 and these regulations. The decision may also include provisions designed to assure that no contract will thereafter be entered into with a respondent determined by such decision to be in default in its performance of its contractual obligations or to have otherwise failed to comply with these regulations, unless the respondent corrects its noncompliance and satisfies the Secretary that it will fully comply with section 3 and these regulations.

(k) The General Counsel shall represent the Department at all hearings and shall receive copies of all notices, decisions and other documents which are forwarded to the parties.

(l) The applicant or recipient, if not a party, shall be invited to participate in the hearing and shall receive copies of all notices, decisions, and other documents which are forwarded to the parties.

§ 76.115 Compliance reviews and procedures.

In order to determine whether the responsibilities imposed upon him by section 3 and these regulations are being properly carried out, the Secretary shall periodically conduct section 3 compliance reviews of selected applicants, recipients, contractors, and subcontractors. A compliance review shall consist of a comprehensive analysis and evaluation of each aspect of the aforementioned section 3 policies, and conditions resulting therefrom. Where deficiencies are found to exist, reasonable efforts shall be made to secure compliance through the conciliation process set forth in § 76.105(g). Compliance reviews may be conducted prior to award of contracts in any case where the Secretary has reasonable grounds, based on a substantiated grievance, the Department's own investigation, or other substantial evidence, to believe that the applicant, recipient, contractor, or subcontractor or will be unable or unwilling to comply with section 3 and the provisions of this part.

Subpart G—Miscellaneous

§ 76.120 Reporting and recordkeeping.

In order to insure that the Secretary is kept informed of the progress being made by the applicant, recipient, contractor, and subcontractor in meeting their obligations under these regulations, each applicant, recipient, contractor, and subcontractor is required to:

(a) Maintain such records and accounts and furnish such information and reports as are required by the Secretary under these regulations or pursuant thereto and permit the Secretary access to books, records and premises for purposes of investigation in connection with a grievance or to ascertain compliance with these regulations or the rules and orders of the Department issued thereunder.

(b) Advise the Secretary within 15 days of the award of any contract under a section 3 covered project of the steps which have been and will be taken to comply with the requirements of Subparts B, C, and D of this part.

§ 76.125 Implementing procedures and instructions.

Assistant Secretaries of the Department administering programs subject to this regulation may issue such procedures and instructions as are necessary to implement the provisions of section 3 and this part. A copy of such procedures and instructions shall be forwarded to the Secretary for approval prior to issuance.

§ 76.130 Labor standards.

All labor standards applicable by statute, regulations, or other administrative issuance shall apply to section 3 covered projects.

§ 76.135 Effective date.

This part shall become effective on [ ] 1971 for all applications for assistance under section 3 covered by projects which are made after such date within the meaning of the program in question. However, nothing in this part shall effect requirements already imposed on applicants, recipients, and contractors, and subcontractors pursuant to section 3.

GEORGE ROMNEY,
Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

PREPARATION OF APPLICATION FOR CREDIT APPROVAL

For processing the credit of mortgagors under any FHA 1-to 4-family program. This form is primarily for use in converting an outstanding commitment to a firm commitment in the name of an approved mortgagor. The mortgagee should complete all blanks in the form, using information from the outstanding commitment or the mortgagee's estimate. When necessary, attach statements with details.

REQUIRED EXHIBITS TO BE SENT WITH APPLICATION

(1) Credit Report
(2) Form 2004f, Verification of Deposits
(3) Form 2004g, Verification of Employment
(4) One signed or certified copy of sales contract or contract for deed.
(5) A currently dated balance sheet and operating statement if mortgagor's principal income is from own business.
(6) Form 2561, Mortgagor's Contract with Respect to Hotel and transient Occupancy (only 2-3-4-family dwelling).
(7) For Section 222 cases involving Servicemen, attach Certificate of Eligibility, DD Form 802.
(8) For Section 221 low and moderate income houses for displaced persons, attach FHA Form 3476. Certificate of Eligibility.
(9) For Section 235 homeownership cases, attach FHA Form No. 3100, Application for Homeownership Assistance under Section 235 of the NHA and a statement that the application fee, if collected from the applicant, will be refunded if a firm commitment is not issued in the name of the applicant.
(10) For special veterans terms submit Cert. of Veteran Status, VA Form 26-8261 (obtained by veteran from local VA office).
(11) Proposed Construction. If to be built under contract, one signed or certified copy of the contractor's bid or, if a contract is not used, an estimate of construction cost.
(12) Existing Houses - With major alterations, one copy of contractor's bid or, if contractor is not intended, an estimate of the cost of the improvements.
(13) If Form 2900-1 is completed and signed before receipt of the estimate of value, attach a statement, signed by the applicant, that he has received a copy of the applicable Statement or Certificate.

FORM ENTRIES

1. Section of National Housing Act from outstanding commitment, or mortgagee should insert Section requested.
2. FHA Case No., from outstanding commitment, if any; otherwise leave blank.
3. Property Address or description.
4. MORTGAGORS (Husband, Wife, Other) - Name and address; last name first. Present marital status, age, number of dependents and their ages. If co-mortgagor other than husband and wife is involved, enter name(s) but attach separate 2900-1 and required exhibits on co-mortgagor(s).

   The information concerning minority group categories is requested for statistical purposes so the Department may determine the degree to which its programs are utilized by minority families.

5. MORTGAGEE - Name, address and Zip Code.
6. Amount of loan requested, interest rate, term in months, monthly payment to principal and interest. The mortgage amount is set by applying statutory percentage of sum of value (replacement cost) and closing costs limits to the lower of sum of value (replacement cost) or total acquisition cost. Total acquisition cost is the real estate cost, including repairs and closing costs. Prepayable expenses and non-realty items are not included in total acquisition cost but are used in determining the adequacy of available assets for settlement. Under 203(b) Vets, 221(d)(2) and 235 prepaids may be applied toward cash investment.
7. PURPOSE OF LOAN - Type of transaction. If refinancing, attach statement showing date property acquired, purchase price, date of existing loan, original and present unpaid balances, full monthly payment, maturity date, name of present holder, and amount of any delinquency. Indicate whether mortgagor will be occupant or otherwise.
8. EMPLOYMENT - Occupations; employers' names and addresses; years with present employers. If less than 2 years, attach statement giving details of prior employment.
9. MONTHLY INCOME - Current base pay for all mortgagors. Show commissions, fees, etc. as other income.
10. PREVIOUS MONTHLY HOUSING EXPENSE - Monthly housing expenses paid past 12 months.
11. PREVIOUS MONTHLY FIXED CHARGES - Income taxes, life insurance premiums (show face value of life insurance), social security, retirement and other monthly fixed charges for past 12 months. Enter "none" when appropriate.
12. ASSETS FOR CLOSING - (A) Assets available to complete closing usually consist of bank deposits, savings bonds, and marketable securities. If cash value of life insurance, net returns from property being sold, "work equity," "cash on hand," or a cash gift are to be used, enter amount under Assets for Closing as "Other" and explain. Cash gifts must be supported by the donor's statement indicating no repayment is expected. Assets not to be used in the transaction should be listed under (B).
13. LIABILITIES - Monthly payment and unpaid balance on current debts. Enter the word "none" when appropriate.
14. FUTURE MONTHLY PAYMENTS
    a. Principal & Interest - Monthly payment from FHA Amort. Tables, Form 2025.
    b. FHA Mortgage Insurance Premium - 1/12 of first annual from FHA Amort. Tables, Form 2025.
    c. Ground Rent - Leasehold cases only. 1/12 of annual ground rent.
    d. Total Debt Service - Total of (a), (b) and (c).
    e. Fire Insurance - From outstanding commitment or mortgagee's estimate.
    f. Taxes, Special Assessments - From Form 2800, Mortgagee's Application for Property Appraisal. If improvements have not been assessed, estimate assuming completion of construction.
    g. Total Mortgage Payment - Total of (d), (e) and (f).
    h. Maintenance - From outstanding commitment or mortgagee's estimate.
    i. Heat & Utilities - From outstanding commitment or mortgagee's estimate.
    j. Total Housing Expense - Total of (g), (h) and (i).
    k. Other Recurring Charges - An estimate of debts which will continue beyond 1 year and will be a factor in determining the adequacy of effective income. Enter sum of monthly payments. Include notes, installment accounts, real estate, state taxes, life insurance premiums, social security and retirement. Disregard payments on real estate to be sold or traded and Federal Income taxes. Enter "none" when appropriate.
    l. Total Fixed Payments - Total of (j) and (k).
15. SETTLEMENT REQUIREMENTS
    a. Existing Debt - Refinancing cases only. Total amount owed.
    b. Sale Price - Contract price less amount of (1) closing costs; or (2) prepaid expenses to be paid by seller; or (3) fair market value of non-realty items such as draperies, furniture, free occupancy, etc. Enter (1) as 15(d); (2) as 15(h) and (3) as 15(i).
    c. Repairs and Improvements - from outstanding commitment or mortgagor's estimate of repairs or improvements to be paid by purchaser not included in sales price and required by mortgagor or FHA.
    d. Closing Costs - Mortgagee's estimate regardless of whether costs are included in contract price. Include FHA fees, mortgagee's service charge, title search, preparation of deed, mortgage, mortgage tax, recording fees, etc. Do not include deposits for unaccrued taxes, insurance premiums, etc.
    e. Total - Total of (a), (b), (c) and (d).
    f. Mortgage Amount - As shown in Block 6.
    g. Mortgagors Required Investment - Subtract (f) from (e); enter remainder. Amount must equal or exceed FHA required cash investment for the Program applied under.
    h. Prepayable Expenses - Amount to be deposited by mortgagor for unaccrued taxes, fire insurance premiums, mortgage insurance premiums, etc.
    i. Non-Realty and Other Items - Include non-realty and other items deducted from contract price and omitted from (b), such as draperies, furniture, free occupancy.
    j. Total Requirements - Total of (g), (h) and (i).
    k. Amount Paid - From Sales Contract. Indicate cash or other. Attach statement if other than cash.
    l. Amount to be paid - Subtract (k) from (j). Explain if other than cash.
    m. Assets available - Total assets for closing from 12(A).
16. OTHER REAL ESTATE - Address of other real estate plus Sales Price and mortgage information.
17. MORTGAGOR'S CERTIFICATE - Answer all questions.
18. MORTGAGEE'S CERTIFICATE - Signature of mortgagee.

INSTRUCTIONS TO MORTGAGEE: Forward to the insuring office: (1) this commitment signed by the mortgagee and mortgagor; (2) a copy of the note, bond or other credit instrument; (3) a copy of the mortgage or other security instrument; (4) a copy of loan closing statement, settlement sheet or a statement signed by the mortgagee which itemizes all charges and fees collected by the mortgagee from the mortgagor; and (5) FHA Mortgage Insurance Certificate completed with case number, Section of the National Housing Act, mortgage amount, property address, mortgagors' names and mortgagee's name and address.

MORTGAGOR'S CERTIFICATE - The undersigned certifies that:

(a) The mortgaged property, including removable equipment items shown on any outstanding commitment issued under the above case number and those set forth above, will be owned by me free and clear of all liens other than that of such mortgage.

(b) I will not have outstanding any other unpaid obligations contracted in connection with the mortgage transaction or the purchase of the said property except obligations which are secured by property or collateral owned by me independently of the said mortgaged property, or obligations approved by the Commissioner.

(c) One of the undersigned is the occupant of the subject property. (NOTE: Delete item (c) if owner occupancy not required by commitment.)

(d) All charges and fees collected from me as shown in the settlement statement have been paid from my own funds, and no other charges have been or will be paid by me in respect to this transaction.

(e) Check Applicable Box:

☐ This was a refinancing transaction; sale of property was not involved.

☐ The FHA Statement of Appraised Value or VA Certificate of Reasonable Value was given to me prior to my signing the purchase contract for the property.

☐ The FHA Statement of Appraised Value or VA Certificate of Reasonable Value was not received by me prior to my signing the contract to purchase, but the contract to purchase contained the following language: "It is expressly agreed that, notwithstanding any other provisions of this contract, the purchaser shall not be obligated to complete the purchase of the property described herein or to incur any penalty by forfeiture of earnest money deposits or otherwise unless the seller has delivered to the purchaser a written statement issued by the Federal Housing Commissioner setting forth the appraised value of the property (excluding closing costs) of not less than $ _____ which statement the seller hereby agrees to deliver to the purchaser promptly after such appraised value statement is made available to the seller. The purchaser shall, however, have the privilege and option of proceeding with the consummation of the contract without regard to the amount of the appraised valuation made by the Federal Housing Commissioner." (IF THE AMENDMENT PROCEDURE WAS NECESSARY, THE DOLLAR AMOUNT USED IN THE AMENDATORY CLAUSE IS INSERTED IN THE ABOVE BLANK.)

(f) Neither I, nor anyone authorized to act for me, will refuse to sell or rent, after the making of a bona fide offer, or refuse to negotiate for the sale or rental of, or otherwise make unavailable or deny the dwelling or property covered by this loan to any person because of race, color, religion, or national origin. I recognize that any restrictive covenant on this property relating to race, color, religion, or national origin is illegal and void and any such covenant is hereby specifically disclaimed. I understand that civil action for preventative relief may be brought by the Attorney General of the United States in any appropriate U. S. District Court against any person responsible for a violation of this certification.

YWCA Urges Major Drive for Open Occupancy

In a nationwide "Call to Women Who Care," the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association has instituted a major drive urging women throughout the country to join in working for open occupancy in housing as "basic to an open society."

The Call, which was adopted by the YWCA's 120-member board in mid-October and has been commended to member Associations in some 1,000 cities and towns over the nation, urges affirmative

Chicago Progress Report

Watchdog Council Named; CFM Charges Slow-down

LATE BULLETIN. As TRENDS goes to press with this second in a series of two articles on the Chicago Open Housing Agreement, there are increasing reports of mounting dissatisfaction among members of the Chicago Freedom Movement with the rate of progress in implementation of the pact. Charges are being made that city officials are "dragging their feet," that promises are being broken, and that there has been a deliberate and politically-motivated slow-down.

A blue ribbon watchdog committee has been named to oversee implementation of the Chicago Open Housing Agreement which was worked out on August 26 between representatives of the city's power structure and the civil rights federation led by Dr. Martin Luther King (TRENDS, October 1966).

The agreement committing 12 civic, business, and religious interests to work toward open occupancy in the Chicago metropolitan area stipulated the formation of a separate continuing body, to be established by the Chicago Conference on Religion and Race.

Under terms of the accord, the proposed board, now known as the Metropolitan Chicago Leadership Council for Open Housing, will be responsible "for education and action programs necessary to achieve fair housing."

Council Activities

The Council's activities will include the convening of fair housing conferences in suburban communities, drafting of fair housing laws and ordinances, developing fair housing centers, and reviewing and reporting regularly on the performance of the program undertaken by governmental nongovernmental groups.

James W. Cook, president Illinois Bell Telephone Co., appointed chairman of the Co cil. According to latest repo the current chairmanship will six months, and both Cook Martin Luther King indicated t implementation of the agreem should be well underway by time.

The Chicago Freedom Mo ment, a coalition of King's So ern Christian Leadership Con ence and the Co-ordinating Co cil of Community Organizati the local civil rights umbr group, set a goal of at least per cent Negro occupancy in 75 Chicago communities by A 30, 1967.

At the time of Cook's appo ment, King said: "I do feel a great deal can be accomplis within a six month period. I tainly hope that within six mo many steps can be taken in implementation of the agreeme

A Round-up of FH Legislation

Kalamazoo (Mich.), Ames (Iowa) and Burlington (Vt.) are the three latest cities to adopt ordinances which prohibit discrimination in the general housing market.

Elsewhere, some existing fair housing laws have been strengthened, some new proposals have been defeated, legislative campaigns for 1967 are getting underway, and in some sections of the country fair housing has become the issue for distortion and hysteria in drives to elect ultra-conservative and segregationist politicians to public office.

Kalamazoo's new fair housing ordinance covers all residential property sales and all rentals except the rental of rooms in private residences. It applies to owners

2 States Pass FH Laws

Md. Action Covers Some New Homes; Wash.—RE Firms

Washington and Maryland have become the 18th and 19th states, respectively, to adopt legislation in the general housing market.

The Washington measure has been signed into law by Governor Daniel J. Evans (Rep.). Early signature by Maryland's Governor Spiro T. Agnew (Rep.), who favored open occupancy legislation, is expected.

Washington Law

This state's new law applies to the business activities of real estate brokers and salesmen. Those found guilty of discriminatory conduct on two occasions within a six-month period will be subject to revocation of their licenses.

The Washington State Board Against Discrimination will handle investigation of complaints. However, cases will be forwarded to the Real Estate Division of the State Department of Licenses for the imposition of sanctions.

In 1961, the Washington State Supreme Court, in a 5 to 4 decision, ruled an earlier nondiscrimination law which applied only to publicly-assisted housing was unconstitutional (TRENDS, Sept.-Oct., 1961). Despite extensive litigation in the fair housing field, this is the only case in which a state law was held unconstitutional.

Three of the five judges who ruled against the earlier Washington statute took the position that coverage of homes with FHA-insured mortgages while leaving uncovered houses with conventionally-financed or no mortgages was an unreasonable classification, violating the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment. The implication was that an all-inclusive law would have been upheld by a 7 to 2 decision.

Maryland Legislation

Maryland is the first border state to pass open occupancy legislation. In the closing hours of the 1967 session, the General Assembly approved a limited measure which will exempt all existing housing and apply only to some new apartment buildings and homes in new subdivisions. It will also prohibit discrimination by mortgage lenders.

Major School Study Urges Open Housing

US Finds Increasing Racial Isolation

Housing policies and practices of government at all levels and of the private housing industry are largely responsible for growing separation of the nation's Negro and white school children. This racial isolation lies at the heart of serious damage inflicted on the children of both races. They are injured, in the words of the US Supreme Court, "in ways unlikely ever to be undone."

These conclusions are among the major findings of an exhaustive study recently published by the US Commission on Civil Rights. The study, entitled "Racial Isolation in the Public Schools," was conducted at the request of the President.

Race and Class

The Commission points out that in metropolitan areas throughout the country there is increasing separation between the poor and the affluent, the well educated and the poorly educated, and between Negroes and whites. The separation is not only within the city proper, but is reflected in the widening breach between the city and its suburbs.

Since 1950, the suburbs gained more than twice as many perso of high income as cities, and fi times as many persons with c lege educations.

Eight out of 10 Negro Ame cans now live in the urban co most of them trapped in ghett the majority of whites now live suburbia.

Moreover, white school-a children are heavily concentrat in the suburbs. The Commissi examined 15 large metropolit areas and found that close to per cent of the area's white ch dren. go to suburban schoo whereas 80 per cent of all no white children are enrolled inner-city schools. Two exampl

Hi Court Hears Prop. 14; NCDH Files Arguments

The US Supreme Court has been asked in an amicus brief filed by NCDH to uphold the decision of the California Supreme Court ruling the "segregation amendment," Proposition 14, unconstitutional (TRENDS, June 1966).

Proposition 14 was an initiative constitutional amendment aimed at wiping out the state's existing fair housing laws and preventing the enactment of such legislation in the future. After adoption by California voters at the general election in 1964, it became Section 26, Article I of the State Constitution. On May 10 of last

The California Real Estate Association (CREA) and other interests carried the case to the US Supreme Court, which agreed to review the California decision.

During the week of March 20, the nation's highest tribunal heard arguments from both sides. Supporting the California court ruling were attorneys representing the plaintiffs (Negro homeseekers who had been denied housing because of race), civil rights proponents, and the Government of the United States. Solicitor General Thurgood Marshall presented arguments on behalf of the Gov-

STATE LAWS . . .

The law will exempt structures built under permits applied for before June 1, 1967 and completed by June 1, 1968. Also excluded from coverage are owner-occupied apartment buildings with 12 or less units; owners of five or fewer new houses; re-sale by owner-occupants of houses built after June 1, 1967; condominiums and cooperative apartment developments. Thus, the primary coverage will be rentals in new apartment buildings and initial sales in subdivisions.

Enforcement will be handled by the Maryland State Interracial Commission.

According to the press, Governor Agnew will try to secure broadening amendments during next year's legislative session.

Realtor Support

Limited fair housing legislation had the support this year of the Real Estate Board of Greater Baltimore, representing 2,000 realtors operating in that city and its suburban communities. On March 9, the Board came out in favor of state legislation to apply immediately to all new homes and new apartment buildings with five or more units, and for expansion in 1968 to cover all structures of five or more units, old and new.

The Maryland bill, as passed, drew heavy support in the General Assembly from legislators representing Prince Georges and Montgomery counties. Both of these areas have well-organized, effective fair housing groups.

On the other side, segregationist groups in Maryland have threatened a campaign to carry the new law to referendum. If they collect the required number of signatures on petitions to submit the measure to popular vote, operation of the new law would be stayed until after the November 1968 election.

Other States

A comprehensive fair housing bill was recently introduced in the Nebraska Legislature. Local observers are not optimistic about its chances for adoption during this year's legislative session.

Fair housing legislative drives have been conducted in 16 states during 1967: nine for new laws; seven to strengthen existing statutes (TRENDS, March 1967). ◈

cial development; and that boundaries had been drawn to permit white-occupied houses to remain as residential uses in what would become a commercial area under the plan.]

Act Early

Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the Legal Defense Fund, says the Pulaski case should encourage local groups throughout the country to scrutinize government housing and related activities in their communities and to explore legal action to stop abuses.

"Our success in Pulaski shows the efficacy of legal action based on facts uncovered by careful investigation, as conducted there with the aid of a city planner," Greenberg comments. "This case also shows the necessity for early, swift action. When urban renewal is used as Negro removal, it must be stopped the same way you attack a developing cancer. The earlier you act, the greater the likelihood of success."

LDF and NCDH are cooperating in a program to encourage local groups to explore the use of litigation to combat housing segregation (TRENDS, Jan.-Feb., October, 1966). Groups and individuals interested in this type of action are urged to make contact with NCDH. ◈ project in that city, again follo ing protests filed with Secreta Weaver by the Easton Fair Hou ing Committee and NCDH. The tw organizations charged that t Easton Public Housing Authori and other agencies involved redevelopment refuse to reloca nonwhite families in neighbo hoods other than ghetto areas.

Particular attention was calle to the Easton Authority's rece rejection of a site in an all-whi middle-class area. Moreover, member of the Authority repor edly has stated that it would ta more than five years to ma public housing residents suitab neighbors.

Meanwhile, according to th press, HUD has incorporated a ne amendment, dated February 2 in its low-rent housing manual r quiring local housing authorities disperse part of their public hou ing around the city rather tha building it in existing ghettos.

resenting CREA and other real estate interests which had promoted the amendment.

NCDH Arguments

The amicus brief was filed on behalf of NCDH by Joseph Robison, director, Commission on Law and Social Action, American Jewish Congress, and NCDH general counsel; and Sol Rabkin, director, Law Department, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and chairman NCDH Legal Committee.

NCDH argues that the new amendment to the California constitution places the state's legal system squarely behind private acts of housing discrimination. Thus, Robison and Rabkin contend, it violates Federal law:

- First, the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment which imposes an obligation on the state to take appropriate action to prevent inequality in housing.
- Second, the provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1866 (now Section 1982, Title 42 of the US Code), which guarantees the right of all citizens to equal opportunity to purchase or lease property without discrimination based on race.

The NCDH lawyers attack head on the contention that Proposition 14 merely places the state in a neutral position—neither encouraging nor discouraging racial discrimination.

One of the most significant sections of the brief declares:

"The external evidence relating to the enactment of the new amendment inescapably leads to the conclusion that it was conceived, prepared, submitted for signatures, presented to the voters and enacted with a single purpose in mind—emasculating fair housing legislation and immunizing discriminatory landowners against state regulation. In these circumstances, it cannot be validly argued that the new amendment does not constitute state encouragement of racial discrimination.

"Property owners have been told in effect that the state law stands behind any refusal by them to sell or rent to Negroes or members of other minority groups. And this is indeed the case. If the new amendment is allowed to stand, no statutory or common law remedy will be available under state law against racial discrimination in housing sales and rentals. The 14th Amendment, however, does not permit state involvement of this character in discrimination of so invidious a nature. For that reason alone, the amendment cannot stand."

PREFACE

On October 26, 1967, the Thirty-second American Assembly —on The Ombudsman—opened at Arden House, on the Harriman (New York) campus of Columbia University. There were 72 participants from the worlds of business, education, communications, labor, and government; and from the clerical, legal and military professions.

For three days, in small discussion groups, they considered in depth various aspects of citizen grievance and redress vis-à-vis government (local, state, and federal); and on the fourth day in plenary session they reviewed and approved the report contained in these pages.

As background for their discussions participants read a volume entitled Ombudsmen for American Government? prepared under the editorial supervision of Dr. Stanley V. Anderson of the University of California at Santa Barbara, with chapters and authors as follows:

Chapter 1 —The Spread of the Ombudsman Idea—Donald C. Rowat, Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada.

Chapter 2 —Transferring the Ombudsman—William B. Gwyn, Tulane University.

Chapter 3 —State Government and the Ombudsman—John E. Moore, University of California (Santa Barbara).

Chapter 4 —The Ombudsman and Local Government—William H. Angus and Milton Kaplan, State University of New York at Buffalo.

Chapter 5 —Proposals and Politics—Stanley V. Anderson.

Appendix —Annotated Model Ombudsman Statute—Walter Gellhorn, Columbia University.

Regional Assemblies on The Ombudsman, making use of the above-named chapters and The American Assembly conference technique, will be held across the nation with the cooperation of other educational institutions.

The report of the Thirty-second American Assembly reflects the views of the participants in their private, not their official, capacities. The American Assembly itself, a non-partisan educational organization, takes no position on matters it presents for public discussion; and The Ford Foundation, which generously provided support for this program, similarly takes no official position on the opinions contained herein.

Ombudsmen for American Government? (ed. Stanley V. Anderson) will be published by Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey, in January 1968.

FINAL REPORT

THIRTY-SECOND AMERICAN ASSEMBLY

At the close of their discussions the participants in the Thirty-second American Assembly on The Ombudsman reviewed as a group the following statement. The statement represents general agreement; however no one was asked to sign it, and it should not be assumed that every participant necessarily subscribes to every recommendation.

Millions of Americans view government as distant and unresponsive, if not hostile. Though often the targets of the resentment which ensues, government officials are usually not the cause of remoteness, but sometimes its victims. Dehumanized government derives from the impersonality of modern mass society. Improving the means by which individual citizens can voice dissatisfaction with governmental action or inaction will make for a more democratically effective society.

Many devices—governmental and private, formal and informal—already serve to amplify the voice of the individual in the halls of government. Administrative agencies may provide him internal avenues of appeal. Courts may hear his case. Elected representatives may handle his complaint. Public legal aid may be available. News media or private organizations may take up his cause.

All these means of access to government are useful. We should strive further to improve them. Because these existing devices have important functions to serve other than handling citizens' complaints, there is a need in today's large and complex government for mechanisms devoted solely to receiving, examining, and channeling citizens' complaints, and securing expeditious and impartial redress. We believe that American utilization of the Ombudsman concept will help to fill that need.

What is an Ombudsman?

The Ombudsman is an independent, high-level officer who receives complaints, who pursues inquiries into the matters involved, and who makes recommendations for suitable action. He may also investigate on his own motion. He makes periodic public reports. His remedial weapons are persuasion, criticism and publicity. He cannot as a matter of law reverse administrative action.

What Does an Ombudsman Do?

When the Ombudsman receives a complaint which seems to him to have validity, he asks the agency for an explanation. If necessary he consults further with the complainant and again with the agency. He reports his findings to those concerned. He may suggest a specific remedy to correct individual injustices and he may suggest an improvement in agency procedure.

After consideration, if he finds a complaint to be unfounded, he may discover that the agency has failed adequately to explain its action to the citizen. In this case he may urge the agency to improve its techniques of communication. In other cases he may report to the complainant why his grievance was unfounded. In addition to handling individual complaints, the Ombudsman may make studies and recommendations for the improvement of administration.

The Ombudsman proceeds without cost to the complainant. He is able to operate informally and expeditiously without formal hearing procedures.

Establishment of an Ombudsman

We recommend that Ombudsman offices be established in American local and state governments. We do not recommend the establishment of a single office of Ombudsman for the entire federal government, but we do recommend that applications of the concept be undertaken at the federal level.

The Ombudsman must be selected in a manner which assures public confidence in his independence, impartiality and professional attainments. He should be given a salary which will reinforce his high status in the community.

The Ombudsman should designate his own subordinates. The Ombudsman's term of office should be sufficiently long to minimize his preoccupation with reappointment and should not be coterminous with that of the selecting authority. Provision for his removal from office for cause should be made in such manner as not to interfere with his independence while in office.

The authority of the Ombudsman should extend to public agencies exclusive of courts, legislatures and chief executives. On the other hand, the experience of California and other states with a commission on judicial qualifications—an ombudsmanlike institution—should be given serious consideration as a means for reducing the abuse of judicial authority.

Since American local governments vary greatly in size, population, and legal structure, no uniform design need be followed and advantages are to be derived from experimentation. Such experimentation should include meaningful accessibility to the Ombudsman by all sectors of society.

How Far Does the Ombudsman Go?

An Ombudsman, concerned with mistaken or imperfect action, is a valuable resource. But an Ombudsman often can not provide all the help a citizen may need when confused by or in conflict with the officials who administer public affairs.

At times the citizen must have recourse to an active advocate who can press a demand on his behalf or plan a defense against governmental action. This need is for adequate legal services. Then, too, citizens require information about governmental services. This need is more properly provided by easily accessible information and referral agencies.

Of course, neither an Ombudsman nor legal and information services can eliminate profound social and economic injustice, which calls for essentially political solutions.

While the Ombudsman does not make policy, his office has two important indirect effects on policy-making. First, the Ombudsman's findings provide the Legislature and the Executive with additional significant information and advice upon which to base major policy improvements. Secondly, the legislative process is enhanced to the extent that the Ombudsman's existence permits and encourages legislators to give increased attention to lawmaking.

Conclusion

We urge the prompt enactment of laws to create the special office required to handle citizens' complaints—the Ombudsman.

ABOUT THE AMERICAN ASSEMBLY

The American Assembly was established by Dwight D. Eisenhower at Columbia University in 1950. It holds non-partisan meetings and publishes authoritative books to illuminate issues of United States policy.

An affiliate of Columbia, with offices in the Graduate School of Business, the Assembly is a national, educational institution incorporated in the State of New York.

The Assembly seeks to provide information, stimulate discussion, and evoke independent conclusions in matters of vital public interest.

American Assembly Sessions

At least two national programs are initiated each year. Authorities are retained to write background papers presenting essential data and defining the main issues in each subject.

About 60 men and women representing a broad range of experience, competence, and American leadership meet for several days to discuss the Assembly topic and consider alternatives for national policy.

All Assemblies follow the same procedure. The background papers are sent to participants in advance of the Assembly. The Assembly meets in small groups for four or five lengthy periods. All groups use the same agenda. At the close of these informal sessions participants adopt in plenary session a final report of findings and recommendations.

Regional, state, and local Assemblies are held following the national session at Arden House. Assemblies have also been held in England, Switzerland, Malaysia, Canada, the Caribbean, South America, Japan and the Philippines. Over ninety institutions have co-sponsored one or more Assemblies.

Arden House

Home of The American Assembly and scene of the national sessions is Arden House, which was given to Columbia University in 1950 by W. Averell Harriman. E. Roland Harriman joined his brother in contributing toward adaptation of the property for conference purposes. The buildings and surrounding land, known as the Harriman Campus of Columbia University, are 50 miles north of New York City.

Arden House is a distinguished conference center. It is self-supporting and operates throughout the year for use by organizations with educational objectives. The American Assembly is a tenant of this Columbia University facility only during Assembly sessions.

American Assembly Books

The background papers for each Assembly program are published in cloth and paperbound editions for use by individuals, libraries, businesses, public agencies, non-governmental organizations, educational institutions, discussion and service groups. In this way the deliberations of Assembly sessions are continued and extended.

The subjects of Assembly programs to date are:

URBAN ACTION CLEARINGHOUSE

JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA, MERGES CITY AND COUNTY GOVERNMENTS

This Report in Brief: The heart of this report is the way Jacksonville area leaders overcame many obstacles to secure a consolidated local governmental structure. Jacksonville has major public problems, as do most metropolitan areas. Fragmented and inefficient local government historically blocked efforts to solve these problems. In 1967 the chairman of the modernization effort said, "It is not enough for the people to desire that problems be solved. Government must be able to translate their wishes into action. And I do not believe existing governmental structures in Jacksonville and Duval County make this possible." A combination of the vision, hard-headedness and practical sense of the leadership, coupled with the shock of scandal and school disaccreditation, brought public agreement to consolidate city and county governments into a single new government for the area. Leaders now feel they have secured the key objective in meeting urban problems: a local government equipped to do the things required and expected of it.

BACKGROUND

The United States was founded on the concept of free enterprise and the philosophy that the individual should have the opportunity to own and develop his land. Our American heritage also implies that every individual is entitled to a certain amount of choice in forming his own destiny, and part of this includes a choice in living environment. The private housing industry meets the needs of most households and provides this choice, but there is a segment of our population whose income generating capabilities are insufficient to allow competing in the private market for housing. These households need assistance to meet their housing requirements and for many years government has attempted to provide this assistance through public housing and other programs.

During the 1960's a growing awareness, both public and private, began to focus on the need for better housing. Inadequate housing conditions and poor living environment emerged as being among the most critical problems facing all levels of government. Consequently, the Federal Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 required that "all planning carried out with assistance under Section 701 shall also require a housing element as part of the preparation of comprehensive land use plans..." In addition to this requirement, the new legislation introduced a number of new federal housing programs formulated for the purpose of stimulating new housing construction to accommodate low and moderate income households.

The programs began to get in gear toward the end of 1968. The impact of these new programs went largely unfelt by the local communities for nearly two years. In late 1970 the residents of San Bernardino Valley were gradually becoming aware of some of the effects of the programs and public interest was aroused.

The new housing programs were generating some local problems. It appears that in some parts of the Valley too many projects were grouped too closely together in a small area. There were complaints of school overcrowding and the necessity for half day sessions. Some people were aroused by poor maintenance practices in some of the projects, some by the inconsistencies in quality, or the fear of losing property value and so on.

Whether or not these fears were justified, it became apparent to local planners that problems were being created, largely due to the over concentration of subsidized units, and that the subsidized units were not being distributed throughout the Valley by any systematic approach. (See Exhibit 1.)

The distribution of housing is recognized as a regional planning problem best solved through the cooperative efforts of all local governments, working together with State and Federal agencies. In San Bernardino County, three Councils of Governments exist, representing all of the cities and the County, and through these Councils of Governments, a Government Subsidized Housing Distribution Model has been developed. It is believed that the application of this model technique will provide an equitable and effective tool for allocating the "fair share" distribution of this housing to statistical areas.

For the purpose of general planning, the County has been divided into 23 statistical areas called Planning Districts. These districts are amalgamations of census tracts, and generally encompass identifiable communities. Planning Districts 1 through 15 comprise the San Bernardino Valley. Since Planning Districts and Census Tracts have coterminus boundaries, the model is capable of accepting new components based on Census data and can be continually updated.

LOCATION OF GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIZED HOUSING
(August, 1971)

INTER-PLANNING DISTRICT DISTRIBUTION MODEL

The purpose of the model is to allocate to each Planning District (P.D.) a "fair share" percentage of the total number of new government subsidized dwelling units to be constructed during any given year in the San Bernardino Valley, and to distribute these units in a manner consistent with sound planning principles.

The methodology deals with a simple averaging of eight variables by P. D. The model focuses on those factors which appear to be the most significant in identifying the location where subsidized housing is needed, in relationship to where it would most benefit the households subsidized and the over-all community. Because the model must be responsive to local needs and changing conditions, the factors must be those for which data is available for yearly updating.

The function of the model will be as a guideline for decision making. Forwarded to HUD as an official policy statement, it will serve to assist in the evaluation of specific sites for subsidized housing. Locally, it will affect decisions made by Councils and Supervisors.

The area encompassed by the model includes all Valley Planning Districts 1 through 15. (See Exhibit 2.) Because of the rural nature of the Mountain - Desert portion of the County, it was felt that a different approach would be more valid in those areas and P.D.'s 16 through 23 are not included in the model. The size of the P.D.'s are inconsistent and, consequently, Planning Districts 3 and 4 have been combined to establish a more logical statistical area. In this manner, all statistical areas indicated in the model have sufficient vacant area to accommodate a "fair share" allocation over many years. By the time any P.D. reaches saturation, it is assumed that recycling of land will be economically feasible. It is important to note that statistical areas are not established by political boundaries.

VALLEY PLANNING DISTRICTS

The model is designed to apply to all programs for subsidized housing through which new housing units are constructed, including but not limited to public housing projects, Section 23 Turnkey, FHA 235, FHA 236, FHA 221 (d) (3), etc. The only projects excluded would be those designed to accommodate senior citizens exclusively, single-lot development under 235, and leased housing when there are five or less units in the block.

There are two fundamental criteria which apply in locating subsidized housing units.

1. Size -

    a. No development of single-family detached dwelling units shall have more than 40 government subsidized units.

    b. No subsidized multiple housing project shall exceed 75 dwelling units.

2. Spacing - All subsidized projects/subdivisions shall be separated from each other by a spacing radius equal to 50 feet per dwelling unit in the project. The radius shall eminate from the peripheral boundary of the project, and distance between projects shall be established by tangent radii. (See Exhibit 3.) However, whenever strict application of this criteria would effectively limit the number of multiple units within a given planning district, where a deficiency in housing exists, the spacing requirement should be modified to recognize the need while still attempting to avoid unnecessary concentration of subsidized units.

With these ground rules established to control size and over-concentration, the modeling technique determines, on a yearly basis, the "fair share" distribution of new subsidized units throughout the Valley portion of the County. The model considers the percent distribution by P. D. of the Valley totals for each of the following eight factors.

1. Number of households
2. Number of households with an annual gross income of $10,000 or less
3. Deficiency dwelling units affordable by the indicated income group
4. Assessed value per average daily attendance
5. Existing additional school capacity
6. Number of jobs
7. Vacant residential land (5-acre parcels or larger) valued at $10,000/acre or less.
8. Equal share

All factors are expressed for each P.D. as a percent of the Valley total. Item 1 deals with population and household distribution. Items 2 and 3 deal with existing need; items 4 and 5, with the capacity of the school district to absorb school children; item 6, accessibility to jobs; item 7, to the financial feasibility of developing the land; and finally, item 8 indicates what share each district would receive if all P. D.'s received an equal share. The eight factors are added and averaged, giving a percentage figure which represents the final allocation to the Planning District.

The final allocation percentage will change when the annual analysis indicates that redistribution has occurred in one or more of the first seven variables. In this way the model will continually reflect existing circumstances and needs.

Exhibit 3

50 ft. per unit

Exhibit 4 indicates the percentage of the total HUD allocation for subsidized units which would be assigned to each Planning District in 1972, excluding the seventh factor, land value. The exhibit was prepared in November, 1971, prior to the decision to add the land value factor. It was determined that this addition was necessary because even if all other factors are favorable in a given district, a limited amount of land available at an economically feasible price would render the percent allocation unreasonable.

The availability of affordable land is of significant importance to the location of subsidized housing, and the figure of $10,000/acre or less was derived in conjunction with local builders and the FHA office in Santa Ana. This variable, along with all others in the model, is subject to revision based on current conditions.

INTRA-PLANNING DISTRICT DISTRIBUTION MODEL (MINI-MODEL)

The major model distributes the total allocation of housing units among the planning districts. These districts are large enough to offer a great variety of specific location opportunity. Where the units are located within each planning district is of critical importance since subsidized units, in the past, have been heavily concentrated and have aroused considerable negative public reaction. The criticism has been centered mainly around the fact that high concentrations of people magnify their problems, and the burden put upon elementary schools to educate an inordinate number of children generated by the projects. As a result, the Mini-Model was formulated to provide guidelines for the distribution of government subsidized housing units within the Planning District once the total number of units have been allocated by the major model. The Mini-Model identifies a number of localized areas in which the builder can select a specific site for the project while still providing the local jurisdictions with the opportunity of introducing their value judgments by numerically weighing the component factors.

It is recognized that cities are comprised of a series of neighborhoods and that the neighborhood is the basic community unit in which people identify. The existing areas for which statistics are available and which most closely identify these "neighborhoods" are the elementary school service areas. The most desirable condition is a neighborhood school within reasonable walking distance of the residents served; an area which is not bisected by major freeways, railroads or other physical barriers.

Although it is recognized that there are many pertinent factors which affect the location of housing, the number of components in the model must be limited to keep the process simple, rational, and yet effective. The Theoretical Intra-Planning District Model (Mini-Model) identifies five major elements/conditions which affect the success of subsidized housing in the community. These statistical components were chosen because they represent critical factors for which there is hard data available that can be updated annually.

The model recognizes five important components:

1. Saturation of Schools

   New families generate additional demands on the local school system to educate children. If an existing school was saturated, the impact of the new concentrated demand could severely affect the quality of education at that facility. Therefore, it seems desirable to absorb new pupils into those schools which are least saturated, keeping in mind the neighborhood school concept.

2. Availability of Mass Transportation

   It is widely held that immobility among lower income groups is a dominant restrictive factor. The second component recognizes that making use of local mass transportation systems will extend their area of influence regarding jobs and personal services.

3. Location of Major Job Centers

The intent of the third component, major job centers, is to locate the people near jobs. Over a period of time it is believed that some of these jobs would be available to the study group. Residing near ones job offers the opportunity to walk or ride a bicycle to work, in addition to using a bus or private automobile.

4. Existing Subsidized Housing

The concentration of subsidized housing projects seems to amplify the problems and dissimilarities between economic groups. Since much of our training is gleaned through watching others, these concentrations do not provide a good environment in which one could learn from his neighbor. Therefore, it is relevant to distribute these projects throughout the community while recognizing that property values will determine, to some degree, the limitations of site selection.

5. Availability of Undeveloped Land

The size of the statistical area, as a percentage of the total study area acreage (total school district) would indirectly indicate the availability of undeveloped land which the developer could purchase and build a project. The size of elementary schools is relatively constant. The larger a service area, the fewer students per square mile and therefore a lower population density. When compared to land-use statistics, the larger service areas have more vacant land resulting in more opportunities for development at lower land prices. These areas would receive a larger component point factor.

Each of the components was equally weighed on a 1-3-5 numerical scale as follows:

	Points
1. Elementary School Enrollment
(Capacity to absorb new students, stated as percentage of saturation)
100% + saturation	1
80% to 99% saturation	3
60% to 79% saturation	5
2. Local Mass Transportation
No transit within the area	1
Transit along the border of the area	3
Transit within the statistical area	5
3. Major Job Centers
(Job opportunities of varying types)
No job centers within the area	1
Job centers along the border of the area	3
Job centers within the area	5

4. Existing Federally Subsidized Housing Projects
   Housing projects within the area 1
   Housing projects bordering the area 3
   No housing projects within the area 5

5. Size of Statistical Area as percentage of Total Study Area
   0 to 5.9% 1
   8.0% and more 5

Based on the foregoing numerical factoring, Exhibit 5 presents a hypothetical community or planning district which has a transit system, employment centers, and existing subsidized housing. The "community" is divided into elementary school attendance zones as might be found in a real community. School saturation, in varying degrees, is arbitrarily scattered throughout the "model." The components are calculated in the 1-3-5 numerical scale for each school service area. In the left one-half of Exhibit 6, the areas receiving the most points are considered to be the most desirable for absorbing new subsidized housing. The effect is a priority rating of neighborhoods. In the model, 1/3 of the areas (circled) are recommended. The modeling technique simply makes a relative comparison – not an absolute or finite decision.

The purpose of this exercise is to understand, and be able to apply, the component modeling technique. Once this is accomplished, the technician can introduce his own components. The model is flexible and will allow for changing attitudes among local agencies. The right one-half of Exhibit 6 illustrates the result if it were determined that a critical condition in any one component should eliminate the corresponding elementary school service area from absorbing any new subsidized housing. This alternative would be the decision of the local governing body.

It is significant, when selecting the factor components, to avoid using factors which require subjective value judgments in identification or application to the point-system analysis. Subjective - type factors will stimulate continued argument as to validity, and seriously jeopardize the entire process. The model must be kept current by means of periodic update, possibly annually. For this reason, factors for which current hard data is compiled by agencies of local government (planning, assessor, school districts, transit system, and the building industry) are preferable, and are especially recommended in the initial modeling program.

IMPLEMENTATION

The Government Subsidized Housing Model shall be reviewed and updated annually by the County Planning Staff. All factors must be recalculated in accordance with current data, and the validity and weighing of those factors considered in the light of new conditions. The model, including the two basic criteria of size and spacing, must reflect current trends.

In addition, the County Planning Staff shall evaluate the model on the basis of performance and recommend changes if appropriate. The evaluation and updating of the distribution model will take into account guidelines being used by HUD at that time for site selection.

The updating and evaluation of the model shall be presented to the governing bodies of the local jurisdictions, through the EVPA and WVPA Governing Boards, for review prior to December 1 of every year. By January 1, after review of the governing bodies, the updated model and accompanying documents shall be forwarded to the HUD area office as an official policy statement.

GEORGIA CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT
MORATORIUM LOSSES

It may be of interest to note the following Congressional District/County breakdowns of anticipated Georgia losses under the Federal Housing Subsidy Programs Moratorium. The figures for each program are based on previous county participation as follows:

FHA 235 Single Family Units; 1970, 1971, 1972

FmHA 502 Interest Credit Single Family Units; 1972.

The State Office of Housing finds this distribution of anticipated expenditures and losses significant in estimating whether each District and each county was receiving its fair share of previous Federal housing monies. Also of interest are employment losses, shown as man years, which may also have significant impact.

GREATER DES MOINES CONFERENCE ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING

★ Under the Auspices of ★

THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING

THE STATE OF IOWA

THE CITY OF DES MOINES

THE SAVERY HOTEL • DES MOINES • DECEMBER 3, 1965 • 1:30 P.M.

THE PURPOSE of the Greater Des Moines Conference on Equal Opportunity in Housing is to bring together a cross-section of business and community leadership for frank and open discussion of the problems of housing opportunities for minority homeseekers.

This Conference has drawn together representatives of many different interests: Business, civic, religious, neighborhood, labor, trade, civil rights and public agencies. From the discussions we hope to discover a new approach to the problems and to mobilize community efforts toward solving them.

To all we extend a warm welcome and hope that you will find this Conference stimulating and productive.

PROGRAM

1:00/p.m. REGISTRATION

1:30/ CONFERENCE OPENING ---------- MR. SILAS S. EWING

President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing

SITUATION REPORT ---------- MR. JAMES B. MORRIS, JR.
Attorney at Law

2:45/ DISCUSSION FORUMS

Each discussion forum will follow the agenda outlined below. Discussion will be led by a skilled, impartial moderator whose function is to direct the expression of views toward an understanding of the problems and suggestions for solution.

- DEFINING PROBLEM AREAS

Equal opportunity in housing for Negro Americans and other minorities. Patterns of residential segregation. Social and economic consequences of denial of choice in housing. Freedom of residence versus ownership rights. Low-cost housing. Local, state and Federal housing programs.

- COMMUNITY ATTITUDES TOWARD EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITIES

  Anxieties surrounding equal housing opportunities: Fears of the white community as residents and property owners, the housing industry, the non-white homeseeker. Factors that perpetuate residential segregation: policies of the business community, building codes and ordinances, lack of motivation among non-whites, resistance in white neighborhoods.

- COMMUNITY ACTION TOWARD EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

  The current situation regarding the local fair-housing ordinance, governmental programs to increase housing supply, efforts of civil rights groups and community leaders. The future course and the role of government and community leadership.

- SUGGESTIONS FOR A COURSE OF ACTION

  Participants are invited to suggest means for expanding equal housing opportunities in the community.

6:00/ RECEPTION

The featured speakers and conference leaders will be honored to meet and chat with the participants until the dinner meeting begins.

INTRODUCTION

You've heard about the problems of slum housing, urban blight, and decay in our cities. You've heard of the Senate and Congressional hearings, the national legislation, the newspaper headlines, and the racial ghetto outbreaks. You've heard about the problems of urban renewal and public housing, side by side with growing deteriorated and overcrowded neighborhoods. And you've heard that new housing programs are being proposed. Yet, you may not be familiar with the government and private housing programs that already exist. That's what this booklet is about: the present programs you can use to help eliminate poor housing and slum neighborhoods now.

Take a look at the housing programs in your community. Are they piecemeal projects, too small to be effective, and lacking in overall planning? The comprehensive planning and community renewal programs in Part One tell you how to plan for housing programs in your community.

Are there families in your community who need help in adjusting to their new housing? Relocation assistance for these families is described in Parts One and Two.

Are your community's housing programs isolated from other public programs? See the sections on relocation assistance and on coordination with anti-poverty programs in Part Two.

Do the needs of your community's ill-housed citizens for employment and education also go unmet? The section on coordination with anti-poverty programs will help here, too.

Do your housing programs fail to involve community leaders or private agencies? The sections on the city human relations commission and on urban renewal neighborhood organization in Part Two can help you.

Are your housing programs planned without involving the residents who will be affected by them? The sections on neighborhood organization in Parts Two and Three show you ways to involve people in the plans for their own neighborhoods.

Do the residents of neighborhoods in your community know how to participate in housing programs? Part Four explains how residents can take part in government and private housing programs.

Have private groups done little to help improve homes and neighborhoods in your community? Part Three explains the many ways private groups can work for better housing in your community.

The Housing Act of 1949 set as a goal: "a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family." Today, we're still a long way from reaching our goal of good housing and good neighborhoods. We know that Federal, state, and local governments, and private community groups all must help. You, too, can help. For you have more programs today than ever before for better homes and neighborhoods.

HUD-(or DHUD) Department of Housing and Urban Development, created September 9, 1965; formerly the Housing and Home Finance Agency (HHFA), which was created in 1947.

The five agencies of HUD:

FHA-Federal Housing Administration, created in 1934.

URA-Urban Renewal Administration, created by the HHFA Administrator in 1954.

CFA-Community Facilities Administration, created by the HHFA Administrator in 1954.

HAA-Housing Assistance Administration, formerly Public Housing Administration (PHA) which was created in 1947.

FNMA-Federal National Mortgage Association, a government corporation, originally chartered in 1938.

H.U.D. PROGRAMS YOU CAN USE WITHOUT HAVING URBAN RENEWAL

Don't let the 21 programs for better homes and neighborhoods in Table 1 scare you. Just take them one at a time, from left to right. Take the sixth program, rental housing for the elderly. The first column at the left of Table I says, "Section number of national housing law." The section number for this program is 231.

The second column from the left of Table I says, "agency that administers." The agency in HUD that administers the 231 program is FHA. When you want information about a particular Federal housing program, you'll save time if you know the section number of the national housing law for that program and the agency in HUD that administers the program. Then, you can write to FHA about 231 mortgage insurance and FHA knows you mean that program of rental housing for the elderly.

The third column in Table I says, "type of aid." The type of aid for this 231 program is mortgage insurance. Other Federal housing aids, besides insurance, include loans, advances (See Table II), grants, and subsidies.

The fourth column in Table I says, "Program." Many times, Federal officials use the section number right along with the name of the program. They'll say, "231 rental housing for the elderly."

The fifth column in Table I says, "who receives the aid." The profit or nonprofit sponsor who builds rental housing for the elderly receives the Federal (231) mortgage insurance on his loan from the bank. FHA allows easy terms on the loan to encourage sponsors to build rental housing for the elderly.

The sixth column in Table I says, "special provisions." In the low-rent public housing program, for example, there are special provisions for the elderly and the handicapped.

TABLE I. HUD Programs you can use for better housing and better neighborhoods, without having urban renewal.

 You can use FHA mortgage insurance on your loan to buy an individual unit in a multifamily building (condominium.)

The last column on the right of Table I says, "requirements." This is very important, because there are some Federal programs you can't use unless your city meets certain requirements. You can't use the rent supplements program, for example, unless your city has a Workable Program. (See the sections in this booklet on the Workable Program and on the comprehensive planning requirements your city has to have for certain Federal programs.)

How do you use the Federal housing programs in Table I?
Insurance programs. Look at the programs in Table I according to the type of aid (third column) they give. Start with insurance. FHA insures loans for property improvements (Title I) and insures mortgage loans for home improvements (203(k)), experimental housing (233), rental housing for the elderly (231), homes (regular program) (203(b)), multifamily rental housing (regular program) (207), cooperative housing (213), and condominiums (234). You can use these FHA insurance programs yourself, without your city taking part. How? You go to the bank (or savings and loan association or finance company) and apply for FHA insurance on the loan you want to get from the bank.

Now, the bank or other lender, you go to for an FHA-insured loan has to be a bank approved by FHA. If you are getting a loan for property or home improvements, you can let your building contractor take your application to the bank for you. If you're going to sponsor experimental housing, rental housing for the elderly, multifamily rental housing, cooperative housing, or condominiums, you visit an FHA insuring office before you go to the bank. If you don't know where the nearest FHA insuring office is, write to an FHA regional office and ask. (See the list of agencies at the end of this Part on Federal Programs.)

Other FHA insurance programs require your city to take part. If you want FHA mortgage insurance for land development, your city (or other local government in your area) has to have a comprehensive plan. And the land development you want to do has to fit in with the comprehensive plan for your area. So, check with your City Planning Commission before you apply for your mortgage loan for land development. Insurance now covers not only mortgages for new subdivisions, but also insurance on mortgage loans for developers of entire new towns and new communities. The maximum amount of a single mortgage is $25 million for seven years (or longer, if permitted by the Secretary of HUD). The developer's application to FHA for mortgage insurance first has to be approved by the local governing bodies of adjoining localities and by the state Governor.

Besides the rent supplements program, three other FHA mortgage insurance programs in Table I require your city to have a Workable Program: 1) homes for low and moderate income families (221); 2) rental housing for low and moderate income families, market interest rate program (221(d)(3)); and 3) rental housing for low and moderate income families, below market interest rate program (221(d)(3)). If you want to use any of these three FHA mortgage insurance programs, check with your city's local public agency (LPA) before you apply for your mortgage loan. (See the section in this booklet on the Workable Program. For more information on 221(d)(3) programs, see Part III. Community Group Programs, Nonprofit housing.)

A new FHA home mortgage insurance program (not listed in Table I; write HUD for information) waives requirements for economic soundness of loans in areas where violence or civil disorders have occured or are threatened. The property can be an acceptable risk giving "due consideration to the need for providing adequate housing for families of low and moderate income" in the area.

Remember, FHA doesn't lend money. You get your loan from a bank (or savings and loan association or finance company). You pay a premium for FHA insurance. Then FHA insures your loan from the bank. FHA insurance protects the bank or other approved lender in case something happens that you can't pay back your loan.

- Direct loan programs. There is a Federal housing program in Table I that does give direct Federal government loans. That is the senior citizens housing loan program (202). As a nonprofit sponsor, you can apply to your regional office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development for a loan to build or rehabilitate rental housing for moderate income elderly and handicapped people. Nonprofit sponsors of senior citizen housing can be church groups, labor unions, and fraternal and civic clubs. Nonprofit sponsors have to be able to finance the housing project themselves or through their national organizations.

- Grant programs. As a public or private nonprofit agency, you can apply to your regional office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development for a grant to do a low income housing demonstration (207) project. You can demonstrate how to build low income housing or how to design it or how to finance it. For example, the idea of the rent supplements program was tested in a demonstration project. Your city doesn't have to take part in the low income housing demonstration program.

- Grants for urban planning assistance (701) go to your city, a group of cities, your county, your state, or your metropolitan planning agency. You use these grants to prepare comprehensive community plans. (See the section in this booklet on comprehensive planning.) A city over 50,000 population or a group of cities over 50,000 that want urban planning assistance grants have to have a metropolitan planning agency. And a metropolitan planning agency has to be set up by your State law. Your state planning agency and your metropolitan planning agency apply to the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) regional office for urban planning assistance grants.

  If your city is under 50,000 population, your city applies for urban planning assistance grants to your State planning agency or to your metropolitan planning agency, if you have one serving your city. Your county, no matter what size, also applies either to your State planning agency or to your metropolitan planning agency, if there is one serving your county.

  A group of cities that add up to less than 50,000 population can apply to the HUD regional office for urban planning assistance grants. But the group of cities has to form an organization of the public officials from each city. A group like this might call itself a council of local governments or an area-wide planning agency.*

- A local public body can apply to your regional office of HUD for grants for neighborhood facilities; these are projects like community centers, youth centers, health stations, and recreation centers. Your city (or other local government in your area) has to have a comprehensive plan. And the neighborhood facility has to fit in with the comprehensive plan. You use the neighborhood facility to serve low and moderate income families and as part of a Community Action Program. (See the section in this booklet on housing programs a Community Action Committee can use.) Neighborhood facilities are good to use with urban renewal projects; they give the renewal neighborhood a lift.

- A local public body or a State agency can apply to your HUD regional office for grants for open space land and urban beautification. You use the grants to buy and put up parks, malls, historic sites, and scenic spots. Your city (or other local government in your area) has to have a comprehensive plan. And the parks and malls you want have to fit in with the comprehensive plan. Open space land and urban beautification programs are a good way to get the parks you need in an urban renewal area.

- Any size city or county can apply to your HUD regional office for grants for code enforcement and for demolition of unsafe buildings. Your city has to have a Workable Program. The nice thing about these programs is you can use the grants to enforce housing codes and to demolish unsafe buildings both within and outside of urban renewal project areas. Both programs include grants for relocation payments to people who have to move. The code enforcement program also includes rehabilitation loans and grants, as well as funds for public improvements like streets and sidewalks.

- Subsidy programs. What's the difference between a subsidy and a grant? You get a grant from the Federal government in one or two lump sums; you get a subsidy in several payments spread out over a period of time.
  - The rent supplements program is a subsidy program as well as an insurance program (221(d)(3)). The Secretary of HUD makes the subsidy payments for low income tenants to the owner of the housing where they live. The tenants have to be people who qualify for public housing.

    The housing has to be financed under the (221(d)(3) market interest rate program.* And the owner of the housing has to be a private nonprofit sponsor, a limited distribution company, or a cooperative in order to get rent supplement payments for low income tenants. The owner of the housing chooses the tenants. (See under PART III. COMMUNITY GROUP PROGRAMS, Nonprofit housing.)
  - Low-rent public housing is the other subsidy program in Table I. Your city's Housing Authority has to charge tenants enough rent to pay for operating the public housing, but without competing with private standard housing rents. To pay the cost of building new public housing, your city pays 10% in cash or in kind, the Federal government pays the other 90% in annual contributions.

    Low income families and elderly individuals apply to your Housing Authority to live in public housing. Families displaced by urban renewal projects and other government programs get priority on vacant units in public housing.

Besides building new housing itself, your Housing Authority can also buy new housing from a private builder (Turnkey Method), buy and rehabilitate existing buildings, or lease housing from private owners to rent to low income tenants. Also, some tenants can buy their units in public housing.

- There are a lot of other HUD programs not included here, as well as programs of other Federal departments, that can help you get better housing and neighborhoods. See the list of publications at the end of this Part on Federal Programs.

H.U.D. PROGRAMS YOU CAN USE WITH URBAN RENEWAL ONLY

- You can use the 21 programs in Table I either with or without having urban renewal. But you can use the 12 programs in Table II with urban renewal only.* You saw that the last seven programs in Table I required your city to have a Workable Program. All 12 programs in Table II require the Workable Program. (See the section in this booklet on the Workable Program.)

- How do you use the Federal housing programs in Table II? Insurance programs. As you can see in the third column of Table II, there are three insurance programs you can use with urban renewal: 1) mortgage insurance for housing in urban renewal areas (220); 2) mortgage insurance for home improvement loans in urban renewal areas (220(h)); and 3) mortgage insurance for housing for displaced families (221).

Before you go to the bank to apply for your FHA-insured mortgage loan, check with your local public agency (LPA) to see if your city has a Workable Program. Your LPA might be called an Urban Renewal Agency, an Urban Renewal Department of your city government, or it might be your city's Housing Authority. FHA won't insure your 220, 220(h), or 221 loan from the bank unless your city has a Workable Program. And the Workable Program has to be certified by HUD.

The Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA, often called "Fanny Mae") buys the 220, 220(h), and 221 mortgages from the bank, under the FNMA Special Assistance Program. That way, a bank that makes a mortgage loan for urban renewal can turn around and sell the mortgage to FNMA on the secondary mortgage market. Once the bank sells the mortgage, then the bank has money to make more loans.

- Direct loan programs. Your local public agency (LPA) can get a temporary loan to start buying and clearing land in an urban renewal project. (See the next section on Urban Renewal Projects, Loan and Grant, Part II.)

- If you live in a building in an urban renewal project, and the building isn't beyond repair, you can get a Federal loan (312) through your LPA to rehabilitate your building. Your LPA tells you whether or not your building is beyond repair.

- Advances. Your City's LPA uses planning advances for urban renewal to pay for survey and planning work before the urban renewal project begins. The planning advances are part of (Title I) urban renewal project funds from HUD.

- Grant programs. Besides grants for urban renewal projects, your city can get grants from HUD to make general neighborhood renewal plans (GNRP). The advantage of the GNRP is this: within one neighborhood in your city there could be one or two areas where you can use urban renewal, according to your State laws. But the whole neighborhood may need help: it may need a new school or better streets or housing code enforcement or new zoning. The general neighborhood renewal plan is a way for your city to study and help a whole neighborhood, even though only parts of it can have urban renewal projects.

- Another grant program your city can use is the Community Renewal Program (CRP). These grants let your city study all the renewal projects and neighborhood plans your city needs for years to come. And your city can then decide which urban renewal projects it should do first and how your city can pay for the better housing and neighborhoods it has in mind.

- If you have to move because of an urban renewal project, your LPA will pay your moving expenses. Your LPA gets the money from a 100% relocation grant from the Federal government. So, your city doesn't pay for relocation out of its own funds. Relocation is the only grant program in Table II where your city doesn't share the cost with the Federal government.

In addition to moving expenses, low income families and elderly individuals can get a relocation adjustment payment (RAP) from your LPA. This payment helps people who can't get a unit in public housing to find other standard housing.

Your LPA also helps businesses that have to move to get Small Business Loans, rental payments, or Small Business Displacement Payments.

Your LPA also makes relocation payments to people who have to move not only because of urban renewal, but also because of Federal highway construction or other construction programs.

- State and local public bodies can apply to HUD for urban renewal demonstration grants (314). Kentucky used one of these grants to help communities with their Workable Programs. (See the section on State assistance for community improvement.)

- If you are a low income property owner in an urban renewal area, and your building is not beyond repair, you can get a grant to rehabilitate your building. See your LPA about getting a rehabilitation grant (115).

See page 10 about code enforcement and demolition grants.

URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

What is urban renewal?
Who does urban renewal?
What is the procedure for urban renewal?
How long does urban renewal take?
Why might urban renewal fail?

- What is urban renewal?

Urban renewal is your city's trade-in of slum housing (or businesses or industries) for decent housing (or businesses or industries.)

There are two main ways you make the trade-in: 1) clearance: your city buys all or part of the slum property, clears and improves the property, and sells the property to private builders; and 2) rehabilitation: your city makes loans or grants to slum property owners and tenants to repair their buildings.

Whether your city uses clearance or rehabilitation or both, your city also uses conservation to keep the neighborhood from becoming a slum again. Conservation means your city puts in community facilities like streets, sewers and utilities, parks and playgrounds, branch libraries, and fire stations.

- Who does urban renewal?

Your community has to have a local public agency (LPA) to do urban renewal. Your LPA can be a public agency separate from your city government, can be your local housing authority, or can be a department of the city government itself, depending on your State law. Your LPA uses Federal advances, loans, and grants (Title I) to plan urban renewal projects; to buy, clear, improve, and resell urban renewal property; to give slum property owners and tenants loans or grants to rehabilitate their buildings; and to make relocation payments to people who have to move. The city supplies part of the funds as well, either in cash or in improvements (community facilities).

Both cities and counties can use Federal grants for code enforcement and for demolition of unsafe buildings in (or outside of) urban renewal areas. Your city can also use grants for neighborhood facilities, open space land, urban beautification, and preservation of historic structures in urban renewal projects.

Property owners and tenants in urban renewal areas get rehabilitation loans (312)* and grants (115) from the city's LPA to repair their buildings and use FHA mortgage insurance for housing (220) and home improvements (220(h)). Families displaced from urban renewal areas also use mortgage insurance (221) to finance decent housing.

Private builders buy the improved urban renewal land and build housing (or businesses or industries) according to your city's plan. Nonprofit groups can also sponsor new or rehabilitated housing in urban renewal areas.

- What is the procedure for urban renewal?

There are five main steps to an urban renewal project: 1) choosing the urban renewal project area; 2) Survey and Planning; 3) Loan and Grant, Part I; 4) Loan and Grant, Part II; and 5) the project itself.

1) Choosing the urban renewal project area. Before you can have urban renewal, your city has to have a Workable Program for Community Improvement (see the next section on the Workable Program) approved by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

   Next, your city chooses an area for urban renewal. Your State statutes tell what can be an urban renewal area; for example, a statute might say that at least 51% of the buildings in an area have to be substandard before you can have an urban renewal project.

* Section number of the national housing law for that program; See Table II, page 14, and explanation following.

2) Survey and Planning. After your city chooses a project area, then your city government passes a resolution. The resolution is to make a Survey and Planning Application to HUD for Federal funds for advance planning. Your city may choose to pay for advance planning of the urban renewal project without Federal funds and then use Federal funds only for the rest of the urban renewal project.

Your city's Survey and Planning Application tells what the urban renewal project area is like, what your city plans to do in the project area, and how much the urban renewal project might cost. After HUD approves your city's Survey and Planning Application, then HUD advances planning funds to your city.

Your city uses Survey and Planning funds (whether Federal or not) to survey and to plan the urban renewal project area. One survey tells you what condition the buildings are in, how many people and businesses will have to move, and what housing there already is in the city for the displaced people to move to.

Another survey tells you who owns each parcel of property in the urban renewal project area and how much each parcel of property is worth. Your city pays appraisers to decide how much the property is worth.

The plan for the urban renewal project area tells how you can use the property in the project area after urban renewal: for example, how much of the property to use for businesses, how much for homes, how much for schools, and/or how much for industries. Congress now says the residential reuse of any urban renewal area must provide a "substantial" supply of standard low and moderate income housing. And the residential redevelopment must show "marked progress in serving the poor and disadvantaged people living in slums and blighted areas." Also, urban renewal plans must give "consideration" to development of effective systems for the control of storm and sanitary wastes. HUD requires that the new uses for the urban renewal property pay your city more property taxes than the old uses.

3) Loan and Grant, Part I. After your city surveys and plans the urban renewal project, then your city government passes a resolution. The resolution asks HUD to approve the city's Part I of an Application for Loan and Grant of Funds.

This Loan and Grant Application has to tell HUD your city's whole plan for the urban renewal project: how your city will buy the property, how you can use the property after urban renewal, what community facilities your city will put in, how your City will relocate the people who have to move, and how your city plans to resell the property.

HUD reviews the Loan and Grant Application, Part I, and returns it to your city. HUD may then ask your city to add more information or to change the plan.

4) Loan and Grant, Part II. After your city gets Part II of the Loan and Grant Application ready (which is actually Part I revised), then your city government passes--whoops, not yet. Your city government holds a public hearing. After the public hearing, then your city government passes a resolution. The resolution approves the urban renewal project.

Now the only thing left to do before the urban renewal project itself is to get the money. If your city is over 50,000 population, you pay 1/3 of the cost of the urban renewal project (total cost minus sales of urban renewal land to private builders). However, if your city paid for the Survey and Planning out of its own funds, then your city's share for the rest of the urban renewal project is 1/4.

If your city is under 50,000 population, you pay 1/4 of the cost. Your city doesn't have to pay in cash. Instead, your city can put in community facilities, or, public improvements to serve the project area. These improvements are called noncash Grants-in-Aid. Noncash Grants-in-Aid can also be up to 25% (but not over $3.5 million) of the cost of:

1) public facilities for cultural, exhibition or civic purposes,
2) city halls or public safety buildings or
3) medical treatment or research facilities.

After approving Part II of your Loan and Grant Application, HUD sends your city a contract for the Federal 2/3 or 3/4 share of the urban renewal project cost. After your city approves that contract, you're ready to start the project. Your city uses a Federal loan at the beginning and gets a Federal grant at the end.

5) The project itself. The city uses the appraisals made in the Survey and Planning stage to set a purchase price for each parcel of property in the urban renewal area. Next, your city hires a negotiator to make each property owner an offer for his property. If the owner accepts that offer, then a title company closes the sale. If the title to the property is not clear or if the owner won't accept the city's offer, then the city has to go to court and condemn the property in order to buy it.

If your city buys urban renewal property that you live on, you have at least 90 days to move, and the city has to help you find standard housing. The city pays your moving expenses and also gives you a relocation adjustment payment, if you need it. (See the grant programs following Table II, page 16.) If you decide to move to a substandard house, your city can't give you any relocation payments.

After buying a parcel of property, the city has a demolition company demolish the building. Next, the city has an engineer put in street and sewer improvements. Next, the city goes to the planning commission to have the property rezoned according to the urban renewal plan.

If you own a building that has to be rehabilitated, the city tells you what you have to do to bring the building up to standard, according to the city codes. The city also helps you get the loan or grant you need to do the work, if you can't afford all the repairs yourself.

When the land the city bought is ready, the city sells it to private developers, except the land for public uses like schools, parks, utilities, and fire stations. The private developers have to build according to the urban renewal plan. The price for the land has been set by the appraisers.

When your city sells all the urban renewal land, the Urban Renewal Administration of HUD makes an audit. The audit is to see exactly what the project did cost after your city sold the urban renewal land. If your city spent more than it expected to, then your city has to come up with more funds to pay its share. If your city spent less than it expected to, your city gets a refund from URA. Finally, the Urban Renewal Administration makes your city a capital grant for the Federal share of the project cost.

- How long does urban renewal take?

How long your city takes to do an urban renewal project depends on several things:

1) whether your city's Workable Program is acceptable to HUD;
2) whether your city has done urban renewal before and knows the procedure;
3) whether HUD has a backlog of applications piled up from other cities when your city applies;
4) whether the people living in the project area stay there between the time of the Survey and Planning until the project begins; you see, it will take the city longer to find people relocation housing if they aren't the same people who lived in the project area when the City made the relocation survey;

5) whether the property owners are willing to sell at the price the city offers;
6) whether much of the urban renewal property has clear title; it takes a long time for the city to go through court and condemn the property for title; and
7) whether the city can find ready buyers for the urban renewal land.

Choosing the project area takes at least long enough for the city to inspect possible renewal areas and to talk over a possible project with city government departments, other local government agencies, and private agencies. How long this takes, it's hard to say.

Then, to prepare the Survey and Planning Application takes anywhere from a few hours to several weeks, depending on how much information your city has collected on the project area.

If your city's Workable Program is certified, HUD approves the Survey and Planning Application in about three to four months.

The Survey and Planning stage of urban renewal takes two years.

HUD takes about three to four months to review and return Part I of the Loan and Grant Application. After the city revises the Application (about four months) and turns in Part II, HUD approves the urban renewal project in about two to three months.

Cities take about five years to execute an urban renewal project, that is, to buy all the property they planned to buy in the urban renewal project, improve the land, and sell the land after all the improvements are in.

All in all, an urban renewal project in your city takes about eight years from start to finish. Of course, you can have more than one project going on at a time, so that it might take only 11 years to finish two projects.

- Why might urban renewal fail?

- One reason an urban renewal project might fail in your community is that the public doesn't understand it. People in your community may have the wrong idea about Federal aid for urban renewal. They may think the Federal government comes in and tells your city what to do. Not so. Your city chooses to have the urban renewal project, your city plans the project, and your city carries it out.

  Another common misunderstanding about urban renewal is that people in the project will be cleared out and have no place to go. Not so. Your city has to help the people from the project area to find standard housing at a price they can afford to pay. What about people moving to another slum, you say? Your city can't stop anyone from moving to a slum. And your city can't help anyone move before the Federal contract for urban renewal is approved. But if people living in an urban renewal area remain there until the project begins, the city has to find them decent housing.

  Many people think an urban renewal project has to be all clearance. No project has to be all clearance. Your city may decide on clearance to get enough land for a city-wide facility, such as a stadium or a civic center. But where your city doesn't need a large land area, you can draw any project area boundaries to include some housing that the owners can rehabilitate.

- A second reason that urban renewal might fail in your community is because the people living in the project area aren't involved in planning the project. You know, the plans for an urban renewal project have to include plans for relocation. So, even if none of the people move back into the project after renewal, the people still have a stake in the project plans.

  There are many ways people who live in project areas can be involved in the planning. One way is through the Citizens Advisory Committee. Your city is required to have this committee under the Workable Program. Often the difference between a successful urban renewal project and a failure is the difference between a Citizens Advisory Committee that is active and one that is idle. People in project areas can work through the Citizens Advisory Committee to get the kind of project that meets their needs for better housing and neighborhoods.

Often the Citizens Advisory Committee isn't enough. People in project areas may want to do their own housing surveys. They may want to show the city that new housing alone won't meet the needs of the people, but that they also need jobs, job training, and adult education programs as well. (See the section on Your Own Programs under Part IV.)

People in project areas may want to form a neighborhood organization and hold meetings to explain and discuss the urban renewal program and other programs in the community. They may publish a newsletter to keep all the people in the project area informed. Efforts like these--the housing surveys, the neighborhood meetings, and the newsletters--can mean the difference between the success and the failure of urban renewal in your community. (See Part II, City Programs.)

- A third reason urban renewal might fail is because your city does a piecemeal or one-shot job, as if an urban renewal project alone could solve all the city's slum housing problems. Few cities are that lucky. Your city has to work for good housing in every part of the community. That means enforcing the housing code, putting in public improvements, encouraging private builders and nonprofit sponsors to put up more housing, and possibly using other Federal programs for more and better housing. One isolated project won't do the job.

WORKABLE PROGRAM*

You wouldn't build a house where you couldn't get a road to it, where there was no school, no grocery store, and somebody could put up a factory next door. You wouldn't put a house in a neighborhood like that.

On the other hand, you wouldn't tear down a bad house until you found a good house to move into. Nor would you move people out of one slum neighborhood only to have them move into another slum neighborhood.

Who sees to it that people who move out of bad houses then move into good houses in good neighborhoods? And who sees to it that good housing gets the roads, schools, stores, and zoning it needs? Your city sees to it. How can you tell if your city is doing its job? By your city's Workable Program.

The Workable Program is a set of requirements. The requirements show that your city is doing its job. That's all the Workable Program does. You don't get any money out of it. But your city has to have a Workable Program to get in on the following Federal programs: all the HUD programs you use with urban renewal only (Table II); grants for code enforcement and demolition of unsafe buildings; housing for low and moderate income families (221) and(221(d)(3)); and low-rent public housing.

What are the Workable Program requirements?

- The first requirement is codes and ordinances. The housing code is especially important, since your city uses it to get property owners to repair and rehabilitate their buildings and clean up their yards. The housing code also tells how many people can live in a building, how many bathrooms the building should have, how many windows, and what is an adequate heating system. Your city can use code enforcement grants (Table I) to help pay for enforcing the housing code.

* The full name is Workable Program for Community Improvement.

Aside from buildings that have to be condemned, your city usually enforces the housing code in certain parts of the city at a time. This way, a particular neighborhood can repair all its buildings at the same time. The city doesn't enforce the housing code in areas that will be cleared by urban renewal since the cost of the repairs would make the property more expensive for the city to buy. Besides, it wouldn't make sense for the owner to spend money on a major repair if his building would be torn down in a few years. However, your city can require that the buildings are at least not dangerous to the people living in them. Your city can set minimum standards and require temporary repairs on buildings that will be cleared in urban renewal areas.

Besides the housing code, your city has to have building, plumbing, electrical and fire prevention codes. These four codes set health and safety standards for new buildings and major building repairs. So, while the building code covers new buildings, the housing code covers existing buildings.

Your city enforces building, plumbing, electrical, and fire prevention codes on new buildings. In addition, your city has a codes review committee to keep all the codes up to date and to decide how and where the city should enforce the housing code. This committee makes a report in the Annual Review of Progress your city sends to HUD to get your Workable Program recertified each year.

- The second Workable Program requirement is the comprehensive community plan. See the next section in this booklet on Comprehensive Planning.

- The third requirement is Neighborhood Analyses. This means your city divides the community into neighborhoods--residential, commercial, and industrial--and studies each neighborhood at a time. One neighborhood might need the housing code enforced there. Another neighborhood might need its street layout changed. Still another neighborhood might need many of its buildings cleared away. From neighborhood analyses, you can see where your city needs urban renewal projects first, where you need to enforce the housing code first, and where you need to put in community facilities, or, public improvements, like streets and schools. Your city can use the Urban Planning Assistance Program (701) in Table I to help pay for its neighborhood analyses.

If neighborhood analyses sounds to you like the Community Renewal Program (Title I) in Table II, you're right. They're the same idea of planning for more than one urban renewal project at a time. The Community Renewal Program (CRP) is usually a bigger study than neighborhood analyses and has more detail. A large city might use a CRP to make one of its studies just on relocation housing. Another study might look at the needs of displaced families for jobs and education.

You remember in the section on urban renewal, we said your city has to have a local public agency (LPA) to do urban renewal. Your city may also have a local planning agency. Your local public agency (LPA) is probably your Urban Renewal Agency. Your local planning agency is probably the Planning Department of your city government. Now, your Planning Department--or a planning consultant, if your city doesn't have its own planner--does your neighborhood analysis, or your Community Renewal Program, if you have one. Your Urban Renewal Agency (LPA) carries out your urban renewal projects. Confused? Wait, there's more.

An agency usually has paid professional people who work full time. Then, with the agency, such as your city's Planning Department, there will also be a planning commission or board. Your Urban Renewal Agency also has an urban renewal commission or board. The people on the commissions or boards serve without pay. Your mayor and city council appoint them.

Why do you want to know about these boards or commissions and agencies? Here's why: Say you want to know where your city plans to do its next urban renewal project. You go to your Planning Department (local planning agency). Say you think this next project should be someplace different. You go to your planning commission or board. You would want to go to the planning commission, since it makes recommendations on plans for urban renewal to your city council.

Say you want to know how far along a certain urban renewal project is. You go to your Urban Renewal Agency (LPA) and ask. Say you think more of the property in that project could be rehabilitated than the city has planned. Even though your city council has adopted an urban renewal plan for that project, plans, like codes and ordinances, can be amended. So, you go to your urban renewal commission or board, since it makes recommendations on urban renewal projects to your city council.

To meet this third Workable Program requirement, your local planning agency makes a report on Neighborhood Analyses in the Annual Review of Progress your city sends to HUD.

- The fourth Workable Program requirement is administrative organization. By now, you've noticed your city needs more than one Agency or Department to do its Workable Program. Yet, all seven Workable Program requirements go together. So, what your city has to do is have a program coordinator. This coordinator might be called your Urban Renewal Coordinator. Or it might be your mayor. Or it could even be a committee.

The program coordinator would be the best person for you to talk to if you wanted to know how your city's Workable Program was coming along. The coordinator makes sure the city has enough staff people to do the jobs, especially the jobs of code enforcement and of enforcing your city's zoning and subdivision regulations (see the section on Comprehensive Planning). If your city needs to hire new people to work on the Workable Program requirements, your program coordinator tells the mayor and city council.

- The fifth requirement is financing. How will your city pay for the urban renewal or public housing or code enforcement or public improvements it plans to do in your community?

Under your city's comprehensive plan, you have a public improvements program, that is, a list of the streets, sewers, schools, parks, utilities, fire stations, and public buildings your city will need for many years to come.

Also, under your comprehensive plan is a capital improvements budget. This is a six year budget of the public improvements your city needs (according to your public improvements program) along with how much each improvement costs and how much money the city expects to have each year to pay for the improvements.

Finally, looking at the public improvements program and at the capital improvements budget, your city adopts an annual operating budget. What HUD checks in this Workable Program requirement is to see that your city really is looking ahead at the improvements it will need in the future and how your city plans to pay for them.

- The sixth Workable Program requirement is housing for displaced families. That means your city has to help displaced families find decent housing at a price they can afford. Displaced families are people who have to move not only because of urban renewal and highway or other government construction, but also because they lived in an unsafe or overcrowded building (according to the housing code) or because their income got too high for them to stay in public housing.

Your city has to help relocate all these displaced people. You may have a special relocation office, or, housing referral service. Whatever agency handles relocation, your city has relocation assistants to work with each family that has to move. Relocation assistants help families fill out forms to get their relocation payments of up to $200 for moving expenses, to get their relocation adjustment payment (RAP) of up to $500 if they need it, and to find a decent place to live.

To meet this sixth Workable Program requirement, your city has to have records of how many people will be displaced in the next few years and of what housing there is for them to move to.

- The seventh Workable Program requirement is citizen participation. Your mayor appoints people to an official Citizens Advisory Committee (CAC). The people are supposed to represent all community interests: business, labor, civic, church; education, health and welfare agencies; minority groups and neighborhood groups. And your mayor also appoints people to an official Subcommittee on Minority Group Housing. The people on this committee are supposed to represent minority groups also, and builders, lenders, realtors, and housing officials.

A Citizens Advisory Committee (CAC) and its Subcommittee on Minority Group Housing, and any other subcommittees your CAC sets up will have anywhere from a dozen to ninety members or more. The size of the CAC depends on the size of your city.

The Citizens Advisory Committee is a way for private citizens to help your city government work for better housing and neighborhoods. There are two ways the CAC works. First, the CAC works as a group. The CAC might recommend new public housing to the mayor to help relocate displaced families. Or the CAC might hold meetings open to the public to explain urban renewal.

Second, members of the Citizens Advisory Committee work as individuals. A CAC member might talk with a City Councilman about a housing code enforcement program, asking the councilman his views and giving him information about how a nearby city enforced its housing code. Another CAC member might talk with a lender about making mortgage loans to people who want to rehabilitate their homes.

The Subcommittee on Minority Group Housing also works as a group to hold meetings and to make recommendations to the Citizens Advisory Committee. And members of the Subcommittee work as individuals to help minority families find housing, land, and home loans.

The Citizens Advisory Committee has a secretary to keep minutes of its meetings. CAC's generally meet once a month. Subcommittees also keep minutes. Subcommittees generally meet more often than the CAC. The Citizens Advisory Committee chooses a chairman and may also have an Executive Committee to coordinate the subcommittees. And the CAC chooses the chairman for each subcommittee. Besides the Subcommittee on Minority Group Housing, you might have subcommittees on public information, on home financing, on downtown development, and on urban renewal.

The mayor sees that the Citizens Advisory Committee and the subcommittees have staff assistance. The staff may be city employees or volunteers or both. The staff people help the Citizens Advisory Committee and the subcommittees get the information they need. For information on comprehensive planning, zoning and subdivision regulations, and the public improvements program, your city can use Urban Planning Assistance (701) grants to prepare materials for city public meetings. The CAC can use the materials for its own meetings as well.

COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING

What is comprehensive planning? What's a comprehensive community plan? A master plan? A general plan? A future development plan?

Planning has been different things at different times. At one time, a plan was a map of streets, utilities, and public buildings that the city planned to build in the next five years. Later the plan included private land use as well as public: residential, commercial, and industrial land.

Then, to find out how much land the city would need for homes, businesses, and industries, the plan included a study of what the future population might be and how many people would be working in the businesses and factories.

The time came when the city had to protect the land people used for homes and the land for businesses and industries. So, along with the plan was a zoning ordinance.

The city had traffic problems. So, it had to plan the streets as well as the land uses. And the city had to plan for the schools and parks and fire stations the people would need, too. So, the plan included these community facilities.

To make sure the new homes people bought had streets and utilities and large enough lot sizes, the plan included subdivision regulations.

And because the city couldn't afford all the new schools and fire stations it needed at once, the plan included a public improvements program to tell which community facilities the city would build first. The city was growing so fast, the plan had to cover not just the next five years, but the next twenty.

Now, the comprehensive community plan, as required under the Workable Program, has these six parts:

1) Land use plan
2) Major street plan
3) Community facilities plan
4) Zoning ordinance
5) Subdivision regulations
6) Public Improvements Program

The land use, street, and community facilities plans are based on studies of the population and the economy of your community. Some comprehensive plans also include a housing study or neighborhood analyses. Some plans also include an annexation study. Your city, county, state, or metropolitan planning agency can use urban planning assistance (701) grants (Table I) to help pay for preparing your comprehensive community plan.

Your city government has to adopt the zoning ordinance and the subdivision regulations as law. The zoning ordinance tells which land, by zone or district, you can use for a single family home, a duplex, an apartment, a retail store, a warehouse, a cleaners, a factory, a school, a park, or a farm. The zoning ordinance also tells you how much of your property you can build on, how far back from the street, side and back of the lot, and how high your building can be. And the zoning ordinance tells you how many parking spaces, on and off the street, you must have. The zoning ordinance doesn't tell whether you can build with brick or wood; that's in the building code.

The subdivision regulations tell you what size lot, layout of lot, streets, sidewalks, sewers, curbs and gutters, and utilities you have to have.

Your city council uses its police power to enforce the zoning ordinance and the subdivision regulations. First, your planning commission reviews subdivisions. Then they are approved by your city council. And your planning commission or zoning commission, if you have one, reviews petitions to amend the zoning ordinance. For example, a person may want to build a carwash in a residential zone. Then, the decision whether to amend the zoning ordinance for this person is up to the city council.

Under the Workable Program, your city may or may not adopt the other four parts of the plan, since the land use plan, major street plan, community facilities plan, and public improvements program don't have to become law. Your city may adopt an official map that shows where future streets will go. Your city uses the public improvements program to make a six-year capital improvements budget and, from that budget, your city adopts its annual operating budget.

FEDERAL COVERAGE OF EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

There are two ways the Federal Government prohibits discrimination in Federally-aided housing: 1) President's Executive Order No. 11063, EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING and 2) Title VI of The Civil Rights Act of 1964.

TABLE III. FEDERAL COVERAGE OF EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Executive Order	Title VI	not covered
HOUSING OWNED OR OPERATED BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT, e.g., FHA- and VA-acquired properties (repossessed).	Also covers housing owned or operated by the Federal Government.	FHA and VA housing that is one- or two-family owner-occupied before foreclosure (repossession) or after foreclosure by lender but before Federal government has acquired title to the property. Lenders benefitting from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation: (conventional housing loans by) savings and loan associations, commercial banks, and mutual savings banks. Even if Federal coverage were extended to FOIC and FSLIC lenders, the following lenders would still not be covered: (Conventional housing loans by) insurance companies pensions funds, non-financial corporations, and individuals.
HOUSING PROVIDED FEDERALLY INSURED OR GUARANTEED LOANS, e.g., FHA-insured and VA guaranteed housing except one- or two-family owner-occupied, after Nov. 20, 1962. This covers builders and developers who sell to FHA and VA buyers, and home financing institutions making FHA and VA loans (mostly mortgage bankers).	Does not cover FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed housing.
HOUSING PROVIDED ON FEDERALLY-ASSISTED URBAN RENEWAL PROPERTY after Nov. 20, 1962: This covers local urban renewal agencies (LPA's). This does not cover conventionally financed private builders.	Covers urban renewal property after Jan. 3, 1965, including conventionally financed private builders in urban renewal areas.
HOUSING AIDED BY FEDERAL LOANS, GRANTS, ADVANCES, OR CONTRIBUTIONS (SUBSIDIES), e.g., public housing, college housing, senior citizens housing, after Nov. 20, 1962. Agencies of HUD are supposed to end discrimination in existing Federally-aided housing by using their good offices and other action permitted by law.	Covers existing public housing, as well as new public housing, college housing, senior citizens housing.

Many people think the Civil Rights Act prohibits discrimination in the sale, rental, or use of FHA-insured or VA guaranteed housing. It does not. Title VI excludes Federal programs involving a contract of insurance or guaranty. But the Executive Order does cover FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed housing (except one- or two-family owner occupied).

Besides housing, Title VI also covers Federal programs that affect your neighborhood, including loan and grant programs of the Community Facilities Administration and non-housing facilities in urban renewal projects. However, Title VI does not prohibit discrimination in the Urban Planning Assistance Program (701) or in the selection of public housing or urban renewal project sites. You have some protection on project sites, though, since the Housing Assistance Administration and the Urban Renewal Administration review project sites for their possible impact on minority groups.

Anyone who suffers discrimination in a Federally-aided housing or neighborhood program--whether covered by Title VI or by the Executive Order--complains to the agency within HUD that administers the program. Suppose your local housing authority denies you admission to public housing because of your race. You send a written complaint to the Housing Assistance Administration (HAA). HAA lets you know they have received your complaint. Then HAA checks with your housing authority and tries to persuade them to admit you, if you are qualified to live in public housing, of course. If your housing authority still refuses to admit you, even though they have a vacancy, your housing authority gets a hearing. If they have violated Title VI, then HAA notifies the appropriate congressional committees. After thirty days, HAA cuts off Federal funds to your housing authority.

Another thing the Housing Assistance Administration could do in the example above is refer the violation of Title VI to the Department of Justice for legal action. If you suffer discrimination under an FHA-insured or VA-guaranteed program, the violation is covered by the Executive Order only. But your complain procedure is the same as under Title VI, and the sanctions of the Federal agencies are the same. The only difference is that FHA or VA would not have to contact congressional committees before cutting off a builder or a lender from FHA or VA benefits. Under the Executive Order, FHA or VA could also refer violations to the Justice Department.

Federal coverage of equal housing opportunity, including existing and new public housing, FHA and VA-aided housing (after Nov. 20, 1962), FHA and VA-acquired properties, senior citizens housing, and other Federally-aided housing, amounts to less than 3 percent of our total housing supply in the United States. Also, "the rate at which we are now increasing nondiscrimination coverage of the total housing supply is only 1/2 of 1 percent annually."*

PROGRAMS THAT A COMMUNITY ACTION COMMITTEE CAN USE

Is there a Community Action Program (War on Poverty) in your county? If so, your Community Action Committee can use funds from the Office of Economic Opportunity for better homes and neighborhoods. Here are a few of the ways you can use your Community Action Program for better housing:

I. To help people improve their homes
   A. Home management services to help low income families with budgeting, food preparation, sewing, decorating, and care of the home.
   B. Assistance to families from rural areas in meeting problems of urban living.
   C. Money for materials for home repair.
   D. Training unemployed people in rehabilitation skills.

II. To help people improve their neighborhoods
   A. Junior inspectors to help your city enforce the housing code.
   B. Neighborhood Youth Corps enrollees to work on beautification projects.
   C. VISTA's (Volunteers in Service to America) to do housing surveys and help out generally with housing problems.
   D. Work-Study students to serve as community service aides.

III. To help people move to better housing
   A. Relocation assistance to low income families living in substandard housing outside of urban renewal areas and families who couldn't find public housing to meet their needs.
   B. Development of cooperative organizations to plan housing rehabilitation and construction for low income families.
   C. Consumer counseling for low income families.
   D. Legal services in low income areas.

Community Action Programs for better housing are limited only by your imagination. In addition, your Community Action Agency can work with your housing authority to help make low-rent public housing a stepping-stone for low income families. And your Community Action Program can tie in with urban renewal activities, as well. (See the sections in Part II on Relocation Assistance and on Coordination with anti-poverty programs.)

DEMONSTRATION CITIES

While the 1966 Demonstration Cities bill was still before Congress, a radio announcer remarked that the bill was not for cities that had had demonstrations. Rather, the bill was a proposal for cities to "demonstrate" ways to rebuild large slum and blighted areas and to provide the public facilities and services necessary to improve the general welfare of the people who live and work in these areas.

A city's demonstration program uses all available Federal aids (not only from HUD, but also from Office of Economic Opportunity, Department of Labor, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Bureau of Public Roads, Bureau of Outdoor Recreation, and others) as well as local private and public resources to improve a whole neighborhood.

If your city is chosen by HUD for a demonstration program, your city can get grants for 80% of your city's share of the cost of its Federal programs. For example, your city may be paying one-third of the cost of an urban renewal project. The amount of demonstration cities money your city can get would be 80% of your city's one-third share of the project cost.

HUD tells you which Federal programs your city can include in your demonstration program. Then, you add up your city's share of the cost of all those Federal programs. Your demonstration cities grant, then, is 80% of your city's share of your Federal aid programs.

But once you figure out how much the demonstration grant is, your city doesn't have to spend the grant on those Federal programs. Not at all. In fact, the first thing your city does is figure out what new or existing nonfederally assisted programs it wants. You can use all the money for these nonfederal programs if you want to, so long as HUD approves the programs as part of your demonstration cities plan. Here's what some of those programs might be:

grants for rehabilitation of multifamily structures revolving fund for purchase and rehabilitation of housing increased level of garbage collection police-community relations program training unemployed in rehabilitation skills additional "Head Start" activities beyond what is available from Community Action Program improving and equipping neighborhood playgrounds

There's a second kind of grant your city uses under the demonstration cities program. That is a grant of up to 80 percent to administer the demonstration program. But you can't use these grants to administer the Federal programs you already have.

And there's a third kind of grant. This is a grant of up to 80 percent of the cost of making your city's plan for your demonstration program. All three grants go to your city's demonstration agency, chosen by your city government.

What if your city doesn't have a demonstration program? How, then, can the program benefit you? In two ways: first, you can keep an eye on the city nearest you that has a demonstration program. You can see whether your neighbor city is able to help the people in the slum area get not only decent low-cost housing, but also the health, education, employment, transportation, and recreation facilities and services they need. You can see whether there is widespread citizen participation in the program and whether residents of the slum area are employed in the demonstration cities program. You can benefit from the successes and failures of your neighbor city.

Second, if you live in a metropolitan area, you may have a "metropolitan expediter." This person can assist your community with information on Federal programs and on demonstration programs in other cities. This person might especially help with the need for low-cost housing not only in your own city, but among the several cities in your metropolitan area.

The demonstration cities program and the metropolitan expediter are two of many provisions of the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966, signed into law by the President on November 3, 1966.*

AGENCIES TO WRITE FOR INFORMATION

- If you want general information on Federal housing and neighborhood programs, write:

  Department of Housing and Urban Development
  Washington, D. C. 20410

  If you want information on a particular program of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) or an agency within HUD, such as Community Facilities Administration (CFA), Housing Assistance Administration (HAA), or Urban Renewal Administration (URA) write to the agency at the HUD regional office.

  If you live in Virginia, write:

  (the agency within HUD, or, just HUD)
  Region II
  Widener Building
  Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19107

  If you live in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, or Tennessee, write:

  (the agency)
  Region III
  Peachtree-Seventh Building
  Atlanta, Georgia 30323

  If you live in Arkansas, Louisiana, or Texas write:

  (the agency)
  Region V
  300 W. Vickery Boulevard
  Fort Worth, Texas 76104

  For the address of the FHA insuring office serving you, write your FHA regional office. FHA also has field offices. A field office is a kind of branch insuring office, except the field office can't approve lenders or loans or handle discrimination complaints. The field office does accept FHA applications, though, and does inspect property.

- You may want information on some Federal programs not covered in this booklet:

  In the Community Facilities Administration:

Advance Acquisition of Land
Advances for Public Works Planning
College Housing Program
Grants for Basic Water and Sewer Facilities
Public Facility Loans

In the Federal Housing Administration:
Mortgage Insurance for Nursing Homes
Home Mortgage Insurance in areas of violence or civil disorders (new program)
221(d)(3) assistance in buying low-cost rehabilitated homes (new program)
Mortgage Insurance for new communities (new program)
Mortgage Insurance for group practice facilities (new program for doctors, dentists, and optometrists)

In the Urban Renewal Administration:
Urban Renewal Service (technical assistance to cities and publications for the general public)

In Housing and Urban Development:
Community Development Training Program (Title VIII, Housing Act of 1964) for public officials Preservation of Historic Structures (new program)
Urban Information and Technical Assistance (new program)
Metropolitan Expediters (new program)
"Incentive" Planning Grants (new program)

And in the Farmers Home Administration, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. 20250:
Financial Assistance to Small Towns and Rural Groups Housing for Senior Citizens
Loans for Farm Labor Housing
Loans for Recreational Purposes
Rural Housing Loans
Rural Renewal Loans to Public Agencies
Direct Housing Loans for purchase of newly constructed homes (new program)

And Director, Division of Adult Education Programs, Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, D. C. 20202:
Community Service and Continuing Education Programs (Title I, Higher Education Act of 1965) for citizen groups and universities

- For general information on War on Poverty Programs, write:

You may also write the Office of Economic Opportunity serving your region.

If you live in North Carolina or Virginia, write:

Community Action Program
Office of Economic Opportunity
Region II
1156 - 15th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20506

If you live in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, or Tennessee, write:

Community Action Program
Office of Economic Opportunity
Region III
101 Marietta Street
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

If you live in Arkansas, Louisiana, or Texas, write:

Community Action Program
Office of Economic Opportunity
Region V
314 West 11th Street
Austin, Texas 78701

- For information on programs of the Small Business Administration, write:

Small Business Administration
Washington, D. C. 20416

The Small Business Administration also has offices in the following cities:

Birmingham, Alabama; Little Rock, Arkansas; Jacksonville and Miami, Florida; Atlanta, Georgia; New Orleans, Louisiana; Jackson, Mississippi; Charlotte, North Carolina; Columbia, South Carolina; Nashville and Knoxville, Tennessee; Dallas, Houston, Lubbock, Marshall, and San Antonio, Texas; and Richmond, Virginia.

STATE ASSISTANCE FOR COMMUNITY IMPROVEMENT

Most states help their cities and counties with programs for better homes and neighborhoods. There are many ways states can provide this help: 1) enabling legislation for planning, public housing, urban renewal, and codes and ordinances; 2) help in applying for Federal aids; 3) money to supplement Federal aid programs; 4) help in preparing comprehensive plans, budgets, codes, and other elements of the Workable Program; 5) training for local public officials; and 6) community education for citizens.

States can use Federal aids to help pay for assistance to communities: the Urban Planning Assistance Program (701), Urban Renewal Demonstration Program (314), and other programs.

For small communities that can't provide basic city services, here's how your state can help:*

1) develop accounting and budget system; 2) suggest how to augment existing revenue program through such revenues as an occupational tax, a fee charge for refuse collection, a parking fee and a property tax re-evaluation; 3) joint city-county agreements for such activities as sanitation, road improvements, and code enforcement; 4) consolidation with a neighboring city for public housing; 5) establish an area planning agency to plan for a group of communities; and 6) utilize Federal and state loans and grants in such areas as the accelerated public works program, community facility loans and advances, and area redevelopment assistance.

For communities that can provide city services but don't want to use codes and ordinances, here's what your state can do:

1) assist the citizens advisory committee to become the motivating force in the community; 2) provide information to citizen groups; 3) arrange for meetings to discuss the issues of code enforcement openly, in the hopes of changing community attitudes.

* This section is based on Commonwealth and Community, The Kentucky Program of State Assistance for Community Improvement, Division of Planning and Zoning, Department of Commerce, Commonwealth of Kentucky.

And for communities that can provide city services and want to use codes and ordinances but need assistance, your state can do these things:

> 1) provide resource personnel to the advisory committees; 2) train the local codes inspectors; 3) start an urban renewal project; 4) help carry out the comprehensive plan; 5) prepare a capital budget; and 6) develop housing facilities to meet specific needs of minority families and senior citizens.

In addition, your state can hold state-wide meetings to get communities interested in housing and neighborhood improvement, regional meetings to explain an element of the Workable Program, sub-regional workshops to help communities with a common problem, such as code enforcement, and training institutes for housing, code enforcement, and renewal officials.

Finally, your state can be a resource center of information not only on state and Federal programs, but also on how to get qualified officials and consultants for your community and on how to organize associations of planning and redevelopment officials.

CITY HUMAN RELATIONS COMMISSION

This section of the booklet lists programs and activities that a city human relations commission, biracial committee, or whatever it's called in your city, can undertake for open housing and neighborhood improvement. But more important than the programs and activities is the approach, or philosophy, of the human relations commission.

The philosophy of the city human relations commission should be this: 1) the programs of the commission will pass, as soon as possible, from the commission to a permanent department of city government; and 2) community leaders will be involved at all times in planning, carrying out, and evaluating these programs.

The commission can measure part of its success, then, by the programs it passes on to city government departments, such as enforcement of a city open occupancy ordinance by a commission. But behind the government departments, programs, and ordinances, must be the commitment of community leaders, a favorable climate of public opinion, and cooperation of the people directly involved in open housing, that is, the lenders, developers, builders, and real estate agents.

There should be no need to remind a human relations commission of the futility of only waiting until problems become drastic before taking action. Beyond that limited approach, the commission must seek to have its activities become part of permanent local government and must involve community leaders in its programs. Community leaders come not only from local government, business, religious groups, and social welfare agencies, but also from civil rights and equal opportunity organizations, such as the Urban League, National Conference of Christians and Jews, American Civil Liberties Union, Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), and the American Friends Service Committee.

Here, now, are some activities and programs a city human relations commission with a budget, continuing membership, and professional staff can undertake for housing and neighborhood improvement:

1. Neighborhood Councils. Also called Community Councils, these groups help people in neighborhoods communicate their needs to city government. These councils can be especially helpful when a neighborhood is changing in racial composition. The rest of the time the councils work for better schools, recreation, and cultural programs to make their neighborhoods more attractive and livable.

   The city human relations commission can organize these neighborhood councils and get schools, churches, social agencies, and civic leaders involved in neighborhood improvement programs.

2. Direct efforts:

   --meeting with real estate agents to discuss the need to give Negroes free choice in buying or renting property any place in the city.

--recommend that "block-busting" for the purpose of promoting panic selling be included among the unethical practices for which real estate licenses may be revoked by the state real estate board.

--recommend that mayor and city council pass an ordinance that would provide for open occupancy in private housing.

--efforts to make assignment of tenants to public housing on the basis of availability and applicant choice.

--curtailment of panic selling on a block in the city after a Negro family moves in.

--end of listing or publicizing of any racial restrictions on property for sale or rent.

3. Efforts to promote and encourage:

--organization and development of block clubs for neighborhood improvement.

--door-to-door surveys to gain information and enlist citizen support of block clubs and neighborhood projects.

--a thorough program of code enforcement to be carried out by inspectors from city departments.

--"housing clinics," to which tenants, landlords, and developers can turn for advice on improving homes.

--recruitment of a corps of retired persons to serve as consultants on construction and finance problems.

--a continuous project of neighborhood beautification.

--communication and cooperation in the solution of neighborhood problems of all kinds.

--raising the educational and cultural level of the poor through closer cooperation between the schools and the social, recreational, and health agencies.

4. Other recommendations:

--support of state level fair housing legislation as well as local.

--seek commitment of real estate agents and organizations to implement freedom of choice in housing.

--Recommend improvements in the appearance of public housing; scattered sites for new projects; use of leased-housing without regard to the racial composition of the neighborhood; programs for participation by tenants in community life.

--ask cooperation of welfare department in helping recipients find good housing in any neighborhood, regardless of race, and in reporting discriminatory practices of real estate brokers.

--ask same cooperation from relocation agency under the city's urban renewal program.

--recommend that lenders provide equal service and lend mortgage money to all qualified families, without regard to race, for the purchase of housing in any neighborhood they desire.

--ask expressed commitment by leaders of organized religious communities to the principle of open housing.

--ask support by businessmen, bankers, planning commissions, and labor unions for fair housing, including education of members of their organizations on the importance to them of fair housing.

--provide for a board of leaders from government, business, industry, religion, real estate, labor, the civil rights movement, and the news media to hold conferences on fair housing problems, prepare fair housing legislation, and evaluate other public and private fair housing programs.

5. Other programs to recommend to the city government:

--social development program for rural immigrants.

--model school in the slums.

--property tax revision study.

--public policy against discrimination.

URBAN RENEWAL NEIGHBORHOOD ORGANIZATION

Even before people start to take part in the city's plans for improving their homes and neighborhoods, the city officials can adopt certain attitudes so that their plans will really be for those people most directly affected by them.

The director of an urban renewal agency, for example, can take attitudes like these:

--My agency will emphasize involving the residents of the urban renewal area continuously in all phases of renewal activity.

--The plan for my urban renewal project will be based on the suggestions of the city's planning department and the suggestions coming from many conferences and discussions I will have with representatives from the urban renewal area.

--Of major importance to the urban renewal project will be the participation of an organized, representative citizens' group, or, neighborhood organization from the urban renewal area.

--My agency will provide for continuous review of the urban renewal plan, as it is carried out, by working with interested groups and community organizations to respond to changing conditions in the urban renewal area.

Along with these attitudes, the urban renewal director can take measures to carry out the citizen participation and involvement he's talking about. Here's what he can do:

--Hire a community organization specialist* to work closely with the various organizations that serve the urban renewal area and win their support for the project.

--Canvass the urban renewal area to try to get both homeowners and tenants to form a neighborhood organization, an organization that can learn about the urban renewal project, comment on and criticize the plan, set goals for the urban renewal project, and help shape the kind of neighborhood the people want to live in.

* Such persons as social workers or teachers can fill this position

--Prepare a slide talk for larger business and civic clubs in the city to show why the project area needs renewal, what the city can do about it, how much the renewal will cost, and how the area could look after it is renewed.

--Assist a subcommittee of the neighborhood organization, or, citizens' group in evaluating which homes in the project area can be repaired or rehabilitated and describe in detail the standards for sound housing.

--Meet with city departments and Federal officials whose programs might be used by the residents of the urban renewal area.

--Encourage the various organizations serving the renewal area to get together to support the urban renewal project and to say they support it at public hearings held by the city council.

What are the benefits of the urban renewal neighborhood organization? The benefits to the city are time and expense saved in acquiring property, in getting owners to comply with city codes, in winning approval from the general public for a neighborhood so interested in self-improvement, and in speedily eliminating slums and blight from the city and increasing the tax base.

The benefits to the residents of the urban renewal area are a sense of dignity and individual worth from participating in their government and setting goals for their project -- a feeling that makes for pride of home and upkeep of neighborhood. These are examples of goals that might come from citizen participation: a residential neighborhood for families of varying income; retaining all residential buildings that can be brought up to standard; changing the appearance of unsightly public utilities; and the recommendation that all redevelopment in the area be carried out under the sponsorship of organizations serving the renewal area.

RELOCATION ASSISTANCE

Even before a public agency undertakes a program for better housing, that agency can solicit the cooperation of other agencies whose programs have a bearing on the success of any effort for housing improvement.

The relocation officials for a city's urban renewal program, for example, can help displaced families not only by finding them decent housing, but also by helping the families with the other needs they have to meet in order to keep up their new housing. A family or individual may not know about social security or a pension fund he's entitled to. A mother may not know about welfare benefits or health or family planning assistance. A high school dropout may need a job to be able to buy a pair of shoes, so that he won't be ashamed to go to school. A father may need job training so that he can support his family. A couple may need a marriage license to be eligible to live in public housing. An aspiring homeowner may need help in getting a mortgage loan.

Relocation officials can begin their program by visiting the local social security, welfare, health, and employment offices, informing them of their plans, and asking their cooperation in helping displaced families.

The relocation assistant, working from a site office in the urban renewal area, begins "in the street." He walks around the neighborhood, says hello, gets to know the people in the area and win their trust. He explains how the people will be able to find a decent house. He may make a survey of the educational level of the residents and, seeing the need, may start an adult education class right in the site office. He'll tell mothers about a Head Start preschool program for their children. Or he may ask the city for a daycare center to free mothers for work.

Beyond cooperating with other public agencies to help displaced families, relocation officials can also seek help from private groups. The Salvation Army may provide clothing for needy families. Boy Scouts may pass out circulars announcing a neighborhood meeting. Church groups may supply toys for needy children at Christmas. This, then, is how relocation assistance can work.

COORDINATION WITH ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAMS

Even before a local government starts to consider the needs of its citizens for better housing, that government can also consider the needs of those citizens for jobs, job training, and education as well.

Day care, adult education, Manpower Development and Training, On-the-Job Training, Neighborhood Youth Corps, vocational training, Head Start, Upward Bound--these are the kinds of programs that can attack some of the worst causes of slums and blight, the poverty of the residents.

Anti-poverty and other Federal aid programs can go together in a community to make urban renewal and housing programs a success. Neighborhood organization can get residents involved; relocation assistance can help residents take advantage of existing community resources; but a program that sets out from the start to meet all the needs of its citizens promises the most lasting results and the best return on the city's investment in its people.

A successful program for housing and neighborhood improvement requires:

A coordinator for all of the Federal and local programs the city is using.

An intensive program of public education: citywide meetings, neighborhood meetings, newsletter, newspaper publicity, and community education in the schools, if possible.

Involving the elected city officials, public and private agencies, community leaders, and minority groups in the plans and programs.

Such a program, using as many as possible Federal, local, and private resources with a central coordinator and broad citizen involvement is the model for the Demonstration Cities Program authorized by Congress.

NEIGHBORHOOD ORGANIZATION

What is a neighborhood organization?

Who organizes it?

What is a neighborhood organization concerned with?

How does it act?

What is a neighborhood organization?

A neighborhood organization is a group of citizens involved in their government. The organization covers a small geographical area where as few as 100 or as many as several thousand people live. The members of the organization represent the different kinds of people living in the neighborhood--such as the businessmen, the teachers, and the civic leaders. The organization serves any or all of the physical and social needs of the people in the neighborhood.

A neighborhood organization differs from a private social welfare agency in that the members are helping themselves rather than receiving help. Unlike a community council that only communicates between local government agencies and people in the neighborhood, the neighborhood organization goes on to give its support to needed local government programs or to take direct action to demand the local programs or services it needs.

A neighborhood organization is very much like a citizens housing association, or citizens renewal council. The main difference is geographical, since the citizens housing association covers not just a neighborhood, but the whole city. A second difference is that the citizens housing association may be interested in housing and in overall planning but not in a specific school program, for example. The neighborhood organization could be interested in a specific school program as well as housing programs, neighborhood planning, and many other community needs.

A neighborhood organization differs from a fair housing committee in that the committee is mainly interested in equally available housing, equal city services, and racially inclusive neighborhoods, but not necessarily in neighborhood planning or new kinds of social services. However, many fair housing committees grow into neighborhood organizations and, after doing so, find they can do more for equal housing opportunity than they could before.

Who organizes it?

Who is responsible for organizing a neighborhood, anyway? Whose job is it to see that citizens are involved and truly represented in their government? Is it the responsibility of housing, planning, and renewal officials? We know they are capable. But these officials have to answer to the elected officials who pass the laws and pay for the programs. So, aren't the elected officials really responsible? But the elected officials get support for their programs from the people. So, must not the people demand neighborhood organization by the local government? Yet, to demand neighborhood organization by local government, the people need to be organized in the first place, if they are to be heard.

How about the church? Isn't there a moral obligation for the church to help people improve themselves and their neighborhood? What about labor unions? They're experienced in organization and direct action. And what about the civic clubs that have traditionally helped to improve the quality of local government?

Any of these people or institutions can be responsible for organizing a neighborhood. Who ought to be responsible? You ought to. Any citizen who's concerned about his government and his neighborhood ought to feel responsible for organizing his neighborhood. Community groups like churches, labor unions, civil rights groups or human relations councils, are especially good at it.

Others who can organize a neighborhood include local government, through urban renewal (as in Part II), anti-poverty programs, a city human relations commission, or a voter registration project; university urban extension; an existing citizen group that serves a larger area or different purpose; or a few interested and informed individuals.

- What is a neighborhood organization concerned with?

Generally, the neighborhood organization is concerned with the quality of the neighborhood, both the physical environment and the social services.

The particular issue of a neighborhood organization depends on what the neighborhood needs. It might be the need for better garbage pickup or removing junk cars, paving the street or putting in sewers, or changing the zoning to keep a gas station out. It might be neighborhood planning that is needed, more adequate housing, a recreation center, or better school programs. Or the neighborhood organization might be concerned with a program of city government, such as urban renewal.

One very common issue for a neighborhood organization is housing code enforcement. In fact, the way the housing code is enforced is such an important issue that a community group may have its own program to deal with code enforcement before beginning a program of neighborhood organization. (See Part Four)

- How does it act?

How does the neighborhood organization go after the physical and social services and programs it needs? There are at least four popular methods: First is the community agency approach. The neighborhood organization gets both public and private agencies to offer experimental programs in homemaking, education, housing, and relocation. This method stresses individual self-improvement.

A second way for a neighborhood organization to get the programs and services it needs is to try working in close cooperation with local government agencies through community councils. Urban extension, a third method, helps the neighborhood organization cooperate with local government and also provides professional assistance to the residents to help them plan the programs they want. A fourth method--you might just call it a militant approach--for a neighborhood organization includes using professional help and direct action, such as a march to city hall, to get the programs the people need.

The four methods overlap, as you can see, and each has its merits. People who want to improve their neighborhoods need to show self-improvement, but they also need professional help to get community improvements. Neighborhood organizations need to work cooperatively with local government and support its programs. But where cooperation doesn't bring results, direct action can be essential.

Whatever method a neighborhood organization uses, it needs three things: strength, money, and facts. An organization needs to be strong, strong enough to hold regular meetings with planned programs, adopt bylaws, elect officers, and deal with the issues that people are most concerned with. The organization needs money, money for speakers, consultants, publications, and, if at all possible, professional staff. Most important, the neighborhood organization needs facts, facts to avoid mistakes and to win support for the programs it wants.

NONPROFIT HOUSING

Churches, labor unions, and other community groups with substantial financial backing are, more and more today, sponsoring new and rehabilitated rental and cooperative housing for low and moderate income families.

Besides getting housing built, community groups often accomplish other things while they are sponsoring nonprofit housing projects, for example, new community center facilities; job training and employment of neighborhood people in the construction; better public schools in the neighborhood; beautification and new recreation areas; and a change in the community's segregated housing patterns.

The Federal Housing Administration insures 100% mortgage loans for low-and moderate-income housing under section 221(d)(3) at market interest rates and below market interest rates. Section 221(d)(3) also provides for rent supplements for certain low income families and a new experimental program to assist low-income families in buying rehabilitated homes. Tenants can buy membership in cooperative projects. Rent supplement tenants can buy membership in cooperatives, too, or get a lease with an option to purchase an individual unit in the 221(d)(3) project.

What does substantial backing mean for a nonprofit sponsor? For a one million dollar housing project, for example, a nonprofit sponsor would have to be able to raise $40,000 to $50,000. This is seed money. It goes for FHA application fees, legal fees, organizational expenses, engineering and architectural drawings, and other development expenses. After the FHA mortgage loan comes through, the nonprofit sponsor can recover his seed money.

If you belong to a nonprofit organization that wants to sponsor a housing project, your organization has to be approved by FHA. You fill out the forms at your FHA insuring office. You'll need a housing consultant to help you choose the land to build on, your builder, architect, and attorney, and the size your project should be. The city you build in has to have a Workable Program. Your plans for the housing project, the costs, the construction and labor, the rent you charge, and the management you provide all have to be approved by FHA.

Housing projects built with FHA-insured mortgage loans have to be rented on an open occupancy basis. Besides providing this open occupancy housing themselves, community groups can also make a program of getting real estate agents to cooperate in renting and selling housing on an open occupancy basis.

MARKET AREA AGREEMENTS

Builders and developers often claim that if they sell or rent to Negroes, they will lose sales or rentals to whites. The Commission on Race and Housing report, Property Values and Race, and the Housing and Home Finance Agency (now the Department of Housing and Urban Development) case studies on Equal Opportunity in Housing show this is not so.

The fears of builders and developers, nevertheless, are real. Where Negroes are ready to buy or rent in an all-white neighborhood or in similar developments across the city, there is something builders and developers can do to protect themselves against the loss of sales they fear. Through the market area agreement, builders and developers agree to sell or rent without regard to race. That way, no builder will be at a competitive disadvantage for selling to Negroes. No other builder of a similar development can steal his customers by advertising racial restrictions. No single builder will be flooded with Negro applicants.

Where Negroes are able and interested in buying or renting in white developments and where a community group is interested in working with and educating builders and developers, the market area agreement can be useful in providing for open housing.

Community groups will want to interest builders and developers, as well as real estate agents, in supporting fair housing legislation. For many builders won't consider market area agreements until they also have the protection of the law.

At the same time, community groups can seek the cooperation of lending institutions in making housing and home repair loans available on equal terms to all qualified applicants. One way to interest lenders, real estate agents, and builders in open housing is through housing centers. With their cooperation, the centers can help Negroes find suitable housing and encourage them to make use of new housing opportunities.

Still another effort of community groups for open housing can be finding landowners who are willing to sell or subdivide land and lots that will be available on an open occupancy basis.

PROPERTY ASSESSMENT PROCEDURES*

People have named many causes for the poor housing and slum neighborhoods in our cities; the unemployment, lack of education, and poverty of the residents; the blockbusting tactics of real estate agents; the "writing off" of neighborhoods by home mortgage lenders; the failure of the housing industry to build enough low-cost housing; the limited role of community groups in providing needed housing; the failure of the city government to provide needed services and facilities or to enforce the housing code; and local tax policies that make slums profitable to their landlords.

Property tax assessment, along with strict enforcement of the housing code, can't hit all the causes of poor housing, but it can take the profit out of slums.

There are three ways a tax assessor decides on the value of property for tax purposes: 1) comparative sales: the assessor sees what price similar property in the area has been sold for; 2) replacement cost less depreciation; the assessor figures the cost of building a new structure and then subtracts from that price a certain amount (depreciation) according to how old the building is that he's assessing; and 3) capitalization of income, or income return: the assessor decides the value of the property by how much income the owner makes on his investment. Assessors generally use a combination of the first and second methods on residential property and a combination of the second and third methods on commercial and industrial property.

Slum property is profitable because the owner makes practically 100% return on his investment. The landlord collects modest rents but spends little or nothing on the building. So, the rents he collects are nearly all profit. The tax assessor figures the value of the property using the replacement cost method, since he doesn't have comparative sales to go by in slum areas. Since the cost of replacing the slum building, minus depreciation for its age, is very low, the assessed valuation, and hence, the property tax, is very low.

What happens if the city enforces the housing code on this property? The owner may just decide to let the building stand empty. But if he does repair it to standard, then the value of the property goes up, and so does the tax. The landlord is penalized for improving his building!

There is another way to assess the value of slum property: the capitalization of income method. This is the method used when the city buys slum property in urban renewal areas. Slum landlords like this method under urban renewal, because that way they get the most for their property.

If the tax assessor used the capitalization of income method (combined with the replacement cost method) on all slum property, here's what would happen. The property value would be high, based on the income return of the landlord. A front foot value would be set for a whole slum area. Then, a bad building would be taxed almost as much as a good building. There would be a very slight tax increase for building improvements, but not enough to discourage landlords. It would be easier to get landlords to comply with the housing code, since an improved building would bring in higher rentals with little change in taxes.

At this point, you might be wondering what would happen to the tenants of buildings where the rent went up. Remember two things: 1) the landlord can only charge rents that the market will bear, that is, that people are able and willing to pay; and 2) many slum residents would not mind paying a higher rental, if only their landlord would fix up the building.

Community groups interested in getting the property assessment procedures changed may have to be prepared to go to court and present their arguments to the judge and may have to work for an amendment to change the State constitution. But as a beginning, community groups can make the public aware of this opportunity to take the profit out of slums.

NEIGHBORHOOD STABILIZATION

Community groups, voluntary citizen movements, and fair housing committees can work for stable and good, biracial neighborhoods. Two publications of the Southern Regional Council's Urban Planning Project describe in detail the steps you can take in your community: 1) Neighborhood Stabilization: A Program, by Mrs. Jerry Dell Gimarc, and 2) NEIGHBORHOODS Where Human Rights Begin, by Mrs. Margaret Price.

The main points of a successful neighborhood stabilization program include these: 1) inform neighborhood residents, person to person, of how they stand to lose by panic selling and organize them to stand fast against real estate speculators; 2) put every volunteer to work; 3) work to attract white buyers to the neighborhood; 4) seek favorable publicity for the neighborhood; and 5) pressure lenders to make home loans available in the neighborhood.

In addition, community groups will want to try to get the best possible city services and facilities. Good school programs are especially important to the neighborhood. Community groups will also want to educate their membership on the moral necessity of an open community, to urge members to sell or rent housing without racial restriction, and to work for peaceful acceptance and welcome of Negro families when they move to the neighborhood.

Your RIGHTS IN FEDERAL PROGRAMS

FHA mortgage insurance

public housing urban renewal

urban planning assistance

What are your rights under FHA mortgage insurance programs?

- Let's say a builder puts up a subdivision of homes. He uses conventional financing to pay for building the houses. He builds the houses to meet FHA minimum property standards. Then the builder sells the houses to people who will pay for their homes with FHA-insured loans. Can the builder discriminate against you in the sale of his houses, since he didn't use FHA financing to build the houses?

No.

- Can an FHA-approved lender refuse to make you an FHA-insured housing loan on account of your race, color, creed, or national origin?

No.

Note: You have to have good credit and enough steady income to afford the house you're buying. Wife's income can count toward total family income if the wife has a permanent job.

- Say you have a new house you bought with an FHA-insured mortgage loan. You live in the house six months, and you find out the roof leaks. Will FHA help you get the building contractor to repair this flaw?

Yes.

Note: Before you buy a house, check with your FHA insuring office to find out what flaws in the building FHA can help you with. If you damage the house yourself, FHA can't help you.

- How do you make a complaint if you suffer discrimination under an FHA program?

1. Write your FHA insuring office for an FHA Form 797. That's the complaint form. You don't have to use this form, but you'll save time if you do, since the form tells what information you need to give FHA.

   The FHA Form 797 asks you for the date: your name and address and phone number; the name, address, and phone number of the alleged violator (the person you believe discriminated against you), any employees or salesmen involved, and any witnesses; FHA Case number, if there is one; the name of the subdivision and location of the house or apartment involved; the place where the discrimination took place; and the date of the discrimination; a complete statement of your complaint; and your signature.

2. The Director of your Insuring Office has to take care of your complaint. If you wrote to the wrong Insuring Office, the Director must still tell you he received your complaint. Then he sends your complaint to the right Insuring Office for you.

3. Two days after he gets your complaint, your Insuring Office Director writes you. He says he received your complaint and may ask you for more information. The Director sends copies of your letter and his letter answering you to a Zone Director and to the FHA Intergroup Relations Service, the Assistant to the Commissioner.

   The Director can't show your complaint letter to anyone outside of FHA.

4. If it looks, from your complaint, as if the Executive Order has been violated, the Director gets information about your complaint right away. If, then, it still looks as if there has been a violation, the Director writes the alleged violator a letter and tells him what the complaint is. The violator has 10 days to meet with the Director and talk about the discrimination. When they meet, the Director tries to get the violator to stop discriminating by a certain time. The length of time is up to the Director.

5. If the violator didn't meet with the Director in 10 days or if he denied the discrimination, the Director can hold a hearing. After the hearing, or if the violator keeps discriminating past his time limit, then the Director can take action. The Director can cancel any contract and refuse to give the violator any more FHA benefits. This means FHA will reject any application by the violator or any firm in which the violator has an interest of ten per cent or more. Also, FHA can cut off benefits to anyone who violated the Executive Order under another HUD agency program.

6. When the Director decides to take action against the violator, he sends the violator a letter. The violator has 10 days to stop discriminating. During those ten days, the violator can request a review of his case by the FHA Commissioner in Washington. The Director also sends you a letter, telling what he decided. If you question the Director's action, you can ask the FHA Commissioner to review the case. You must write the Commissioner within ten days after you hear the decision from the Director of your Insuring Office.

7. Fifteen days after you ask the Commissioner to review your case, your Director will let you see his file on the case. You can see the file during a ten day period; then the file goes to the Commissioner. The Commissioner then takes over the case. He has the power to reverse the findings of the Director.

8. The Director of your FHA Insuring Office has to take care of your complaint within 30 days. If he can't take care of the complaint within that time, he has to let you know why. An individual or an organization can make a complaint to FHA.

- Did you know you can get a list of all the property FHA owns in your area? You write your Insuring Office for the list. Address your letter to the Director, Federal Housing Administration, ATTN: PROPERTY MANAGEMENT.

  The list tells you all about the property, including the amount of the downpayment and the management broker you buy it from. If there is no broker for the property you want to buy, or if the broker refuses to serve you, you buy the property at your FHA Insuring Office.

  A broker is never supposed to show FHA-acquired property before it is put on the list. If he does, you report him to FHA. FHA will not make the sale and will not make any sales with that broker or his firm for 90 days.

  The list also gives the names of lenders who want to finance mortgage loans on the FHA-acquired properties. The broker goes to the lender to get your mortgage loan for you. And the broker takes care of the property sale with FHA. If you want to ask FHA a question about the property, be sure to give the case number for the property. The case number is on the list.

  If FHA approves a sale to you, the broker can rent you the property while he is closing the sale. If you buy directly from FHA, FHA can rent you the property. No one else can rent you the property.

- What are your rights and opportunities under public housing programs?

  Complaint procedure for public housing is similar to that for FHA. You write, however, to the Housing Assistance Administration, regional office (see addresses at the end of Part One).

  The Housing Assistance Administration (HAA, formerly PHA, Public Housing Administration) checks to see that your local housing authority is complying with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. HAA does this by sending a form that asks your housing authority its policy on discrimination and what its admission practices are. HAA doesn't require your housing authority to seek integrated projects or to place tenants in projects so that they will be integrated. Projects can become integrated, however, as vacancies in public housing units occur. A policy of integration (as opposed to just nondiscrimination) in public housing depends on your local housing authority and, in turn, on your city government.

If your housing authority refuses to comply with the law, HAA can refuse any new public housing projects in your city or, if the annual contributions contract so provides, HAA can take possession of the public housing. In no case does HAA stop paying the annual contributions for existing public housing.

If you are interested in encouraging integrated public housing projects, there are two things you'll want to do: 1) check with the tenants now living in public housing to see if they fully know and understand their rights in public housing and see if they would like to change the racial pattern of occupancy: and 2) send for Open Occupancy in Public Housing, by PHA, 1953.* The booklet gives full details on how to get integrated public housing in your city.

In addition to changing the racial composition of public housing, you may also be interested in improving the services and the management of the projects. Services your local housing authority can use, with Federal assistance, include youth counseling, credit counseling, education for homemaking (through adult education), and homemaker services. Management of public housing projects can be turned over to a social work agency, with counselors who can help tenants with their special problems. This type of management can help make public housing a stepping-stone to a better life, rather than just a shelter.

- What are your rights and opportunities in urban renewal programs?

From reading the section on urban renewal projects, you know that your city chooses the urban renewal project and decides whether it will be rehabilitation or clearance or both. And you know your city uses studies and surveys to decide which projects will be best. Any citizen or group of citizens can suggest an urban renewal project to your city government.

You noticed that your city government holds public hearing at several stages during an urban renewal project. Any citizen can attend the public hearings and make his recommendations.

If you live in a neighborhood that has an urban renewal project or that needs to have a project in the future, you and the other residents of your neighborhood can call meetings and ask the city's urban renewal officials to come explain the project and answer questions. You can visit the urban renewal office, look at the urban renewal plan, make suggestions, and volunteer to help with surveys. Some neighborhood groups like to form their own committees to inspect houses that can be rehabilitated.

In addition to public hearings, your city government also holds conferences with different city departments and with private groups. You can participate in such conferences during all the stages of urban renewal.

Your city government must pass a resolution that it will comply with Title VI in its urban renewal projects. Any deed of urban renewal land from your city's LPA (or, urban renewal agency) to a private redeveloper has to have a covenant against discrimination by the redeveloper. Any public facility used as a noncash grant-in-aid for an urban renewal project has to be operated on a non-discriminatory basis. Complaints are made by writing the Urban Renewal Administration, regional office.

- What are your rights and opportunities under the urban planning assistance program?

The urban planning assistance program (701) isn't covered by Title VI or by the Executive Order. Comprehensive plans prepared with the aid of Federal funds may contain proposed sites for schools and locations for streets that will enforce patterns of segregated living. However, urban planning assistance grants can also be used to study "minority group considerations of the community as they relate to the preparation of a comprehensive development plan."*

The authority to survey, analyze, and program action to aid in achieving equal opportunity in housing "is already there. . .the problem is that few planners have sought to, or have been encouraged to, work in this field."

Planning for equal opportunity in housing could be included in comprehensive planning, and a housing study could "include the aspects of discrimination practices which affect the free mobility of population."

It is now possible to use 701 funds to prepare fair housing ordinances.

Fortunately, loans and grants from the Community Facilities Administration, that your city may use for public works, are covered by Title VI.

Opportunities in YOUR OWN PROGRAMS

- How can you influence or take part in state programs for better homes and neighborhoods? One way is through your elected representatives to state government. Another way is through statewide organizations interested in improving your community, such as associations of housing and redevelopment officials, League of Municipalities, Association of County Commissioners, organization of Probate Judges, and League of Women Voters. These are organizations you shouldn't overlook, particularly when your community needs special housing programs, property tax changes, or new enabling legislation.

  Other ways you can come in contact with state level programs is through state (government) planning and development agencies and through university programs of continuing education or urban extension. State agencies and universities often hold meetings and workshops you can attend to learn about housing programs.

- In city housing and neighborhood programs, it is especially important to work with and through your elected representatives, your city officials, whenever possible. Your support for their programs can be as important as your criticism. Attend public hearings and meetings of your local city boards, commissions, and council. Encourage your city officials to publicize housing programs, to provide plenty of information to the public, and to do special studies on housing problems. Check to see that the housing code is enforced. If you can, bring in outside experts to help you make suggestions to your city government. Finally, see what resources on housing are available in the public library and in school libraries. In some communities, public schools are including housing and community education in their curricula.

- Just as you need to work through interested organizations for statewide housing neighborhood programs, so you need to know all the resources you can use at the community level. Your community group can begin its housing program by looking at what other groups are doing. Invite other group leaders to speak before your group and exchange ideas on better housing. By setting up contacts with other community groups, your group can ask them to help you win support for the housing programs you would like.

Your group can also invite city officials to speak. This gives the city another way to explain its housing programs and gives the public another chance to learn about them.

- If housing problems don't get much attention in your neighborhood, do something dramatic. Make your own survey. You don't have to limit it to housing. You can cover problems of discrimination, lack of education, unemployment, disease, and lack of city services and facilities as well. The West Jacksonville Association used the following survey to get a full picture of the needs of the people in one of its neighborhoods:*

Follow the survey with a clean-up, fix-up campaign. This is one of the best ways to get your city interested in providing better services to your neighborhood. Finally, organize citizens in your neighborhood to work continuously for better housing. Citizen groups often find they can work cooperatively with city government, can raise their own finances for an office and staff, and can develop leadership right from within the neighborhood.

Whatever you may be doing to work for better homes and neighborhoods in your community--whether you're working for open occupancy in public housing, for better city services through a neighborhood organization, or for nonprofit housing through a community group--three things are important: 1) Unity: You and those working with you must be able to stand together at public hearings and neighborhood meetings to get the programs you want. If there are factions in your group, discuss your differences and bring the issues out in the open. Then, when you appear before your city government, support one another. Any group leader who discredits one of his members at a public hearing discredits the entire group in the eyes of city government. This has been a hard-learned lesson for many groups working for better housing.

2) Involving community leaders: If you want to change an urban renewal plan, don't organize your group in secret and take the urban renewal director by surprise. He'll be against you. He'll wonder why you didn't ask him about the change before. As one Georgian remarked about today's city politicians, "The era of operating in the dark is gone. You have to involve people so you can win their support." That statement works two ways. Not only do city officials have to make their plans known to the public, but the people also have to let city officials take part in their plans.

3) Supporting programs: City officials aren't free to launch any housing programs or policies they feel are needed; they need public support, or else the programs will fail. Your support can count. You can talk about a new housing program with your friends and neighbors and at community group meetings. When you have to criticize your city government for what it fails to do, it's easy to forget that city government also needs your help. Support its programs.

THOUGHTS TO PONDER

"It is a fascinating fact that civil rights issues have inevitably raised a variety of positive issues. You can't look at school integration without also questioning the quality of education in general. You can't look at job integration without looking at the whole problem of manpower utilization. Similarly, you can't look at integration of neighborhoods without questioning the meaning of community. The elimination of fear opens new horizons in human experience."

---Matthew Bullock, Jr.

"In your mind's eye take an objective look at any of the average size American cities you have passed through by automobile. Ponder why so much beauty and ugliness are found side by side."

---Julian Prince

"Surely few would ever have disagreed that the two greatest causes of inadequate housing have been that some people have not been able to afford good housing and that some have, because of race, been denied an opportunity to bid freely for such housing as exists."

---James Q. Wilson

"In our urban areas the central problem today is to protect and restore man's satisfaction in belonging to a community where he can find security and significance."

ARCHITECTURAL ABSTRACTS

HOSPITAL PROGRAM OF THE UNITED MINE WORKERS

AIA 1954 convention seminar: hospital design trends
abstract of paper by Richard J. Adams, AIA

NEED FOR a coordinated hospital system became apparent when the director of the United Mine Workers Welfare & Retirement Fund, Miss Josephine Roche, & the executive medical officer of the fund, Dr. Warren Draper, a former assistant surgeon-general, made an investigation of medical care & hospital conditions in coal mining areas in Kentucky, Virginia, & West Virginia.

After much research in the area & exhaustive surveys it became apparent that owners of existing hospitals were not interested in making necessary alterations & repairs to bring their facilities up to a minimum standard. It was decided by trustees of the fund to build a coordinated system of 10 hospitals extending thru coal mining areas of 3 states.

Job of planning, construction & operation of these hospitals was delegated to the Memorial Hospital Association — an organization formed to carry thru this coordinated hospital program. In setting up MHA, Dr. Draper chose as his medical administrator, Dr. Frederick D. Mott, a leading man in administrative medicine & former deputy minister of public health in Saskatchewan. Dr. John Mawdrop, a former practitioner in the area, was appointed as his assistant. Mr. Gordon Friesen, administrator of Kitchener Waterloo Hospital, one of the real thinkers in the field of hospital administration, was retained as senior hospital administrator. E. Todd Wheeler, a Chicago architect & hospital consultant, was retained to prepare programs & act as planning consultant for the association.

Program called for a 200-bed hospital to be constructed at Beckley, West Virginia, & divided remaining 9 hospitals into two groups:

A southern group with a central hospital of 200 beds at Harlan, Kentucky, & satellite community hospitals as follows:

90 beds: Hazard, Kentucky
90 beds: Whitesburg, Kentucky
80 beds: Middlesboro, Kentucky
60 beds: Wise, Virginia

The northern group with a 150-bed facility at Williamson, West Virginia, as its central hospital & following community hospitals surrounding it:

80 beds: Man, West Virginia
60 beds: McDowell, Kentucky
50 beds: Pikesville, Kentucky

Williamson was also set up as supply center — program also required that all hospitals be planned for 100% expansion.

By grouping in this manner, it was possible to provide central hospitals with specialized facilities. It is planned that central hospitals will be staffed with specialists & patients requiring such services will be referred here from community hospitals of group.

Client decided to hire 3 architectural firms for the program, not to act as an association, but as 3 individuals working as separate identities, as they felt that freer participation from all was possible under such an arrangement. Isidore Rosenfield of New York was retained as architect for the 200-bed Beckley Hospital. The firm of York & Sawyer, also of New York, was retained as architect for the southern or Harlan group.

This coordinated system of hospitals, which was over 2 years in planning stage, developed many new ideas which are worthy of consideration in future hospital design. This team, which was composed of clients & their staff along with architects, & supplemented by staff of J. A. Jones Construction Company, spent many months in planning to eliminate excessive personnel & to cut down excessive duties of technical personnel, so that they might in turn render better medical care to patients of these hospitals.

A most interesting development of project was central supply system, worked out both in over-all group & within individual hospitals. We realized that great advantages could be derived by mass-purchasing, mass pharmaceutical manufacture & central laundry facilities.

This, in turn, cut down on requirement for these facilities in individual hospitals, & by design of a central warehouse, laundry & pharmaceutical manufacturing center at Williamson, core of central supply system was provided.

It is very apparent to all who are familiar with hospitals that registered nurses in average hospital become administrative personnel & are given so many duties (filling out forms, inventorying & ordering supplies) & other administrative functions that they have little time to devote to patients. We were determined in these hospitals that this gross error in hospital administration would not be repeated. After many ideas, & many schemes & sketches, we finally developed a system of central supply in these hospitals where all sterile & non-sterile supplies would be issued to nursing floors by means of specially constructed carts. These carts would carry a full day's complement of supplies for the nursing station & would be removed & replaced during night hours by a full cart carrying complement for next day, thus eliminating necessity of nursing personnel making inventories, & turning this duty over to a clerk in central supply, where carts were loaded & dispatched to points of use. Since carts were storage units as well as means of transporting supplies, there was no need for intermediary unloading, handling & storage. Each nurse's station is connected to central supply by a dumbwaiter, & to kitchen by dumbwaiter & trayveyor.

We realize that there is considerable controversy over food service in all hospitals — but Mr. Friesen had made the trayveyor work at previous assignments & we felt that it would work in these hospitals.

Another feature of these hospitals is location of emergency entrance — which is adjacent to & immediately adjoining main entrance lobby. In these mountainous areas majority of emergency or accident cases are not brought in by ambulance but generally in automobiles. We felt that when a person approaches a hospital with an emergency case, he would not be interested in sorting out intricate drive patterns to the rear, & possibly to a lower floor, to deliver his charge, but would rather come to the obvious place — the well-lighted main lobby. By placing emergency entrance in this position, it is not necessary to fully staff emergency suite, as emergency entrance is under constant surveillance of admitting clerk, who in turn, can alert necessary personnel for an accident case. This also avoids carting injured person thru a maze of hospital corridors & probably to another floor to receive first-aid treatment. I might add here that admitting offices of hospital also serve as admitting & registration offices for outpatient departments, thereby eliminating additional personnel. Medical records of both outpatient & hospital patients are prepared & filed here.

There has always been a contention as to whether fracture & cystoscopy belong in operating suite or in radiology. In our 5 hospitals, we placed them in neither, but rather in-between where they could be declared a part of either.

These facilities, along with laboratory, physical & occupational therapy were placed on first floor so that they might become part of out-patient department.

Other innovations include a corner cabinet for operating rooms which includes x-ray view-boxes with Circuline fluorescent tubes. 3—20 amp outlets & 1—30 amp outlet for portable x-ray, along with a multi-breaker circuit for each outlet. This cabinet also contains ground-detecting device, electric clock, time-interval clock, oxygen & suction, & a small compartment for housing extra operating table parts. Explosion-proof fixtures are not required since all electrical contacts are above 5′ hazardous level.

Casework thruout these hospitals consists of stainless steel counters supported on legs at intervals. Realizing that flexibility of work areas is necessary, cabinets are made as individual parts & may be removed & changed from one part of room to another or from one work area to another, as circumstances may require.

During early planning stage, the 3 architectural firms sent a team with a representative of contractor into field to make thorough study of local materials & labor conditions. It was most apparent as result of their report that severe lack of adequate skilled labor prevailed. As we studied these reports, & with our knowledge of atmospheric & climatic conditions in the area, it became apparent that prefabricated exterior wall panels should be considered. With coal dust, smoke & smog we felt that we should design a self-cleansing exterior wall & with help of Truscon Steel Co we developed a unit which they have named "vision wall." Built of galvanized steel & porcelain enamel, these walls are 1-5/16″ thick & have equivalent insulating value of a 12″ masonry wall. In our hospitals we found that saving in floor space alone amounted to approximately 5% of gross area. Wall units measure 5′ wide x 10′-8″ high & are designed to take operating sash, fixed glass or wall panel. Exterior surface of panel is a slick porcelain enamel for easy maintenance. It is interesting to note that all 3 architectural firms used similar window-wall panels.

ARCHITECTURAL ABSTRACTS

MENTAL HOSPITAL STUDY

brief report on joint architectural study project by AIA & American Psychiatric Association

KNOWN AS THE Mental Hospital Architectural Study Project, this program is now directed by Dr Charles K. Bush, succeeding Dr John L. Smalldon. Following report explains need for this important project, scope of problem & methods of study. It has been financed by a substantial grant from The Rockefeller Foundation & a smaller one from The Division Fund of Chicago but — as in all such comprehensive analyses in new fields — a year's operation indicates that perhaps only a (highly commendable & necessary) beginning can be made in thorough study of background & present concepts of mental hospital design without progressing very far into logical advances in functional planning for modern treatment programs.

In mental hospital design it is evident that certain building patterns & characteristics have evolved from programs of custodial care only & have been continued into present in spite of fact that very recently great progress & change have been made in medical treatment programs. This progress has resulted in bringing about entirely new concepts of building requirements. Workers in hospitals thru their training in buildings-designed-for-custodial-care may have come to assume rigid attitudes in regard to requirements of hospital building & environment.

A thorough investigation should include research into requirements of following categories:

community mental health services including:
- out-patient departments
- child guidance clinics
- day-care facilities
- psychiatric units in general hospitals psychiatric receiving & intensive treatment hospitals mental hospitals (public & private) hospitals & training schools for mental defectives treatment centers for epileptic patients treatment centers for alcoholic patients residential units for emotionally & mentally ill children residential schools for juvenile delinquents hospitals for the criminal mentally ill facilities for training & research

Sub-divisions occur in each of above classifications & each classification must be studied in terms of activities, staff & physical requirements.

public mental hospitals:

Since greatest volume of construction is in public mental hospitals & since this type is responsible for care of approximately 95% of all patients, it has been designated as first subject of the study.

Organization of the public mental hospital has been subdivided as follows:

administrative facilities patient facilities service facilities

Administrative facilities include activities of business, public contact, housekeeping, industries & accounting.

Service facilities include power plant, maintenance shops, laundry, etc.

Patient facilities are divided into 3 main groups as follows:

receiving & intensive treatment service for new patients & for convalescent patients should be studied with regard to total medical treatment program for out-patient services, follow-up care of hospitalized patients, day-care programs & diagnosis & treatment of in-patients of various classifications.

which may have classifications for study as follows:

inactive patients industrial patients disturbed patients criminal mentally ill alcoholics others

geriatric service

may be divided into groups of:

ambulant patients
semi-ambulant patients bedridden patients

facilities

which may service all three main patient groups are:

medical & surgical service chronic disease service tuberculosis service occupational & recreational therapy food service

methods of study:

In appraisal of present concept of requirements 4 activities have been initiated:

- study of plans of new & old buildings to assist in analysis of present practices.
- study of medical & related literature over a broad field to obtain proven data on techniques, equipment & staffs which affect design — bibliography will be compiled for architects
- visits to institutions to discuss procedures & practices & to appraise methods & facilities. A staff member has just returned from a 3-months tour of mental hospitals in Asia & Europe. He has found quite different concepts of care & treatment of mentally ill — which necessitate a different type of construction.
- preparation of questionnaires for use by selected psychiatrist-architect teams in obtaining joint analysis of requirements for various techniques within buildings

In addition to above activities the staff is publishing in each issue of Mental Hospitals, the monthly Mental Hospital Service magazine, plans & descriptive text on new mental hospital buildings.

AIA consultants to the project are:

Slocum Kingsbury, AIA
Moreland Griffith Smith, AIA
John Reinhold Magney, AIA
Joseph M. Neufeld, AIA

Cooperation of AIA members & particularly of those architects who have served on survey teams is greatly appreciated.

Questionnaire forms for various types of facilities required in state mental hospitals are available on request. These may be found useful in preparation of programs of requirements for new building construction.

Inquiries are invited & should be addressed to:

Charles K. Bush, MD
Director, Mental Hospital
Architectural Study Project
1242-20th Street, NW
Washington 6, DC

Following quotation from an article by Moreland Griffith Smith, AIA, one of the consultants, appropriately sums up importance of this program:

"This Committee is set squarely against one of the most potentially rewarding, if one of the most formidable, challenges ever encountered by such a group. Ours is a mental hospitals study project; our avowed purpose is constructive work toward increase & improvement of facilities for the mentally ill. In short, we are setting about perhaps not to correct but at least to better the mental health of our nation. We are by our efforts trying to help our fellow man — help him to think clearly, work profitably, live happily, gain the utmost from his life & experience, & become a satisfactory individual to himself & to his fellow man.

OUTLINE OF EXPERIENCE--
HOSPITALS AND RELATED
MEDICAL FACILITIES

GENERAL ORGANIZATIONAL BACKGROUND

A. Organized in 1946 with the goal of offering our clients a complete A/E service within one organization.

B. To accomplish this end, a coordinated operation among all the disciplines contributing to the design and completion of a project has been established.

C. This is made possible because the architectural conception, the designs of structural, mechanical, electrical and civil engineers as well as the building specifications, cost estimates, and supervision of construction has been linked together under one roof.

D. With the above elements in mind we have developed a coordinated work process that enables us to produce effective project plans consistently. This is emphasized by the number of repeat clients that continue to call upon us, as well as the fact that we have repeatedly won national recognition in the design field.

E. Incorporated in 1957, to include all department heads and key personnel.

F. Individual Recognition

1. Architects approved by the American Hospital Association.

2. Department head of our electrical engineers serving the AHA Committee to prepare a manual on Hospital Electrical Systems.

3. Five registered architects. Nine registered engineers (4 structural, 3 mechanical, 1 electrical, 1 civil).

G. Serving as principal architect and engineer for the design and construction of over 100 medical facilities.

LEADING TO AND EXPERIENCE IN:

: New hospitals ranging from 13 to 1200 beds
: Major hospital additions and alterations
: Medical teaching and research facilities
: Health centers and clinics, private and group
: Other related medical facilities, totaling over 100 projects

MAJOR PROJECTS

FIRST HILL-BURTON HOSPITAL

In 1946 Sherlock, Smith & Adams planned Mizell Memorial Hospital, the first hospital constructed and put into operation under the Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Act, which provides federal funds to meet part of the construction cost. Since that time SS&A has designed many Hill-Burton Projects. This portion of SS&A's work comprises a majority of its medical facilities experience.

U. S. AIR FORCE HOSPITALS

In 1950-1952 Sherlock, Smith & Adams handled the architectural work in the preparation of standard plans for all U. S. Air Force Buildings constructed in Western Europe under the defense program. Included in the program were five standard hospitals ranging from 25 to 150 beds and a number of dental clinics and medical dispensaries.

FIVE UNITED MINE WORKERS HOSPITALS

In 1953-1955 Sherlock, Smith & Adams planned five hospitals totaling 540 beds as part of the chain of ten hospitals constructed in Kentucky, Virgina and West Virginia for the United Mine Workers Welfare and Retirement Fund. For this project the firm spent over a year on research. Basic research was done on each hospital department with leading specialists in each field as consultants, and, with two New York firms who were responsible for the other five hospitals, intensive studies were made of all construction problems involved--materials, finishes, fixtures, equipment, etc. All ten hospitals were constructed by one contractor in accordance with master specifications prepared by Sherlock, Smith & Adams.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION - OAK RIDGE HOSPITAL

In 1957 Sherlock, Smith & Adams was selected by the Atomic Energy Commission to plan a new 175 bed community hospital for Oak Ridge, Tennessee. This facility was placed in operation in March 1960. The Commission has since awarded this firm additional contracts for the following facilities:

Total Body Irradiation Facility for Treatment of Leukemia, first of its type in the United States.

Major Alterations and Additions to the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies, Cancer Research Hospital.

Biomedical Research Facility for the Atomic Energy Commission and the University of Tennessee

And a number of other, non-medical, projects.

WEST BERLIN, GERMANY - MEDICAL UNIVERSITY AND 1200 BED TEACHING HOSPITAL

In 1958-59 in association with a New Orleans architectural firm and a German Associate, Sherlock, Smith & Adams set up design criteria and prepared preliminary calculations and plans for all phases of engineering, structural, mechanical, and electrical design. Final plans are being prepared in Berlin by the German Associate Architect.

VIENNA MEDICAL CENTER - TEACHING

In 1961 Sherlock, Smith & Adams was the only U. S. Firm invited to compete in the International competition for the 1,100 bed Medical University Center. The design submitted received a commendation with specific reference to the nursing unit.

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION

SS&A has engaged in various hospital projects for the Veterans Administration. This work includes extensive alteration to existing facilities at the Veterans Hospital in Tuskegee in 1958, 1959 and again in 1963. In 1961 a Special Services Building was designed and erected to provide recreational therapy for neuropsychiatric patients. In 1964 research laboratory facilities were designed as an addition to the VA Hospital in Birmingham. This new facility, spanning a major street, is physically connected to the University of Alabama Medical Research facilities enabling them to more closely coordinate joint studies. A first for the Veterans Administration.

FIVE STANDARD U. S. AIR FORCE HOSPITALS

Sherlock, Smith & Adams completed a research contract with the U. S. Air Force to evaluate biometric data from all existing Air Force hospitals, develop new Air Force standard-hospital elements, prepare a basis for design for each bed size hospital, and prepare definitive plans for five standard hospitals ranging from 50 to 200 beds, incorporating all of the latest equipment and development in medical and engineering techniques.

U. S. AIR FORCE HOSPITAL

In 1953 Sherlock, Smith & Adams prepared the plans including all phases of engineering for the U. S. Air Force Hospital, Kindley AFB, Bermuda. The facility is comprised of 50 bed nursing unit and all the supporting ancillary facilities.

In 1964 Sherlock, Smith & Adams designed and prepared the plans including all phases of engineering for the Tyndall Field Composite Medical Facility for the U. S. Air Force. This facility is comprised of 80 bed nursing unit, 15 dental operating rooms, and a large Air Force out-patient clinic.

In 1965, Sherlock, Smith & Adams, in association with an Atlanta architectural firm, is in the process of preparing the plans for the Turner Field Composite Medical Facility for the U. S. Air Force. Sherlock, Smith & Adams is doing the design, the preliminary drawings, and all phases of engineering except the site work. This facility will be comprised of 55 bed nursing unit, 16 dental operating rooms, and a large Air Force out-patient clinic.

The foregoing projects are only highlights in our many years of experience in the design of medical facilities. The research data gathered and improved methods continually being developed on all projects are constantly being utilized to provide in each of our new buildings the best in medical care at the lowest possible cost.

PRINCIPALS AND STAFF

Members of this firm have been approved as Hospital Architects by the American Hospital Association, and have served several terms on the National Committee of the AHA which examines candidates for this approval.

Service has been performed for two terms on the American Institute of Architects Committee on Hospitals and public health and on the Joint Committee of the AHA and the American Psychiatric Association. in 1956 an Architectural Advisor on the American Psychiatric Association Mental Hospital Architectural Study Project was furnished by us. In 1949 this organization planned and put on the Southern Conference on Hospital Planning, which was one of the first and, according to hospital planning authorities, by far the most comprehensive Hospital Planning Conference held to that date. A paper on Planning of Hospital In-patient Facilities prepared by the two principals and presented at the first International Hospital Seminar in Geneva, Switzerland in 1957 represents the basic philosophy of the firm in hospital planning; requests for copies have come from all parts of the world. In 1958 a member of this firm inspected and reported on twenty German Hospitals for the State Department which served as a basis for a program for the Medical University and 1200 Bed Teaching Hospital in West Berlin.

This firm has furnished featured writers, speakers, and judges on hospital planning. In 1954 a paper was presented on the use of new materials and equipment in planning hospitals for low maintenance cost at the Tri-States Hospital Association's annual meeting in Chicago, and a paper on the ten Mine Workers Hospitals at the American Institute of Architects National Convention in Boston. An article, "Ten Little Hospitals and What Their Architects Learned", appeared in the October 1954 issue of ARCHITECTURAL RECORD. In 1955 we furnished a chairman of the Screening Jury of Architectural Exhibits at the AHA National Convention at Atlantic City. In April 1956 a member of the faculty of the AHA National Hospital Engineering Institute and Workshop directed a session on "Problems of New Construction and Alterations." In 1957 one of five judges for a National $10,000 Architectural Competition sponsored by the National Committee on the Aging, in cooperation with MODERN HOSPITAL AND ARCHITECTURAL RECORD. Results of the competition were published by the F. W. Dodge Corporation in 1959 under the title "Planning Homes for the Aged."

OUTLINE OF EXPERIENCE--
HOSPITALS AND RELATED
MEDICAL FACILITIES

STAFF

The staff of Sherlock, Smith & Adams includes sixteen Registered Architects and Engineers (Structural, Mechanical, Electrical, Sanitary, and Civil) who for over 20 years past have continually planed major roles in the planning of medical facilities designed and constructed by this firm. All of these people, specialists in their respective fields, work as a planning team to create facilities embracing the most advanced medical and engineering technology.

RECOGNITION

Three of Sherlock, Smith & Adams' hospitals have received "Modern Hospital of the Month" Awards from MODERN HOSPITAL MAGAZINE. The Whitesburg Memorial Hospital, one of the United Mine Workers Project, won PROGRESSIVE ARCHITECTURE'S Design Award, Health Category in the 1953 Design Awards Program; and the Florida Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center at Avon Park received an Award Citation in the same category; in the 1954 competition. American Institute of Architects Design Awards have gone to two small Hill-Burton Hospitals.

Sherlock, Smith & Adams' hospitals and other medical buildings have been published by ARCHITECTURAL FORUM, ARCHITECTURAL RECORD ENGINEERING NEWS RECORD, HOSPITAL MANAGEMENT, HOSPITALS (Journal of the American Hospital Association), THE MODERN HOSPITAL, NEWSWEEK, PROGRESSIVE ARCHITECTURE, TIME AND U. S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT, and have been featured on the covers of ENGINEERING NEWS RECORD and ARCHITECTURAL RECORD. One of the United Mine Workers Projects, Harlan Memorial Hospital, was featured in the 1953 issue of ARCHITECTURAL RECORD Building Types on surgical suites.

Health Facilities Planning and Construction Service Rockville, Maryland 20852

Public Health Service • Health Services and Mental Health Administration

BETTER PATIENT CARE for all the people has been a major objective of the Hill-Burton program since its inception following the enactment of the Hospital Survey and Construction Act of 1946. Activities under the original legislation, sponsored by Senators Lister Hill of Alabama and Harold Burton of Ohio, and subsequent amendments have centered on:

- the award of grants for the construction of various types of health facilities needed in each State. (With the enactment of Public Law 91-296, Medical Facilities Construction and Modernization Amendments of 1970, the Program was broadened to include loan guarantees with interest subsidies for nonprofit hospitals and direct loans for public hospitals);
- the development of better planning methods to aid communities assess their overall needs and determine areas requiring greatest priority;
- the elevation of standards of design, construction, and operation of facilities through the provision of consultation services which includes the development of guide materials widely used not only in this country but by health facility planners around the world.

Eligible Facilities

The following types of public or other nonprofit health facilities for which a need is established are eligible for grants:

Hospitals

Outpatient facilities (including neighborhood health centers)

Public Health centers

Rehabilitation facilities

Facilities for long-term care (including extended care facilities)

State health laboratories

Types of Projects

Construction of new buildings or expansion of existing buildings

Alteration, major repair, remodeling, replacement, or renovation of existing buildings

Initial equipment for new, expanded, or modernized structures

Equipment-only projects which provide a new community service

Modernization of emergency rooms within hospitals (including provision of medical transporation facilities such as ambulances and helicopters)

How to Apply for a Grant

Consult your State agency concerning your community's needs for hospitals and other health facilities, the priorities for construction, and the eligibility of the proposed projects.

The State agency will:

1. Advise as to the possibility of the project receiving Hill-Burton assistance
2. Furnish application forms
3. Give instructions on completing and submitting the application
4. Explain the applicant's responsibilities which include:
   a. Raising the non-Federal share of the construction costs
   b. Employing an architect to prepare plans and specifications
   c. Submitting the application to the areawide planning agency and the State agency for review and comment
   d. Awarding construction contracts based on competitive bids and purchasing equipment in accordance with established procedures
5. Provide information regarding all State and Federal requirements.

Federal Share

Grants are awarded on a matching basis as determined by the State administering agency but may not exceed two-thirds of the total eligible costs except that participation up to 90 percent may be approved for

(1) projects located in poverty areas

(2) projects with potential for reducing health care costs through

(a) shared services among health facilities

(b) interfacility cooperation

(c) construction or modernization of freestanding outpatient facilities

When Applicant Gets Grant Payments

Payments of the Federal share of project costs are made on the basis of work completed as determined by inspections of the project by the State administering authority. The initial payment usually is made after 10 percent of the construction is completed. Additional payments are made as the project progresses.

Project Selection

Projects are selected by the State administering authority in accordance with the provisions of a State plan for hospital and other health facilities. This plan, developed by the State authority and approved by the Public Health Service, contains an inventory of existing hospital and other health facilities and shows the community's remaining need. Priority for Federal aid is determined on the basis of the relative need of the various areas of the State for additional facilities and services. Applications are submitted for comment to a Comprehensive Health Planning Agency (314b agency where one exists and if none exists to the 314a agency). Such comments are considered by the State Hill-Burton Agency and its State Advisory Council in recommending projects for approval. Projects recommended by the Hill-Burton State Advisory Council are transmitted to the Public Health Service Regional Office for review and approval.

Loan Guarantees with Interest Subsidies

Under the 1970 Hill-Burton legislation, loans to private nonprofit agencies may be guaranteed for the modernization or construction of needed health facilities. Loans arranged with private lenders for a term not to exceed 25 years may be guaranteed by the Federal Government with interest subsidies at a rate sufficient to reduce by 3 percent the net effective interest rate paid by private nonprofit facilities.

Eligible Private Nonprofit Facilities

Hospitals

Facilities for long-term care

Outpatient facilities (including neighborhood health centers)

Rehabilitation facilities

Loans to Public Agencies

Direct loans to public agencies to aid in the modernization or construction of needed health facilities may be made at an interest rate comparable to the rate paid by a nonprofit sponsor assisted by the program. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare would guarantee the obligation, increase the rate of interest paid on it, and sell it to a private investor or to the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Eligible Public Facilities

Hospitals

Public health centers

Facilities for long-term care

Outpatient facilities (including neighborhood health centers)

Rehabilitation facilities

Maximum Loan

The maximum loan to be guaranteed – or if a grant is made to the same project the combined grant and loan – cannot exceed 90 percent of the cost of the project.

This maximum applies to both private nonprofit and public facilities loans.

Allotment of Funds to States

The amounts of loans to be guaranteed to private nonprofit agencies or loans to be made to public agencies would be alloted to the States on the basis of their relative financial need, relative population, and relative need for additional or modernized health facilities.

How to Apply

Consult your State agency for application forms and instructions for filing. That agency will provide information regarding all State and Federal requirements relating to the loan guarantees for private nonprofit health facilities or direct loans to public health facilities.

DEMOGRAPHIC AND SOCIAL CONSIDERATIONS FOR U.S. RURAL ECONOMIC POLICY

Calvin L. Beale, Leader, Population Studies Groups, Economic Development Division, Economic Research Service U.S.D.A.

Background Paper No. 7

National Rural Housing Conference
June 9-12, 1969

Reproduced for the National Rural Housing Conference with permission of the author.

Demographic and Social Considerations for U.S. Rural Economic Policy

If a demographer has anything worth saying, he welcomes the chance to expose others to the approach of his field and the implications of his insights. But this joy is tempered when he is asked to do so in years ending in 8, or even 7 or 6. For, although his wisdom may abound in the early years of a decade, much of it has become commonplace or clouded with uncertainty near the end of the decennial period. This is particularly true when the subject considered is the rural population, for, as officially defined, it can only be measured in a full census and cannot be acceptably approximated in intercensal sample surveys. However, if an opportunity for such a presentation does not come in a year ending in 2 or 3 or 4, one does the best one can in a year ending in 8.

There are some facets of the rural demographic picture that it is unnecessary to demonstrate. Everyone knows that with the decline in farm employment the farm population is a smaller proportion of the total population than formerly. And, for that matter, it is now reasonably common knowledge that the majority of rural people no longer live on farms or work directly in farming. Each of these facts has clearly affected the thinking of policy makers, in the last decade particularly. There are other demographic conditions, however, that are not as clear cut or as well understood either in their trends or their implications. I should like to focus on several such features that I regard as s significant and in need of explication.

One recurring problem in furnishing information about rural areas is the inevitable and understandable desire of policy makers to have generalizations and brevity. Yet, in the case of rural areas, national generalizations can often be misleading and potentially harmful.. If there is one point about American rural demography that needs emphasis, it is that there are widely divergent demographic conditions in the rural population associated with different geographic regions and ethno-cultural groups. This is true of population growth trends, migration patterns, fertility, age structure, and changes in small towns.

Fertility -- The discussion can begin with fertility, for the typically higher rural than urban fertility has always been a factor underlying the age structure of the rural population and fostering out-migration. In 1960 the cumulative fertility of women nearing the end of the childbearing period (35-44 years) was about 28 percent higher in rural areas than in urban.[1/] The potential for population increase was at least 250 percent greater per generation among rural women than urban, however, for only that proportion of childbearing above generational replacement needs goes to increase the population. Rural women averaged about 950 to 1,000 children per 1,000 women above replacement needs, whereas urban women averaged only 250 to 300 per 1,000 aboverthe replacement requirement.[2/] Thus, although urban women 35 to 44 years numbered more than 70 percent of all U.S. women of that age, they contributed little more than 40 percent of the childbearing involved in growth of the national population.

More important to our discussion is the fact that there is more variation in fertility among rural people than urban. Particularly, there are many more areas and population groups of high fertility among rural people. Figure 1 illustrates the distribution of high fertility populations in the United States. Four or more children ever born per ever married woman aged 35 to 44 years (in 1960) is the index of high fertility used. Under current mortality rates, populations of this fertility double themselves -- or more -- in a generation, a period of about 25 to 27 years. It is immediately noticeable from the map that metropolitan counties are conspicuously absent (there are only two, of Mexican-American population), nor is there any meaningful representation from the entire Northeast, the Lower Great Lakes Region, the Corn Belt, the southern Wheat Belt, and the Pacific States. These areas simply do not have abnormally high growth potential from either their rural of urban populations.

In almost all cases the high fertility level is associated with a comparatively distinctive ethnic or subcultural population. With the exception of metropolitan areas, most of the entire span of the Southern Coastal Plain is represented for the Negro population, from Southern Maryland to East Texas. The high average Negro fertility in this region is the product of the rural population; southern urban Negro women average only 3 children per woman. Although 4 or more children per woman has been used as the measure of high fertility, the Negro rural population averaged better than 4.5 children per woman. Furthermore, Negro rural fertility increased during the 1950's. In only one of the counties of high Negro fertility did the white women average 4 or more children.

In the Southwest are sizeable areas in which the Mexican-American population has high average fertility and accounts for a significant fraction of the entire population. The average level of rural Mexican-American childbearing is nearly 5 children per woman.

Other areas on the map are those in which the white population -- other than Mexican-American in the Southwest -- averages 4 or more children per woman. There are no large concentrations of such areas. The most populous is the Coal Fields Area in the heart of the Southern Appalachians. Similar in character to one another but not always contiguous, are small predominantly Mormon areas of Utah and Idaho, and a scattering of counties in the Northern Plains that are usually of German Catholic population.

In addition, there are areas in which American Indians or Alaskan natives comprise 10 or more percent of the population and have high fertility. Alaska and the Four Corners area of the Southwest are the most important concentrations. The average is fully 5 children per woman.

This map, then, identifies the groups together with their locations, whose fertility is exceptionally high by modern standards, leading to high continued potential growth. They are, preponderantly,rural, and with the exception of the Mormon and German Catholic groups, are characterized by widespread poverty, low educational attainment, and high social visibility. With the same exceptions, they are the very groups whose urban migration gives most concern to cities (indeed, they may be the only groups whose migration troubles urban interests). They comprised the four rural elements who were represented in the Poor Peoples Campaign to Washington in 1968. Judging from the limited attitudinal data available, many of the families in these groups are bearing more children than they want, even though their desired family size is higher than the national average.

At the other extreme are rural areas of low fertility. Low fertility in this Nation since the recovery of the war and post-war years rarely means low to the point of being insufficient for generational replacement. Rather it is fertility sufficient to increase each generation by a modest increment, say by no more than 25 percent, or less than 1 percent annually. An average of 2,700 children per 1000 ever married women 35 to 44 years old will do this under conditions of low child mortality and high incidence of marriage. Figure 2 shows the nonmetropolitan counties of the United States in which fertility was less than 2,700 children per 1,000 women in 1960. Because many metropolitan counties have low fertility, the map has been restricted to nonmetropolitan counties in order to focus on the occurrence of such fertility levels in essentially rural areas. In addition, the map shows those counties in which the white population has less than 2,700 children per 1,000 women even though the overall county average was higher.

The geographic pattern of low fertility is not very blockish, but shows strong representation in the nonmetropolitan parts of the Northeast, central and southern parts of the Corn Belt, the lower Ohio Valley, and the Far West. Unlike the areas of high fertility, it is difficult to characterize the low fertility areas culturally. They are primarily Protestant, other than Lutheran, and include a fair number of future metropolitan counties. Agriculturally they largely exclude the farm areas that were last to be settled or that were not primarily settled by people of Colonial stock.

In the South, there is a sizeable group of counties in the North Carolina-Virginia Peanut Belt and some adjoining tobacco coun counties in which the white number of children ever born per woman is low. I have no suggestion as to why. There is also considerable representation of low white fertility areas in the industrialized Southern Piedmont, the Alabama-Mississippi Black Prairie and in the old cotton areasof East Texas. Central Florida is a zone of low total and white fertility.

Although the background of the pattern of low fertility in the areas shown is obscure, the economic significance for each of the areas is that they are under only minimal pressure from the force of childbearing (or, in the South, from white childbearing) for expansion of facilities, services, and employment.

The remaining predominantly rural areas of the country have intermediate cohort levels of fertility that provide substantial population growth or migration potential, but not to the point of resembling conditions in underdeveloped nations.

Migration -- On the subject of migration, I should like to discuss three matters -- the effects of migration on age structure, the pattern of migration from rural areas since 1960, and a current misunderstanding of the relation of gross migration to net migration.

In rural areas, net migration is commonly the major component of population change. It is also a major determinant of age structure. Out-migration of youth, in particular, has been very high since the Depression. From 1950 to 1960, the rural and predominantly rural counties of the United States that had net outmigration lost 40 percent of their youth who reached 20 years of age during that decade.[3/] In some areas such as the Southern Coal Fields the loss reached 50 percent, and in the poorest southern counties exceeded 60 percent for Negroes of this age. Such rates of outmovement among the young serve to raise the average age of the remaining population and the proportion of older people, unless offset by high fertility among persons remaining and by comparatively rapid outmovement of middle-aged people. Because some rural areas of high outmigration had high fertility and others had relatively low fertility, and because the patterns of middle-aged migration varied by area for a given level of youth outmigration, the overall effect of outmigration on age structure has been quite variable. The popular conception that rural areas were left with hardly anyone except older people after the major exodus from farming and coal mining is all too well approximated in some areas, but is quite erroneous for others. Let me illustrate.

In the Southern Appalachian Coal Fields the net outmigration rate of youth 20 to 24 years old in 1960 was one third higher than that of white youth in all Southern rural counties of net outmigration, but the Appalachian rate among persons in their 50's was double that of all Southern white persons of the same age. (See Table 1.) The same differences were evident between whites and nonwhites in rural Southern outmigration counties. For persons aged 20 to 24 in 1960 the outmigration rate during the prior decade for nonwhites was just 20 percent higher than that of whites, but for age 50-54 the nonwhite rate was double that of whites. These age comparisons would be even more extreme if the Southern nonwhite and Coal Fields patterns were compared with Midwestern rural rates.

Bearing in mind this point and the previous fertility discussion, note the wide variations in median age of the population in 1960 in the next map (Figure 3). Counties are shown in which the population had a median age of 35.0 years or older in 1960, or a median age of less than 23.0 years. Practically all of the counties in both groups are nonmetropolitan. Few of them are even of a submetropolitan character. In other words, the occurrence of extreme age distributions -- young or old -- in this country is almost entirely a phenomenon of rural and small town areas.

From the Southern Corn Belt extending southward to the Hill Country of Central Texas is a roughly triangular-shaped area of about 300,000 square miles in which the majority of all nonmetropolitan counties, including several large contiguous blocks, have a median age above 35.0. The proportion of elderly people is anywhere from 2/3 to 100 percent higher than the national average. Young adults and young children are comparatively few in number. This is the end result of proplonged age-selective outmigration on a population of low to moderate fertility, here and there abetted by inmovement of older people for retirement while outmovement of the young continues. Elsewhere there are only minor groupings of highage counties -- in the Pennsylvania Anthracite area, in relict metal mining counties of the West, in parts of the Upper Great Lakes Cutover area, and in Central Florida. In the latter area it results from inmigration of older people rather than outmovement of the young.

In strong contrast are the counties where average age was less than 23.0 years in 1960. Some of these areas are well known for high outmigration and as a result are misconceived as being of high average age. They include the heart of the Southern Coal Fields, much of the tobacco and cotton coastal plain of the Carolinas, and most of the Black Belt and the Mississippi Delta -- in short the worst poverty areas of the South. High fertility and the unusual age structure of migration described earlier, have shaped this pattern.[4/] Except for the appalachian group, most of these Southern areas have a median age below 23.0 years only because of the low average age of the Negro population. Indeed the Negro medians are usually in the upper teens. West of the Mississippi is an area stretching from the Lower Rio Grande Valley to southeastern Idaho where the average age is low. Three different cultural groups are involved -- the Mexican-Americans along the length of the Rio Grande, Indians in the Four Corners area, and the familistic but prosperous Mormon population of Utah and Idaho. Finally, the large but thinly settled Indian and Eskimo areas of Alaska are exceptionally low in average age, as are some Indian and Catholic counties of the Northern Plains.

The economic development problems of the rural areas of very low or high average age would certainly seem to differ in important respects. The young-age areas with a high demographic growth potential require much higher rates of job growth if an objective of their development is the reduction of the necessity of migration. With the exception of the Mormon areas, they are short of skilled and educated people but have a heavy supply of new workers. The high-age areas, on the other hand, with their small families and crushed age structure, are comparatively short of labor force, both presently and potentially. Except for the Southeastern margin of the high-age area the educational level is good, but any significant development of job opportunities would almost certainly require the importation of workers. And each succeeding high school class in these areas is typically smaller than the previous one because of the steadily reduced number of births over the last two decades.

As a footnote on the areas of high average age, it should be realized that most of them either are now having more deaths than births, because of the distorted age structure, or are approaching such a condition. Thus, the population has come to decline from natural decrease as well as from outmigration and the counties have a new stigma to overcome in promoting economic activity. There were over 300 natural decrease counties in 1966 and the number could rise to 600 by 1970. Nationally, an increase in births is expected by 1970 or thereafter because of growing numbers of young couples, but the high-age rural areas will not be getting more such couples unless they can retain a far higher percentage of their young people at home than they are now doing.

In the future, it is probable that there will be more rural counties of high average age, and in some areas where they were not found in 1960. For example, from 1960 to 1966 births in non-metropolitan areas of the Dakotas, Montana, and Minnesota dropped by about 28 percent, creating very rapid undercutting of the age structure in a heretofore rather young population of moderately high fertility.

Population and migration trends, 1960 to 1966.--Because the Bureau of the Census has now made population estimates for all counties for 1966, we have some means of evaluating change in the population of rural areas since 1960.[5/] Estimating population for local areas is a less than perfect science, but the general patterns should be valid.

In general, the evidence indicates that completely or primarily rural counties retained their potential population growth much better from 1960 to 1966 than they did in the 1950's. In the 50's the rural counties gained 3.3 million in population while also losing a net of 4.6 million migrants.[6/] But from 1960 to 1966, they gained 2.8 million, while their outmigration was reduced to about 550,000, or only a fifth of the annual average loss of the 1950's. Because of lower natural increase, the growth potential of rural areas was less in the 60's, but the areas retained the equivalent of a much higher proportion of their growth potential than formerly. Whereas in the 50's rural counties in the country as a whole had about 150 outmigrants for every gain of 100 in population, since 1960 they have had only about 20 net outmigrants per 100 gain in population. This improvement has been especially noticeable in the entirely rural counties and those with less than 30 percent urban population. All of the growth of population in rural areas in the 1950's was limited to the class of counties that were 30 to 50 percent urban, but this has not been so since 1960.

The most dramatic regional shift has come in the East South Central States. These four States, embracing both Appalachian heartland areas and Deep South Delta and Black Belt areas, exported a net of 1.5 million migrants from their rural areas in the 1950's but only 164,000 from 1960 to 1966. This is an appropriate place to make clear the point that despite the rise of public concern over rural-to-urban migration from the South in the mid-1960's, the force of the trend had been greatly reduced by the time public awareness developed.

The division that has done least well since 1960 in retaining population in rural areas is the West North Central States. These States contributed more rural net migration to other areas than any other part of the country in the 1960 to 1966 period -- some 300,000 persons. By contrast, in the 1950's each of the three census divisions of the South had more rural outmigrants than did the West North Central Division. Even so the outflow from the West North Central States is reduced both in number and rate compared with the 50's.

To illustrate recent regional differences in population change more readily, a map has been prepared that divides the counties of the Nation into three groups: (1) those that have grown in population from net inmigration, as well as from such excess of births over deaths as they may have, (2) those that increased in population but had some net outmigration to other areas, and (3) counties that declined in total population. (Figure 4.)

The growth rates of the counties having inmigration vary considerably, but given the close association of economic and population development, most of these areas can be said to have generated more employment in recent years than the local labor force could handle. Much of the Atlantic Metropolitan Belt is evident in this respect, and there are many growth counties in the Southern Piedmont and the Middle Tennessee Valley. West of the Mississippi there are a surprising number of inmigrant counties in eastern Oklahoma and northern and western Arkansas, where very heavy loss of population was the norm in the 1950's. Some of the growth here is connected with retirement and recreation developments, and some with the very real progress in industrial employment that has come to this part of the country. But the indicated population turnabout is so dramatic that I find some people familiar with the area skeptical of the level of growth indicated. In Kansas and Missouri, the actual growth level of inmigrant counties has often been small because of the negligible amount of natural increase of population available. The broadest areas of inmigration are found in the Far West, usually in a continuation of past patterns. Inmigration areas are a broad mixture of metropolitan and nonmetropolitan territory, but with the extended influence of many metropolitan regions evident on the map, such as Atlanta, Houston, Dallas, or Minneapolis-St. Paul.

In marked contrast to the inmigrant counties are those that have declined in population since 1960. There are about 1,100 of them, or more than a third of all counties, but this is an improvement over the 1950's when 1,500 counties decreased. Immediately evident is the heavy concentration of these counties in the center of the country. In the east, the broad core of the Appalachians is still visible as a declining region, and there are many losing counties yet in the Southern Coastal Plain, where there is insufficient industry to absorb continued losses from agriculture. But these areas are small in comparison with the vast region extending from the Rio Grande at about Del Rio, Texas, northeastward to the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, west along the Canadian Border to central Washington, and then southeastward to Rio Grande again. In this territory, involving a third of the land surface of the country, the great majority of nonmetropolitan counties, are still in a state of population decline. These declines are typically occurring on community structures that are already affected by past outmigration, and on local population bases and governmental units that are already small both in total size and in density. The population losses in this huge area are generally understandable, given such features as the continental climate, the increasingly extensive nature of much of the agriculture, the predominant lack of timber resources, the dearth of sizeable population centers and markers, and the lack of navigable water. But, how long can further population decline continue without impairing the ability of the region to conduct the productive agriculture that characterizes most of it?

Intermediate between the declining and the inmigrant counties are many that have had net outmigration, but have still achieved some population growth. Many of these have previously declined in population and their present status is one of improvement. Some are former inmigrant areas that have lost part of their past growth impetus, while others have consistently been areas of both modest growth and moderate outmovement.

The general national picture that emerges since 1960, is a marked reduction of population loss---and even resumption of population gain---in many areas that have large numbers of the rural poor. This is not a backing up of population, stemming from lack of opportunity elsewhere, for it has occurred during a period of high national employment. The areas now having the greatest difficulty in retaining population are the vast open lands of the midcontinent, plus the mountainous Rockies. Here the mass of the rural population is work oriented, reasonably well educated and housed, and unsaddled with an ethnic minority status, but economic and other attractions are apparently inadequate for population retention in nonmetropolitan areas.

The relation of gross migration to net migration.--The migration figures discussed have all related to net migration. They do not tell the whole story, but so often we have nothing more to work with. In recent years two studies commenting on data on gross in and out migration have led to a conclusion regarding the pattern of outmovement from economically distressed areas that has been influential -- at least in Washington -- in shaping attitudes toward the likely impact of economic development on gross outmigration. I am referring to independent studies by Ira Lowry and by John Lansing and Eva Mueller [5,3]. They noticed that gross outmigration rates from areas of substantial net outmigration were no higher than those of areas that had net inmigration. Rather, differences in net migration for depressed areas and growing areas seemed to be due solely to variations of the rate of gross inmovement. Acceptance of this broad generalization engenders a rather fatalistic attitude toward the potential for intelligently affecting outmigration. It makes gross outmigration appear to be so powerful and immutable a force that it flows without respect to economic or social conditions, and cannot be modified by programs aimed at economic development.

Recently I have investigated the patterns of gross in and out migration in a more detailed manner than was germane to the larger work purposes of the Lowry study or than was possible from the small Lansing and Mueller sample. Gross in and out migration rates and net migration rates were computed for all of the 500-plus State economic areas for the period 1955 to 1960.[7/] The areas were grouped by their net migration rates. Then mean gross migration rates were computed for each group. Two major points emerge from this work that add to our knowledge of the relationship between gross and net migration and that greatly modify the overly simplified concept of the relationships inferred from Lowry and Lansing and Mueller.

1. Gross outmigration rates are related to the level of net migration. True, they do not vary as widely as do gross inmigration rates, but they are neither uniform nor randomly distributed. The curve of gross outmigration plotted on net migration is a U-shaped curve, gross outmigration being highest in areas of heavy net outmigration and in areas of heavy net inmigration. They are low in areas of negligible net movement -- in or out. Furthermore, the frequent equality of the gross outmigration rates of prosperous areas of net inmovement with those of depressed areas of net outmovement is not associated with the same factors, conditions, or motivations, and should not be equated in meaning.

For example, the gross outmigration rate from the San Francisco Bay area, a huge diverse prosperous area that is so often touted as one of our most uniquely attractive, was nearly the same as that from the Black Belt of Alabama, one of our more classic areas of rural poverty and racial discrimination. Would anyone maintain that people are compelled to leave the San Francisco area for economic reasons except in the rarest of cases, given the very wide range of occupations and industries and the high wage scale, in contrast to the narrow industrial mix and lack of net employment growth in the Black Belt? Is it logical to equate in their significance for national policy the surface similarity of gross outmigration rates from the two areas? I think not. Many other prosperous areas of substantial gross outmovement prove on inspection to be military or college centers with large temporary populations and resultant high turnover.

2. The second point is that variation in gross outmigration is the major component of variation in net migration among areas that have had moderate to heavy net outmovement. This has not been previously understood. Of the difference between 1955-60 net migration rates for areas of moderate net outmovement and areas of heavy net o outmovement, about 3/4 was caused by greater gross outmovement from the high net outmigration areas and only 1/4 stemmed from lower gross inmovement to such areas. Thus gross outmigration is not as lacking in response to depressed economic conditions as we have been led to believe. And the corollary of this would seem to be that increased economic opportunity in areas of need would seem to be that increased economic opportunity in areas of need would reduce gross outmovement stemming from lack of basic employment activity.[8/] Changes in gross inmigration only comprise the principal determinant of net migration levels in areas of net inmovement or of low net outmovement -- areas that those concerned with rural economic development policy are not especially worried about.

Population change in small towns -- Another facet of change in non-metropolitan areas of the country around which there have been conflicting claims and beliefs is the trend of small towns. The fact that the term "small town" has no standard meaning is part of the confusion, for one person may think of places of only a few hundred people when he depicts small towns, while his listener may have a mental view of a place of several thousand population as the typical small town. These distinctions are vital, for the various size classes of small towns have typically fared rather differently in

CHARLOTTE FAIR HOUSING

Something to think about!

"No, I can't show you the house. We don't sell to Negroes."

"Why don't you stay with your own kind? You'll be happier."

"You'd better sell before the bottom drops out. If you need any help call ..."

"That's an integrated neighborhood. You don't want to live there."

"All mankind, created equal is one noble human race"
Heinrick Heine

WE ALL PAY THE COST

Discrimination in housing is a fact of life with which members of minority groups must reckon in practically every municipality of the United States. It is most often directed against Negroes, although other minority groups, Puerto Ricans, Jews, Mexican-Americans, etc., are also victims. Though many people experience feelings of guilt about such practices few realize fully the cost each bears in this form of segregation.

A segregated environment makes it almost impossible for human beings to relate to each other as individuals. Children brought up in a segregated environment or false integration (bused students) tend to become one sided in their outlook or question the morals of a society that produced such a situation. Social problems result which are a burden to everyone.

Low quality housing is a major disadvantage borne by members of minority groups.

(1) Negroes are allowed to buy only the older homes from which whites have moved.
(2) "Slum landlords" convert houses to accommodate more people than the number for which they were designed producing overcrowding and dilapidation.
(3) "Absentee landlords" with no stake in the community and motivated only by desire for profit many times will not improve or keep-up their tenents' living conditions.

Minority groups pay as much or more rent than whites do for better homes in more desirable neighborhoods. The older homes which Negroes are allowed to buy often are considered financial risks by lending agencies, thus requiring larger down payments and shorter term loans

Housing segration results in segregated schools, churches and recreational facilities. It limits economic opportunity for millions of Negroes and other minorities. Apathy results from such conditions producing a loss of actual and potential human resources, a loss for the whole community.

Deterioriated conditions under which many minorities live and lower employmemt opportunities bring added burdens on taxpayers for more social services such as welfare aid, medical services and for the kind of fire and police protection given to more favored neighborhoods.

An intangible cost to any community where housing discrimination is a practice is seen in the tensions and fears felt by the majority when a minority family moves into a previously all-white neighborhood. Such fears also stem from false assumptions often held about the conditions or situations that entry of Negroes would create.

THE MYTHS OF INTEGRATED HOUSING

WHAT DO YOU BELIEVE ?

MYTH 1: Property values go down when Negroes move into an all-white neighborhood.

FACTS: This myth has been scientifically answered by the Commissic on Race and Housing chaired by the president of the largest mutual savings bank in the United States and composed of such prominent members as the president of the Philadelphia Savings Fund Society and Henry Luce. Twenty-six studies were made.

On the question of what is the eff of Negro entry into the suburbs upon property values 5,000 propert transfers were studied. They foun that in 44% of the cases values rose, in 41% they remained esser tially the same and in 15% declined. Furthermore, the declines were small, only 9% at most, whereas the increases were up to 26%.

To explain the decreases, which occur largely in run-down neighborhoods adjoining non-white gettos, the "Review of the Society of Residential Appraisers" concludes:

> It is the mass exodus that temporarily gluts the market with offerings that depress prices...not the influx of the minority groups. After the first hysterical selling phase passes prices become stabilized and then gradually increase under pressure of Negro bidding.

MYTH 2: If one Negro or Puerto Rican moves into a neighborhood a multitude will follow.

FACTS: If residents behave normally and "stay-put", the neighborhood will not change radically. It is unfortunately true, however, that many real estate men, because of the higher prices they can get by selling to Negroes, often try to urge whites to move and will then only sell to Negro families. When residents do not panic, they won't loose money. When real estate companies adher to the law and sell property on an open basis both before and after a minority family moves in, the community will remain stable.

The chances of Negroes invading suburban areas "en masse" is highly unlikely. There are relatively few Negroes-even affluent Negroes-who are ready today to move into a strange, sometimes hostile white community and expose their children to such an environment. The fear, therefore, that vast members of Negroes will invade any given white community ignores completely the reluctance of people to leave the security of their "own group" and face hostile strangers.

MYTH 3: Negroes do not maintain their propert

FACTS: An examination of interracial housing developments and neighborhoods proves that Negroes maintain their property as well or better than their white neighbors. They, too, have a property interest in their homes and a civic interest in their neighborhoods. It is wrong to blame the Negro for the filth and poor conditions of slum areas where he is forced to live. These conditions are not caused by Negro occupancy. In the past, Negroes have moved into an area after it is run down. The Smallwood area near Johnson C. Smith is an area where Negro families own their own homes. This area has improved since Negro families moved in.

When you find a messy neighborhood, you usually find a neighborhood where most houses are rented. Negro or white, as human beings, we do not take care of property we rent as well as we would if we owned that property.

One of the practices used by blockbusters is to buy a house and then rent it to more than one family, or if zoning permits, divides the house into apartments, resulting in overcrowding and getting more old residents to sell their homes.

MYTH 4: Negroes do not keep up their mortgage payments.

FACTS: Earl B. Schwulst, president of the world's largest savings bank, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, Albert M. Cole, U.S. Housing and Home Agency administrator, and recent studies do not agree with this assumption. They indicate that Negroes are good mortgage risks and there is no evidence of any difference in delinquency records between white and Negro loans.

MYTH 5: The Social Prestige of my neighborhood will be lost if Negroes live there.

FACTS: A neighborhood gains prestige from its appearance, from the stature of those who live in it, from the quality of its community life--not the color of its inhabitants' skin.

MYTH 6: There will be lower educational standards if my child's school is integrated.

FACTS: The children of Negro families able to afford suburban homes have the same aspirations and motivations as white children. They do not suffer from the limited educational horizons of children from economically depressed areas.

In such areas, however, a genuine integration program can reduce any gap between classes, improved facilities, more experienced teachers, better remedial work and more extensive guidance and motivation resources. Thus conceived, a real integration for ALL the children.

MYTH 7: Crime and delinquency will increase in an integrated neighborhood.

FACTS: There can be no question but that slum conditions go hanh in hand with crime and delinquency. The way to protect a community from these social disease is to rigidly enforce housing, health, sanitary and police regulations so that every part of the city is conductive to decent living

MYTH 8: Intermarriage will increase in integrated schools and neighborhoods.

FACTS: Statistics show that in parts of the U.S. where there has been no segregation intermarriage is a rare thing. For most persons, similarity of social and religious backgrounds is the determining factor in the choice of a mate. It is unrealistic to conclude that closer association in school and neighborhood of itself provide the similarity of background conductive to intermarriage.

What is the law?

Under Federal law, every citizen has an immediate right to buy or rent any real property offered on the market without being subjected to discrimination because of race.

The open housing section of the 1968 Civil Rights Act (Title VIII, H.R. 2516) was adopted by Congress April 10, 1968, signed by the President April 11, 1968. It goes into effect in three phases:

1) Upon enactment, it applies to government-owned or assisted housing;

2) As of January 1, 1969, it covers all other housing except single-family housing sold or rented by a private owner who owns no more than three houses and rooms or units in dwellings of four or fewer units where the owner occupies one of these units. Large apartment houses with more than four units and new single family houses in new developments are covered;

3) On January 1, 1970, coverage will extend to all housing sold or rented through a broker or other agent. Dwellings containing no more than four family units when the owner occupies one and dwellings operated or controlled by religious organizations or private clubs are exempted from coverage.

The methods of enforcement follow:

1) Complaints to the Secretary of HUD, who would investigate and attempt conciliation (he would first refer the complaint to a state agency if it offered comparable rights and remedies);

2) Individual suits in Federal courts for punitive damages up to $1,000 (or state courts if state has a comparable law);

3) "Pattern or practice suits" brought by the Attorney General.

Discrimination by commercial lenders and by real estate boards or multiple listing organizations is also prohibited.

On June 17, 1968, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Jones versus Mayer that a portion (now Section 1982 of Title of the U.S. Code) of the Civil Rights Act of 1866 is a valid and enforceable law under the 13th Amendment and prohibits racial discrimination in the sale or rental of all real property.

The 1866 law, unlike the housing provisions (Title VIII) of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, applies to all real property (and personal property as well) and is not limited by the step by step extension of housing coverage in the 1968 law.

When the Supreme Court upheld the 1866 Act on the basis of the 13th Amendment, it thereby established a strong foundation for the constitutionality of the housing provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 and of other Federal legislation directed against private acts of discrimination in other areas of public accommodation and employment.

In Jones versus Mayer, for the first time, the Supreme Court laid a constitutional basis for Federal action against racial segregation in housing, not just discrimination. It declared that racial discrimination which herds men into ghettos is a "relic of slavery."

Citizens must be informed that the Court has ruled that the constitutional right to housing is precisely the same for Negro Americans and whites alike. Those subjected to racial discrimination in housing may sue to bring it to an end.

RESIDENCE AND RACE
Charlotte, N.C.

The housing pattern as it exists in Charlotte is segregated by race and by class, and the segregation is rapidly increasing. An arc drawn on a city map from the intersection of North Tryon and the City Limits west to South Boulevard inscribes an area which contains 96% of Charlotte's black residents. The areas of white residence inscribed in this arc, with the exception of Hidden Valley, are on their way to becoming all black neighborhoods.

The City's Programs of both Urban Renewal and Public Housing are two of the main contributors to the increasing segregation. Families from redevelopment areas are being relocated in all black and transitional areas. Public Housing, with 98% black occupancy, is being located and constructed in all black and changing neighborhoods.

Whether or not this trend toward a higly segregated city is slowed down or reversed depends upon several factors.

The National Fair Housing Law of 1968 and the Jones vs. Mayer Supreme Court Decision provide federal protection to those persons discriminated against in their search for housing. At the local level the Anti-discrimination Ordinance adopted by the City Council in June of 1968 has been applied to realtors, and complaints concerning discrimination in either the rental or purchase of housing can be filed under this ordinance with Mr. Jack Bullard, Executive Secretary of the Mayor's Committee on Human Relations. The local ordinance provides two avenues of redress to the injured party who may swear out a warrant for the arrest of the offender or file a complaint with the Mayor's Committee which by law has ninety days in which to mediate the complaint. If the mediation fails or is unacceptable to the injured party, then the case may still be turned over to the solictor for legal action.

The question which remains to be answered is whether or not people will use this local and federal legal framework. The tactics of delay and deception are still widely used by local realtors to block effective integration of all areas of the city. Only a deliberate and constant application of the law will effect changes in local practices.

Both the Mayor's Committee on Community Relations, 333-2236 and the Charlotte Fair Housing Association, 334-7071 will assist in documenting and filing discrimination complaints related to housing.

One factor which determines housing patterns in a city is economic. If there is no mixing of low, moderate and high income housing in a community, the possibilities for inter-racial neighborhoods throughout the community are greatly restricted. Discrimination against minority peoples in education and employment has produced a great disparity between median incomes of blacks and whites in America. When this difference in incomes is translated to the housing market, one can easily see how the higher income areas are presently immune to any great influx of black people. The present trend toward zoning in Charlotte and Mecklenburg County is to maintain separate and distinct income areas. The more restrictive and exclusive zoning classification, R-12 and R-15, are found predominately in the Southeast where both lot and house sizes push housing costs from $25,000 up. The R-6 and R-9 classifications which allow smaller lots and less expensive houses fill the other quadrants of the city. If this zoning trend continues, it will intensify the economic and racial segregation in the city.

Water and sewerage availability influence the growth patterns on the city's periphery. According to Phase One of the Annexation Study for 1964-1970* little thought has been given to the sewer needs in the Long Creek and Paw Creek drainage areas, which happen to be on Charlotte's West Side, the area of residence for Charlotte's black citizens. It is likely that the absence of adequate sewage services in this area will restrict new housing developments and increase the pressure on the housing market for black families.

In terms of the future, one project which deserves and needs the support of all citizens interested in open housing is the design for University City, near UNC-C. Plans for University City call for an economic mix of housing that will serve anyone related to the University from "janitor to chancellor" and, therefore, contain the possibility of a truly open community.

PREFACE

This summary is one of a series of publications of the Nonprofit Housing Center of Urban America, Inc., a national, nonprofit citizens' organization dedicated to improving the quality of life in American cities. Urban America is an outgrowth of the 68-year old American Planning and Civic Association, and in 1965 merged with the ACTION Council for Better Cities.

The Nonprofit Housing Center, financed by a grant from the Ford Foundation, is one of five centers that are components of Urban America. It provides technical assistance, through experienced staff and consultants, to nonprofit sponsors of low and moderate income housing and helps communities form revolving development funds and nonprofit development corporations. Four Protestant denominations--the Episcopal, Methodist, United Presbyterian, and United Church of Christ--have contracted with Urban America for help from the Nonprofit Housing Center on housing developments undertaken by their local parishes or denominational bodies. The Center holds training sessions for representatives of nonprofit groups and publishes books, brochures, and manuals, such as this summary.

Regional staff representatives of the Center are prepared to meet with nonprofit sponsors to provide guidance to them in determining their role in housing; in the assembling of the professional team to develop the project, such as the architect, attorney, and builder; in selection of the site and determination of the market to be served; in the processing of the proposed development, and in selecting the management for the continuing operation of the development after completion.

SUMMARY OF FEDERAL HOUSING PROGRAMS

FOR LOW AND MODERATE INCOME FAMILIES

Introduction

There are several programs administered by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) which are designed to assist nonprofit sponsors to provide housing for low and moderate income families. This summary contains a brief description of the more active programs. This information has been prepared in order that the programs may be readily identified and more easily understood. In addition, there is an explanation of the "subsidy principle" which is employed in producing low and moderate income housing under the programs currently in existence.

Subsidy Principle

The cost of housing is governed by the cost of various components (i.e., land, labor, money, and materials) which are essential in the production of dwelling or housing units. In order to produce housing for low and moderate income families at rates which they can afford, it is necessary to reduce the cost of one or more of these housing components. Since, in a free economy, the consumer must pay the "going rate" for the goods and services making up these components, a reduction in the cost of housing can only be accomplished by the use of some type of subsidy. Federal housing programs designed to serve low and moderate income families involve both a direct and indirect subsidy plan. The direct subsidy plan permits low rental charges to qualified tenants, since the Federal Government makes a rent supplement payment to the housing owner on behalf of such tenants. The indirect subsidy plan reduces the cost of producing and operating a housing project by making mortgage money available to the owner at a low rate of interest. The lower cost thus realized makes it possible for the project owner to charge less rent for the housing units.

Major Housing Programs

A. Section 221 (d) (3) Below Market Interest Rate Program (Indirect Type of Subsidy)

This program provides for mortgage financing in an amount equal to 100 per cent of the "replacement cost" of the project. The replacement cost includes the cost of the land, financing, and organizational expenses, legal and architectural fees, construction costs and other items normally incurred in the construction of a multifamily project. Mortgages may cover a period of 40 years and provide for payments to interest at a special low rate of 3 per cent per annum.

Banks, mortgage loan companies, or similar lending institutions which have been approved by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) advance money during the construction stage of the project at the market rate of interest (currently 6 per cent). When the project is completed and all the mortgage money is disbursed, a "final closing" is held and the interest rate is reduced to 3 per cent Immediately following the final closing, the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA), a separate organization under the Department of Housing and Urban Development, buys the mortgage from the private lending institution with special funds which Congress has made available for this purpose. This device enables the nonprofit sponsor to charge less rent to the low and moderate income tenant since the sponsor will have lower monthly mortgage payments as a result of the low 3 per cent interest rate applicable to the mortgage loan.

In order to guarantee that these rental units will be available only to low and moderate income tenants, the FHA has issued a regulation which provides that the Commissioner will establish, from time to time, income limitations which qualified tenants cannot exceed in order to be eligible to live in projects constructed under this program. In addition, the project owner is required to execute an agreement restricting the occupancy of the project to eligible tenants.

B. Rent Supplement Program (Direct Type of Subsidy)

This program is similar in some respects to the 221 (d) (3) Below Market Interest Rate Program. Mortgage financing may be obtained in the amount of 100 per cent of the replacement cost of the project through lending institutions which have been approved by FHA. The mortgage loan bears a market rate of interest (currently 6 per cent). Unlike the Below Market Interest Rate Program, the interest rate is not reduced at final closing, but remains constant during the full term of the mortgage. Since the Federal National Mortgage Association is not required to buy the mortgage from the construction lender, a private lender may be the mortgagee during the term of the mortgage. Under this program low rental payments by the tenants are achieved by the use of a rent supplement payment to the nonprofit sponsor on behalf of the tenants. Projects can be constructed only in communities that formally request to participate in this program.

The amount of the rent supplement cannot exceed the difference between 25 per cent of the tenant's income and the full rent that is required for the dwelling unit. In the event that a tenant's income increases after occupancy commences, the amount of the rent supplement payment must be reduced to reflect the change in income. When a tenant's income equals or exceeds 25 per cent of the economic rent, supplement payments will be terminated. The tenant, however, will be permitted to live in the project and pay the full economic rent.

Under the Rent Supplement Program, it is also possible for tenants who are willing to pay the full economic rent to occupy units in the project. This arrangement makes possible the economic integration of tenants with different levels of income. In no event may the rent supplement payment involve an amount less than 10 per cent nor more than 70 per cent of the rent due on the dwelling.

It is important to note that a rent supplement payment can only be made on behalf of a tenant who is unable to obtain standard, privately owned housing at a rental which is equal to or less than one-fourth of his income and who is also either displaced, elderly, physically handicapped, or occupying substandard housing. In addition, the income of prospective tenants must be within the limits applicable to public housing tenants in the area.

C. 221 (h) Program - Rehabilitation Sales

This program is similar to the 221 (d) (3) Below Market Interest Rate Program except that it is designed to achieve home ownership (rather than rental housing) through the acquisition and rehabilitation of substandard or deteriorating structures by nonprofit corporations for subsequent sale to low income families.

Low income families, under this program, must have incomes below the maximum limits applicable under the Rent Supplement Program.

The nonprofit sponsor can obtain financing up to 100 per cent of the appraised value of the property before rehabilitation plus the estimated cost of rehabilitation. The mortgage will bear interest at the below market rate provided for in the 221 (d) (3) program (3 per cent) and will have a maturity determined by the FHA.

The nonprofit sponsor has to agree to sell the rehabilitated dwellings to low income purchasers whose individual mortgages will also be insured by the FHA. The purchaser must pay at least $200 down which may be applied to the closing costs.

To be eligible for insurance under this program, a mortgage will have to cover property or properties containing five or more single-family dwellings of detached, semi-detached, or row construction. When an individual unit is sold to a low income purchaser, such dwelling units will be released from the lien of the principal mortgage. Unsold dwelling units will be held and operated by the nonprofit sponsor as though they were rental units in a 221 (d) (3) Below Market Interest Rate project.

The low income purchaser must buy the dwelling unit for his own occupancy and, if he does not continue to occupy the property, the special low rate of interest (3 per cent) will terminate and the interest rate will automatically rise to the highest permissible rate under the 221 program (6 per cent). However, the special low rate of interest will remain in effect if he resells the property to the original nonprofit sponsor or to a local public housing authority or to another approved low income purchaser.

D. Section 202 Housing for the Elderly or Handicapped

This program is a direct government loan program administered by the Housing Assistance Administration in the Department of Housing and Urban Development. It is different from most government housing programs in that the mortgage money is loaned directly by the United States Government. It is intended to provide housing for elderly (62 years) and handicapped persons whose incomes make them ineligible for public housing, but who cannot afford rental charges of housing in the regular market.

Maximum income limits have been established for occupancy which vary with different geographical locations. Related facilities such as dining facilities, community rooms, workshops, and health centers for diagnostic and emergency cases can be included in the project. However, the housing cannot be elaborate or extravagant in design or material.

Sponsors of such housing must be able to prove that they are unable to obtain the necessary funds from other sources upon terms and conditions as favorable as those under the government program.

A loan may cover 100 per cent of the total development cost of a project and can be repaid over a period up to 50 years. Low rents are achieved by a special low rate of interest of 3 per cent per annum.

The National Home Ownership Foundation Plan

In addition to the existing Federal housing programs available to nonprofit sponsors, the proposed plan to establish a National Home Ownership Foundation would open new opportunities for nonprofit sponsorship. This plan, proposed by Senator Percy on April 20, 1967, has not yet passed the House or the Senate and, therefore, is pending legislation.

The general purpose of Senator Percy's bill, S 1592, is to establish a National Home Ownership Foundation which is intended to help provide mortgage financing within the economic means of poor people. The proposal is based on the reasonable assumption that providing housing poor people can afford will require a subsidy. The bill proposes a new device to subsidize interest rates and is a highly technical piece of legislation dealing with financing.

The two main features of the proposal are:

1. A Federal guarantee for the payment of principal and interest on debentures to be issued in an amount up to two billion dollars by a Federally chartered National Home Ownership Foundation.

2. An interest subsidy to be paid by the United States Treasury to reduce monthly payments on individual mortgages.

The National Home Ownership Foundation would be created under the bill which would sell debentures in the private money market not in excess of a total of two billion dollars. Money received from these obligations would finance the program. The obligations would be guaranteed by the United States Treasury. A guarantee fee of up to 1/4 of 1 per cent would be paid to the Treasury.

The Foundation would use the borrowed money to make loans to various local nonprofit organizations which, in turn, would use the funds to construct or rehabilitate private housing for sale to low income purchasers.

The low income purchaser would obtain a mortgage loan from a private lending institution. The Treasury Department would pay monthly a portion of the interest on the mortgage on behalf of the low income purchaser through the redemption of mortgage coupons. In the event such a mortgage could not be obtained, a loan may be made to the homeowner by the nonprofit organization.

Under the bill, the Federal interest subsidy could not be in excess of the annual rate of interest set forth in the statute.

Payments made by the Treasury on account of individual mortgagors are repayable by the homeowner based on an income formula during ownership or by a lien which is established upon the sale of the property. The amount of the assessment computed by the Secretary of the Treasury would equal the sum of 5 per cent of any part of the adjusted gross income of such persons for the previous taxable year which exceeds 80 per cent, but which does not exceed 90 per cent of the 221 (d) (3) income limit for the area in which the person resides plus 10 per cent of any part of such income which exceeds 90 per cent, but which does not exceed 100 per cent of such income limit plus 15 per cent of any part of such income which exceeds such income limit.

The bill also requires the nonprofit sponsor to provide relocation resources and it establishes 17 separate criteria applicable to the making of a loan. It also provides for the purchase of foundation obligations by a buyer who may direct the funds from such obligations to be used in a specific area. Also, no state can receive more than 12 and 1/2 per cent of the Foundation's debenture authorization.

A GUIDE FOR HOME BUYERS

A HOME OF OUR OWN

A HOME OF OUR OWN

Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St.,
N. W., Atlanta, Ga. 30303. Nov. 1966

INTRODUCTION

To the average family, buying a house is the most important business transaction it will ever undertake. Yet few of us have a clear understanding of all that is involved in the process. For how large a loan should one obligate oneself? What neighborhood considerations should one take into account in looking for a house; what structural considerations in the house itself? What is the meaning of such terms as equity, title deed, mortgage? This pamphlet, prepared by Mrs. Jerry Dell Gimarc of the Southern Regional Council's Urban Planning Project, attempts to answer fully, and yet in language comprehensible to the lay reader, these and many other questions related to the buying of a house.

In presenting this information we have chosen a fictionalized account of the "adventures" of a Negro family considering home ownership for the first time. The course the Walters take is the same that any buyer must pursue. The definitions of terms and the check list for deciding on a good house are the same for anyone looking for a house in any neighborhood or city. There is special emphasis on the problems and complications which may face a Negro family who find their house outside traditionally Negro neighborhoods. At the end of the pamphlet is a list of other booklets and materials which may be helpful and of interest to the prospective house buyer.

This pamphlet is a work book. The reader will notice that various check lists are provided throughout the text. The boxes in the left hand margins should be checked as each step is completed. The pamphlet is designed to be used, marked on, and made valuable as your own house-buying guide.

1 WHY NOT BUY?

One evening after the dinner dishes were put away and the three children tucked into bed, Sue turned to Joe and asked, "Why can't we buy a house of our own?" Joe hesitated, for he had heard this question before, then replied, "Perhaps we could." And so began a long search as the Walters looked carefully at their desires, financial capability, future plans and willingness to undertake the responsibilities and costs of home ownership.

First, they wrote down the reasons why they wanted to buy.

☐ 1. MORE LIVING SPACE FOR THE MONEY THEY WERE SPENDING ON RENT. They had three growing children, and the family was probably not complete. The Walters lived in a small six-apartment unit in a two bedroom apartment; they were already feeling crowded, but apartments with enough space cost more than they could pay.

☐ 2. They wanted more PRIVACY. Their landlord, who lived nearby, dropped by too often to "look around," and the people in the other part of the apartment building were too near.

☐ 3. Sue wanted a GARDEN of her own. She could have used some ground where they were, but it didn't seem worthwhile to invest in plantings for someone else's property.

☐ 4. The Walters liked their town and intended to remain there. A house of their own would give the children a sense of STABILITY or PERMANENCY. Sue and Joe wanted to be part of a community where they felt they belonged!

☐ 5. Two of the children were already in school, but the neighborhood school was overcrowded and did not offer as much individual attention to the pupils as the Walters had hoped. In another neighborhood they believed they would find BETTER SCHOOLS.

☐ 6. Although the thought of the house as a "home" was uppermost in their minds, the Walters also considered the purchase as a sort of enforced savings, for they would be slowly building up EQUITY, or redeemable value, in the property as they paid for it over the years.

☐ 7. In the not too distant future Joe hoped to own his own small business, a garage, where he would be his own boss. He realized that the purchase of a house, with prompt and regular payments, would give him a good CREDIT RATING. When he was ready to establish his garage, he would have less trouble borrowing the money for his business.

Then the Walters made a list of the reasons why they should not buy.

☐ 1. They wanted to remain in their town, but it was quite possible that they might move out of the state in the next five years. If so, could they SELL the house quickly? If not, then they might own a house in one city and be living in another state!

☐ 2. They would have to take CARE OF THE HOUSE themselves if they owned it; would have to see about repairs, repainting, pay real estate and other taxes.

☐ 3. They would have to BUDGET carefully, making sure part of their weekly income was put aside to pay for monthly house notes. This might be difficult for a while until they got used to planning for bills and expenses on a monthly and sometimes a yearly basis.

Sue and Joe considered and reviewed the lists carefully. The list for buying was much longer and weightier than the one against, but they were concerned that they really might not be able to afford buying. They did not want to go beyond their means and fail to meet their payments. They decided they would take a careful look at their present income and expenditures to see how much they could spend on shelter. They had heard several simple formulas about how much a family could or should spend for (1) monthly house notes: 25 or 30% of the effective monthly income (the income for a month less deducted federal and state taxes, social security and retirement fund) or (2) total price: two and a half times the family yearly income. But the Walters wanted more than these simple formulas; they wanted to look closer at their own spending. To do this they made a list of their income, living expenses and obligations and gave as true a picture as they could from the records they had of the real expenditures they made for each item and of the income they could count on.

INCOME (Monthly)

Joe's Take Home Pay	$ _____

To figure monthly expenses from weekly figures, Sue and Joe multiplied the weekly figure by fifty-two (for the number of weeks in a year) and divided by twelve (for the number of months).

$$\text{Monthly} = \frac{\text{weekly x 52}}{12}$$

Sue and Joe added their fixed obligations to their living expenses and got a total which was their total monthly expenditures besides housing expenses. They subtracted this total from their total income. The difference was what they had per month for housing expenses.

HOUSING MONEY PER MONTH		$————

The housing money had to include:
MORTGAGE LOAN — Principal and interest
Plus Mortgage Insurance Premium (if FHA loan)
Hazard Insurance Premium
Taxes and any special assessments
Estimated maintenance and repairs
Estimated utilities — heat, light, water, air conditioning

Sue and Joe decided that in the next week they would learn what all the words meant — mortgage, interest, principal, equity, and so on.

They learned these definitions:

☐ 1. LOAN — the money they would have to borrow to buy a house; the money lent them either by a lending institution alone or lent by a lending institution and secured (underwritten) by the Veterans Administration or Federal Housing Administration for buying a house.

☐ 2. INTEREST — the fee they would have to pay the lending institution for the loan; the amount of money they would be charged for using the money borrowed. The interest was usually given as a per cent, like 5½% or 6%, and meant they must pay that per cent each year for the amount of money borrowed for the number of years borrowed.

borrowed. (Some payments also include small amounts for taxes and insurance.) At first, most of the monthly payment is taken up by the interest on the loan and only a small amount goes to pay back the money borrowed. The amount each month which must go to interest declines over the years of the loan as the principal is repaid. Each month a little more of the monthly payment is applied to pay the principal, and the owner's equity thus increases.

☐ 4. DOWN PAYMENT — the money given as partial payment for the house at the time of purchase.

☐ 5. MORTGAGE — agreement for a long-term loan where the lender has a claim on the property as security for the money he has lent and may foreclose, or take back the property, if the borrower does not pay the amount borrowed according to a time schedule.

☐ 6. EQUITY — the actual dollars and cents value that an owner has in his home — in effect, his investment — once all fees and charges against his property have been paid.

☐ 7. TITLE DEED — legal document stating that a piece of property belongs to the owner and was transferred to him from the previous owner with no legitimate claim remaining unsatisfied. When real estate is sold an investigation of the records must be made to show that the seller really owns the property, that it is without debts or ownership claims on the property.

☐ 8. TITLE INSURANCE — insurance to make sure that the lender does not lose money if the title to a property is defective. This insurance provides funds to defend the insured title against any claims (such as a forged deed or an undisclosed heir) and to pay the insured party (the lender, and at a small additional cost the buyer, can also be covered) against loss. This insurance cost is paid only once, at the time of sale, and is a per cent of the sales price.

☐ 10. TAXES AND SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS — property owners must pay real estate taxes which are based on the appraised value of the property. These taxes pay for schools, civic improvements, parks, etc. Usually, they, too, are part of the monthly payment to the lender. He charges the borrower part of the tax month by month, accumulates it, then pays the tax on the property for the borrower when it falls due.

☐ 11. CLOSING COSTS — these are a number of items which are charged to the buyer at the time of purchase. Often they are unexpected, and they must be paid for in cash. They include the cost of title insurance and the amount of hazard insurance premium due for the remainder of the year, the amount of real estate tax due for the remainder of the year, recording fees which are charged by state and and sometimes city offices to record the change of ownership, recording tax fees for states which require revenue stamps (tax stamps) to be placed on the documents filed. Besides these charges are the fees the lending institution may demand for the services of experts used to check items for borrower before he is lent money — title search or the check to see that the title to the property is in good order, property survey or the check on the dimensions of the property the lender may lend his money on, appraisal of the value of the property to guide the lender in deciding how much to lend, personal credit report on the borrower to see if he is a good credit risk, has a steady job and pays his debts. A fee for the outside lawyer who is attending to the seller's interest may be charged to the buyer. The buyer's own lawyer's bill is in addition and does not usually appear at closing.

The Walters were staggered by all the complicated terms, but gradually, after studying them for a while, they began to feel more comfortable with the definitions. One thing they were terribly curious about was how much the closing costs would be since they had to be paid for in CASH at the time the mortgage agreement was signed, and this was in addition to the CASH required for the down payment. They found these costs depended on the property and its locality but that the CLOSING COSTS are a per cent of the cost of the house. They usually range between 3 to 5 per cent. This varies according to the location of the house and the custom of the neighborhood. Who pays the costs can be negotiated. The seller may agree to pay some of them. The terms of payment can be established prior to the closing of the sale. The buyer's lawyer should check these terms and costs to get the best possible terms for his client.

After considerable discussion Sue and Joe thought they would be able to buy if they could find a modestly priced house and get a good loan. They had saved $1,500.00 which they could use for down payment and closing costs. Now they began to find out the difference between the three types of loans — conventional, FHA, and VA.

CONVENTIONAL LOANS — two-party loans between the borrower and lender. The "security" the borrower offers is the house he is buying and his own value as a credit risk, as a person who can and will repay the money lent. Usually the terms of a conventional loan are more conservative than for FHA or VA. This means that these loans require a larger down payment, sometimes a higher interest rate, and often are for shorter terms than in the other two classes. Conventional loans have more flexible terms. For people who are able to make a down payment of several thousand dollars they are easier to get. These loans are obtainable through banks, savings and loan associations, insurance companies and mortgage bankers. FHA and VA loans may also be obtained at the same places.

FHA LOANS — a three-party agreement. Besides the borrower and lender (as with a conventional loan) the Federal Housing Administration, a government agency, is involved. The FHA tells the lender that in addition to the borrower's credit rating and house it will offer further security for the loan by insuring the lender against the loss he might incur if the borrower does not live up to the loan agreement.

The borrower, however, is charged ½ of 1% more for this insurance. This money goes into a common pool to pay the losses when borrowers default. This additional security often enables the borrower to get a larger loan than he could ordinarily. At present the borrower, if approved, could get a loan for all but three per cent of the total price of the house. This means that up to a $15,000 loan, a borrower might have to pay only 3% as down payment. And in some cases the time allowed for repayment may be up to 40 years. The rate of interest which can be charged for the loan is usually smaller than for a conventional loan. A family, then, with little ready cash could buy a house under this type of loan.

VA LOANS — also a three-party agreement. This time the Veterans Administration guarantees repayment of part (60%) of the loan up to a maximum of $7,500.00. This extra guarantee means as with FHA that the lender may be willing to lend more than he would for a conventional loan. Also, the VA requires no down payment, if this is satisfactory with the lender. But not everyone can qualify for a VA loan. One must have served in the U. S. Armed Forces during World War II, the Korean War, or since January, 1955.

The FHA-insured or VA-guaranteed loans must be applied for at the time of application for a loan from a lending institution. FHA and VA do not lend money directly (there are some exceptions for VA), but they do guarantee loans from lending institutions under the special conditions mentioned above. The borrower fills out an FHA or VA application form when he applies for a loan. These applications are usually available at the lending institutions. (For comparison of the different types of loans, see the chart at the back of the book.)

The Walters studied their finances and the possibilities of getting a satisfactory loan and decided they would be able to afford to buy without undue stress on their present budget. Although they were paying a good deal for shelter, they felt that with their small regular savings for emergencies they could accept the responsibility of home ownership and long-term debt with little likelihood of defaulting or being unable to make payments, and they knew they would keep their house in good condition, well-maintained at all times. They had talked to enough FHA people and loan people to know that if they couldn't make payments and their house was repossessed they would find it very difficult to get a loan ever again. This then was a serious step for them, but one they felt was reasonable and justified.

But now that they had decided they would buy if they could find a house which suited them they began to wonder how to locate "their" house and how to tell if it were a good buy when they found a place which appealed to them.

2 | THE SEARCH

Early the next Sunday morning Sue and Joe grabbed the paper, got out a map of town, found pencil and paper and began looking through the classified section for "Houses for Sale." They decided they would become acquainted with what was available in all sections of the city for several weeks, go through some of the houses, drive by others, so they would get used to "looking." They read the ads and prices, checked the locations on the map, bundled the children into the car and set off.

They first wanted to look at the location of the houses. Joe had made up a check list of things the location of "their" house must have and Sue had added a few items of her own. They drove and looked and checked— "a" for excellent, "b" for good, "c" for fair and "d" for bad — each location according to these needs:

What did the other houses look like, were they nicely kept, was the house they were interested in the best of the group or one of the less impressive in the area? (They had read that it was better to buy a less expensive house in a good neighborhood than the best house in a poorer neighborhood, at least as far as resale value was concerned.)

☐ 2. NEARNESS TO WORK AND GOOD TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES

Sue sometimes needed the Walters' car to run errands; Joe didn't want to live on the other side of town from the large repair shop where he was depended on as foreman mechanic. He wanted to be able to reach his job by public transportation without spending several hours going back and forth.

- Was there a bus running near-by?
- What was its schedule?
- Would it take Sue to town quickly and conveniently at non-rush hours?

☐ 3. GOOD SCHOOLS

To both the Walters it was very important to know where the nearest grade school was and what sort of program it had.

- Was it overcrowded?

- Were its teachers well-qualified and interested in their teaching and their pupils (according to other parents in the neighborhood)?
- How far away was the high school and what sort of place was it? (After all, the children grew so fast.)
- Could the children walk to school without crossing streets with heavy traffic?

☐ 4. CHURCH
Sue wanted to make sure a church of their denomination was near so that the family could be involved in weekday activities as well as Sunday services.

☐ 5. CONVENIENTLY LOCATED SHOPPING AREAS
Sue would prefer being able to walk to local stores. Until they could afford a washing machine she would have to take the clothes to the laundromat. Was there one nearby?

☐ 6. RECREATION AREAS
The children would soon need a park or playground for games and activities.
- Were there any in the area?
- Could they be reached by the children without danger from heavily trafficked streets?
- Were these areas well lighted in the evenings and properly cared for by the city?

☐ 7. AWAY FROM HEAVILY TRAVELED STREETS
- Was the house protected from the noise and dust created by heavy traffic?
- Could the children walk to their activities without undue danger?

Sue and Joe found houses in several neighborhoods which got many more "a's" than "b's" and no "d's" at all. The following weeks were devoted to intensified examination of the houses offered for sale in the classified section of the paper. The Walters also contacted a real estate agent, told him their problems, price range and approximate neighborhood. They looked at many houses and from their experiences drew up yet another checklist to mark "a," "b," "c," and "d" for houses.

☐ 1. FLOOR PLAN—The Walters were looking for a house with a quiet area for sleeping set off from the rest of the house and buffered from the noises of other activities (by closets or halls). They wanted an area for entertaining and family activities (the living room and perhaps a dining room or den) which would allow these activities to proceed undisturbed by constant traffic to other rooms. They wanted adequate work space—the kitchen and a place for Joe to work on cars and keep his tools screened and private from the street and neighbors. They could find how well a house took care of these needs by drawing a floor plan and marking off the different areas in different colors. This showed easily how one area related to another and which areas overlapped. Sue and Joe wanted to make sure that the bathroom (or rooms) and kitchen could be reached from other rooms without going through bedrooms (a continuing disturbance in their present apartment).

☐ 2. ADEQUATE PLUMBING—Certainly Joe was not an expert and could not check pipes and the whole plumbing system, but he could and did apply simple tests to check water pressure by turning on the water in the bathroom lavatory, then flushing the commode. If the pressure fell there was not adequate water pressure. Joe also inquired about the water heater; he knew with his family of five he needed a 50-gallon tank, especially since they hoped to be able to afford an automatic washer soon and would need extra hot water. Joe asked about the guarantee on the heater, too; he knew it was false economy to put in a cheap heater which would soon give out. Some of the houses the Walters looked at were in new suburbs which did not have connections with the city sewerage system and were equipped instead with their own septic tanks. Joe always asked about this point, knowing that a septic tank poorly placed or inadequately drained or too small for its load was a danger to the whole neighborhood and especially to the people it serves. He decided he would contact the local health officer if he was seriously interested in one of these suburban houses and have him check the water and the septic tank.

☐ 3. ELECTRIC SYSTEM—In their present apartment the Walters had had trouble with fuses blowing frequently. They knew they had used too many electrical appliances for the current, but they needed each item. Their OWN house must have enough wiring. Joe read that the minimum wiring standard currently being recommended by builders and electricians calls for 100-amp service that offers both 129- and 240-volt circuits and a basic capacity of 24,000 watts. This would be quite adequate for their small appliances and even a window air-conditioner in the bedroom window. When they inspected a house Joe went to the main service panel (where the wiring enters the house), opened it and counted the fuses or circuit breakers. If he found only six he knew the electrical capacity would be no better than in their apartment. Even eight fuses were only a little better. Sometimes the capacity rating was written on the panel. Joe decided he would call an electric utility representative or an electrician to check the capacity for him when they thought they had found THEIR house. While Joe was looking at the fuse box Sue was counting the electrical outlets in each room. One, she knew from experience, was not enough. It was dangerous as well as inconvenient to string extension cords all over the room from the one plug. In their dining room it was even worse because appliances had to be plugged into extension cords hanging from the light socket.

Two outlets would be an absolute minimum in each room and four should be the norm. Joe pointed out that increased outlets only was no relief from blown fuses without increased amperage (current). Joe hoped the house they chose would have an outdoor self-grounding electrical outlet for power tools, one that was covered to protect it from weather and children. He liked to work outside, doing odd jobs and working on cars; an outside plug would be a real convenience.

☐ 4. SOUND ROOF—Although Joe was not a roofing expert, he could and did look for ordinary signs of wear. Dry, cracked asphalt on the roof meant a new roof would be required soon. He also checked the flashing (metal strip around the chimney and at the place where different roof planes meet such as at the junction of roof and gable) to see whether it was visible and in good repair. Joe knew that most roof leaks occur at the flashing points when the flashing is not tight. Joe looked for rain gutters and down spouts and their condition. At the point where the down spout lets water out to the ground the best provision is a gutter which directs the water into the street, but the minimum is a splash block or concrete scoop which splashes the water off and away from the house. Letting the water run along the ground with no other provision for drainage meant erosion in the yard or standing puddles to breed mosquitoes and undermine the foundation of the house.

☐ 5. PROPER DRAINAGE OF LAND—Joe knew from experience that lowlying land, improperly drained, caused disagreeable consequences for the houses located on it. Besides the mosquitoes and probable termites there was constant mud (which the children played in and Sue scrubbed up). Grass and flowers wouldn't grow well. And the water against the house kept the wood damp; damp wood rotted. Joe was so concerned that the house they bought have proper drainage he made a point of checking the land around houses they were interested in after the rains. Joe did not accept the assurances of house owners or real estate agents.

☐ 6. DRY BASEMENT—In a few houses the Walters were shown basements. This was not common construction, but they could see some advantages for it. It could be used for storage, for a children's playroom, and it would be cool and comfortable in the summer. They checked the walls for tell-tale signs of moisture and checked the walls again after a rain. They asked neighbors if they had had trouble with their basements. And finally they looked carefully, inside and out, to see whether there were any high water marks. Sue remembered faintly that she had read of water backing up from a creek into one residential section of the town; was this the one?

☐ 7. SOUND FLOORS—In the rooms with wooden floors Sue and Joe walked carefully all around, looking for boards which seemed loose, looking for signs of moisture and heavy wear, trying to determine the slant (an indication of the settling of the house), trying to feel for soft spots in the floor which might indicate a bad brace. They attempted the same survey on the floors covered in vinyl tile, noting especially any places where the tile was loose or where the adhesive oozed through. Then they stepped back to see if the different flooring materials created a harmonious effect with each floor flowing into the next rather than every room having a different floor.

☐ 8. CONVENIENT ARRANGEMENT OF THE KITCHEN—While Joe looked over the roof and basement, Sue cast a critical eye over the kitchen since that was where she would be spending a great deal of her time. She wanted a place which would be large enough for the family to have room to eat in and one where she could look out the windows and keep an eye on the children playing. She looked to see if there were plenty of cabinets and if she could reach them without climbing on the kitchen stool each time she needed a muffin tin. Sue played cook in the kitchens of the houses they were interested in, trying out the "work triangle" or the path from sink to stove to refrigerator and back. She tried how the refrigerator door would fit, opened cabinets and drawers to see how much they interfered with one another. And she looked for adequate ventilation. She knew an open window simply didn't function well enough to take away cooking odors and heat. She had vowed that in her new house she would have an exhaust fan in her kitchen. Finally she made an especially careful check for electrical outlets. She liked to play the radio while she worked in the kitchen and it would be an inconvenience if she had to unplug it every time she used the toaster, or the electric iron.

☐ 9. ROOM FOR FUTURE GROWTH—Sue and Joe together stood back from the houses they were considering and thought where they might add another bedroom in five years or so, or possibly a large family room. They wanted their house to be able to grow with them as their family increased and as the children's demands for space increased with age. The Walters realized that what seemed enough land was not always the deciding factor for there were ordinances and zoning laws which restricted building which was too close to the street or too close to the property line. They decided they must find out about these laws for any house they thought they might buy.

After five weeks of looking at houses, Sue and Joe became very observant "lookers" and the children bored travelers. The family almost despaired of finding a suitable place already built. Sue and Joe began investigating building their house themselves. Their first question was where to find the sort of plans they might like. They discovered they had several courses.

1. ARCHITECT — His plans would be drawn up to fit their own unique needs as they explained them to him. This would take some time and a specific understanding of their needs and desires themselves plus the ability to express them specifically to the architect. The architect would continue submitting plans until all changes had been made and the plans accepted. This was time consuming for architect and client. They found that architects ordinarily would not take jobs for houses on budgets as limited as theirs. The architect must spend many hours drawing the plans, and he is paid a per cent, 8% to 15%, of the total cost of the house. Since they wanted to spend about $10,000 to $12,000 on the house it was uneconomical for an architect to take the job.

2. STOCK PLANS—These are plans drawn up by an architect and mass produced and distributed. They are available through government agencies, home and garden magazines, building material supply houses, lending institutions, builders' magazines, department stores, furniture stores and home plan services. The Walters looked through several plan books and found a plan they liked. They considered sending off for it. The cost of one set of drawings was $30 to $35. The drawings consisted of a set of blueprints, four to eight sheets showing the floor plan, foundation plan, all four elevations, the roof and wall framing schemes and various construction details. Generally included with the blueprints are a list of specifications (telling how deep to make the foundation piers, temperature when pouring concrete, etc.), a list of materials needed, and directions on doing the actual work. Sometimes there is also a blank contract which could be used for the agreement between builder and contractor. As Sue and Joe studied further the possibility of building they were a little hesitant because they felt they knew so little about it. They learned, for instance, that the lot they bought must be perfectly level if ready-made plans were used; if it were not there might be complications when altering the foundation plans. They were afraid to pick the plan and the contractor and then oversee the construction. They wanted to be able to look at the house as a finished product before buying.

3. READY-BUILT HOUSE — A friend suggested that one alternative might be to buy in a subdivision where the builder was showing model homes. Here the Walters could look at a house like the one which would be built for them. The friend cautioned them, however, that when looking at the model, they should look beyond the glamour, find out how much space they really had, how many of the fancy appliances and light fixtures came with the house and which were extras—and besides that, if they were truly interested, get all the specifications down in writing. He also advised them to inspect the building lot rather than picking it blindly off a subdivision map. They began to look at the builders' homes and seriously considered buying one of them.

While looking at these homes they found that this particular subdivision was financed by FHA and that both FHA and VA required builders to conform to certain standard specifications before they would insure the builder's loan. During construction of these houses FHA or VA officials make inspections to see that they are built according to plans filed with FHA or VA and according to the government specifications. This doesn't mean that the federal government is guaranteeing that the home will be satisfactory in every way, but only that it must conform to minimum building requirements. The owner's main reliance must be on the reputation and integrity of the builder chosen to build the house.

3 | CLOSING THE DEAL

Three more months of looking passed before the Walters found THEIR house. At least they thought it was the perfect house for their family; it seemed to pass all the tests they had created for judging houses. But they wondered if perhaps they were compromising or lowering their standards because they were tired of looking. Before making their final decision, before putting up "EARNEST MONEY" (the payment which said, "Hold the house for me till I see if I can get a loan"), they wisely decided to contract for a lawyer. They had never before needed any legal help, and they were wary of being tricked by an unscrupulous lawyer. They had heard stories about such people. In the neighborhood where they were living they knew there was a Legal Aid Office, so they went to it. Since their income was above the level which would allow them to be eligible for free service, the Legal Aid Office could not help them itself. It could and did, however, give them a list of names of reputable attorneys who would be willing to advise them for a reasonable fee. The Legal Aid Office told them that they were very wise in requesting this advice now. Their office had many clients who came in for help AFTER they had signed a contract —at a point when Legal Aid could be of no help since the agreement was already signed. Sue and Joe found a pleasant and patient attorney who told them that he would be happy to help them with the technicalities of home purchase. They arranged in advance what his fee would be, and the lawyer agreed to payments spread over three months.

Sue and Joe followed these precautions before deciding on their home:

☐ 1. LAWYER—They retained (or hired) an attorney to look after their interests. The lawyer made his own title search to double check the one made by the lending institution. He looked over the Walters' preliminary purchase agreement to buy the property, making sure that there was a clause which said their money would be returned in case they could not get the necessary loan. He drafted their loan note and mortgage since it was not done by the lender, but he would have examined the mortgage had it been drafted by the lender. And on the final day of the signing of the mortgage papers, he attended the meetings as the buyer's representative and read and approved all documents before the Walters signed. The cost of such services depends on the locality; sometimes it is 1% of the total sale price. Joe wisely inquired first so that he would be prepared for this bill which was separate from the bill presented at closing of the transaction.

☐ 3. TITLE INSURANCE — The Walters knew they would have to pay a certain amount for insurance to protect the lender from loss should the title to the property prove defective because of a prior claim even after the most careful search. As they inquired about this insurance they realized that their part of the equity (that portion of the property they paid for through down payment and later increased by paying on the loan) would not be insured in this insurance. If a claim were brought, and the court did not rule in their favor, they would lose all they had invested. The Walters also found that it did not cost much more to buy additional insurance with the same company to cover their own equity. The insurance, which is paid only once and is part of the closing costs or lender's fees, usually runs several hundred dollars.

☐ 4. PROPERTY SURVEY — Ordinarily this is a part of the requirements of the lender and is billed to the borrower as part of his costs at closing. The land surveyor checks the boundary lines of the property to make sure they coincide with the description on the deed. He also determines whether the buildings are set back from the street and property lines the distance required by community law. The lender will insist that this be done before agreeing to lend the money, and Joe wanted to be sure that the land and house he intended to buy was the property which belonged with the contract. Survey fees range from $30 to $75.

☐ 5. APPRAISER — If the loan is FHA or VA underwritten, then government appraisers will look at the property and decide what is a fair evaluation of the property's worth. By law these valuations must be made known to the purchaser. Conventional lenders also have the property appraised and its value as a long-term investment determined. The amount they lend will depend on this appraisal and their limitation by law of per-cent-of-value (such as 80% of evaluation for a $15,000 home). These appraisals are not made known to the borrower-buyer although the fee for the appraisal is generally part of the closing costs. The FHA appraisal fee is paid by the seller. For a conventional loan, the charge, if any, is usually part of a general "lending charge." It may be that a first-time buyer like the Walters—or even an often-time buyer—may want to hire his own appraiser from a private firm to look over the property, inside and out. The appraiser considers neighborhood stability, analyzes the present housing market by checking the price of houses sold in the area recently after inspecting them and comparing them with the house the buyer is interested in and the price he is being asked for it. Sue and Joe felt that it would be money well spent to hire an appraiser. They found that for a detailed analysis the price range would probably be $75 to $100 and for a less detailed study about $30. The man they hired was an experienced appraiser who belonged to the Society of Residential Appraisers; he was also a member of the Appraisal Institute. They made certain that he was a member of these organizations; the Walters had been told that such men were usually reasonable and well-trained professionals who knew their business. They found out about these organizations by asking questions of real estate agents and at a near-by consumer education facility.

☐ 6. EXPERT'S ADVICE — Joe was still concerned about aspects of the house which required an expert's eye to evaluate. How sound was it structurally? Was the roof in good condition? What was the state of the plumbing and electrical wiring? He learned that an architect might be able to answer these questions. Joe's attorney suggested he ask the local branch of the American Institute of Architects, the Chamber of Commerce or various lending institutions to recommend architects to make this survey. He was able to locate a willing and well-thought-of architect who agreed to the fee of $15.00 per hour for his inspection. The architect looked at the exterior and landscaping as well as basic construction (foundation, beams, roof supports, flooring, windows, doors, insulation, wiring, plumbing and floor plan). Joe could have engaged for a small fee separate roof, electrical and flooring experts to do the same sort of job the architect did. He decided on the architect for his own convenience. Although Joe's lawyer said that the payment of the fees was negotiable with the seller, Joe said and his lawyer agreed that it was better to have the experts on the buyer's payroll where their opinions would not be influenced by another's interest.

☐ 7. TERMITE INSPECTION — To make sure that the house was free from termites the Walters contacted an exterminating company which gave the house a free inspection. It was agreed that if termites were found the seller would pay the exterminating fee, which generally amounted to several hundred dollars, and contract for permanent bonding. The permanent bond meant the exterminating company would check for termites each year for a small continuing fee.

While the Walters were paying for advice from various people with specific training, they had set up for themselves a check list to make their own inquiries about their possible future home and its neighborhood.

☐ 1. ZONING — Sue was concerned about the zoning regulations for the neighborhood, whether they allowed for industrial sites, businesses and construction of multi-family dwellings. Besides that she wanted to know for herself how far back from the street property had to be set, whether it would be possible for Joe to have an office or small workshop at home when the time came for setting up his own business, and what, if any, other restrictions were on the use of the property. To find out about zoning, Sue first had to get the "legal description" of the property which means the lot number and addition. She finally found that she could get this "legal description" either from a copy of the tax receipt (which the seller had) or by calling the local auditor's office or city engineer and giving him the street address of the house they wanted to buy. Once she had the "legal description," Sue called the city zoning office (or planning commission) which gave her the regulations applicable to the property the Walters were considering buying. Sue also asked in the neighborhood whether these zoning regulations were strictly enforced or whether people with political influence could obtain special exceptions. She was glad to find that the property was protected by uniform application of the regulations.

☐ 2. FREEWAY CONSTRUCTION — With "legal description" in hand Sue went to the local planning commission and asked about future highway construction in that area. She inquired further about city plans for urban renewal areas, municipal facility construction, school construction and university expansion, anything which might affect the neighborhood where they wanted to buy. Although the planning commission couldn't guarantee that the neighborhood would be untouched for the next twenty-five years, Sue could see that they were working on plans which might take effect five or ten years from now. Their house seemed safe for the next ten years; none of the plans related to their neighborhood.

☐ 3. PROPERTY TAXES — The seller was willing when asked to show the Walters his tax statements which showed the amount of city and county property taxes he had paid in recent years, but to check once more Sue took the "legal description" with her and went to the tax offices (there turned out to be more than one). She asked about the tax rate, what use the taxes were put to in that area and what new facilities were being planned which would require new tax levies. From this trip she found that it would be likely that property taxes would rise in the next few years to pay for building a new school with an attached park.

☐ 4. CITY SERVICES — Sue asked the seller and neighbors about how efficient the garbage pick-up was and how it was paid for, about the sewage service and how it was supported; she checked street lights and inquired if broken or burnt-out lights were quickly repaired or replaced. She found where the nearest fire station was and how large the area was it had to serve. She located the nearest police precinct and asked neighbors if police protection were routine and satisfactory. After collecting answers from the seller and neighbors Sue called the various city services and inquired directly.

☐ 5. UTILITIES — From the seller Sue found what the approximate bills were per month for gas, electricity and water; then she checked with the utility companies to find what their rate per unit was for that neighborhood. The Walters wanted to know as definitely as possible what their monthly expenditures would be for utilities so they could budget accordingly.

☐ 6. INSURANCE — Joe knew that the lender required "hazard insurance," and he was curious about the rates for this insurance from various companies. The lender had suggested that the insurance be bought from a certain company, apparently an affiliated company, but Joe decided he would see if he could get the same coverage elsewhere for less. This was his privilege. Joe also wanted his own equity in the house covered and not just that part of the value of the house which was the lender's. Joe found that different locations meant different insurance rates—that the distance from the house to the nearest fire hydrant, the location and service area of the nearest fire station, and the construction of the house (frame, brick or stone) along with other factors all had a part in determining this rate. Joe also found that with just a little added to the monthly premiums for hazard insurance he could have a "homeowner's policy" which included not only fire and wind insurance but also insurance on personal belongings and insurance to cover liability for injuries others might suffer while on the Walters' property. Joe was still able to have the insurance premium prepaid as part of the monthly note on the house.

After checking off all these questions, Sue and Joe felt they had a pretty good idea of the true state of the house they wanted to buy, how much it would cost to live there and what might happen to the neighborhood over the next ten years or so. Finally they took a good hard look at the prospects of continued maintenance. They knew they would have to set aside a little each month for the maintenance jobs when they came. Fortunately, Joe was handy with tools and could do many repair jobs himself, but they knew the house would have to be repainted every few years for the house was frame, not brick. The yard needed some additional landscaping, and they would have to buy gardening tools. The roof would have to be replaced within the next ten years, and parts of the interior would soon need repainting.

All of this would not be cheap. And they had no intention of falling for the sales talk of the bogus repairmen who tricked people out of their money and sometimes their homes by pretending they would make repairs for little money and long terms but actually doing no work and taking the money. Joe said when they needed help on repairs for the house they would go to an old and established firm—after they had checked its reputation and called to see if there were any complaints filed against it with the Better Business Bureau.

With that last thought about the responsibilities for maintenance the Walters were ready to go ahead with the sale. They signed the preliminary sales papers and made their partial down payment (the "earnest money" which would be applied to the full down payment once the loan was approved) AFTER THEIR ATTORNEY HAD LOOKED OVER THE PAPERS. They applied for and secured an FHA-insured loan; they could not afford a very large down payment.

On the big day for the final settlement, the seller and his attorney met with the Walters and their attorney and the lender. The Walters' attorney read over the mortgage agreement and loan note and advised them to sign both. This done, the lender handed the seller a large check. Then a list of closing costs was presented to the Walters which included:

— fee for recording the deed
— fee for registering the title — fee for recording the mortgage — real estate transfer tax
— part of real estate tax remaining for the rest of the year (if prepaid by the seller)
— part of insurance payments for the remainder of the year (if prepaid by the seller)
— gas or water bills (that part, if any, prepaid by the seller)
— title insurance (includes charge for title search; the premium is paid only once)
— mortgage service charge (charge to pay for such expenses as inspections, preparing loan papers, lender's attorney's services, photographs, notary fees, processing fees, commission and such overhead as stationery and postage); usually 1% to 2½% of the sum borrowed — property survey (to determine lot lines and usually required by lender) — credit report (required by lender with charge passed on to borrower; cost about $10.00 for long-term residents of a town).

In total the closing costs for the Walters were about $500.00. They paid them along with the rest of the down payment from their savings and were told that the house would be theirs—in only 25 more years!

That evening the Walters celebrated with just the family. They had worked hard to select a house which would serve their needs, retain its value over the years of the loan and afterwards, grow with the family and be sound and comfortable and pretty. They had found such a house, they believed, and now it was theirs. Certainly, they knew they would have to be responsible, keep the house well painted and repaired, make their monthly payments on time. All this would mean careful budgeting. But they had considered the disadvantages and demands in advance and were willing to devote the time, thought and money required of home owners for the sake of a better home.

After the Walters were settled in their new home they were considered local experts on house buying among their old friends. When asked for advice, when friends wondered if they should expect any trouble if they bought or built in a neighborhood of another race, Sue and Joe gave them some suggestions. They understood the problems since they, too, were Negroes.

1. Although there is not a national fair housing law which requires that a seller not discriminate against a prospective buyer because of race or color, creed or national origin, there are some houses which must be sold on a non-discriminatory basis. These houses are those which have received FHA or VA assistance in construction (one-or two-family dwellings which have been occupied by the owner are not under this ruling) or those which have FHA or VA financing. The FHA or VA repossessed houses are often good buys. Anyone interested can obtain a list of properties acquired by FHA for resale in their state by contacting their state FHA office. For VA repossessed houses the buyer must contact a real estate agent to learn which properties are available.

2. Sometimes builders and sellers try to impose a "color tax" on non-white buyers. Checking to determine the truth of suspected discriminatory treatment could be organized through the state Council on Human Relations or the nearest Urban League office. After an interested Negro couple looked at a house, learned whether it was for sale, what price was asked, what financing terms were suggested by the seller, they would turn this information over to their white checking couple. This couple would give information very similar to that given by the Negro couple as to number in family, job, length of time working, financing needs, housing requirements, age, etc. The white couple, giving the seller this similar information, would then find out if the house were for sale, the price, financing, etc. If the answers varied considerably for the two couples, then their careful documentation of the questions, answers and treatment might constitute a strong case to prove that discrimination existed or that a "color tax" (higher price for the Negro prospective buyer) was being exacted. This information would only be useful directly for that property which is under the President's Executive Order 11063 forbidding discrimination in government aided or financed housing.

3. If the seller or builder or lender is seen to be discriminating where there is a legal basis to sustain a complaint, those being discriminated against should write the regional VA or FHA office, the national VA or FHA office, the regional U. S. Commission on Civil Rights and the state Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. Any results follow long delays and continued prodding by the aggrieved party; even if no action is taken in time to assure that the minority group buyer is able to buy the property against which the complaint was filed, the complaint will probably make it easier for a Negro to buy similar property next time.

4. It may be that the neighborhood in which the Negro homeseeker is interested is hostile to minority groups. If so, some precautions Negroes might take are:

A. Do not appear too interested in the house you are looking at. Intense interest might cause panic in the neighborhood and give these people a chance to unite for disagreeable hostility. Instead, if a Negro homeseeker is interested, it might allay fears to have a white appraiser or white friend make the careful inspection of the house.

B. Engage a lawyer when serious looking and/or consideration of property begins. Forward all papers or information received to this lawyer. Have your lawyer make a careful title search; make sure the property survey is carried out and all checks possible on the property are made. The lawyer should examine carefully the preliminary sales agreement, the sales agreement and the agreement with the lender. These transactions must be as tightly drawn as possible.

C. If the house is not subject to the non-discriminatory directives of FHA and VA, then it may be necessary to use the services of a white friend to act as decoy buyer. In this case, he could buy the house himself for a price agreed on in advance with his Negro friend, who would become the owner by assuming the loan. The first buyer should first be released from liability for the loan; this places the full responsibility for repayment on the shoulders of the Negro buyer just as if he had contracted to buy the house from the initial owner.

D. Once the house is purchased and it appears that there is hostility in the neighborhood, notify the local law enforcement officials of any fears so that they may provide protection of property and person. In areas where the local police have not given equal protection to Negroes, then it would be wise to notify the nearest state and federal officials. It is unlikely that these officers will provide actual protection, but they would be alerted to the possibility of violence. Although violence is less likely now than in the past, even in the South, the new Negro resident in a predominantly white neighborhood should be prepared for its eventuality. Besides law enforcement authorities the new home-owner should contact the nearest Council on Human Relations or similar group and clergymen in the new neighborhood. The clergy especially could be of great help in reducing tension.

E. On moving day, use a moving van if at all possible. It costs more than the move-it-yourself method, but movers can move the new family much quicker, and the van out front gives a look of stability and ordinariness to the operation. The first job inside the house should be to put up some kind of curtain over the windows to cut out curious neighborhood watchfulness. Once this is done, continue the unpacking operations quietly and proceed with ordinary activities, staying indoors if possible.

F. In the following weeks, entertain a minimum of visitors. Give the neighbors time to get used to the new family. White friends, clergy or white members of the local Council on Human Relations (bringing their children along to play) should call and be seen going in and out of the house. This could do much to relieve neighbors' fears and establish a pattern of behavior for the neighborhood.

Sue and Joe were glad to make these suggestions. They were not meant to alarm their friends or discourage them from moving into a neighborhood of another race. The Walters felt that they had a right to live where they could find the best housing for the money they could spend, in a neighborhood which best fitted their needs. If the neighborhood happened to be white, they knew difficulties could arise, and they thought ahead about how to cope with them.

	FHA LOANS	VA LOANS	CONVENTIONAL LOANS
What's the interest rate?	Currently 5¾%. With the ½% premium for FHA insurance, you pay an effective rate of 6¼%. On loans of $8,000 or less, there may be a service charge, too, up to ½%.	Currently 5¾%.	Varies with lenders, locality and time. Also may vary by type of property and size of your down payment. Rates are in the 6½% minimum range.
How long to repay?	10, 15, 20, 25, 30 or 35 years, but no longer than three-fourths of FHA's estimate of the remaining economic life of the structure.	Up to 30 years, but no longer than the estimated economic life of the structure.	Generally 20 to 30 years, but sometimes under 15 years.
What's the most you can borrow?	On a home you live in yourself, $30,000.	No limit as such. But you cannot pay more than VA estimate of "reasonable value."	No dollar limits. But there are percent-of-value limits. See below.
How much of house value can you borrow?	For a house okayed by FHA before construction or one completed longer than one year: 97% of $15,000 plus 90% of the next $5,000, plus 75% of value over $20,000. For other houses, use 90% of the first $20,000 plus 75% of value above $20,000.	VA allows 100% loans. Actually, how much you can get depends on how much a lender will risk on the strength of VA's maximum guarantee of $7,500.	Depends on the lender. Usual limits: Insurance companies 66⅔%-75% Savings & loan associations 80%-90% Most banks 75%
How big a down payment?	For homes valued $8,400 to $10,000, at least $300 down. For those valued $11,700 to $13,300, at least $400 down. Others more.	May be nothing but closing costs.	Difference between maximum loans as above and purchase price.
Prepay (paying the loan ahead of schedule) without penalty?	Yes, up to 15% in any one year.	Yes.	Some restrictions on prepayment likely.
Put a second mortgage with it?	No.	No.	Yes.

FHA AND VA REPOSSESSED HOUSES

Repossessed houses are those houses which have been foreclosed (or taken back) by the lender because the borrower has failed to repay the loan (or money borrowed). FHA and VA loans mean the federal government backs up the loan and assures the lender repayment. After the government's obligation to the lender is satisfied by paying off the loan, the government (the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration) takes possession of the house and resells it. VA and FHA repossessed houses come under President Kennedy's Executive Order 11063 forbidding discrimination in the sale and rental of houses. Much of this property is well built and can be purchased for a reasonable price.

FHA REPOSSESSIONS: When the FHA repossesses a house, it takes a number of steps which eventually lead to the house's resale:

1. The repossessed house is APPRAISED and a reasonable selling price is fixed. The appraiser tells FHA what repairs, if any, need to be made to make it conform to FHA standards.
2. These repairs are made.
3. If there are many repossessed properties in an area, a MANAGEMENT BROKER is hired. This man (or firm of real estate agents) supervises the repairs and keeps the house in shape while it is on the market.
4. After the house is fully repaired, it is publically advertised for sale (in Atlanta, Georgia, in the Sunday Journal-Constitution) and listed in the monthly FHA-ACQUIRED PROPERTIES mailing list. (This list may be obtained by writing the nearest state FHA office and requesting it.)
5. Only after public notice is given can the property be shown or sold.*

Interested persons must deal through a real estate agent or the management broker. This agent or broker contacts the state FHA office to make the offer to buy. In cases where there is a management broker, the real estate agent must contact him and deal through him.

After the public listing in the paper, offers may be presented to the FHA office. Usually several offers are received at the same time. When

*The management broker knows in advance which houses are FHA repossessions and what progress has been made on repairs. He has the key to the house. Sometimes he shows the house prematurely before the public listing, which is contrary to FHA policy. With the management broker's advantage of prior knowledge of property and approximate time of its sale, his clients are often able to have their bids in first. This means that the Negro buyer may have to contend with double discrimination if the agent of his choice is not the management broker.

this occurs the FHA decides which offer to consider first by seeing which ones show a willingness to buy the house at the FHA-appraised price and for the necessary down payment (usually 3% of the sales price). If the offers all indicate willingness to accept the appraised price and submit the necessary down payment and are accompanied by an appropriate earnest money deposit in the form of a certified or cashiers check made payable to the FHA, then the order of the offers is decided by lot. Only after drawing for order of consideration does the FHA run a credit check on the applicants.

FINANCING for FHA-acquired properties may be any one of three ways:

1. Purchaser pays all cash.
2. Purchaser obtains a conventional loan.
3. If private financing is unavailable under the first two means, then the FHA may accept a mortgage given by the purchaser.

VA REPOSSESSED HOUSES are handled in approximately the same way as the FHA repossessions.

The houses are appraised before foreclosure and a fair market value is assigned to the property. Repairs are made if necessary, but the houses can be bought "as is." If they are bought "as is" then the prospective buyer may, with VA approval, occupy the house for rent during the closing of the sale. The houses must be bought through management brokers; a buyer's broker must place his offer for the property through the management broker if there is one. The management broker cannot sell the house until the price has been established and the list of available properties with price and minimum down payment sent to all real estate agents requesting it. (The list is not ordinarily available to private individuals.) After this list is published, offers may be submitted to the VA (through the management broker), and all offers submitted during the first 48 hours are considered as having arrived at the same time. The VA then considers the offers in order of being most advantageous for the government; that is, which offer is willing to make the largest down payment, requires the shortest repayment time and is the best credit risk. Offers are considered in order of their risk, with minimum risk being considered first. In all cases, a veteran's offer comes first. After the first 48 hours, offers are considered in the order they are received.

If a prospective Negro home buyer is interested in the FHA-repossessed properties and he feels that he is being discriminated against by the real estate agents in the area or by the management broker, he may make a complaint to the FHA field office. "Discrimination" could be refusal to show an FHA-acquired house, or refusal to sell such a house. Proof of discrimination may come through the use of "checkers" or white "buyers" who go to the same real estate agent who has told a Negro buyer that no FHA-acquired property is available. If the checkers are told that repossessed property is indeed on the market, that woud constitute discrimination. Another proof of discrimination would be if a real estate agent told a Negro buyer that the FHA-acquired house he was interested in had an "offer in process." The Negro buyer could check with the FHA field office to see if for that property an offer was in process. If it were not and the real estate agent had lied, then that would be proof that the agent was discriminating. The complaint of discrimination should be backed with as much evidence as possible, something more than just a "feeling." To prove discrimination is often difficult; it requires a knowledge of real estate practices and legal rights which the layman often does not have. The home buyer could turn for help in building his case to his local Legal Aid Society, NAACP chapter, Urban League office or Council on Human Relations. (See page 42 for addresses).

Researchers who worked on this pamphlet found it very difficult to extract from FHA a written description of complaint procedures in cases of alleged discrimination. The VA could not provide any such written description at all. FHA procedures apparently have not been given wide distribution and anyone asking the agency is likely to be given the impression that the procedure is, at best, vaguely defined, involving only that a written complaint be submitted to the local field office.

In reality, Executive Order 11063, sections 51601-51612 (which outline these procedures) is very specific. These sections provide, in part, that: (1) all complaints be submitted in writing by the individual or an officer of the organization on whose behalf it is filed, using FHA form 797 where possible; (2) that the responsibility for processing the complaint rests with the Insuring Office Director having jurisdiction over the housing involved; (3) that FHA must make every effort to properly dispose of the complaint within 30 days and that when more time is needed preliminary reports should be submitted giving reasons for the delay and establishing a new terminal day; (4) that no public statement be made concerning the details of a complaint pending a final decision on its merits; (5) that acknowledgement of the complaint be made by the Insuring Office Director within two working days of its receipt; (6) that the alleged violator after first being informed of the complaint against him, also be notified not to take any action that would cause the housing accommodations which are the subject of the complaint to become unavailable to the complainant until the matter is properly settled; (7) that where the Director has found evidence of discrimination no further FHA applications of the violator be accepted for processing and any applications that he has in process shall be discontinued until either (A) the discriminatory practice has been eliminated and satisfactory assurances of future compliance have been received or (b) the findings of discrimination are reversed by the commissioner.

Complaint procedures through the VA—as already stated—were not available in written form. Through conversations with VA spokesmen, however, the process seems essentially to amount to this: If real estate agents in the area and the management broker will not show to a prospective Negro buyer the VA-acquired properties, then that buyer may appeal directly to the VA which may then sell the house to him without dealing through the broker. The complaint should be submitted to the local VA office in writing together with all other documents to prove the discriminatory act.

Both FHA and VA indicate that they have had few complaints; both were extremely cautious in discussing their procedures. Whatever the reason for such an attitude, this much is certain: complaint procedures should be adequately defined by both agencies and should be readily available at all local and field offices. In filing a complaint with either agency it would be advisable to send a copy to the regional U. S. Commission on Civil Rights and the state Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Redress for complaints in any event will probably be slow and reluctant. But if rights under the President's Executive Order are not used then they are really meaningless. And unless those who have been discriminated against are willing to file a complaint and to carry it through with persistence there likely will never be adequate complaint procedures.

PRESIDENT'S EXECUTIVE ORDER 11063

On November 20, 1962, President John F. Kennedy issued Executive Order 11063 which forbids housing discrimination in federally aided housing programs. The housing affected by the order is that:

1. owned or operated by the federal government (homes repossessed under FHA or VA programs fall in this group);
2. provided in whole or in part with the aid of federal loans, grants, advances or contributions;
3. provided in whole or in part by loans insured, guaranteed or otherwise secured by the credit of the federal government (all homes financed through the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration);
4. provided by the development or redevelopment of real property made available by a state or local public agency through federal financial assistance for slum clearance and urban renewal.

The order applies to all housing and related facilities provided with federal assistance made available after November 20, 1962. It also applies to all housing that is owned or operated by the federal government, no matter when provided (such as FHA and VA foreclosures). The order also covers all housing owned or operated by the Defense Department, as well as any housing that is financed with the aid of FHA mortgage insurance for defense personnel.

BUILDERS AND DEVELOPERS OF NEW HOUSING PRODUCED UNDER THE FEDERAL LOAN INSURANCE (FHA) OR GUARANTEE PROGRAM (VA) ARE PROHIBITED FROM DISCRIMINATING in the sale or rental of this housing if their applications for government assistance were filed after November 20, 1962, the time of the executive order.

HOME FINANCING INSTITUTIONS ARE PROHIBITED FROM DISCRIMINATING on the basis of race, color, creed or national origin in their lending practices with respect to housing loans which are insured, guaranteed, or otherwise secured by the credit of the federal government as the result of applications filed after November 20, 1962.

AN INDIVIDUAL HOMEOWNER SELLING HIS OWN HOME IS NOT COVERED BY THIS ORDER. The Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration have exempted owner-occupants of one- or two-family houses from the regulations issued by these agencies to implement the executive order. Lenders, however, doing business under FHA or VA programs may not refuse a loan to a qualified buyer in such cases because of race, color, creed, or national origin.

EXPLANATION OF TERMS

CLOSING COSTS: Charges to the buyer presented at the time of purchase. The charges are usually unexpected, and they must be paid for at the time of purchase in CASH. They include the cost of title insurance and the amount of hazard insurance due for the remainder of the year (if prepaid by previous owner), the amount of real estate tax due for the rest of the year, recording fees charged by state and sometimes city offices to record the change of ownership, recording tax fees for states which require revenue stamps (tax stamps) to be attached to the documents filed. Besides these charges are the fees the lending institution may pass on to the borrower for the services of experts used to check the investment value of the property and the position of the borrower before making a loan (title search or the check to see that the title to the property is in good order; property survey or the check on the dimensions of the property; appraisal of the value of the property to guide the lender in deciding how much to lend; personal credit report on the borrower to see if he is a good credit risk, has a steady job and pays his debts). A fee for the outside lawyer who is attending to the seller's interest may be charged to the buyer. In FHA loans closing costs also include a discount percentage which is, in effect, a service fee paid the lending institution for handling the loan. The items charged to the buyer at closing are negotiable. Sometimes the seller may pay part of them. In all cases the buyer can find out a few days in advance the approximate sum necessary for these costs by telephoning the lender or the real estate agent or by having the buyer's lawyer do so.

DOWN PAYMENT: The money given as partial payment for the house at the time of purchase.

EARNEST MONEY: The money given by a possible buyer to the seller to show that he intends to buy the house. With this money as promise to buy, the seller holds the house for the buyer while he is arranging for a loan. Usually in a preliminary sales agreement (have a lawyer check this agreement before signing), the possible buyer has his earnest money returned if he is not able to get the necessary loan.

EQUITY: The actual dollars and cents value that an owner has in his home; in effect, his investment once all fees and charges against his property have been paid.

HAZARD INSURANCE: Insurance against fire, windstorm and other specified natural hazards. This insurance is required by the lender and is usually part of the payment each month to the lender.

INTEREST: The fee paid lending institution for the loan; the amount of money the lender charges the borrower for the use of the lender's money. Interest is usually given as a per cent. The borrower must pay that per cent per year for the money not repaid the lender.

LOAN: The money borrowed to buy a house; the money lent either by a lending institution (such as a bank) alone or lent by a lending institution and backed by the Veterans Administration or Federal Housing Administration for buying a house.

Conventional Loan: Two-party loans between the borrower and lender. The loan is "secured" or backed by the value of the house being bought and by the credit evaluation on the borrower. This credit evaluation depends on the borrower's job, salary and prospects of remaining at the job and his record in paying past debts.

FHA Loans: Three-party loans where the Federal Housing Administration is involved as well as the lender and borrower. The FHA insures the lender against loss if the borrower fails to repay the loan. For this insurance the borrower pays ½ of 1% of the total loan. This money goes into a common pool to pay the losses when borrowers default.

VA Loans: Three-party agreement where the Veterans Administration guarantees repayment of part (60%) of the loan up to a maximum of $7500.00.

MORTGAGE: Agreement for a long-term loan where the lender has a claim on the property as security for the money he has lent and may foreclose or take back the property if the borrower does not pay the amount borrowed according to a time schedule.

MORTGAGEE: Another name for the lender.

MORTGAGOR: Another name for the borrower.

PRINCIPAL: The sum borrowed. When the borrower repays the loan, he pays each month a certain amount for interest on the money lent and for insurance and taxes; the rest of the payment is paid on the principal or the money borrowed.

TITLE: The right to exclusive or sole ownership.

TITLE DEED: Legal document stating that a piece of property belongs to the owner and was transferred to him from the previous owner with no legitimate claim remaining unsatisfied.

TITLE INSURANCE: Insurance to make sure that the lender experiences no loss if the title to a property has earlier claims to it. This insurance provides funds to defend the insured title against any claims (such as a forged deed or an undisclosed heir) and to compensate the insured party against loss. The buyer, for a small additional fee, may cover his own equity with title insurance. The insurance is paid only once, at the time of sale, and is a per cent of sales price.

TITLE SEARCH: The examination of records and documents concerning previous ownership to make certain that the title (or deed of ownership) to the property has no claims or debts against it.

HOUSING: A REGIONAL PLAN OF ACTION FOR THE SOUTHERN STATES

ABSTRACT:

Millions of American families are deprived of a suitable living environment. At the center of this problem is the lack of adequate housing. The scope and implications of the nation's housing ills were analyzed in considerable detail by the Presidents' Commission on Housing whose report was submitted to the President in 1968. The findings of the Commission and the results of comprehensive housing programs enacted subsequent to the Commissions' report have served to demonstrate the complex and multi-faceted nature of the problems of providing a "decent, safe and sanitary home for every American".

In light of the national housing problem, the issues facing the Southern Growth Policies Board and its constituent Southern states are:

- What are the peculiar housing problems in the South?
- What should the Southern States be doing to alleviate these problems?
- How should they go about it?

The purpose of this report is to recommend a plan of action directed at the solution of the South's housing problems.

Any meaningful and complete plan of action must conceptually incorporate several elements. First, and perhaps most important, there must be a clear and factual definition of the problems being addressed in order to help ensure that any resultant comprehensive plan is based upon the fullest understanding of those problems. Secondly, there must be statements of the broad goals of the plan -- statements which reflect long range objectives and thereby serve to channel efforts more productively, result in more logical courses of action, and provide bench marks with which to keep people and activities on track. Third, clear, measurable and attainable objectives must be set -- objectives which indicate where you want to go or what you want to accomplish. Fourth, there must be statements of related policies, that is, the practices or methods which will be used to accomplish the established objectives. And last, there must be a logical series of action steps to be taken to implement the plans.

The format of this report and the conduct of the housing study upon which the report is based are reflective of the concepts described above. Considerable emphasis has been placed upon the definition of the nature, extent and geographic distribution of the housing problems in the South. A detailed stratification of the problems at the time of the 1970 census is provided for each state, as well as projections of the need for housing units and housing subsidies through 1980. Based upon this definition of the problem, there follows a recommended plan of action including:

- statements of regional housing goals,
- statements of regional housing policies, and,
- recommended actions to be taken by the various states, either individually or collectively.

There has been no attempt to establish or recommend specific objectives on a regional or state level since the establishment of objectives implies the commitment of required resources -- a commitment which may only be made by the states themselves, following their own detailed appraisal of the problems and assignment of a priority to the solution of these problems.

This report utilizes various forecasts and estimates for the purpose of regional and statewide planning. This data is very useful for such a purpose but should not be used as the basis for confirming the effective demand or marketing possibility of a specific housing program or project.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS:

This project has been conducted in support of the Commission on the Future of the South's Human Resources and Public Services Technical Committee, one of four committees established by the Southern Growth Policies Board.

This report has been prepared by the Management Consulting Services Division of Coopers & Lybrand and is based upon the regional housing study conducted by Coopers & Lybrand with the assistance, support and cooperation of the Housing Task Force staff (Geri Harris, Coordinator) of the Southern Regional Council, George H. Esser, Executive Director.

The methodology underlying the regional housing needs analysis is based upon an approach developed by Coopers & Lybrand during the conduct of similar analyses for the Missouri Housing Development Commission and the Kentucky Housing Corporation. Public Use Sample computer tapes of the 1970 Census of Housing were provided by Oak Ridge National Laboratories, specifically Mr. Andrew S. Loebl, Director, Urban Research Group. Computer processing of these tapes was performed by the Urban Studies Center, University of Louisville, J. Douglas Nunn, Director, utilizing software made available by the Kentucky Housing Corporation, John W. Polk, Jr., Executive Director.

SECTION I

INTRODUCTION

Section I: Introduction

Historically, state governments have always played an important role in the area of housing. Tax revenues have traditionally been used to provide homes for the homeless. Building codes and zoning ordinances have had a significant impact upon the quality and distribution of housing made available. Similarly, usury laws have served to control the financing of housing. The establishment of local housing authorities and local redevelopment commissions has been made possible by state statute to take advantage of certain federal programs. State housing finance agencies have been created to implement and supplement federal housing programs, tailoring their own programs to the needs of the residents of their respective states.

Recent events have had a significant effect upon the expanding role of the states in the delivery of housing. The Housing Act of 1968 provided the means whereby state housing finance agencies could play a larger and more meaningful role in the administration of federal housing programs. During the first few years of this decade, these agencies have stimulated the production of thousands of housing units for low and moderate income families - housing units which might not have been built without state involvement. More recently, we see evidence of the New Federalism in the form of a revised federal leased housing program and an extensive direct cash assistance test program for administration by state agencies, as well as efforts to provide special revenue sharing funding of state-sponsored and state-administered housing and community development programs.

Against this backdrop, it is indeed appropriate for the Southern Growth Policies Board and its constituent Southern states to develop formal housing plans for execution either independently or collectively, as appropriate.

The express purpose of this study is to assist the SGPB states in formulating their respective housing plans by recommending certain housing goals, policies and actions, all of which are based upon quantitive analyses of the need for housing in the South. The data presented in this report is intended to provide an insight into the peculiar housing needs of each of fifteen Southern states. This data, which was developed and tabulated at the state level, is considered adequate for the purpose of identifying general courses of action for a state to respond to the indicated need for housing. In order to further refine these courses of action and formulate housing programs specifically tailored to the needs of any one state, it would likely be necessary to perform similar housing needs analyses for smaller political subdivisions -- probably at the county level.

In the process of developing action recommendations, an extensive review of existing housing-related legislation and activities was conducted for each of the fifteen states. Hence, the recommendations included in this report are offered as actions supplemental to those programs and activities currently being administered.

The report is arranged in Sections as follows:

Section II - An executive summary to relate the highlights of the housing needs analysis and briefly state the goals, policies and action recommendations relating to the housing problem as it has been defined.

Section III - A detailed assessment of the housing problems on a regional and state basis, presented in tabular form with supplemental narrative to assist the reader in interpretation.

Section IV - Complete statements of the regional housing goals and policies which are recommended for adoption by the various states and the Southern Growth Policies Board.

Section V - A detailed set of action recommendations for the States, both individually and collectively.

Section VI - Appendices, including

- an overview of the methodology used to develop the estimates of the need for housing.
- a brief narrative relating to the current status of state housing programs within the SGPB Region.

SECTION II

SUMMARY OBSERVATIONS AND CONCLUSIONS

Section II: Summary Observations and Conclusions

The purpose of this section of the report is to provide the reader with an overview of housing problems in the SGPB Region as well as a brief summary of a recommended plan of action for the solution of those problems. For the most part, the problems are described at the regional level while a more detailed analysis of housing problems at the state level is reserved for Section III. A more comprehensive treatment of housing program goals, policies and action recommendations is contained in Sections IV and V.

Nature and Extent of Housing Problems in the South

There are about 19 million occupied housing units in the fifteen SGPB states. Of these, about 2.4 million - or 12.7% - are substandard. Relative concentrations of substandard housing vary significantly from state to state. (Almost 25% of Mississippi's housing is substandard, as compared with 5% in Maryland).

One out of every four substandard units is also overcrowded, implying that 600,000 households are experiencing the most severe housing problems.

The housing problem in the South is very much a rural problem with fully two-thirds of all substandard housing located outside of urban areas. There are many underlying reasons for this phenomena including lower incomes of rural residents (reduced ability to pay for adequate shelter), absence of housing assistance programs with scope and funding comparable to HUD programs for urban areas, and lack of one or more of the essential ingredients to the production of housing (sponsors, developers, builders, financing and property managers).

In addition to being a rural problem, the South's housing ills are obviously a Negro problem. Only about 9% of the Region's non-Negro households reside in substandard units, while 36% of Negro households are inadequately housed. This disparity varies tremendously from state to state, however, with the Negro population of certain states having as much as 6.5 times the proportionate share of substandard housing as that of the non-Negro population. Data for Kentucky, on the other hand, indicates that the housing problems are about equally shared between racial groups.

Fully one-fourth of all occupied substandard housing contains elderly households. This pattern generally holds for each of the fifteen SGPB states. About 90% of these elderly households had 1969 incomes which were less than $4,000. Hence, the conclusion that the majority of the housing needs of the senior citizen segment of the market may be satisfied only with low rent, multi-unit structures and/or deep rental subsidies.

Almost one-half of the needy, non-elderly households either own or are buying units which are considered substandard. This large number of owner-occupied substandard units suggests a potential lack of mobility in the housing market and indicates that a comprehensive rehabilitation program directed at single-family housing units may have a ready market in certain geographic areas. However, based upon the experience of the Farmers' Home Administration in administering rural rehabilitation programs, it is unlikely that a major portion of the owned substandard units represent economically viable candidates for rehabilitation.

The overwhelming majority (70%) of households resident in substandard units are composed of between one and four persons, thereby indicating that larger (and more costly) housing units are not necessary to satisfy a large portion of the need.

The stock of vacant, standard housing represents a potential answer to the housing needs of some of the families resident in inadequate units. Actual data shows that large numbers of occupied substandard units exist in areas containing an above normal number of sound, vacant units, leading one to the conclusion that - for a multitude of potential reasons - available vacant housing does not represent a viable option for most needy households. Among the possible reasons for this are (1) high cost relative to income, (2) changing local migration patterns, (3) racial or other barriers, (4) employment patterns, etc.

Based upon historic and current private sector housing production statistics, it is apparent that private industry is incapable and/or unwilling to meet the needs of inadequately-housed families. While some progress has been made in improving the quality of housing in urban areas, insufficient supply of new housing in the rural sections is resulting in an increasing stock of substandard units through deterioration and lack of replacement.

The Region's housing problems extend beyond the stock of substandard housing. In addition to the 2.4 million inadequately housed families, there are about 1.8 million renter households paying a disproportionately high share of their income for rent. While some of these families may be paying higher rents out of choice, the fact that a large majority of these families had 1969 incomes less than $10,000 would tend to indicate that the excessive shelter costs are being incurred out of necessity. For this reason, then, these households represent a large potential market for low cost housing or some type of housing assistance/subsidy program.

The need for housing assistance programs or low cost housing is also evidenced by 1.9 million residents of substandard housing whose incomes preclude them from obtaining adequate housing even if it were available on the open market.

Based upon an analysis of population trends, income trends and changes in the cost of housing, coupled with data relating to assisted/low cost housing provided by various federal programs and the mobile home industry, it is apparent that the number of families in need of some form of housing assistance is increasing throughout the Region (from 3.7 million at 1970 to an estimated 4.2 million at 1973). This pattern of growth is foreseen to continue through 1980, with a net addition of 1.4 million needy families by that date to bring the estimated need for assisted housing units at 1980 to 5.1 million units.

State Housing Program Goals and Policies

In light of the Region's housing problems which have been briefly described above, and recognizing that private industry and federally-administered housing programs - by themselves - have not made adequate progress in satisfying the need for housing in the Region, it is appropriate that the SGPB states formulate plans for state involvement in the production of housing. In order to help ensure that SGPB housing programs are properly conceived and executed through adoption and adherence to mutually-supporting goals, policies and actions, it is recommended that the SGPB states subscribe to the goals and policies outlined below.

There are two basic goals which relate to the provision of "decent, safe and sanitary housing and a suitable living environment for all Americans". First, each SGPB state should adopt the goal to ensure the existence of a statewide housing delivery system capable of providing decent, safe and sanitary housing for all residents who demonstrate the need for such housing. Second, recognizing that decent housing cannot create a suitable living environment by itself, but rather that other basic human services must be provided as well, the SGPB and its member states should adopt the goal to ensure that the delivery of housing is fully integrated with other facets of Community Development, including employment, transportation, education, recreation and health.

The manner in which a state housing plan is conceived and executed will have a great deal of impact upon the success or failure of that plan. Policies indicate the agreed-upon practices or methods which are to be used to accomplish established goals and objectives. Accordingly, recommended policies relating to the housing plans of the SGPB states are outlined in the paragraphs below.

Concerning the creation and operation of a comprehensive housing delivery system, it is appropriate that the highest priority of housing need be assigned to those resident households whose housing needs cannot be satisfied by the private sector acting by itself.

To promote equal access, it is necessary that programs administered and resources utilized in the housing delivery system be made available on a fair and equitable basis to all persons regardless of race, color, creed, sex or national origin.

To ensure that the programs and activities of governmental entities involved in the housing delivery process reflect the interests of the residents, there should be steps taken to include citizen representation and participation in the formulation and management of housing programs.

To leverage state resources in order to produce the greatest impact for a given level of commitment, the various states should promote maximum utilization of available federal funds and federal programs to the extent that they can contribute to the solution of housing and community development problems.

Recognizing that programs originated and administered at the federal level may not be totally responsive to the needs of each state, the various states should be committed to take whatever legislative or regulatory steps are necessary to create the mechanisms whereby state government, acting directly or indirectly, can supplement federal funds and programs to create a totally responsive housing delivery system.

In view of the fact that housing problems of the Southern States are quite similar from one state to the next, the problems may be considered to be a Regional problem, which should logically be attacked on a Regional basis to the extent that it is reasonable and possible to do so. In any event, the SGPB should subscribe to a policy which encourages the states to promote the solution of housing problems on a regional or inter-state basis through the exchange and sharing of information, research, innovative programs and joint planning for Community Development.

In the process of conducting in-depth analysis of housing problems and matching available housing programs with need, it may become evident that the size of the commitment needed to cure certain problems requires federal assistance and involvement. To that end, the SGPB states should present a united front to promote responsive federal policies and programs which will support state and local efforts to provide housing and related human services.

Recommended Collective Actions

The following recommendations are those which warrant collective action by all of the SGPB states in that they are directed at the solution of Regional housing problems, i.e., problems which are experienced by all of the states to varying degrees.

First, it is recommended that the SGPB and the constituent states support reinstatement of federal deep subsidy programs which are needed to meet the housing requirements of 85% of those families residing in substandard conditions. Specifically, the programmatic obstacles which exist in the Section 23 Leased Housing program must be removed to permit economic and market feasibility and the FHA Section 235 and 236 (or their equivalent) should be reinstated - with necessary modifications - until alternate, viable programs are available.

Second, there should be broad support for any federal action to either increase the utilization of available programs or to make constructive changes to programs to improve their effectiveness. An example of such action is the recent Administrative decision to expand the supply of lower interest mortgage money for middle income families by offering to buy mortgages at rates below those prevailing in current markets.

Third, the SGPB states should create a mechanism for exchange and sharing of information relating to housing problems and techniques used to alleviate housing problems. One of the primary purposes of this Regional cooperation would be to identify potential programmatic solutions to area-wide problems and enhance - through multistate endorsements - the possibility of obtaining federal funding for program feasibility analysis and demonstration projects.

Recommended Unilateral Action by SGPB States

In view of the fact that most of the states[1] have not yet completed a suitable statewide housing needs analysis, it is recommended that each of those states which have not done so, conduct a comprehensive analysis of housing needs and problems for each housing market area in the state to serve as the basis for those states' housing plans. The conduct of this analysis is particularly important for those states contemplating the creation of a housing finance agency and is essential for every state desiring to become eligible to receive Section 23 subsidy funds.

In order to coordinate housing production and related activities among key governmental agencies and local action agencies conducting housing programs within the state, there should be designated an office of state government to oversee the formulation and operation of the statewide housing delivery system. Existing lack of centralized monitoring and coordination has resulted in market conditions in which the need for housing is overwhelming and yet little or no production is taking place. The agency which is charged with this responsibility should be free of vested interests in any specific program or activity in order to preserve the necessary elements of independence and objectivity.

In order to stimulate the production of housing in those areas of the state where demonstrable needs exist but insufficient supply is taking place, each state should establish a state housing finance agency (HFA) capable of exercising needed powers and administering needed programs. In general, the powers of an HFA should include the capability to act as a Local Housing Authority throughout the state, finance insured development and construction loans, provide direct and indirect (secondary market) financing for insured mortgages, provide loans and grants to qualified project sponsors, and carry out activities necessary to increase utilization of programs administered by other agencies.

Since one of the more promising alternatives for reducing the cost of housing is the introduction of more modern materials and construction techniques, each state should support action directed at creating an environment in which private industry may function to provide lower cost housing through innovation and technology. This support may be provided by creating State Building Commissions to oversee this formulation, enactment and enforcement of modern, statewide building codes. The federally-sponsored Basic Homes Program, which is active in South Carolina and West Virginia, should be given active support to ensure that the Program is granted adequate time and resources to achieve its stated purpose. Additionally, legislative study committees should be established to develop clear, rational, defensible and constructive policies with respect to mobile homes in order to be in a position to provide constructive input to any federal attempt to regulate that industry.

Finally, the state should take steps to ensure equal access to housing by all segments of the population through enactment of fair housing legislation and affirmative marketing of housing programs.

SECTION III

DETAILED ANALYSIS OF HOUSING PROBLEMS IN THE SOUTH

Section III: Detailed Analysis of Housing Problems in the South

The purpose of this Section of the report is to quantitatively document the nature and extent of the housing problems in each of the fifteen SGPB states. Included are tabulations of data which describe not only certain characteristics of substandard housing units, but -- more importantly -- key characteristics of households resident in those substandard units. Household income, household size and age have been selected as key variables since these factors are most often used in determining eligibility for housing assistance programs. These same characteristics can provide insight into the nature of the housing which is needed, as well as the size of the subsidy funding which must be made available to these needy households.

The data contained in each Exhibit is explained through the use of "keys" which provide the bridge to the "key table" associated with the exhibit. In addition, brief narrative interpretations or summaries of the data are included to assist the reader. Where appropriate certain secondary analyses of tabulated data have been performed with results indicated within the narrative.

The principal source of housing need data for 1970 is the 1970 Census of Population and Housing. The data was derived from Public Use Sample computer tapes containing a 1:100 sample of every household in the fifteen states at 1970. A discussion of the methodology employed to develop the data is contained in Appendix A of the report. This discussion includes definition of key terms such as substandard, overcrowded, elderly, etc.

Extent and Distribution of Substandard Housing at 1970 (Exhibit A)

Of the almost 19 million occupied housing units in the Southern Region, about 2.4 million -- or 12.7% -- are substandard.

The relative frequency or concentration of substandard housing (and, hence, the severity of the problem) varies significantly among the states. Those states having concentrations of substandard housing greater than the 12.7% average for the SGPB Region are as follows:

State	Percent of Occupied Units Substandard
Mississippi	24.7%
Tennessee	20.7%
Kentucky	19.9%
Arkansas	18.4%
South Carolina	17.9%

Twenty-five percent of the substandard units in the SGPB Region -- about 600,000 units -- are occupied by households living in overcrowded conditions. In general, between 20% and 25% of substandard housing in each state is also overcrowded. These households are therefore considered to exhibit the greatest need for better housing.

Approximately 66% of the Region's substandard housing is located in the rural areas, while the remaining 34% is concentrated in the urban areas. With the exception of Florida and Texas, both of which have more of their substandard units located in urban areas, the majority of substandard units are found in rural settings.

The degree to which the problem is a rural problem varies, however, from state to state. In West Virginia for example, 87.4% of these units are rural, while rural Louisiana contains a much smaller majority of the total -- only 56.2%.

There are multiple reasons for the concentration of substandard housing in rural areas, many of which are complex and interrelated. Several general observations may be made which serve to indicate the nature of the action which must be undertaken to alleviate these problems. First, the rural areas often lack one or more of the basic, required elements for an effective housing delivery system -- sponsors, developers, financing institutions, and property managers. Second, even if all of the elements of a delivery system were present, the lower incomes of rural residents preclude the purchase of most private sector produced housing. Third, the Farmer's Home Administration (FmHA) offices which administer housing subsidy programs in rural areas of several states have not fostered utilization of available programs and emphasized production to the extent that HUD/FHA offices have done so in the cities. The degree of utilization of FmHA programs varies significantly from state to state, with utilization highly dependent upon the presence/absence of the required elements of the housing delivery system (mentioned above) and the FmHA's own level of staffing, expertise, and commitment to housing programs.

While the majority (57.7%) of the Region's substandard units are occupied by non-negro households, the problem is very much a negro problem since a much greater percentage of negro families reside in these units. In fact, only about 9% of the Region's non-negro households reside in substandard housing, while about 36% of the Region's negro households are inadequately housed. The disparity is the greatest in South Carolina and Florida where the concentration of negro households in need of better housing is about 6.5 times that of non-negro households. Of all of the fifteen states, Kentucky comes the closest to having housing problems equally shared with 26% of negro households and 20% of non-negro households living in substandard conditions. Table 1, below, presents the statistical picture of this problem for each of the SGPB states.

SUMMARY OF HOUSING CONDITIONS IN THE SOUTHERN REGION BY STATE AT 1970

Column	Explanation
A	1970 total occupied housing units from 1970 Census of Housing.
B,C,D	Occupied substandard units which are also overcrowded. The criteria used for determination of overcrowding was 1.01 or more persons per room. Multi-family, owner-occupied units were not present in numbers significant enough to warrant separate display, hence, they were compiled with single-family owner-occupied units.
E,F,G	Occupied substandard units which are not overcrowded. Substandard housing is defined as that which either lacks complete plumbing facilities or which is plumbing-complete but dilapidated.
H	Total of Columns B through G.
I	Percent of the total occupied housing stock which is substandard (H ÷ A * 100)
J	Percent of SGPB Region's substandard units which are located in each state (H ÷ total of Column H)
K,L,M,N	Stratification of substandard units (Column H) according to location (urban vs. rural) and race of occupant (negro vs. white & other).

Characteristics of Housing Units Needed at 1970 (Exhibit B)

The single greatest component of housing need is exhibited by the elderly segment of the population, in that about one-fourth of all substandard housing in the Region is occupied by one or two person households of age 62 or over. The fifteen states are remarkably similar with respect to the elderly share of housing need, with all but three states clustered between 22% and 28%. Oklahoma appears to have the greatest concentration of elderly need with 34.8% of substandard units occupied by senior citizens while Arkansas has somewhat less at 31.7%. South Carolina, on the other hand, exhibits the least concentration with only 20% of substandard units being elderly occupied.

Looking at the substandard units occupied by nonsenior citizen households, we see that one-third (about 800,000) of such units in the Region are owner-occupied. Again, the states are quite similar with respect to this characteristic with the range being between 27.5% for Louisiana and 39.3% for Virginia. The extent of owner-occupied substandard units suggests potential lack of mobility in the housing market in terms of encouraging these households to uproot and move to adequate quarters. On the other hand, the data suggests that a rehabilitation program directed at single-family housing units may have a ready market.

The data also tends to run counter to the common stereotype of the poor family living in dilapitated housing -- the common belief being that such households or families tend to be rather large. In fact, over 70% of all occupied substandard units contain households composed of between one and four persons. Only about 13.5% of the substandard units contain households composed of more than 6 persons. The implication here is that the cost of providing improved housing for these households may be less than what one's intuition might suggest -- the overwhelming majority may be housed in one or two bedroom units.

An analysis of the "vacancy adjustment" is reserved for the narrative relating to Exhibit D.

PROFILE OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL NEED FOR HOUSING BY TENURE, TYPE AND SIZE OF UNIT - BY STATE AT 1970

Column	Explanation
A - K	Profile of the tenure and type of housing units which would have to be provided in order to house the occupants of substandard housing, according to the same type and tenure of unit in which they were resident at 1970. The bedroom mix is based upon a maximum limit of 2 persons per bedroom.
L	Senior Citizen households are all one or two person households in which the head of household is aged 62 or over. Columns A through K do not include any such elderly households.
M	Total of Column A through L.
N	Units needed for/(in surplus of) "normal" vacancy conditions. Numbers are taken from Exhibit D, and are computed as the total of Columns G, H, O and P from that Exhibit.
O	The net number of housing units needed to adequately house all households in 1970 and establish "normal" vacancy levels needed for mobility in the market place. Total of Column M and N.

Characteristics of Households Resident in Substandard Housing at 1970 (Exhibit C)

Analyzing the income distribution of households resident in substandard housing at 1970, it is readily apparent that the elderly segment is much worse off proportionately. Over 550,000 inadequately housed senior citizen households had incomes less than $4,000 annually. (This represents 88% of the elderly households in substandard housing). This pattern is prevalent in virtually all of the 15 SGPB states. This observation suggests that, given the economics of today's housing market, the only real alternative for providing shelter for needy senior citizens is multi-unit, rental housing -- and even then, large direct or indirect subsidies are likely to be required. While it is theoretically possible for states to provide these deep subsidies without federal assistance(1), a comprehensive subsidy program of this type is not likely to be enacted because of the size of the commitment required. Accordingly, it seems a fairly safe assumption that the housing ills of the elderly will not be solved without considerable federal-state cooperation and federal assistance in funding the required subsidies.

At 1970, 77% of the nonelderly households resident in substandard housing had annual incomes less than $7,000 and, hence, were not likely to be able to obtain adequate housing without paying a disproportionate share of their income for shelter. In order to provide adequate shelter of a "modest nonluxury nature" for these low income households, deep subsidies are required.

(1) The Michigan State Housing Development Authority has developed a state-supported deep subsidy program for the elderly which depends upon property tax abatement, waiver of utility tap fees, waiver of certain financing fees, and other items directed at reducing rents.

In effect, the SGPB states are relatively ineffective providers of housing to this large number (over 1,350,000) of nonelderly households due primarily to the magnitude of the subsidy program required. Instead, federally funded programs such as public housing, Section 23 Leased Housing, and Section 236 Rent Supplement are needed. Given the availability of such programs, states may play an important role in attempting to maximize utilization of the programs.

For those nonelderly residents of substandard housing whose incomes are in excess of $7,000 annually (about 400,000 such households are located in the SGPB Region), the states may act independently of the federal government to assist in providing affordable, adequate housing. This shallow subsidy assistance may be rendered in several ways such as the provision of low interest mortgages financed from the proceeds of tax exempt bond issues of a state housing finance agency. (Such programs are already implemented or being formulated in the states of West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia). The point to be made here concerning such state involvement is that these shallow subsidy programs may reach only a minor portion of those households resident in substandard units. In general, about one-fifth of the nonelderly occupants of substandard housing in each of the 15 states could potentially utilize a state-sponsored shallow subsidy program effectively. Maryland is a notable exception, in that over 40% of such households in that state could be effectively assisted.

PROFILE OF HOUSEHOLDS RESIDING IN SUBSTANDARD HOUSING
(INCOME, HOUSEHOLD SIZE AND HOUSING REQUIREMENT) FOR THE SOUTHERN REGION, BY STATE AT 1970

Column	Explanation
A	Type of housing needed to provide families living in the substandard units with the same type of housing occupied at 1970. Exception in the case of elderly households which are all indicated as needing Rental Senior Citizen (multi-unit) type housing, irrespective of whether these households lived in owned or rented units at 1970.
B-R	Household income vs. household size profile of households resident in substandard housing at 1970.
S	Total units needed for each "Housing Requirement" category for each State. Some of the three category totals for each state equals the number of occupied substandard units in that state at 1970.

Analysis of Vacant Housing (Exhibit D)

Analyses of the stock of vacant housing can provide some degree of insight into the "tightness" of the housing market, i.e., the degree to which there exists a sufficient number of sound, vacant housing units to insure adequate flexibility and mobility within that market. Additionally, it is possible to develop indications as to whether or not the vacancies which do exist represent viable options for residents of substandard housing.

Looking first at the home ownership market in the SGPB Region, we see that the effective vacancy rate (which excludes substandard vacant units) is 1.6 percent -- somewhat in excess of the generally accepted standard of 1 percent.(1) The extent of this excess varies considerably from state to state. Maryland is the only state which exhibits a deficiency in the urban vacant-for-sale category, thereby indicating that urban residents of that state are more restricted in their housing options. In general, the vacant-for-sale rates in the rural portions of the states are close to the 1 percent norm. The bulk of the excess vacant units are located in the urban sectors. This pattern holds true for virtually every state.

(1) A recent statistical survey of 17 SMSA's and 8 regions of the U. S. indicated that, nationwide, 5 percent of the rental housing was vacant-for-rent and 1.0 percent of the owned housing was vacant-for-sale. Based on the assumption that the housing market nationwide is in a state of general equilibrium, plus the comparability of these rates with those generally accepted as "normal", vacancy rates of 1 percent and 5 percent were adopted for owned and rented housing, respectively.

Even though there are excess vacancies in the urban areas, we saw in the analysis of the data in Exhibit A that fully one-third of the occupied substandard housing is also located in urban areas. The conclusion one tends to draw in this case is that the standard vacant-for-sale units in the urban areas do not represent viable housing options. The reasons for this imbalance are numerous and complicated, and often the result of highly localized conditions not apparent from an analysis performed at the state level. From a problem definition standpoint, however, it may simply be stated that high vacancy rates in urban areas do not necessarily imply that adequate housing is available for those households in need of improved shelter.

Turning now to the rental market, it is seen again that effective vacancy rates in the urban areas are generally higher than the rural areas, which makes sense since the urban areas generally exhibit higher population growth rates and therefore require higher vacancy rates in order to accommodate the needs of the more mobile, dynamic population. With few exceptions, the rural areas exhibit rental vacancy rates below the "normal" 5% level.(2) Those states with the highest rural rental vacancies are Florida, Oklahoma and Texas. One fact which is not obvious from the Exhibit D data is the fact that the pure, unadjusted rental vacancy rates in rural settings are actually quite high; however, a very large portion of those units are substandard and do not represent viable housing alternatives. This is particularly true in those states which are tabulated as having low effective vacancy rates (Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina). The vacancy rates tabulated in Exhibit D exclude substandard vacant housing and therefore reflect the fact that there is, in most states, a shortage of standard rental housing in the rural areas.

(2) ibid.

Observations and conclusions regarding the urban rental market follow quite closely the comments relating to the home ownership market. Urban rental vacancy rates are higher than the "normal" 5 percent rate except for Maryland and Virginia which appear to have tight rental markets. Again, this fact is somewhat inconsistent since one-third of the occupied substandard housing is urban. Hence, the conclusion is made that the vacant rental housing is not available to those in need for one or more reasons -- location, price, discrimination, etc.

Components of Cumulative Housing Need in the SGPB Region, by State Through 1980 (Exhibit E)

Throughout the decade of the seventies, it is estimated that there will be a need for almost 6,700,000 housing units to house an increasing number of households and replace those sound units which are lost from inventory for a variety of reasons (demolition, conversion to other uses, natural disaster, and deterioration to substandard condition).

From detailed, county-by-county analyses in several states, it has been observed that the private industry housing supply approximates the need for additional units but is not producing a sufficient supply of housing to erase any discernible portion of the occupied, substandard units. In fact, in many areas, private sector supply is insufficient to provide replacement units for those units which are deteriorating to substandard conditions. Referring to Exhibit E, for example, in Alabama there will be a need for about 296,100 units to house additional households and provide replacements for losses (including deteriorated units). If the patterns of private industry supply in Alabama follow the patterns observed in other states, the number of new units added by private industry will be somewhat less than 296,100, with the supply shortage being manifested in the form of deteriorating, substandard units which are not being replaced. The result, of course, will be an increased number of occupied, substandard housing units at 1980.

The degree to which this adverse trend prevails typically varies significantly from one area of a state to another. In general, the urban areas seem to be keeping pace or even making slight progress in reducing the stock of substandard housing. It is in the rural areas - particularly those which are depressed economically (e.g., Appalachian counties) - that the problem of increasing substandard stock is most evident. (This kind of insight may not be gained from state level data such as that tabulated in this report. Only a more detailed, sub-state analysis will reveal the degree to which this problem exists within any one state).

The reasons for the adverse trend in rural, economically depressed areas are essentially the same as those which have resulted in the fact that two-thirds of the Region's substandard housing in 1970 was located in rural sections (see Exhibit A). Private industry is simply not capable of providing conventional housing of sufficiently low cost to be affordable by the poorer, rural households. Additionally, there is a lack of one or more of the ingredients essential to the provision of subsidized housing -- sponsors, developers, lending institutions, property managers, and an affirmative marketing plan for subsidy programs.

Analysis of Households in Need of Housing Subsidies (Exhibit F)

It is a generally accepted thumbrule that housing cost should not exceed 25% of household income. In fact, the amount of subsidy a family can receive under many federal housing programs is predicated on this assumption.

As of 1970, there were about 1,764,000 households who were adequately housed in rental units, but were paying in excess of 25% of their household income for rent. This represents about 9.4% of all households in the SGPB Region. Maryland has the greatest concentration of these units (12.9% of all households), while Florida (12.3%), Virginia (10.6%), Texas (10.0%) and Louisiana (10.0%) are also well above the Regional average. It is virtually impossible to estimate accurately the portion of these households who are paying excessive housing costs out of choice rather than necessity; however, that portion is likely rather small. This conclusion is reached by noting that the incomes of these households tend to cluster in the low to moderate income range (less than $10,000 annually). In view of this observation, it is a relatively safe statement that the bulk of the households tabulated in Exhibit F, Column A represent a large potential market for rental subsidy programs.

Additionally, almost 2.0 million of the 2.4 million households (82%) resident in substandard housing at 1970 had incomes insufficient to afford adequate housing even if it were available. That is to say, not only do these families need better quality housing, but they also require subsidies in order to be able to obtain that housing without incurring excessive shelter cost relative to their incomes. Most of the 15 states are quite similar in this characteristic, with Mississippi having the most severe problem (90% of inadequately housed families require subsidies), with Arkansas (88%), Louisiana (86%) and Alabama (85%) not far behind. As observed previously, Maryland has the least severe problem in this respect (65%), indicating that the state may be able to assist a large portion of inadequately housed families with state-sponsored shallow subsidy programs.

Based upon 1980 forecasts of (1) population and households (2) distribution of income, and (3) the expenditure necessary to obtain adequate housing, estimates were derived of the additional households which will likely need low cost housing and/or some level of subsidy to avoid paying an excessive portion (more than 25%) of their incomes for shelter. This analysis indicates that there will be an additional 5.4 million such needy households in the Region by 1980, bringing the cumulative number to over 9.1 million by that date. This staggering increase is due to the rather simple fact that increases in the cost of housing have been out-stripping increases in incomes. Unless this adverse trend is brought under control -- preferably through innovations to reduce housing construction costs and occupancy costs -- the end result will likely be a reduction in the standard of living for many families since they will be faced with the fact that they must use more of their disposable income for shelter just as they have had to spend a larger portion for food in recent years.

To avoid adversely effecting the standard of living, and in light of the fact that construction material cost increases are unlikely to be reduced significantly, governmental action is required to provide housing subsidies and/or make it possible for the construction industry to reduce the cost of new housing through innovation (more modern building codes to permit use of new materials and techniques, standard building codes to facilitate mass production of housing, etc.).

One way in which private industry has responded to the need for low cost housing has been the production of mobile homes. The tremendous growth experienced by that industry is in no small way due to the large market for low cost housing as reflected in the data in Exhibit F. While various Farmer's Home Administration and HUD programs have made available about 650,000 subsidy units in the Region since the 1970 Census, the mobile home industry has shipped over 1,000,000 homes into the Region during the same time period. In fact, forecasts indicate that almost 3.3 million mobile homes may be added to the housing inventory in the SGPB states by 1980.

The question as to whether or not mobile homes are desirable for use as permanent residences tends to be an emotional issue with valid points to be made on both sides of that issue. The facts are, however, that private industry is satisfying the basic shelter requirements of a significant number of needy households, and that any action by government to either restrict the supply or increase the cost of mobile homes (through such action as imposing unduly strict construction standards) should not be undertaken without considering the impact on needy households and, hence, the subsidies which would have to be supplied to make up the difference.

Analyzing just the four year period 1970-1973, inclusive, it is seen that the Region as a whole is losing ground with respect to the need for low cost housing. While there was a need for about

Households needing subsidies at 1970	3.7 million
Estimate of additional subsidies needed 1970-1973	2.1 million
Estimated cumulative need at 12/31/73	5.8 million
Federal subsidy units provided 1970-73	(0.6) million
Mobile homes shipped, 1970-73	(1.0) million
Estimated net need for subsidies 12/31/73	4.2 million

3.7 million low cost/subsidized units in 1970, the number is estimated to have grown to 4.2 million by the end of 1973. Performing this same secondary analysis of Table F data for each state provides an indication of the extent to which housing programs and mobile homes have been able to keep pace with the need for low cost or subsidized housing. Table 2, below, ranks the 15 states according to the estimated percent change in the number of households needing subsidy. The percentages reflect the net effect of changes in several variables, namely, number of households, distribution of income, cost of adequate housing, production levels of federal subsidy programs, and mobile home shipments.

Table 2

Looking ahead to 1980, we estimate that the number of low cost/subsidized units which must be provided between now and 1980 is approximately 5.1 million Regionally (an increase of 1.4 million over 1970 needs). This estimate is based upon the cumulative need for 9.1 million such units, reduced by an optimistically forecasted supply of 3.3 million mobile homes and about 0.6 million units of federally subsidized units provided as of 1974. Obviously, if mobile home shipments do not reach the levels indicated, the net need for alternative low cost or subsidized units will be even greater. In the absence of any significant change in the Regional pattern for mobile home shipments and production of subsidized housing under federal programs, we would expect the relative rankings of the states (according to the severity of the problem) to remain essentially as presented in Table 2 above.

KEY TABLE

ANALYSIS OF HOUSEHOLDS IN NEED OF HOUSING SUBSIDIES FOR THE PERIOD 1970-1979, BY STATE FOR THE SGPB REGION

Column	Explanation
A	Number of households resident in standard, rental housing for which gross rent is more than 25% of household income.
B	Number of households resident in substandard housing, and whose household income is insufficient to obtain adequate housing without paying more than 25% of household income for that housing.
C	Total number of households in need of housing subsidy at 1970. Sum of Column A and B.
D	Number of additional households requiring subsidies during the period 1970-1979. These estimates were derived from an analysis of population and household projections, income distribution projections, and forecasts of the annual expenditure needed to obtain adequate housing.
E	Cumulative number of households in need of housing subsidy by the end of 1979.
F,G,H	Number of subsidized housing units made available for occupancy subsequent to the 1970 Census, including all projects for which final commitment has been granted as of 12/31/73. Does not include units designated for occupancy by senior citizens. Subsidy programs included in these tabulations are: . FHA 221(d)(3), 235, 236 . FmHA 502, 515 . Public Housing
I	Number of subsidized housing units made available for exclusive occupancy by senior citizen households subsequent to the 1970 Census. Includes Section 202, 236 (Elderly), 515 (Elderly) and Public Housing (Elderly).
J	Total number of subsidized housing units added under above programs since 1970 Census. Sum of Columns F, G, H, I.
K	Estimate of the number of mobile homes shipped to the indicated states during the period 1970-1979. Based upon (1) MHMA statistics for the years 1970-1973 (inclusive), (2) regression analysis of historical relationship between national shipments and shipments to each state, and (3) U. S. Department of Commerce projections of national mobile home shipments through 1980.
L	Total number of low cost or subsidized housing units added to the housing stock since the 1970 Census. Total of Columns J and K.
M	Residual number of households to be provided with housing subsidies through the end of 1979. Difference between Column E and L.

SECTION IV

GOALS AND POLICIES: FRAMEWORK FOR ACTION

Section IV: Goals and Policies: A Framework for Action

The adoption of housing-related goals and policies by the Southern Growth Policies Board will not, by itself, result in the creation of housing units in the South. Only the formulation and execution of a plan of action with a concurrent dedication of resources to the task can accomplish this objective.

The real value in recognizing and adopting formal goals and policies is that these statements serve as the guide for execution of a plan and provide bench marks to determine whether or not activities are supportive of the ultimate, agreed upon objectives. Goals tell us what we wish to accomplish in the long run, while policies indicate the practices or methods which will be used to get there.

One cannot help but wonder if some of the problems and recent scandals associated with federal housing programs might have been avoided if program administrators had had more clearly defined and mutually supportive goals and policies. For example, it would appear that the long-term goal and short-term objective for housing programs in many cities was maximization of production. While this is an admirable objective, programs administered with only this objective in mind have resulted in default and foreclosure on thousands of mortgage loans and the creation of slums from previously viable communities. While the extent of the problem with these programs can be measured in terms of default rates and vacant housing units, the adverse impact upon the occupants of the housing and surrounding neighborhoods -- while great -- is incapable of being accurately determined. The adoption of and adherence to program policies relating to the quality of housing to be produced, the minimum qualification of applicants for that housing, fair and equitable distribution of units produced, etc. might well have prevented the failure of federal housing programs in many localities.

For this reason then -- to help ensure that SGPB housing programs are properly conceived and executed through adoption and adherence to mutually supportive goals, policies and actions -- it is appropriate to formally recommend such goals and policies directed at the solution of housing problems in the South. The statements which are offered apply equally to each of the fifteen SGPB states and, thus, represent goals and policies for the Southern Region as a whole.

Statements of Housing Goals

In the broadest sense, the ultimate goal of the SGPB relating to the provision of housing should be synonymous with the national goal expressed by the President's Commission on Housing, i.e., to provide decent, safe and sanitary housing and a suitable living environment for all Americans.

The spectrum of housing needs according to types, location and cost is simply too broad to permit any single, universal housing program to respond to those diverse housing needs. Instead, multiple, complimentary and reinforcing programs must be formulated to create a comprehensive housing delivery system. Hence, a more clearly defined statement of the National Goal is:

> To ensure the existence of a housing delivery system capable of providing decent, safe and sanitary housing for all residents who demonstrate the need for such housing.

The National Goal statement also implies that decent housing - while crucial - cannot create a suitable living environment by itself. In addition to housing, there must be made available all of the other basic human services generally included under the umbrella of Community Development. In recognition of this fact, the SGPB and its member states should adopt the goal:

> To ensure that the delivery of housing is fully integrated with other facets of Community Development, such as Employment, Transportation, Education, Recreation and Health.

Statements of Housing Policy

As stated previously, policies indicate the practices or methods which are used to accomplish established goals and objectives. They reflect the manner in which plans are implemented and executed.

Concerning the creation and operation of a comprehensive housing delivery system, it is appropriate that:

> The highest priority of housing need be assigned to those resident households whose housing needs cannot be satisfied by the private sector acting by itself.

To promote equal access, it is necessary that:

> Programs administered and resources utilized in the housing delivery system be made available on a fair and equitable basis to all persons regardless of race, color, creed, sex or national origin.

To ensure that the programs and activities of governmental entities involved in the housing delivery process reflect the interests of the residents, there should be steps taken to:

> Include citizen representation and participation in the formulation and management of housing programs.

To leverage state resources in order to produce the greatest impact for a given level of commitment, the various states should:

> Promote maximum utilization of available federal funds and federal programs to the extent that they can contribute to the solution of housing and community development problems.

Recognizing that programs originated and administered at the federal level may not be totally responsive to the needs of each state, the various states should be committed to:

> Take whatever legislative or regulatory steps are necessary to create the mechanisms whereby state government, acting directly or indirectly, can supplement federal funds and programs to create a totally responsive housing delivery system.

In view of the fact that housing problems of the Southern States are quite similar from one state to the next, the problems may be considered to be Regional problems which should logically be attacked on a Regional basis to the extent that it is reasonable and possible to do so. In any event, the SGPB should subscribe to a policy which encourages the states to:

> Promote the solution of housing problems on a regional or interstate basis through the exchange and sharing of information, research, innovative programs and joint planning for Community Development.

In the process of conducting in-depth analyses of housing problems and matching available housing programs with need, it may become evident that the size of the commitment needed to cure certain problems requires federal assistance and involvement. To that end, the SGPB states should:

> Present a united front to promote responsive federal policies and programs which will support state and local efforts to provide housing and related human services.

SECTION V

RECOMMENDED ACTION FOR THE SOUTHERN GROWTH POLICIES BOARD AND THE CONSTITUENT STATES

Section V: Recommended Action for the Southern Growth Policies Board and the Constituent States

This section of the report contains general recommendations for action to be taken by the various states to implement a plan directed at the solution of the Region's housing problems. The recommendations are based largely upon the documentation and definition of housing problems as discussed in Section II, preceding. They are intended to be supportive of the broad Regional housing goals previously stated and should be undertaken within the framework provided by the related policy statements included in Section III.

Collective Actions for the Southern Growth Policies Board

The recommended actions discussed below are those for which collective action by all of the fifteen states together is most appropriate. The actions are directed at the solution of Regional housing problems, i.e., problems which are experienced by all of the states to varying degrees, and which are more effectively attacked on a Regional basis.

SUPPORT REINSTATEMENT OF FEDERAL DEEP SUBSIDY PROGRAMS

About 85 percent of households resident in substandard housing require a level of housing subsidy assistance beyond the financial capability of individual states. Federal assistance is required to provide the needed funds. Currently, there are few viable deep subsidy assistance programs in effect since most of the programs were interrupted by the moratorium. Others (e.g., Section 23) have become infeasible due to the manner in which they have been restructured, while the Administration's Direct Cash Assistance Program is available only on a test basis.

In light of this situation, it is recommended that the SGPB present a united front to recommend action at the federal level to provide deep subsidy funds for both rental and ownership programs. Appropriate action would include among others:

- Removal of programatic obstacles from the Section 23 Leased Housing Program to enhance economic and market feasibility for projects conceived and operated under that program. (Analyses of these obstacles are available from the Section 23 Leased Housing Association and/or the Council of State Housing Agencies).

- Reinstatement of the FHA Section 235 and 236 programs with appropriate modifications to cure program deficiencies identified by the 1973 HUD Task Force. These programs (or their equivalents) should be available until such time that a suitable alternative (e.g., Direct Cash Assistance Program) has been formulated, tested and implemented.

SUPPORT FEDERAL EFFORTS DIRECTED AT INCREASED USE OF AVAILABLE PROGRAMS, AS WELL AS CONSTRUCTIVE CHANGES THERETO

- Expansion of housing assistance programs for the elderly.

- Expansion and increased utilization of Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) subsidy programs through affirmative marketing programs, such as that developed by the Florida Department of Community Affairs.

- Review and analyze the propriety of current FmHA policies which stress rehabilitation and use of existing housing stock rather than new construction. (Critics of this policy suggest that there are insufficient numbers of housing units within FmHA jurisdiction that may be considered viable candidates for rehabilitation programs, and that new construction must be emphasized to satisfy rural housing needs.)

CREATE A MECHANISM FOR EXCHANGE AND SHARING OF INFORMATION RELATING TO HOUSING PROGRAMS AND TECHNIQUES USED TO ALLEVIATE HOUSING PROBLEMS

This action would be undertaken in recognition that housing problems in the individual states are more similar than they are dissimilar, and that much may be learned about the relative success/failure of certain programs and techniques devised by states to attack those housing problems. Specifically, the SGPB should identify the organization(s) or mechanism(s) which may provide this information clearing-house service to the states, and further, to determine the media which are best suited for handling the information (periodic seminars, written reports, etc.). Possible alternatives for organizations to perform the service include, among others:

- Southern Growth Policies Board
- Council of State Governments
- Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations

Carrying this cooperative effort one step further, it is recommended that action be taken to obtain federal funding for pilot or demonstration projects designed to provide operational tests of programs or techniques which have been conceived by a member state(s) to find solutions to specific housing problems. The extent to which a proposed program may be applicable in the SGPB Region, as well as the extent to which there is multilateral interest in pursuing the concept further, may be assessed through (1) analyses of housing need data such as that contained in this report, and (2) communicating to the various states through the medium of the information clearing-house to relate the mechanics of the proposed programs and solicit expressions of interest. Once the extent of Regional interest is known, the proposal may be taken to the appropriate Federal department to solicit funding on a demonstration basis. The probability of obtaining such funding should be considerably enhanced by the endorsements placed on the project by multiple state governments.

Recommendations for Unilateral Action by the States

Recommendations contained in this section are those which are most appropriately executed by the states individually. While the recommendations usually apply to more than one state, the nature of the proposed actions is such that it does not lend itself to collective or multilateral implementation -- primarily because the actions must be carried out within the framework of existing state laws utilizing available resources and capabilities, all of which may differ significantly from one state to the next.

CONDUCT A COMPREHENSIVE ANALYSIS OF HOUSING NEEDS AND PROBLEMS FOR EACH HOUSING MARKET AREA IN THE STATE TO SERVE AS THE BASIS FOR THE STATE HOUSING PLANS.

During the course of conducting the Regional housing needs analysis underlying this report, each of the fifteen states was asked to submit a copy of any statewide needs analyses which have been completed. Based upon the response to that request, it is apparent that most states have not adequately documented the housing needs and problems of their respective states. Notable exceptions to this are the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana and Florida -- all of which have completed comprehensive analyses.

There are several important reasons for undertaking a study of this type. The principal objective is to provide a quantitative definition of relative housing needs in each of the housing market areas of a state in order to:

1. Identify potential markets for specific housing programs by matching programs with need,
2. Gain insight as to the degree to which certain programs have been utilized and the extent to which they have been successful,
3. Obtain information concerning obstacles which are preventing existing programs from operating more effectively within the state,

4. Identify geographic areas and/or segments of the population whose needs cannot be adequately met through available programs,

5. Develop the kinds of data needed to conceptualize special programs to fill "gaps" identified above,

6. Assign relative priorities for action, and

7. Justify allocation of resources to programs and geographic areas.

An additional reason for completing an analysis of this type is that the revised regulations for the Section 23 Leased Housing Program now require this basic housing needs and market data at the housing market area level in order to establish eligibility for Section 23 subsidy funds.

For those states considering the feasibility and propriety of creating a state housing finance agency (HFA), there is a special need to conduct an analysis such as that described. The data which will result can indicate the types of programs which the HFA would likely administer, as well as the kinds of peripheral, supporting activities the HFA should engage in to be truly responsive to the particular housing needs of the state's residents. This information, in turn, indicates the nature and extent of the powers which should be written into the enabling legislation to create the agency. Approaching the task in this logical manner is more likely to result in the creation of a finance agency tailored to the specific needs of that state, and thereby avoid problems experienced by some states in which HFA's were created and then found to be either capable of administering programs for which there was no market, or incapable of administering programs for which there was significant need.

States which should give serious consideration to conducting a statewide analysis as an input to the creation of a state HFA include Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama and Maryland.

Those states which have active HFA's or have enacted legislation to create an HFA, but which have not yet completed a comprehensive study include Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. It is appropriate for these states to complete an analysis for the reasons outlined above, particularly to determine whether or not changes to the HFA legislation are needed to make the HFA more responsive.

It is important to point out that housing markets are dynamic and, hence, may change significantly over time. For this reason, any comprehensive statewide analysis should incorporate mechanisms to permit periodic update in order to provide the most current input to the recurring program planning and evaluation process.

FORMALLY DESIGNATE AN OFFICE OF STATE GOVERNMENT TO PROMOTE THE FORMULATION OF A STATEWIDE HOUSING DELIVERY SYSTEM CAPABLE OF PROVIDING ADEQUATE HOUSING FOR ALL RESIDENTS WHO NEED SUCH HOUSING.

As a result of the conduct of a comprehensive housing analysis such as that described in the preceding paragraph, there should be an increased awareness of housing problems and the peculiar housing needs of specific areas of the state. The information concerning current program utilization and the need for additional programs may be used by a designated state office to determine the nature of the "gaps" in the existing housing delivery system, i.e., the characteristics of households whose needs either are not being met or cannot be met by available programs.

The activities of this state office in carrying out its responsibilities would include:

- Documenting an "inventory" of federal, state and local agencies involved in the administration of housing programs, as well as housing-oriented advocacy groups and community action organizations which play a role in fostering the utilization of available programs;

- Obtaining data to serve as measures of effectiveness for each agency identified in the "inventory";
- Conducting field surveys and interviews with agency personnel and citizens of the community in order to identify obstacles (e.g., exclusionary zoning) affecting agency effectiveness in responding to the housing needs of the community;
- Formulating action recommendations for federal, state and local governments to alleviate problems and lessen obstacles identified.

The need for such an "umbrella" agency arises from the fact that the production of low cost and/or subsidized housing tends to be very fragmented with virtually no central control or coordination. The Farmers Home Administration, HUD, state housing finance agencies, local housing authorities and local or regional housing development corporations, all operate in somewhat overlapping markets as if they were in a vacuum -- having little or no knowledge of each other's activities and plans. The result is less than optimum utilization of resources, the principal evidence of which is the fact that in many states, those markets exhibiting the greatest need for housing are the same markets in which no agency -- federal, state or local -- is functioning to satisfy that need. The express purpose of the state, then, is to identify the "gaps" in the housing delivery system and work to redirect the efforts of federal, state and local agencies to close those gaps.

What type of agency within state government should be designated as the "umbrella" agency for the housing delivery system? The specific answer to this question for any state depends largely upon the current organizational structure of each state's government. In general, to promote objectivity, it should be an agency without a vested interest in any specific housing program or activity. For this reason, it is probably not best for a state housing finance agency to assume this role. Rather, the finger seems to point to either a housing component of the state planning agency or an office of state government whose functions are largely those of advocacy.

ESTABLISH A STATE HOUSING FINANCE AGENCY WITH REQUISITE POWERS TO STIMULATE THE PRODUCTION OF HOUSING IN THOSE AREAS OF THE STATE WHERE THERE IS DEMONSTRATED NEED BUT INSUFFICIENT SUPPLY.

As stated previously, the principal objective of conducting a comprehensive housing needs analysis within a state is to define the powers, roles and responsibilities which are appropriate for an existing or proposed state housing finance agency. This step is extremely important to ensure that the agency is capable of effective response to the needs of the state's residents. It should be noted that there is a need for housing market data of greater detail than that developed by this project before recommendations may be made concerning specific powers which should be granted to a financing agency in any one of the fifteen SGPB states. In view of this fact, only more general comments and recommendations are offered at this juncture.

Based upon the analysis and definition of Regional housing problems contained in Section II of this report, it may be safely stated that a state HFA should be granted -- at a minimum -- the power to:

- Act in the capacity of a Local Housing Authority (LHA) in those areas of the state which either lack such an agency or which are served by an LHA which has proven to be ineffective;
- Finance insured development loans and insured construction loans;
- Provide direct financing of insured mortgages on single and multifamily dwellings which may or may not be subsidized;
- Utilize either private mortgage insurance or self-insurance as an alternative to federal mortgage guarantees when appropriate;

- Expand the supply of funds available for mortgage financing within the state through the purchase of existing home mortgages from lending institutions and/or by loaning low-cost funds to these same lending institutions;
- Provide interim loans and/or grants to nonprofit sponsors of housing developments to facilitate their formation and functioning prior to the existence of sufficient revenues derived from project operations;
- Conduct activities directed at increased utilization of available housing programs, even if the agency plays no direct financing role within that program;
- Provide technical assistance and other services considered appropriate to promote success in agency programs and activities (e.g., tenant training, landlord-tenant relations, management training and assistance).

These basic tools should provide an HFA with the flexibility needed to tailor available programs and HFA-originated programs to the specific needs of the residents within a particular housing market area. If it is determined that one of the primary obstacles to the production of housing is lack of a suitable sponsor and developer, then it may also be necessary to add the power to acquire, hold, develop and manage property. Even though there are several state HFA's with this broad power, few have found it necessary to utilize the capability.

Simply because an HFA is granted the power to carry on activities such as those enumerated above, that does not mean that they should necessarily be implemented simultaneously at the onset of agency operation. Rather, the specific programs and activities of the agency should follow priorities established by the detailed assessment of housing need to the extent possible. For example, it would seem inappropriate for an agency to initially embark upon programs directed at moderate and middle income households if the legislative intent and stated policy of the agency is to assign the highest priority to low-income residents. The point to be made here is that the housing needs of the states include a wide spectrum of income groups, age groups and housing unit characteristics, and that any state HFA should have the tools available to attack this entire spectrum of housing problems in a methodical manner within the framework of rationally assigned priorities.

SUPPORT ACTION DIRECTED AT CREATING AN ENVIRONMENT IN WHICH PRIVATE INDUSTRY MAY FUNCTION TO PROVIDE LOWER COST HOUSING THROUGH INNOVATION AND TECHNOLOGY.

Recent trends and economic forecasts indicate that housing construction costs are increasing more rapidly than income. The data in the Section III analysis support this observation and provide a quantitative measure of the impact of this phenomena in terms of the growing number of households requiring subsidies to avoid paying a disproportionate share of their incomes for shelter.

There are three basic alternatives to solve or alleviate this growing problem. First, government (i.e., taxpayers) may continue to fund an ever-increasing level of housing subsidies. Second, increases in housing cost may be brought under control by reducing or controlling material costs and labor costs. Or third, modern materials, innovations and technology may be introduced to the industry. The ultimate answer probably involves a mix of each of these alternatives.

If one assumes that the general public will be unwilling to bankroll ever-increasing housing subsidies and that there is little likelihood that the cost of materials and labor may be reduced relative to income changes, then it seems that government must pursue the third alternative more vehemently to remove some of the obstacles which prevent private industry from modernizing their building techniques. Specific actions which support this alternative include:

- The creation of a State Building Commission to oversee the formulation, enactment and enforcement of statewide building codes which permit the use of available new construction materials and techniques designed to reduce the time and cost of construction while maintaining standards of reliability, utility, desirability and esthetics. The benefits of modern, statewide codes include, among others:

  - Providing the means whereby private industry may better utilize mass production techniques to more effectively construct quality housing conforming to common code requirements in force throughout large housing markets and geographic areas.

  - Providing, through the enforcement mechanism of mandatory building permits, more reliable and accurate data for use in monitoring changes in the housing inventory throughout a state. Such information would be invaluable to a state office charged with the responsibility of overseeing a statewide housing delivery system. (It is ironic that so often public policy makers find that the least data are available concerning social and economic issues of the most vital importance. Such is the case in virtually all of the SGPB states where the housing need is predominantly rural, and yet building permit coverage in these areas is sparse or more often nonexistent).

- Support of the federally-sponsored Basic Homes Program, the purpose of which is to demonstrate that a basic minimal house can be developed that is within the affordable cost ($7,500-$13,500) and also acceptable to lower income families without a long-term subsidy from the Federal Government. (Currently, the state housing finance agencies in both South Carolina and West Virginia are participating with HUD in this Program with demonstration projects slated for FY 74-75). The support for this program may be demonstrated by:

.. Removal of building code restrictions and other obstacles which could potentially prevent housing of the type being developed from being constructed in those market areas for which it is designed.

.. Maintain liaison with HUD and those state agencies involved in the program for the purpose of gaining familiarity with the program and the nature of the alternative housing designs which are resulting.

.. Provide political support in HUD as appropriate to ensure that the Program is granted sufficient time and resources to achieve its purpose.

. Create a legislative study committee to review the activities of other states in the regulation of the mobile home industry (Michigan, for example, has recently enacted a mobile house construction standards act) for the purpose of evaluating the steps which might be taken to constructively regulate both the construction of mobile homes and their use in the state (mobile home parks, scattered sites, etc.). The objective of this study committee would not be so much to formulate actual legislation as it would be to determine a defensible policy for the state with respect to prospective federal control over the industry. Recognizing that mobile homes are contributing significantly to satisfying the housing needs of lower income families in the Region, it is imperative that each state develop clear, rational, defensible and constructive policies with respect to mobile homes.

SUPPORT ACTION TO ENSURE THAT ALL CITIZENS HAVE EQUAL ACCESS TO ADEQUATE HOUSING WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE, SEX, RELIGION OR NATIONAL ORIGIN.

The data and relating analyses contained in Section III serve to highlight the extent to which minority groups currently experience more severe housing problems, proportionately, than other segments of the population. The percentage of negro families housed in substandard units is four times that of non-negro families.

The 1968 Civil Rights Act covers specific acts of discrimination omitted in the 1866 statute and fashions administrative and legal remedies as well. The remedies, however, are not strong enough to provide adequate relief in many cases for those who suffer discrimination. The Secretary of HUD may investigate complaints. His powers, however, are limited to conference, conciliation and persuasion. He may not issue an enforceable administrative remedy.

The 1968 Civil Rights Act invites strong state action to guarantee fair housing. Section 810(c) provides that wherever a state (or local) fair housing law provides rights and remedies at least substantially equivalent to rights and remedies in the 1968 Act, the federal government will defer to the state in its enforcement activities.

Specific actions which may be taken in this area include:

- The enactment of a comprehensive state fair housing law which would fill the gap in federal legislation and take advantage of the priority extended to state legislation by Section 810(c) of the 1968 Act. A strong and comprehensive state fair housing law should:[1]

- .. establish an enforcement agency with adequate staff and appropriations to enforce the law;
- .. empower the enforcement agency to receive complaints from citizens, from appropriate state officials, and to initiate complaints on its own motion;
- .. ban all discrimination on the grounds of race, sex, religion, or national origin in the sale or rental of all property, including:
  - ... refusal to sell or rent,
  - ... discrimination in the terms or conditions of a sale or rental,
  - ... use of advertisement or applications which express or imply any such discrimination,
  - ... discrimination by real estate salesmen or brokers,
  - ... discrimination by lending institutions;
- .. empower the enforcement agency to use temporary injunctions on sale or rental during its investigation of a complaint;

[1] Components of comprehensive state fair housing law taken from Agenda for Positive Action. National Urban Coalition.

.. empower the enforcement agency to conciliate, issue cease and desist orders; require appropriate affirmative acts to cure the discrimination;

.. provide penalties for a failure to comply with the enforcement agency's orders; subject the enforcement agency's orders to judicial review, and

.. empower the enforcement agency to carry on appropriate research and education programs to eliminate housing discrimination.

. Through the auspices of the state agency responsible for the formulation of a statewide housing delivery system, identify and promote the most appropriate mechanism for handling local area housing information (locations, descriptions, price, rent, restrictions, etc.) and disseminating that information to persons seeking housing in the area.

METHODOLOGY

APPENDIX A

METHODOLOGY

INTRODUCTION

This appendix of the report is designed to give the reader an understanding of the Methodology that was used to produce the profiles of housing conditions, estimates and projections which are presented in the preceding sections. This methodology is essentially the same as that employed during similar studies conducted for the Missouri Housing Development Commission and the Kentucky Housing Corporation.

The material that follows is organized in much the same way as the study phases were executed. There were four major tasks:

Phase I	Determining the 1970 Stock of Inadequate Housing
Phase II	Estimating and Profiling the Need for Housing at 1970
Phase III	Projecting the Cumulative Need for Housing to 1980
Phase IV	Estimating the Number of Households in Need of Subsidies at 1980.

The methodology used is described for each of these phases in the remainder of this appendix.

PHASE I - DETERMINING THE 1970 STOCK OF INADEQUATE HOUSING

One of the first tasks which the study required was the development of a definitive profile of the 1970 stock of inadequate housing. Described in the following pages is:

- The definition of Inadequate Housing
- The development of the Profile of Inadequate Housing.

A. Definition of Inadequate Housing

Two elements were considered in defining the stock of inadequate housing:

- housing units which are physically substandard to the extent that they fail to provide safe and adequate shelter, and may well endanger the health, safety and well-being of the occupants, and
- housing units which contain persons residing in overcrowded conditions.

1. Physically Substandard Units

"Lacking one or more elements of plumbing facilities" is an almost universal definition of physical substandard condition. The Bureau of Census and most housing researchers agree that the absence of piped water, flush toilet, and/or bathing facilities appears to be a valid predictor or indicator of a housing unit which, by most standards, would be considered an undesirable place to live. For this reason, the "lacking complete plumbing" criteria was one of the criteria selected for use in this study.

However, it is also obvious that there are many "plumbing-complete" units which are equally undesirable places in which to live. For this reason, the "plumbing-complete but dilapidated" criteria was also selected for use in this study.

2. Overcrowded Substandard Housing Units

Census data stratifies the housing stock using the ratio of the number of persons in the household to the number of rooms in the related housing unit (i.e., persons/room). Data is displayed in published census reports for units with persons/room ratios of 0.50 or less, 0.51 to 0.75, 0.76 to 1.00, 1.01 to 1.50 and 1.51 or more. There is virtually universal acceptance of the assumption that a person/room ratio greater than 1.00 is indicative of overcrowding and that a ratio in excess of 1.50 is indicative of severe overcrowding. In order to abide by the constraints imposed by data availability, a person/room ratio of 1.01 or more was selected for this study as the sole indicator of overcrowded substandard housing units.

B. Development of a Profile of Inadequate Housing

Having selected the criteria for determining inadequate housing units, the Public Use Sample from the 1970 Census of Housing was used to prepare the Summary of Housing Conditions (Exhibit A).

The Public Use Sample is a one-in-one hundred sample, meaning one sample "unit" (household, vacant unit, or person in group quarters) for every one hundred such units in the population. For each household, information is provided about the housing unit itself as well as the characteristics of each person residing in that household. With this data bank, it was possible to estimate the number of housing units within each state that exhibit certain characteristics or combinations of characteristics. At the same time, we could develop profiles of the occupants of those housing units using such criteria as household income and household size.

The Public Use Sample Data are maintained on magnetic tapes which were computer processed by the Urban Research Group of the Oak Ridge National Laboratories with programs developed and specially modified for this study by the Urban Studies Center of the University of Louisville, Kentucky.

The computer software used to develop the profiles of inadequate housing duplicated the statistical techniques used by the Bureau of the Census in their preparation of Volume (6) of the Census of Housing -- Plumbing Facilities and Estimates of Dilapidated Housing. That is, the technique which the Bureau applied to the complete count Basic Record Tapes to produce Volume (6) was duplicated and applied to the Public Use Sample tapes for each state to yield the profiles appearing in Appendix A.

PHASE II - ESTIMATING AND PROFILING THE NEED FOR HOUSING AT 1970

Application of the methodology outlined in Phase I resulted in estimates, by state, of the number of inadequate occupied housing units. The primary purpose of Phase II is to provide a profile of the housing units necessary to adequately house all households as of 1970. In terms of absolute numbers, the quantity of new units needed is equal to the number of substandard, occupied units. What was needed was a stratification of this aggregate need according to tenure of the occupants, type of unit (single or multifamily), size of unit (number of bedrooms), household type (senior citizen and nonsenior citizen) and household income.

Provided in the following paragraphs is:

- The definition of Senior Citizen/Elderly
- The definition of Need for Housing
- Description of the methodology used in developing the "Profile of Need for Housing"
- Description of Vacant Housing Units and Vacancy Rates.

A. Definition of Senior Citizen/Elderly

Senior citizen/elderly households were defined as one and two person households with a head of household 62 years or older.

B. Definition of Need for Housing

The definition of the need for housing (by tenure and type of unit) was defined as the number of housing units required to adequately house the households currently residing in substandard units, and further, to house them in the same type of unit in which they currently live. For example, a household renting a substandard unit in a multifamily structure was considered as exhibiting a need for a standard, multifamily rental unit.

A notable exception to this procedure was the treatment of senior citizen households residing in substandard units. Such households are assumed to have a need for housing constructed for the elderly and/or retiree market, i.e., multi-unit rental.

C. Development of the Profile of the Need for Housing at 1970

The stratification of housing need, according to the classifications discussed above, was derived from the same Public Use Sample analysis that yielded the Phase I estimates of substandard housing stock. While Phase I was concerned with profiling the stock of substandard housing, Phase II was concerned with the characteristics of the additional standard housing stock needed.

Unit sizes (that is, the number of bedrooms required) were derived from the distribution of the size of households residing in substandard housing for each state. The criteria used was to provide enough bedrooms to ensure that there would be no more than two persons per bedroom. Information on family size came directly from the Public Use Sample.

Estimates of the tenure and type of unit required (single or multifamily) were determined by the tenure and type of substandard units being conceptually replaced.

One or two person households resident in substandard units with a household head of 62 years or older were segregated for separate tabulation as "Senior Citizen".

Owner-occupied multifamily units were not separately analyzed since such units do not represent a significant component of the housing stock. Knowing that relatively few such units exist, any analysis of their households using the 1:100 Public Use Sample would likely have little statistical validity.

D. Vacant Housing Units and Vacancy Rates

The total number of standard units required to adequately house all of the households in a state is, of course, equal to the number of households residing in that particular state. Additionally, however, it is necessary to consider the stock of vacant-for-sale and vacant-for-rent housing which is required for flexibility and mobility in each housing market.

Public Use Sample census data were utilized to stratify all vacant-for-rent and vacant-for-sale housing in each state. The same criteria used for occupied housing was used as an indicator of physical substandard condition of vacant units. There are some small differences of opinion concerning the vacancy rates required to provide adequate mobility within the housing market. Most of these differences of opinion relate to vacant-for-sale vacancy rates with estimates ranging from 0.5% to 1.5% for a normal desirable vacant-for-sale rate. Vacancy rates of 1% were adopted for this study for owned housing units. There is general agreement that 5% represents a normal rental vacancy rate.

Based on the number of owned and rented standard units needed to adequately house all of the households in a state, the "required" number of vacant-for-rent and vacant-for-sale units was calculated by applying the appropriate normal vacancy rates. These requirements were compared with the estimated number of standard vacant-for-rent/sale units available at the time of the census. The difference, if any, represented the adjustment to the stock of standard vacant units needed to produce the desired "normal" vacancy rates (Exhibit D). Excess standard vacancies offset a portion of total need, while a deficiency in vacant units adds an additional increment to the need for housing.

This phase deals with the methodology used for estimating the cumulative need for housing at 1980.

Ideally, the housing supply during the 1970-1980 period should be estimated in order to project the residual or unmet need for housing units at 1980. However, no technique was found which would yield reasonably reliable projections of the private sector construction activities during this period. Similarly, publicly-assisted housing construction estimates could not be developed in view of the President's moratorium on federal housing subsidy programs.

The "need" for housing within each state at 1980 is therefore assumed to consist of the need for housing at 1970, adjusted for required vacancies, further adjusted for projected losses of standard units after 1970 and for projected additions to the number of households during the same time period.

The housing need at 1970 and the 1970 vacancy rate adjustment were estimated as explained in the preceding phase. There remains to be discussed:

- Projected losses of standard housing units
- Projected additions to the number of households.

A. Projected Losses of Standard Housing Units

Housing units are lost from the stock of standard housing by:

- Deterioration into substandard condition,
- Loss due to natural disasters (fire, flood, etc.),
- Loss due to man-made causes (demolition, conversion to commercial use, etc.).

Obviously, it would be a hopeless task to try to identify all possible reasons for these losses and then attempt to forecast the effects of each upon the stock of standard housing in each state over the 1970-1980 decade.

Fortunately, the Bureau of Census provides a reasonably acceptable alternative in the form of their publication, Components of Inventory Change (CINCH), 1960 to 1969 Components. This publication presents statistics on the counts and characteristics of the components of change in the housing inventory during the 60's. The forecast is based on a sample survey conducted just after the 1970 census. Of particular interest is the section that shows the disposition of the 1960 housing stock. The 1960 characteristics of those housing units removed from inventory during the 60's are tabulated, permitting a determination of the nature of the losses as a percent of total units. In other words, CINCH computes the average percentage of 1960 standard housing which was demolished, converted, or was lost due to other causes (including deterioration) during the 60's.

The CINCH data are displayed by region of the country. Thus, for the SGPB Region, CINCH data from the South Census Region were used. Loss rates were calculated and applied to the housing stock at 1970 on a state-by-state basis to yield estimates of losses through 1980. The underlying assumptions are, of course, that the 1960-1969 loss experience will be duplicated in the 70's and that Census' Regional data are representative of all of the fifteen SGPB states. In view of the complexity of alternate methods of analysis, this approach appeared to be the only reasonable course of action.

B. Projected Additions to the Number of Households

The largest component of the increment in housing needs through 1980 is attributed to the projected additions to the number of households within each state. The household projections for the fifteen SGPB states for 1970 and 1980 were obtained from the National Planning Association (Report No. 72-R-1).

Vacancy adjustments through 1980 were applied to the number of household additions. They were calculated to reflect the changing requirements for standard vacant housing arising from the projected addition to households. As before, a 1% vacant-for-sale rate and 5% vacant-for-rent rate was applied to the numbers of owner and renter household additions. The owner/renter split was estimated based on the split as it existed as of the 1970 census for each state. The assumption, of course, is that this split will be similar in 1980.

The household additions adjusted for required vacancies represent the increment to the need for housing units.

PHASE IV - ESTIMATING THE NUMBER OF HOUSEHOLDS IN NEED OF HOUSING ASSISTANCE

The purpose of Phase IV was to estimate the number of households that are not able to afford to live in standard housing units without some form of assistance to reduce housing costs. The objective was to estimate the number of assisted housing units which would have to be provided during the remainder of the decade (1974-1979, inclusive) to satisfy the need for such housing.

The components of the need for assisted housing by 1980 were defined as:

(1) Standard units with high shelter cost relative to household income.

(2) Households residing in substandard units at 1970, with incomes below that level required to afford standard housing.

(3) Low and moderate income household additions to 1980.

(4) Subsidized housing units provided from 1970 through 1973.

(5) Mobile home shipment projections to 1980.

Each of these components is discussed individually below.

A. Standard Units with High Shelter Cost Relative to Household Income

Those households which live in standard (plumbing complete, not dilapidated) housing units who pay an excessive share of their incomes for rent are deemed to be in need of housing assistance. For the purpose of defining "excessive share of income", the cutoff point of 25% of household income was adopted because it appeared to be a generally accepted limit.

For example, HUD's Section 236 rental program requires tenants to pay 25% of their adjusted gross income for rent. A count of the number of households of this category for each state was derived from the Public Use Sample.

B. Households with Low or Moderate Incomes Residing in Substandard Units at 1970

Households with low or moderate incomes who live in substandard units will need financial assistance in obtaining decent housing. Their incomes are not capable of commanding adequate housing on the open market. For the purpose of this study, "low or moderate income" was defined to be an annual household gross income of less than $7,000 at 1970. This amount was selected on the basis that families with smaller incomes could not afford to pay the "Median Basic Rent" (as recorded by HUD) for Section 236 dwelling units, if the cost of shelter is not to exceed 25% of gross income. In other words, households living in substandard units with incomes less than four times the annual median basic rent for Section 236 are in need of assistance in order to afford decent housing.

The stratification of substandard housing units by household income which was prepared from the Public Use Sample served as the source for tabulating the number of households that fall into this category.

C. Low and Moderate Income Household Additions by 1980

The final increment to the need for assisted housing by 1980 is created as the result of population growth. The objective during this part of Phase IV was to estimate the number of households that will not be able to afford decent (standard) housing at 1980. Again, the criteria was applied by which households were defined as unable to afford decent housing if their annual gross incomes were insufficient to the extent that 25% of such incomes would not cover the projected Section 236 Median Basic Rent.

This approach made it necessary to project household income to 1980 and estimate the amount of Median Basic Rent at 1980. Once these projections were made, the total number of these households was readily estimated. The increment to the need for assisted housing units which results from population growth was then established by subtracting the number of households of this type which already existed at 1970 and for which estimates were established in accordance with the methodology described in IV A and B above.

Explained below is the method by which household income and Median Basic Rent was projected to 1980.

1. Income Projections

The first step in forecasting income was the establishment of the trend in per capita income for each of the SGPB states from Census data for 1959 and 1969 and from Department of Commerce data for 1970, 1971 and 1972. This trend was applied to the median income at 1959 and 1969 to project the median income at 1979. The trends in changes to the distribution of income between 1959 and 1969 were applied to the median income at 1979 to produce a projection of the distribution of income for each state as of 1980. The number of households contained in each income distribution decile was derived by applying the deciles to the National Planning Association's 1980 household forecasts.

2. Estimated Median Basic Rent

The Section 236 Median Basic Rent (1) was used as the index of the average outlay needed to obtain adequate housing of a "modest, nonluxury nature". The Basic Rent consists of one component for dwelling operating and maintenance

(1) HUD Statistical Year Book 1974, Table 253 - Characteristics of FHA Insured Multi-Family Projects.

(estimated at 25% of Basic Rent) and a larger component (estimated at 75%) for all those cost factors which relate to capital costs of the project. Comparative Replacement Cost Multipliers available from 1963 to 1974 were used to establish the replacement cost trend and to project the 1980 cost multiplier. The cost multiplier was applied to the "capital" component of the 1973 Median Basic Rent while a 5.5% annual inflation rate was applied to the "operating and maintenance" component to yield a projected Median Basic Rent at 1980.

D. Subsidized Housing Provided from 1970 through 1973

There were two sources (2) of supply of subsidized, low and moderate income housing, namely:

- Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), and
- Farmers' Home Administration (FmHA).

In order to derive estimates of the amount of subsidized housing production during this period, it was necessary to determine the location and level of production activity for each of these agencies. Agency records were reviewed to determine the following data on each subsidized housing unit becoming available for occupancy since the 1970 Census:

- Applicable Program (Sections 202, 221(d)(3), 235, 236, 502, 515, Public Housing)
- Source of financing (HUD/FHA, FmHA)
- Date available for occupancy
- State in which located
- Number of units in the project
- Portion of units dedicated for elderly occupants.

To develop a forecast of production activity through 1980 under normal circumstances, it would have been necessary to estimate construction beyond that currently in the production pipeline. However, due to the moratorium imposed by HUD on subsidized housing, it did not appear necessary, or possible, to develop such estimates at this time. Because of the moratorium, it was assumed that there would be no significant construction of subsidized units beyond those receiving final commitment as of December 31, 1973.

(2) Any HUD projects sponsored/financed by a state HFA are included in the HUD production data.

E. Mobile Home Shipment Projections to 1980

Mobile homes are becoming an increasingly important factor in meeting low cost housing needs both nationally and in the SGPB states. Current data indicate that since 1969, mobile homes have accounted for 20 percent of the total national housing unit additions. For this reason, special consideration was given to the development of forecasts of mobile home shipments into the SGPB states.

Data concerning mobile home shipments for the period 1963-1972 nationally were obtained from Department of Commerce publications. The Mobile Home Manufacturers Association (MHMA) supplied data for the same period for shipments into the fifteen SGPB states. With this data base, curve-fitting techniques were used to determine the statistical relationship between state and national shipments. Having developed this relationship, Department of Commerce projections of mobile home shipments through 1980 were utilized to estimate each of the SGPB state's shares in these shipments.

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT STATE INVOLVEMENT IN HOUSING

APPENDIX B

SYNOPSIS OF CURRENT STATE INVOLVEMENT IN HOUSING

INTRODUCTION

The brief summaries contained in this Appendix are intended to provide the reader with a very brief overview of current housing programs and activities in each of the fifteen SGPB states, as well as to indicate the name of the individual/ office to which we were referred as having primary responsibility for state housing activites.

ALABAMA

Legislation is currently pending to create the Alabama Housing Development Corporation. This agency would be empowered to issue bonds to finance operations and would be capable of conducting secondary mortgage market programs as well as direct development programs.

FLORIDA

Housing programs are administered by the Department of Community Affairs. Current activities include (1) an "outreach" program in which the state supplements the staffing of selected Farmers' Home Administration (FmHA) offices in order to increase FmHA program utilization, (2) preliminary design of a revolving development loan fund, and (3) preliminary identification of programs which would be used to improve the viability of public housing in this state.

The state constitution presently precludes establishment of a housing finance agency. There appears to be growing support for a public referendum to amend the constitution to permit an HFA to be created.

GEORGIA

The state legislature has recently passed the enabling legislation for the Georgia Residential Finance Agency and empowered it to conduct secondary market operations, to provide direct development, construction and permanent financing for qualified housing projects, and to administer Section 23 Leased Housing programs. To date, the Agency has not been provided with initial funding, nor have any programs been activated.

Additionally, there exists the Georgia Office of Housing which serves as an advocacy agency, administers special projects funded by the Appalachian Regional Commission, and has been the focal point for state involvement in the housing industry.

KENTUCKY

The Kentucky Housing Corporation, a state HFA, was activated in 1973 and financed a mortgage purchase program designed to increase the supply of mortgage money in the state and also provide the cash flow needed to attain self-sufficiency. The Corporation presently holds the mortgages on approximately 1,200 FHA 235 single-family units and 25 FHA 236 multi-family projects. A secondary market "loans-to-lender" program is contemplated as well as specialized programs and activities funded through the Appalachian Regional Commission. One such program may be created to assist the Farmers' Home Administration increase its housing program utilization (similar to that being conducted in Florida).

The powers granted the Corporation by the legislature are quite broad as they encompass the power to acquire, hold, develop, manage, finance or dispose of real property.

The Kentucky Office for Local Government has a coordinative function for housing activity in state government and is charged with the responsibility of conducting research and other special projects in support of the Housing Corporation.

LOUISIANA

The 1972 state legislature enacted legislation to create the Louisiana Development Authority for Housing Finance and empowered it to finance both construction and mortgage loans. To date, the Authority has not been activated -- one of the primary obstacles to activation being a 6% limit on state issued tax-exempt bonds. The Office of State Planning is currently conducting a review to determine the feasibility of removing existing regulatory obstacles and activating the agency and its programs.

MARYLAND

While there is no operative housing finance agency (nor any pending legislation to create such an agency), the Maryland legislature has enacted a law to create the Maryland Housing Fund, the purpose of which would be to insure home mortgages and thereby enhance their acceptability to mortgagees in the state. The thrust of the Fund is to be in the economically impacted urban areas where mortgage financing is particularly difficult to obtain.

To date, the Fund has issued no bonds to finance its mortgage insurance fund, as the agency's programs and activities are still undergoing refinement.

MISSISSIPPI

There is currently no active housing finance agency operating in the state, nor is there legislation pending to create such an agency. The Office of the Coordinator of Federal and State Programs is drafting legislation for an HFA and optimistically hopes to have the bill ready for consideration by the legislature in January 1975.

NORTH CAROLINA

The 1974 legislature enacted legislation to create the North Carolina Housing Finance Agency, the successor agency to the defunct Housing Corporation. The newly created Agency is limited primarily to mortgage financing, as it may not invest in development or construction loans. To date, there has been no program activity since the state is still involved in pre-program planning and other steps associated with the formation of the Agency.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The South Carolina State Housing Authority was created in 1971 and has operated -- until very recently -- as an advocacy agency providing technical assistance, acting as a non-profit sponsor of housing developments, and otherwise serving as a conduit for Federal housing assistance programs. In 1974, the state legislature granted the power to issue bonds to finance mortgages, development loans and construction loans.

While time has not permitted the Authority to exercise its financing powers, the agency has actively engaged in such activities as (1) assuming the role of Local Housing Authority for several counties and sponsoring Public Housing in those counties, (2) assisting communities in obtaining FmHA rehabilitation loans and assisted housing, (3) serving as the lead agency in HUD's Basic Homes Program.

The Tennessee Housing Development Authority was formed in 1973 and is currently engaged in structuring its first tax-exempt bond issue to finance the purchase of mortgages relating to about 3,500 units of FHA Section 236 and 221(d)(4) multi-family housing, as well as to provide funds for secondary market financing of 500 units of single-family housing. Legislation is being drafted to create a state housing finance agency and is being readied for consideration by the legislature in 1975. At present, housing programs and activities are coordinated by the Department of Community Affairs. Recently, a comprehensive research project was completed to more accurately document the extent and distribution of substandard housing in the state.

VIRGINIA

The Virginia Housing Development Authority is empowered to conduct both direct financing programs as well as secondary market/mortgage purchase programs. The Authority's current programs are financing about 2,800 units of multi-family housing as well as 800 units of single-family housing under Sections 235 and 203(b). Additionally, construction loan financing is being provided for 1,200 multi-family units.

WEST VIRGINIA

The West Virginia Housing Development Fund was established in 1968 and is currently engaged in a wide variety of housing-related programs. The Fund has completed or under construction about 1,600 units of Section 236 or 221(d)(4) multi-unit housing, and is processing another 600 plus units of Section 236. Under its recently announced Home Loan Financing Program, the Fund will be providing low interest, non-subsidized, financing for about 900 units of single-family housing to families with adjusted incomes below $12,000 annually. The Agency's Land Development Fund is providing development loan financing in order to create buildable lots for the FmHA Section 502 Single-Family program.

The Fund is also an active participant in HUD's Basic Homes Program and hopes to oversee a demonstration project in the state during the current fiscal year.

Subject: Recommended Changes in By-laws

Date: August 13, 1971

This is a supplement to my memo to you dated July 26 and the minutes of the Committee on Committees which I transmitted to you on that date. At the Board meeting August 5, we were unable to transact much business primarily because the notice did not go out the required seven days in advance of the meeting.

I was asked to try to put the recommendations of the Committee on Committees into actual by-law language, and I transmit my effort herewith, there being inadequate time to check them out with the other Committee members and get them to you before the August 19 Board meeting.

Moreover, I remind the members of the Committee on Committees that we were working with about three sets of by-laws on August 5. I have now been furnished with what is apparently the by-laws approved by the three original incorporators, but which have not been approved by OEO. All of my references are to the attached set of by-laws which our attorney has furnished.

RECOMMENDED CHANGES IN BY-LAWS

1. Strike present Article IV, Executive Committee, Section 1. General:, and replace it with the following language:

> Article IV, Section 1, Executive Committee: There shall be an Executive Committee of the Board of Directors composed of seven (7) members, two (2) of whom shall be elected annually by the Board of Directors at its regular annual meeting, and five (5) of whom shall be ex-officio as provided herein. Unless otherwise provided by the Board of Directors, elected members of the Executive Committee shall hold office until the next annual meeting of the Board of Directors or meeting held in lieu thereof and until their respective successor shall have been duly chosen. The President, Vice-President, Executive Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer of the Corporation shall be voting members of the Executive Committee.

2. Article II, Section 4. Chairman: Delete the entire Section, and renumber the succeeding Sections. (This abolished the office of the Chairman of the Board.)

3. Article IV, Section 2, is to be stricken and the following language inserted:

Article IV, Section 2. Chairman: The President of the Corporation shall serve as Chairman of the Executive Committee.

4. There was a motion to delete the job of Chairman of the Board of Directors as an officer, and combine that job with that of President of the Corporation, and that adjustments be made throughout the by-laws to make them consistent with that change. I am not supplying language to achieve this as numerous deletions would have to be made, and this can be done by the Secretary if the motion is approved.

5. Article VI, Section 2: Strike all of present Section, and substitute the following PROVIDED THE ABOLITION OF THE JOB OF CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD AS AN OFFICER IS APPROVED.

Article VI, Section 2: The President of the Board of Directors shall preside at all meetings of the Directors and the Executive Committee.

6. Section VI, Section 4. Vice Presidents: There shall be a Vice President and an Executive Vice President. The Vice Presidents, in the absence of the President, shall perform all acts authorized for the President. The Vice President shall take precedence over the Executive Vice President in all cases.

7. Section VI, Section 5. Executive Director: (Leave this unchanged except to change the last sentence to read "Executive Vice President" rather than "second Vice President".

8. Nominations Committee--new Section and new language:

Article V, Section 2. Nominations Committee: There shall be a Nominations Committee, elected annually, to consist of five (5) members, two (2) of whom shall be non-members of the Board of Directors. The function of this Committee is to nominate persons for positions of Directors expiring at the following annual meeting. The Chairman of this Committee shall be designated by the Board; and if the Board fails to act, elected by the Committee. The Nominations Committee shall make its recommendations to the members of the Board of Directors not less than 60 days before the annual meeting.

9. Article V, Section 3. Loan Committee: There shall be a loan committee elected annually by the Board of Directors, of such number and with such authority as the Board may from time to time approve.

The Committee on Committees passed a resolution (No. 7) on this, but the language is too general for by-laws, and I recommend that more general language be in the by-laws, leaving the Board free to alter the loan committees numbers and functions without the formality of a by-laws change. The resolution passed by the Committee on Committees follows:

> A Loan Committee shall be established, elected annually by the Board of Directors, with a maximum of nine(9) members, one (1) of whom shall be the Executive Vice President. A majority of the Loan Committee shall be members of the Board of Directors, plus non-Board members selected for special reasons, i.e., expertise. The Executive Vice President may lend up to $3,000 without approval from the Loan Committee where time is urgent. The Loan Committee, once elected, shall prepare guidelines for operation, and bring them to the Board for approval or revision.

SPECIAL NOTE: I have been furnished the following language by our attorney with a recommendation that these amendments should be made as a matter of law:

> Article III, Section 3 is hereby amended to read as follows: Section 3. Quorum: Attendance by one-third of the number of Directors fixed by the by-laws shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business at any meeting of the Board of Directors.
> Article III is hereby amended by deleting Section 5 (Informal Action by Directors) in its entirety.

In addition to the recommendations of the Committee on Committees, I urge consideration of the following changes:

1. Article II, Section 3(a): Delete the reference to "one state government HDC" and "one non-OEO private HDC" which would increase the number of Board members which we can elect. Under the present by-laws, there are 23 automatic members, plus 12 elected by the Board, plus another automatic member, i.e., the Executive Director. This suggested change would allow the Board to elect at least 14 of its members.

2. I think an annual meeting one (1) day before national elections is a pretty sorry arrangement.

3. I am opposed to the recommendations of the Committee on Committees on the Executive Committee, and I propose the following substitute:

> There shall be an Executive Committee of the Board of Directors composed of ten (10) voting members, six (6) of whom shall be elected by the Board of Directors at its regular annual meeting or at any meeting called for such purpose, and shall, unless otherwise provided by the Board of Directors, hold office until the next annual meeting of the Board of Directors or meeting held in lieu thereof and until their respective successors shall have been duly chosen. The Board of Directors shall elect the Executive Committee and the President of the Corporation, the Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer shall be ex-officio members of the Executive Committee.

4. I call your attention to the fact that Article VI, Section 1, of the present by-laws calls for seven (7) officers, including a first and second Vice President and an Executive Director as officers. Article VI, Section 5 makes two (2) of these officers the same person, i.e., Executive Directors, also Second Vice President. This is silly and confusing.

5. I will move to strike Article VI, Section 5, and substitute the following:

> Executive Director: The chief of staff and administrator of the Corporation shall be an Executive Director who shall have such powers and responsibilities as the Board shall from time to time prescribe. He shall sign any official document which may be lawfully executed on behalf of the Corporation as directed by the Board of Directors or President of the Corporation.

(I am opposed to the Executive Director's being also an officer or a member of the Board or a member of Executive Committee...period.)

Dear Mr. Cavanaugh:

As you may know, I served as one of the incorporators of the Housing Assistance Council at the request of Bob Smith. Subsequently, my membership on the Board of Directors served to fulfill the OEO requirement that the Southern Regional Council be represented on that Board.

My lack of any special knowledge or expertise in the field of housing plus a lack of time have convinced me that I should resign from the Board and I am herewith doing so.

As President of the Southern Regional Council, I would like to propose the following two names from which a replacement could be selected:

The first is Art Campbell, who is a staff member, and Director of the Housing and Urban Planning Project of the Council. He has a particular interest in rural housing and has recently been closely involved with the Panola Project. I am enclosing some biographical data about him.

The second nominee is Earl Johnson who is a Council member and who is a black attorney and member of the Metropolitan Council which governs the Jacksonville, Florida metropolitan area. His address is 625 West Union Street, Jacksonville, Florida 33202.

I have not talked with Earl Johnson but Art Campbell has expressed to me a particular interest in the Housing Assistance Council and a desire to serve on its Board.

I shall continue to be interested in your work and plan to keep in touch with it through one of the above named.

Sincerely,

Raymond M. Wheeler, M. D.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:

Thank you for reviewing the policy statements.

Only one member of the committee, Mr. Morris, suggested any changes in the revisions that were submitted to you. Mr. Morris suggested that wherever "rural areas" appeared in the statement that this phrase be changed to read "rural and other areas."

OEO officials did not accept the language limiting the size of communities and metropolitan areas to be served as proposed in the draft, except as defining those entitled to priority treatment. OEO insisted that we should also serve rural areas and small towns in standard metropolitan statistical areas exceeding 500,000 population, as well as communities of more than 25,000 if truly rural in character. Since OEO approval of our guidelines is a condition to our operation, we have revised them as requested at page 4, paragraph numbered 2 and continued on page 5.

Since the changes that OEO required specified "rural" in each case, the language change suggested by Mr. Morris was not incorporated into the statement, but the basic idea which he was urging for inclusion is now more specific and the service areas are enlarged.

Mr. Morris made several suggestions concerning minority relationships and opportunities, which are incorporated into the statement.

Copies of the statement are now being made available to those that have requested information concerning HAC. A cover letter being used for distributing the statements is also enclosed.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Cavanaugh

Dear Friends:

The Housing Assistance Council has had many requests for information about its programs to assist organizations in providing decent homes for rural poor people.

Because we are a new organization, created by a recent grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity of $4 million, we have delayed detailed answers to many inquiries until the basic policies that will govern our operations received final approval of our executive committee and from OEO.

Those approvals have now been obtained for the enclosed document, which is a statement of our "Viewpoints, Objectives and Principal Activities" and "Criteria for Eligibility for Seed Capital Loan Funds and Other Housing Assistance Council Services."

Half of our grant, $2 million, is for seed capital loans. The other half is for administration and for staff for our technical assistance and training programs and for consulting services for eligible development organizations.

The executive committee has also named members of our loan committee; we have hired a staff which includes members with extensive experience in the various housing programs and, with approval of these basic policy guidelines, we are now ready to act on requests for our loan funds and for the other services that we provide.

The enclosed documents will indicate to you the possibilities of our being of service to you. We earnestly solicit further inquiries. Application forms for seed capital loans are available upon request.

We appreciate your interest in the Housing Assistance Council and look forward to working with you in helping to provide decent homes for the rural poor.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Cavanaugh

Thank you very much for your letter of February 29. I am delighted to know that you are operational and your initial work sounds impressive.

I intentionally did not express a preference between the two nominations because I thought it might not be proper. Since you ask, we would prefer that Art Campbell receive the nomination.

I think he can prove to be very helpful to you and you to him.

Dear Dave:

The first six months of activity of the Housing Assistance Council, from August 1, 1971 to January 31, 1972 is reviewed in the enclosed report.

We had assumed, for reporting purposes, that the first six months began with the release of our funds (December 31, 1971) or we would have provided this report at an earlier date.

We appreciate your continuing cooperation and guidance.

INTRODUCTION

The Housing Assistance Council is pleased to provide this report covering the first six months of its two-year grant period, from August 1, 1971 to February 1, 1972. The report is required under the special conditions of the grant.

Because this is the first report on the activity of HAC it is appropriate also to review, at least briefly, the several meetings of the board of directors and committees of the board of directors prior to August 1, 1971 and the meetings of these governing bodies during this first six months. Decisions made by the directors in this formative period have provided the basic guidelines for the establishment and operation of the Council.

A summary of those meetings:

Board of directors pre-organizational meeting, June 15, 1971 — Reviewed by-laws; appointed interim director; named temporary officers; established a committee on committees; were advised that grant was to be made.

Committee on Committees, July 19, 1971--Established executive and loan committees.

Committee on Committees, August 5, 1971--Discussed job description of executive director; discussed purpose and objectives of HAC, recommended that personnel and committee on committees be disbanded.

Board of Directors, August 5, 1971--Decided that HAC should concentrate efforts in rural areas for poor people and further the goals of open housing legislation and of minority opportunity. Set August 19, 1971 as meeting to elect officers and amend by-laws.

Board of Directors, August 19, 1971--Changed by-laws provision on officers; established quorum for board meetings; set number of members of loan committee; adopted resolution on "focus of HAC" setting program goals; elected officers and executive committee; expanded executive committee to 12 members.

Executive Committee, August 19, 1971--Reviewed and approved procedure for hiring executive director; set deadline for receiving applications for executive director.

Executive Committee, September 14, 1971--Interviewed applicants for executive director. Hired Gordon Cavanaugh for that position.

Executive Committee, January 11, 1972--Discussed report on activity on first months; authorized signatories for checks; named assistant treasurer; named five members of loan committee and established quorum for that committee; adopted statement of viewpoints, objectives,and principal activities and criteria for seed capital loans; adopted budget.

OEO approved the grant for HAC June 30, 1971. Operating funds were provided for the organizational expenses by the North Carolina LIHDC. On November 22, 1971, OEO authorized the Rural Housing Alliance to make a loan of $50,000 to HAC. After meeting the several special conditions requisite for release of grant funds, that approval was authorized December 21, 1971 for the full amount of the grant, $4,000,000.

Mr. Cavanaugh, while working scattered days in October, began his duties full time November 1, 1971. Thus, actual operation of HAC started in the fourth month of the period covered by this report.

While the work conducted during the first six months was performed by only a nucleus of a staff, it nonetheless was very important work and fundamental and basic to achieving the objectives for which the grant was made.

The activity can be broadly classified into two categories: organizational and planning-policy. The organizational work included such activities as hiring of the basic staff, leasing headquarters, purchasing equipment. The planning-policy activities included developing the basic policy statement and a six-month budget for the period January 1, 1972 to July 1, 1972.

From the standpoint of money expended for staff and for other activities, the report period represents less than a month of activity as envisioned by the grant and the two-year budget: i.e., the total staff salary expense in the first six months is only fifteen percent of the prpportinate amount allowed by the grant for a six-month period or less than the amount budgeted for one month for the first year.

Some of these activities have been previously reported to the housing branch of OEO, either as part of fulfilling other conditions of the grant or for informational purposes. Since the activity of the first six months was organizing and making the basic policy decisions to carry out the grant purposes, the report which follows here has been organized under those headings on a topic-by-topic basis under the two categories described above. Previously dubmitted documents are so noted.

The HAC grant and the law governing such grants require approval of each of the governors of the states in which services are provided. While the grant was made June 30, 1971, the first request for that approval to the governors was not mailed by OEO until December, 1971. HAC staff has undertaken to pursue required gubernatorial approvals. HAC has spent considerable time and effort in these first months seeking these approvals and coordinating efforts of potential recipients who have helped us in this effort. This effort of the HAC staff is not otherwise noted in this report although it has required a considerable amount of time and is a continuing task and problem.

ORGANIZATIONAL ACTIVITY

STAFFING--One of the most time consuming activities during the first months was interviewing dozens of applicants for the HAC staff. Two assistant directors were appointed during this first six months, Clarence Richardson, and Harlan Severson. The resumes and position descriptions of the assistant directors and other key employees have been submitted to the housing branch of OEO. An organizational chart showing employees and their relationships is included with this report. The staff includes specialists in every phase of low-income housing development.

The staff at the close of this report period included the executive director, two assistant directors, three administrative assistants, an accountant, an information director, five specialists in low-income housing, two research specialists and three secretaries. Members of the staff are well qualified for the positions they hold because of their experience, education and training. Each member of the staff is dedicated to the purpose and objectives of HAC. Morale is good. Each staff member has accepted a challenge to make a maximum effort to the organization. There is a friendly spirit of working together.

HEADQUARTERS--Arrangements for leasing headquarters for the organization were completed, with the staff now occupying the sixth floor of the Caravel building at 1601 Connecticut Avenue, N.W. The staff moved to these new quarters January 17, 1972, after occupying temporary space provided by the National Sharecroppers Fund at 1346 Connecticut Avenue, N.W. The headquarters office space (4,665 square feet) was especially designed to meet the needs of the HAC staff. The leasing arrangements conform to the budget requirement of the grant.

EQUIPMENT--Office equipment was purchased or leased, including such items as desks, office machines, dictating machines, etc. That equipment includes a small investment in reproduction facilities to keep printing costs as low as possible. A condition of all equipment purchase or leasing was to obtain equipment (or supplies) which would result in the lowest costs for the period of the grant.

OFFICE PROCEDURE MANUAL--Partly to conform with the grant requirement of providing a personnel policy for the organization, an office procedure manual which sets personnel policy, but in addition provides the procedures for all office functions was developed. A copy of the manual was provided to the housing branch of OEO in fulfillment of the personnel policy requirement.

ACCOUNTING SYSTEM--The Housing Assistance Council has hired the auditing firm of Lucas, Tucker and Company, formarly Williams, Broadus and Lee, as its auditor, which has reviewed the accounting system established for the Council, and commented formally on it. The housing branch and the regional auditor of OEO have earlier been informed of this activity and the appropriate documents have been supplied.

BONDING AND INSURANCE POLICIES--The Council has obtained a business multi-peril policy from Brail-Mick Insurance Company which includes coverage for Fire, General Liability Automobile Liability and Physical Damage, Crime and Commercial Blanket Bond on all employees. The required Workmen's Compensation was obtained from Palmer & Phelps, Insurance Agency. Group health and life insurance was obtained from Nationwide Insurance and became effective January 31, 1972. Competitive bids were required for each of these insurance coverages.

LETTERS OF INQUIRY--Announcement of the grant to HAC on June 30, 1971 resulted in more than 200 letters to HAC, requesting information. Each of these letters was answered with an attempt to be as responsive as possible to the questions and problems raised in the letters. Generally, definitive answers concerning the revolving loan fund and other HAC services were delayed until the policy decisions of the Executive Committee were determined in January.

POLICY-PLANNING ACTIVITY

Policy decisions concerning the basic direction of the Housing Assistance Council, its objectives and priorities, are made by the board of directors or the executive committee. This basic, appropriate control dictated the major portion of the activity of the staff during the months of December and January.

The activity of the staff in these two months was directed to accomplish two major functions:

(1) Provide a basis for recommendation for the basic policy statement and criteria for eligibility for services.

(2) To provide a basis for planning our activities during the six months beginning January 1, 1972 and proposing a budget for that period.

To provide a basis for making these recommendations, the staff made trips to Kentucky, North Carolina, Colorado, Georgia, and New York and visited with carefully selected groups invited to confer with the HAC staff in Washington, D.C. from 12 other states.

Telephone conversations were held with organizations in many other states. Members of the staff analyzed more than 75 written requests for service. Meetings were held with allied groups, such as NAHRO, RHA, HUD and OEO housing officials.

This activity report provided the basis for drafting a basic policy statement entitled "Statement of Purpose, Viewpoints, Objectives and Principal Activities," which was presented to the executive committee January 11, 1972.

That activity was also the basis for the following recommendations and conclusions:

1. SERVING THE POOR--Generally, the activities now under way in the rural areas, for the most part, do not or will not serve the poorest of the poor, that group that falls within the OEO-income guidelines. The bulk of the activity, generally speaking, is developing of Farmers Home 502 loan programs and HUD 235 and 236 programs. There is a growing realization, however, that more public housing activity is desperately needed as well as the ability to use rent supplements and section 23 leasing with the Farmers Home programs. There are several activities either under way or planned for public housing.

2. NEED FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE--There is generally an urgent need for technical assistance for many groups and organizations--to provide the skills to initiate programs and projects and to aid these organizations in developing feasible proposals. Of the 75 organizations that wrote to us, almost all cited a need for such assistance.

3. NEED FOR SEED CAPITAL--The need for seed capital is also apparent byt not to the degree as is the present need for technical assistance. While more detailed analysis and information is necessary to determine exactly the need for seed capital by the organizations which have written to HAC, there were something like 20 organizations which we believe can possibly utilize this type of existence. On the basis of this analysis there is a possible need for about $300,000 of seed capital funds in the next six months. The rural division of the North Carolina LIHDC has requested a similar amount for construction funds and land acquisition. A Basin Electric group couldduse about $50,000 to develop sewer and water for rural housing development.

4. NEED FOR ADMINISTRATIVE FUNDS--There is a need for administrative funds in the formative periods of housing development organizations, especially newly organized housing authorities. Several organizations cite a need for construction funds or for a line of credit for such funds or for Bonding purposes or both.

5. ORGANIZATIONS VARY--There does not now exist any organized, coordinated universal delivery system for the rural areas. The large HDC's in almost every case operate in the urban areas. State authorities generally are without staff and skills or funds to develop them. There is not now any group of broad-based organizations through which HAC can funnel either funds or its assistance--but there are, at least in a few instances, the opportunity to develop such groups and a few organizations do exist with which we can work at the outset.

SUMMARY: The need for the grant is clear. How best to utilize the grant is gradually emerging. We have a good enough "feel for what's out there" to begin our activities.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

(1) That the executive committee approve the statement of viewpoints, objectives and principal activities, and the eligibility criteria for HAC assistance.

(2) That the executive committee authorize an effort to seek funds for administrative purposes for preliminary organization of housing authorities and promising broad-judicial HDC's.

The executive committee approved the proposed policy statement but made several amendments which were incorporated into the final document. Members of the housing branch of OEO also reviewed the basic policy statement and made several suggestions which were also incorporated into the final document, a copy of which is included with this report.

The January 11 committee also adopted the proposed budget for the period of January 1 to July 1, 1972, and provided other policy direction for the staff.

The approval of these basic guidelines by the executive committee provided the authority and direction for the staff to proceed with the loan, technical assistance and training functions of the organizations. HAC was fully operational at the close of this report period.

HAC staff present: G. Anders, F. Cooper, A. Downes, M. Echols, L. Juarez, Y. McCoy, L. Norman, W. Powers, C. Richardson, H. Severson and D. Sternberg.

Others present: J. Debro, HAC Board of Directors, M. Hubbard, National Association of Minority Contractors, A. Popoli, HAC Board of Directors, and A. Sternberg, HAC general counsel.

1. CALL TO ORDER--Chairman Claytor called the meeting to order at 10 a.m. and declared a quorum present. The proposed agenda was approved.

2. MINUTES APPROVED--Maffin moved and Pierce seconded that the minutes of the January 11, 1972 executive committee meeting be accepted. The motion passed unanimously.

3. BOARD VACANCIES-There now exists vacancies on the board of directors for seven organizational representatives and one individual member (See Exhibit A). The committee members agreed that they have the authority to fill these vacancies on behalf of the full board. Counsel Sternberg explained the exception to this authority, as follows: Of the seven organizations without representation on the board, five are named and two are designated by the type of organization. Counsel Sternberg advised that the named organizations lacking a director on the board need nominate only one person for that position. The executive committee, he said, could not act on the two unnamed organizational representatives because only the full board can designate the specific organizations.

Since only the Southern Regional Council had submitted a nomination, Pierce moved and Cochran seconded that its nominee, Arthur Campbell be elected to the board as Southern Regional Council representative. The motion passed unanimously.

Other vacancies could not be filled because the organizations lacking representation had made no nominations, although requested to do so. The committee directed that a second request be made to these organizations for their nominees.

we board Nov 6th d?

Maffin moved and Pierce seconded that Mrs. Rose Wylie, President of the National Tenants Organization, be elected to the Board as an individual member. The motion passed unanimously, subject to Mrs. Wylie's acceptance.

In considering the two references in the bylaws to a board representative from one state government HDC and from one non-OEO HDC, the committee felt there were no clear reasons for these groups to be represented on the board. Cavanaugh was aware of only two state government HDCs, one in Arizona and a New York State urban development corporation. He suggested expanding these classifications to include a state office of housing and/or community development, state housing authority or regional housing authority.

Cavanaugh said the newly-formed Mississippi Department of Housing and Community Affairs is an example of this type of organization. Troy Norris, its executive director, is planning a statewide housing strategy to deal with the housing problems in Mississippi. This kind of thinking is an emerging pattern in other states.

Cochran interjected that we may have these positions filled by men of such experience without binding ourselves to a specific category designated in the bylaws. He felt that the categories should simply be deleted.

4. CHANGE IN BYLAWS PROPOSED--A motion was made by Maffin and seconded by Madrigal that the following be proposed to the next full meeting of the Board as a bylaw change: the section of the bylaws requiring a representative on the board from one state government HDC and one non-OEO private HDC be deleted and that they be converted to individual membership selected on the basis of individual qualifications. (The proposed change is in Article II, Section 3a) The motion passed unanimously.

5. NEXT BOARD MEETING--The bylaws call for an annual board meeting on the first Monday in November. It was brought up at the last meeting of the executive committee that, in view of the short term of the grant, we might schedule a full board meeting in June besides the November annual meeting.

Sternberg indicated that to legally call a regular board meeting would require a bylaw change. However, a special meeting of the board can be called to change the bylaws. That meeting can then be converted to a regular one.

Cochran moved and Madrigal seconded that a special meeting of the board be convened between July 1 and September 1 after a poll of the board members had been conducted to ascertain a date of maximum attendance. The motion passed unanimously. Maffin also suggested that the staff explore the possibility of having the meeting at some location other than the District of Columbia.

Pierce requested the HAC staff to include as broadly and inclusively as possible all items on the proposed agenda when calling the special meeting.

6. CHANGES IN BYLAWS, ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION--Changes in the articles of incorporation and bylaws that bear on the success of 501(c)(3) tax exempt designation for HAC were discussed as was the need to complete a few small omissions to the bylaws and a few administrative matters.

In considering the articles of incorporation (See Exhibit B) Sternberg said that we had not as yet applied for a 501(c)(3) tax exempt status because the Articles should be changed to delete references to those powers that infer business activity before submitting such an application.

Maffin said the committee should simply trust the competence of the general counsel to define what is necessary to maintain the organization's tax exempt status and moved that these changes in the articles of incorporation be brought before the special meeting. This motion was seconded by Madrigal and passed unanimously.

7. PER DIEM EXPENSES--The committee discussed increasing the allowable reimbursement for per diem expenses for directors since many hotels charge as much as $20-22, excluding cost of meals. Under the $25 per diem allowance, executive committee members have had to pay many of their minimal expenses personally. The OEO guidelines require a $25 per diem maximum and in the past OEO has refused to alter this provision. Cavanaugh suggested that the bylaws be changed as indicated so that HAC may pursue an increase in allowable expenses with OEO.

Maffin said $25 per diem is unreasonably low and moved that a recommendation be made that Article II, Section 6 be amended by changing the language concerning reimbursement to read:

> "pay to any director the actual, reasonable expenses not to exceed $40."

The motion was seconded by Madrigal and passed unanimously.

8. MAIL BALLOTS--Originally the bylaws allowed resolutions to be adopted by written consent without a meeting. Prior counsel advised that this was invalid and the provision was removed. Present counsel (Sternberg) advised the committee, however, that the following addition to Article III, Section 4 would be valid:

> "Pursuant to Title 29 Section 1099 of the District of Columbia Code the Board of Directors may act by mail ballot, provided, however, that for any such action to be valid, the vote must be unanimous."

The purpose of the additional provision is to allow HAC to take a mail ballot for those routine items that may not warrant the assembly of the entire board.

Cochran moved that the suggested addition be recommended to the board. Maffin seconded the motion which passed unanimously.

9. FILLING VACANCIES--Sternberg indicated that there does not now exist a provision in the bylaws for filling vacancies on the executive committee or removing members from it.

Several members of the executive committee objected to the use of "automatically" in the proposed change. They suggested that the absent party should be allowed to offer valid excuses. Pierce moved and Maffin seconded that Article IV be amended by adding a new Section 6 to read as follows:

> "Three consecutive unexcused absences shall automatically vacate a member's seat on the executive committee. Vacancies shall be filled by a majority of the members of the Board of Directors who shall be present at any regular or called meeting of the Board."

With Cochran opposed, the motion passed.

10. OFFICER VACANCIES--No provision exists in the bylaws for filling vacancies in the officer ranks of the board. Sternberg recommended that a new Section 9 be added to Article VI as that provision, as follows:

> "Section 9. Vacancies: Vacancies shall be filled by a majority of the members of the Board of Directors who shall be present at any regular or called meeting of the Board."

Maffin asked how many board members are needed to constitute a quorum. Sternberg said two-thirds of the board members must be present to act on dissolution of the corporation; that a simple majority is necessary for adopting, amending and repealing the bylaws; and that one-third is necessary for a quorum of which a majority is required to fill vacancies on the board.

Maffin moved and Pierce seconded that the proposed addition to Article VI be recommended to the full board. The motion carried unanimously.

11. INDEMNIFICATION--Sternberg advised the committee that Section 1(b) of Article VII refers to a "foregoing right of indemnification" which is not found in the bylaws, having been inadvertently omitted. He suggested that the last sentence of Section 1(b) be deleted and that a new Section 1(c) be added as follows:

> "This Corporation shall indemnify every director or officer, his heirs, executors and administrators against expenses reasonably incurred by him in connection with any action, suit or proceeding of any kind or character to which he may be made a party by reason of his being or having been a director or officer of this Corporation, or, at its request, of any other corporation of which it is a member of creditor and from which he is not entitled to be indemnified, except in relation to matters as to which he shall be finally adjudged in such suit, action or proceeding to be liable for negligence or misconduct; in the event of a settlement, indemnification shall be provided only in connection with such matters covered by the settlement as to which this Corporation is advised by counsel that the person to be indemnified did not commit any breach of duty. The foregoing right of indemnification shall not be exclusive of other rights to which he may be entitled; and is a part of the agreement with each director or officer of this Corporation now or hereafter in office."

Maffin moved and Cochran seconded that the new section cited above be recommended to the Board. The motion passed unanimously.

Sternberg recommended further that Section 2 of Article VII should be deleted in its entirety since it projects the corporation in a business activity; i.e., owning shares of corporate stock which will raise problems with IRS when the 501(c)(3) exemption is sought, and that Sections 3,4 and 5 be renumbered 2, 3 and 4 in accord with that deletion.

Cochran moved and Pierce seconded that such deletion in the bylaws and renumbering of the subsequent sections be recommended to the full board. The motion passed unanimously.

Maffin moved and Cochran seconded that item 5(a) be presented to the full board as a recommended bylaw change. The motion passed unanimously. Cochran moved and Pierce seconded that item 5(b) be submitted to the board as a bylaws change. It was also carried unanimously.

12. NEW STAFF MEMBERS--Cavanaugh presented staff reports to the committee and introduced the new HAC personnel (See Exhibit D). The HAC staff numbers 20 and major staffing is completed.

13. TRAINING SESSIONS PLANNED--Cavanaugh described the major training efforts of the HAC staff, plans for which were under way at the time of the meeting, and future training plans. (See Exhibit E.)

14. LOAN COMMITTEE ACTIONS--A report was made on the results of the first Loan Committee meeting February 24. The Committee approved 10 applications totalling $647,476. Claytor said the loan committee was encouraged by the quality of the applications and the manner in which they were analyzed and evaluated by the HAC staff.

15. MISSISSIPPI REQUEST--Claytor asked that the executive committee be informed of the circumstances surrounding the applications submitted by Mr. Troy Norris, Mississippi Department of Community Development and Housing.

Governor Waller proposes the creation of a statewide housing development corporation and formation of regional housing development corporations with the same boundaries as the existing ten regional planning districts. The statewide HDC, working out of the governor's office, would coordinate, supply technical assistance and lend direction to the regional HDCs. The regional HDC staff would utilize the staffs of the existing planning districts

The state feels that the direction of the federal government is to have increasing involvement with the planning commissions and districts for the approval of a number of programs involving the development of communities and sites for housing.

The statewide plan also involves several community resources; e.g., Mississippi Development Center, a statewide technical assistance group. Mississippi anticipates use of the Farmers Home rural rental program (Section 515) and use of the Farmers Home Section 502 home ownership loans.

The governor reportedly was assured that Mississippi will receive sizeable commitments from HUD for public housing leasing. HUD will continue to refund these units and add to them as an ongoing development program.

In the plan involving HAC, Norris submitted an application for an allocation for a $100,000, to be set aside for a period of time against which Mississippi would make applications. Each application would meet our loan criteria and would be considered an individual loan.

While the program itself is not unique, HAC believes it is the first time that a state plans to deal on a comprehensive basis with a statewide housing program. There are also a number of assurances that the program will be conducted on an equal opportunity basis and will comply with the Affirmative Action requirements.

The governor indicated that he will grant blanket approval only if we consider favorably the application described above and he stipulates further that all applications from Mississippi to HAC for seed loans must go through this statewide office.

Cavanaugh proposed a form of operation in a letter to Mr. Norris March 3, 1972. (See Exhibit G).

Cavanaugh emphasized that HAC reserves the right to disregard the recommendations of the governor. In addition, should any organization find that its application was not being acted upon promptly by the state or in any way was being mishandled, HAC would deal directly with the organization.

As previously noted, Norris presented an application to the HAC loan committee for a set aside of $100,000. HAC requested that he also prepare for the loan committee meeting (April 27, 1972) several specific applications. Two applications were submitted this morning, for a Section 515 rural rental project and a Section 502 homeownership project in two impoverished areas of the state.

Maffin said that HAC may find it difficult to protect itself from the possiblity of other states making similar requests to have all such funds routed through the governor's office.

Cavanaugh noted the possibility of HAC's inability to work in Mississippi in the event that we do not receive the governor's approval.

Mrs. Gish requested to see all correspondence between HAC and the State of Mississippi concerning their proposals. She felt strongly that Mississippi was initiating some effort to gain tight control of federal funds in the state before other groups could exercise effective programs and that the HAC board should not be allowed to be blackmailed.

As background information, Cavanaugh gave a report on all governor's approvals to date (See Exhibit H) showing approval in 36 states, 6 letters with legal problems concerning their acceptability by OEO and 8 states for which we have received no reply. California has reserved the right to approve each project individually. The two requests received to date from California were to be approved but HAC has yet to receive a letter indicating such.

Cochran, Claytor and Mrs. Gish said thay were opposed to the proposal by Norris and Governor Waller due to the seemingly "sovereign state" attitude. They felt that it would be most difficult to explain approval of the governor's proposals.

Cavanaugh said that prior receipt of the two applications from Norris, HAC has received no inquiries or applications from local groups in Mississippi. This state also appears to be the only state with a comprehensive program. He felt that for these two reasons the project deserves support.

This project could set the stage for an experimental check on the feasibility of statewide cooperation in the housing effort.

Cochran and Pierce felt they could not in good conscience go along with Mississippi's proposal unless applications could be submitted directly to HAC as well as by the governor's office; it was agreed the state could be allowed to review and comment on all applications. They also felt that we could not consider this application until the governor gave us approval as stipulated in our grant.

Cochran moved and Mrs. Gish seconded that the loan committee not entertain proposals in those states from which we have not received governor's prior approval for HAC operations. The motion passed unanimously.

Since Maffin left the meeting at this point, Madrigal called for a quorum count. Six members were then present. Claytor felt that if a quorum is first established and the meeting is not recessed, the quorum continues; the Chairman so ruled.

The committee then decided that as a matter of policy no state or state-controlled organization can act as exclusive conduit of HAC funds and that HAC reserves the right to review and decide on all loan requests.

16. LEGISLATIVE REVIEW--The HAC research staff has undertaken and nearly completed a review of the housing authority enabling legislation for each state. The study will identify those provisions that may be initiated to develop a model statute. In the course of HAC training sessions and meetings, trainees will be informed about their state enabling legislation and what amendments they might seek to improve it.

Secondly, the HAC research staff has done considerable research in connection with the House Agriculture Subcommittee appropriations hearings for the FmHA FY 1973 appropriations. Cavanaugh was invited by both Congressman Mark Andrews and George Mahon to submit this research to the appropriations committee. The research points out the need:

(a) to maintain and improve the administrative budget for the Farmers Home Administration;

(b) to increase the funds available for farm labor housing grants; and

(c) to fund rehabilitation grants for low-income homeowners.

17. REPORT ON CALIFORNIA LOANS--Cavanaugh informed the committee of circumstances surrounding applications from Self-Help Enterprises, Inc. and Rural Development Corporation, both of California. Loans for these two groups were approved at the Loan Committee meeting of February 24, 1972, but to date HAC has not received the necessary approval of Governor Reagan. Because of the long delay, SHE and RDC asked that we submit the funds to the National Spanish-Speaking Housing Development Corporation for disbursement to them. NSSHDC has been approved by Governor Reagan. Cavanaugh recommended against this arrangement because:

(a) If HAC works deceptively against the right of the governor to approve or veto such projects it acerbates the relationship of OEO and HAC with the state, reducing the prospects of ever acquiring the governor's approval of HAC projects.

(b) Local efforts to obtain state approval would diminish.

Zippers recommendation in Female applic

Claytor said that if HAC were to approve such action it would not be operating in good faith under its guidelines and that HAC must wait until the governor grants approval before any further action is taken with these groups. The committee unanimously agreed that HAC funds should not be funneled through the NSSHDC.

18. NORTH CAROLINA LOAN--The Loan Committee at its first meeting reviewed a request for construction funds from the Low Income Housing Development Corporation of North Carolina. At the time, Cavanaugh said, Bill Purcell (LIHDC) said an interest-free construction loan from HAC would result in savings of $500-750 per house. The loan committee recommended that the applicant be requested to seek other sources, including local banks which are generally receptive to making construction loans. However, the committee preferred not to make such loans at all. To make such a loan would also require a change in the HAC grant by OEO.

Purcell was informed of the committee's recommendation. Later he advised HAC that he was discontinuing the request to HAC for funds and would notify us if he needed the loan in the future.

The committee resolved that we should not grant construction loans of considerable size to groups that can obtain these funds from the commercial market at normal interest rates. HAC should not, however, refuse help to groups that do not fall into that category. Each application should be judged on its individual merits, the committee said.

19. APPLICATION FOR 106(a) FUNDS--Cavanaugh reported that HUD has issued a circular to implement the 106(a) program which provides funds for technical assistance and other items to non-profit organizations and public bodies for low-income housing development. Because HAC has developed a network of communication in rural areas and can identify several organizations that could use 106(a) funds, HAC has asked HUD to consider HAC for some role in the 106(a) rural activities.

HAC has been invited to submit a general proposal for 106(a) funds on behalf of a group of broad-based organizations. The proposal is now in the preliminary stages.

Cavanaugh raised the issue whether the 106(a) funds might be used for regular operating funds, for a housing development group, as well as for technical assistance. (See Exhibit J).

There has been a great deal of dispute over the interpretation of Senator Mondale's 106(a) bill and whether it does allow this.

The Rural Housing Alliance insists that legislative authority governing the use of 106(a) includes direct funding to local groups for administrative costs. HAC proposes the attached resolution to indicate the need for the change in definition. (See Exhibit J).

Cochran moved and Pierce seconded that the Chairman direct copies of this resolution to Secretary Romney and Senator Mondale advising them of HAC's position and that HAC should also emphasize to Senator Mondale the need for language clarification in the bill.

Before the motion, Claytor asked for ruling on the existence of a quorum. The general counsel stated that the bylaws being silent on the question of whether the meeting begins with a quorum and then loses members, under Title 29, Section 1017 of the D. C. law, "unless otherwise provided by the Articles of Incorporation or the bylaws, the members present at a duly organized meeting may continue to do business until adjournment, notwithstanding withdrawal of enough members to have less than a quorum." The chairman ruled that the quorum still exists.

20. BASIC HOME PROPOSAL--Cavanaugh reported that RHA, HAC and the OEO planning committee recently conducted a joint meeting to discuss the OEO Basin Home program. A basic criticism by HAC and RHA was the proposed selection of a private building foundation as a broker grantee. HAC has been informally notified that the Battelle Memorial Institute, a nonprofit engineering/consultanting firm, will be selected as broker grantee.

The program was also criticized for not having deep enough subsidies and that the program should be changed to allow greater subsidies than possible under the FmHA Section 502 loans.

A letter of comment on the Basic Home Program from Cavanaugh to David Engel was distributed to the Executive Committee. (See Exhibit K).

Due to shortage of time, Cavanaugh suggested foregoing discussion of item 4(g) on the agenda (Government relations--federal and state) and was to submit a written report on it to be mailed to the committee.

21. FISCAL REPORT--The report on the budget expenditures (See Exhibit L) compares the approved budget and the actual expenditures to date. As indicated, a few items were overspent in categories involving smaller dollar amount (e.g., office supplies, equipment, etc). The overall expenditure was well within the approved budget limit.

22. ADDITIONAL OEO FUNDS--Cavanaugh reported on efforts to get a firm commitment from OEO on additional funding for HAC and was told that HAC was considered as having a commitment for an additional $2,000,000 of which half will be added to the revolving fund and half allocated for a third year of operation. These funds are to be available from OEO appropriations for FY'73.

23. NEXT EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING--Claytor proposed that the next executive committee meeting be scheduled for a date just prior to the regularly scheduled board meeting in July. The motion passed unanimously.

24. FmHA PROGRAM CHANGES--Cavanaugh called the committee's attention to a statement on proposed changes in the FmHA program to include limited dividend and leasing (See Exhibit M) and testimony prepared by Stephen Butler, HAC research director, on FmHA appropriations (See Exhibit N).

25. NATIONAL RURAL HOUSING CONFERENCE--Cavanaugh reported that the Rural Housing Alliance is now making plans for a National Rural Housing Conference for 2 1/2 days sometime this fall.

The meeting adjourned at 2:45 p.m.

Dear Mr. Campbell:

The Southern Regional Council has been designated by the HAC bylaws to be represented on the Housing Assistance Council Board of Directors. Unfortunately, this position became vacant at the resignation of Dr. Raymond Wheeler. At his recommendation, the Executive Committee voted on April 27 to elect you to serve as the SRC representative.

I am enclosing a copy of our guidelines and statement of purpose to familiarize you with the organization. I am also enclosing copies of the HAC NEWS.

If you are willing to serve, please send us your acceptance as soon as possible. I hope that we will be able to welcome you personally at the next Board meeting in late July or August.

Congratulations on your appointment.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Cavanaugh

CRITERIA FOR ELIGIBILITY FOR SEED CAPITAL LOAN FUNDS

AND OTHER HOUSING ASSISTANCE COUNCIL SERVICES

In accord with the statement of Purpose, Viewpoints, Objectives and Principal Activities adopted by the Executive Committee January 11, 1972, the Housing Assistance Council declares that all of the following criteria must be satisfactorily met for an applicant to be eligible for loans from the seed capital fund:

1. That there will be no discrimination in the proposed project because of race, religion, creed or national origin and that the project will be planned and administered in full compliance with federal and state fair housing laws. Further that there will be no discrimination because of the age, sex or economic status (e.g. welfare recipients) of those to be served.

2. That provision is made in the plans for the proposed project for serving the rural poor, as defined by OEO guidelines, at a total monthly housing cost not to exceed twenty-five percent of their adjusted income, whether for home ownership or for rent, (such total cost including the cost of utilities). (Adjusted income shall be as defined in section 235 (i) of the Housing Act of 1968.)

3. That the proposed project shall be in a rural area as defined in the statement of Viewpoints, Objectives, and Principal Objectives (page 4, paragraph #2 and related footnote.

4. That the loan funds approved by HAC are for costs recoverable under the guidelines of HUD, Farmers Home Administration or any financing agency involved, upon closing of financing for the project, or are recoverable from any other assured source.

5. That provision is made for prospective home owners or tenants to participate in plans for the project to the degree feasible and for tenants to also participate in management and administration of the project.

6. That, after evaluation of the factors named below, it is reasonable to expect that construction of the project to serve the Council's target population can be commenced within eighteen months from the time that HAC assistance of any kind first becomes available to the project sponsor. Those factors are as follows:

-- Steps taken to arrange financing and availability of funds from the financing agency.

-- Availability of suitable land.

-- Technical and administrative staff of sponsor, previous experience and production record.

-- Affiliation with other groups, such as regional or state housing organizations.

-- Level of subsidy being proposed - mortgage, interest credit, public housing, rent supplement, etc.

-- Professional services available to project sponsor.

-- Relationships with officials and governmental agencies of any political subdivision whose decisions affect completion of the project.

-- Attitude of the community to the development.

-- Past record of service to the poor.

-- Representation of poor persons on the applicant's governing body.

If evaluation of these factors indicates that the project does not meet these criteria but with HAC technical assistance could meet these criteria, the project will be considered eligible for the loan program if the applicant agrees to accept HAC technical assistance to overcome the shortcomings determined by the evaluation process.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE CRITERIA

The same general criteria shall be applied to project sponsors requesting technical assistance, except that criterion Number 4 does not apply and the time limitation in criterion Number 6 of eighteen months can be for a greater period of time, such as two years.

HOUSING ASSISTANCE COUNCIL, INC.

Statement of PURPOSE, VIEWPOINTS, OBJECTIVES and
PRINCIPAL ACTIVITIES

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

The purpose of the Housing Assistance Council, Inc., is to help provide decent housing in a suitable living environment for the rural poor by using its loan funds, technical assistance and training to improve on a continuing basis the production capability of housing organizations serving the rural poor.

STATEMENT OF VIEWPOINTS

1. We believe that every American family should have the opportunity to live in a decent home with adequate community facilities and that opportunity should be provided where the family lives or chooses to live whenever possible. That opportunity should be available without regard to race, color, creed or national origin; we deplore the fact that large percentages of the members of minority groups are compelled to live in houses unfit for human beings.

2. Two-thirds of the country's 4.3 million substandard homes are located in small towns and rural areas. We believe this deplorable and disproportinate situation exists because national housing and community development programs have been inadequate and because rural areas and small towns have been largely overlooked in such efforts as exist. We believe the national committment to improved housing and community development must be drastically increased and the inequities borne by rural areas removed.

3. We believe it is essential that housing programs for the rural poor be improved not only for the basic purpose of meeting human need in rural areas, but also to avoid acerbating the problems of the central cities where human misery has been increased as a result of failure to provide opportunities in other areas.

4. We shall insist that all projects aided by the Housing Assistance Council abide by federal, state and local laws concerning non-discrimination and equal opportunity in housing; however, we recognize that compliance with these laws does not in and of itself assure decent housing for the large numbers of minority families who are inadequately housed; there must also be diligence in increasing the supply of housing commensurate with their need.

5. We believe that existing housing programs are so deficient that the housing needs of poor people cannot be met in a reasonable period of time in either the cities or rural areas. Housing programs are under-financed from the standpoint of administrative funds, credit or subsidy, and in most instances, all three. Policies and procedures of most of the housing agencies are more restrictive than can be justified by the law or were intended by the Congress.

6. We believe that the public and many of those concerned about housing the poor suffer from serious misconceptions about the possibility of utilizing existing programs to serve the poor and that these misconceptions must be corrected as soon as possible and that this is part of our function. The only existing subsidy which can meet the needs of many of the poor is public housing and it meets only a tiny fraction of the provable need. The failure to utilize public housing on a broader scale must be overcome to meet this need.

7. We believe, that in accord with the Housing Act of 1970, the maximum total housing cost that rural poor should be required to pay should be twenty-five percent of their adjusted annual income.

The Housing Assistance Council will express support and concern for these beliefs by conscientious and skillful pursuit of the following objectives:

STATEMENT OF OBJECTIVES

1. The principal objective of the Housing Assistance Council is to secure additional decent homes for the rural poor by helping to create and assist a housing delivery system that will be a long-term low-income housing production network. In seeking to accomplish this principal objective, the Council will utilize any housing program or combination of programs that will accomplish this purpose and with any group or organization formed for this purpose.

2. The Housing Assistance Council has a clear responsibility for development and training of personnel in the technical and administrative skills necessary to provide housing for the rural poor.

3. The Housing Assistance Council should foster and promote clear understanding of the housing programs now available for housing the rural poor and establish a close, cooperative working relationship with the staffs of the federal agencies administering those programs. The Housing Assistance Council, upon request, should aid personnel of organizations seeking to provide decent houses for the rural poor in their relationships with the above named staffs so maximum use is made of existing programs and funds. However, we are as concerned with the shaping of institutions and administrative policy and laws to serve low-income people as we are with achieving the maximum from the existing programs.

4. As a result of its existence, the number and efficiency of organizations and institutions designed to deliver housing for the rural poor should be increased, and to those ends our technical assistance and training should be directed. HAC should give prime support in its efforts to achieve these objectives to those organizations which seek to operate on a broad geographic basis and which have the prospect of becoming permanent, competent and productive housing agencies in their state or region.

5. As a result of its existence, new job opportunities should be created for members of minority groups along with new opportunities for minority firms and individuals to perform new construction, consulting and other contractual work.

6. The Housing Assistance Council should make recommendations for improving and strengthening programs for housing the rural poor. Those recommendations should include legislative and administrative policy changes so that opportunities available in housing programs for the urban poor are also available for the rural poor.

7. Besides the principal activities prescribed in its grant from OEO, the Housing Assistance Council should seek to identify additional activities or means by which its funds and staff can be utilized or for which additional funding may be obtained to assist rural housing organizations to achieve decent homes for the rural poor. This includes continuing consultation with OEO and other agencies to develop a balanced and coordinated national network of viable rural housing delivery organizations.

PRINCIPAL ACTIVITIES

To express these beliefs and to seek to achieve these objectives the Housing Assistance Council will conduct three major activities. Those activities and criteria and principles to be followed in the conduct of those actvities are:

SEED CAPITAL LOAN PROGRAM

Seed capital loans will be made to housing organizations to provide funds for land or land options, engineering, legal and architectural fees and other services or development costs that can be included in the cost of such development and refunded to the Housing Assistance Council upon approval of financing for the project, provided:

1. Any loans made by the Housing Assistance Council must be for projects which include provisions for serving persons with low-income as defined by OEO income guidelines. The proportion of the poor families to be served by the project utilizing such seed capital funds to the total number of families served by that project--and the degree of poverty of the poor to be thus served--shall be the principal criteria for determining priorities for the use of such funds.

2. That preference for use of the revolving fund shall be given to projects in rural areas or in towns of 25,000 population or less which are not located in a standard metropolitan statistical area of 500,000 population or more. To the extent that loan funds are available in addition to those required for such projects, loans may also be made: (a) for projects loacted in rural areas or in small towns located in SMSA's of more than 500,000 population;1/ and (b) for projects located

1/ "It is the desire of the Board of Directors of the Housing Assistance Council, Inc., that the funds of the organization be employed to meet the needs of the poorest possible people in the most rural possible areas, with stress on communities of 25,000 below and the countryside, but we do not wish this intent so narrowly construed that funds cannot be expended to aid the poorly housed, lacking both water and modern sanitation, in such areas, for example, the barrios outside San Antonio. It is our expressed desire that the literature and expressions of the organization stress "poor" and "low-income" and that the phrase "moderate income housing" not be included among the goals of the organization."

in towns of more than 25,000 not located in SMSA's with a population of 500,000 or more. The rural character of the area or the town in which the project is located shall be the prime consideration in determining preference for otherwise eligible loans.

3. That, in general an eligible housing development organization should be attempting to house people where the people want to live, with due regard to economy of providing essential community services and, given the demographic characteristics of the target population, an area in which opportunity for jobs and other sources of income are equivalent to those available to that population in realistic alternative areas.

4. That all of the funds for services and purposes for which loans are provided from the seed capital fund shall be recoverable.

5. That there is a clear demonstration by the organization borrowing such funds that it has or will be provided administrative and technical skills to carry out the project and produce the housing for our target population in a reasonable period of time. In making that determination, appropriate recognition shall be given to the past production record of the organization and to its affiliation, if any, to a sponsoring group, such as a regional housing development corporation, whose services, experience and skills are available to the borrower of such funds. Such previous experience or such affiliation is not, however, a requirement for eligibility for use of such loan funds. (Detailed analyses and procedures shall be developed to assure compliance with this provision.)

6. That administration of the seed capital fund shall take full cognizance of the need for low-income housing in all of the rural areas of the nation. While complying with the criteria listed above, loans from the seed capital fund should be made to as many rural areas of the nation as possible.

7. That all borrowers of seed capital funds shall be expected to develop plans so that the owners or tenants to be served can participate in the plans for that housing. In the case of rental housing, the tenants served by the housing development should be assured participation in decisions affecting operation and control of that housing.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

1. The principal function of the technical assistance provided by the Housing Assistance Council will be to aid housing organizations to develop housing proposals for the poor (1) to facilitate funding; (2) to assure construction within a reasonable time limit; and (3) to assure adequate planning for management of the project upon completion.

2. Priority for providing technical assistance shall be given to those organizations requiring or requesting it which are also approved as borrowers of the seed capital funds.

3. That any project for which technical assistance is provided makes provision for serving the rural poor as stipulated in paragraph #1, on page 4 of this statement as the principal criteria for determining priorities for the use of seed capital loan funds.

4. The technical assistance will be provided by the Housing Assistance Council staff, supplemented by the employment of reliable consultants. To this end, the Housing Assistance Council will give high priority to compiling a list of specialists in all possible details of housing development for use by the Council and as a referral list. HAC should make special efforts to use small and minority consulting firms.

TRAINING

1. Direct training by the Housing Assistance Council shall be aimed at the personnel of organizations involved in housing the rural poor.

2. In addition, the Housing Assistance Council will cooperate with and assist other groups who are involved in training personnel in this field, minimizing duplication of efforts and maximizing the effectiveness of training through the cooperative development of materials and techniques and utilizing the skills of HAC's personnel in related training.

3. The Housing Assistance Council will make continuing efforts to assist other groups of common interests in increasing the amount of training available to those working or planning to work in solving the housing problem of the rural poor, by encouraging the broadening of curriculums and by whatever other means that appear to be suitable.

4. The Housing Assistance Council, in the interest of economy, will minimize use of its personnel or other resources in training or participating in meetings of organizations or groups with only a peripheral interest in housing the rural poor.

TO: Members Of The Board Of Directors

FROM: Gordon Cavanaugh, Executive Director

At the meeting of the executive committee on April 27, it was decided to hold a board of directors meeting in the period between mid-July and mid-August, in addition to the regular annual meeting later in the year.

So that we may avoid as many conflicts as possible with other meetings and events, we have enclosed a self-addressed postcard for you to indicate which of three dates it will be possible for you to attend. Please return the card as soon as possible.

The executive committee also discussed the possibility of meeting in some city other than Washington, D.C. Since this is the first meeting of the board since HAC has begun operation, many of the board members have not seen our offices or met members of the staff. For these reasons,it seems more desirable to meet in a city other than Washington at some future date.

Since this is the first meeting of the board since operations have begun, this is also the first opportunity for board members to review the operation and activities of the Council and to provide guidance to the staff on plans and priorities for our future activities.

Several changes in the by-laws recommended by the executive committee will also be considered. In consultation with Chairman Patlan and President Claytor, an agenda and complete plans for the meeting will be prepared and announced to you.

Members of the staff and I look forward to our first meeting with you. We know it will be a very important meeting for the organization and a pleasant experience for all of us.

The enclosed brochures explaining the Council and its services have just been received.

Please mail the enclosed card to us as soon as possible.

Dear Mr. Campbell:

On behalf of the Housing Assistance Council, I welcome you to the Board of Directors. Your concern and experience will aid us in our efforts to alleviate the housing needs of the rural poor. Thank you for agreeing to serve.

To familiarize you with HAC, I am enclosing copies of our brochure, which describes our purposes, Board and programs, the by-laws, minutes of meetings of the Board and of the Executive and Loan Committees and our last six-month report to the Office of Economic Opportunity. Also included are recent issues of HAC News. Hopefully, these materials will bring you up to date on HAC activities thus far.

Congratulations on your election. We look forward to seeing you at the next Board meeting.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Cavanaugh

Board of Directors

Gentlemen:

Eighteen directors have now notified us that they definitely plan to attend the special board meeting at 10 a.m., July 19, 1972. The meeting is now scheduled for the State Room of the Washington-Hilton Hotel. Only one director so far has indicated he cannot attend. We hope that all or many of the others will also be here.

A tentative agenda for the meeting is enclosed.

Please note that one agenda item is amendments to the articles of incorporation and bylaws. The executive committee recommends adoption of these amendments.

Also enclosed please find:

--Minutes of the board meeting on August 19, 1971.

--Minutes of the executive committee meeting on April 27, 1972.

--Copies of the bylaws and articles of incorporation with amendments recommended for your adoption.

OEO requires that it approve amendments to the bylaws. That approval is being requested. The meeting July 19 will be the first opportunity for members of the staff and me to meet a number of the Directors. We are looking forward to that opportunity, to seeing all of you and to a productive meeting.

Please let me know if we can assist you with your plans and arrangements to attend the meeting.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Cavanaugh

MEMORANDUM

October 5, 1972

To: Juan Patlan, Chairman and Executive Committee Members

From: Al Hirshen, Chairman and Nominating Committee Members

Subject: Report of the Nominating Committee

At the Board meeting on July 19, 1972, chairman Juan Patlan appointed a nominating committee consisting of: Claudio Arenas, Charles Davis, Al Hirshen, Ronnie Lopez and Artley Skenandore and designated Mr. Hirshen chairman of the committee. (Attached as exhibit A is an extract from the minutes of that board meeting concerning the appointment of the nominating committee.)

An initial meeting of the nominating committee was called for August 15th, but was cancelled due to lack of a quorum.

On September 28, 1972, Messrs. Arenas, Davis, Hirshen and Lopez met at 10:30 a.m. at the National Housing and Development Law Project offices in Berkeley, California. Mr. Skenandore was unable to attend due to a conflict in his schedule.

The committee reviewed the aforementioned extract from the board minutes, the by-law provisions dealing with elections, the organizations entitled to board representation and the present board membership. (The nominating committee was uncertain whether its role included action with respect to the election of the executive and loan committees. It nevertheless has made recommendations regarding these committees in case it was supposed to do so.)

The HAC Board consists of 36 members - 22 representatives from organizations entitled to membership under the by-laws, 13 members-at-large and the executive director ex-officio. There is presently one at-large vacancy and one organizational vacancy for the National Tenants Organization. The current terms of all directors expire at the annual meeting, upon the election of their successors. (Attached hereto as exhibits B and C are lists of the organizations entitled to representation and their present designees and an alphabetical list of the entire board.)

The present officers of the corporation are:

Chairman	Juan J. Patlan
President	Glenn A. Claytor
First Vice President	Pat B. Gish
Secretary	Clay L. Cochran
Treasurer	Manuel Madrigal

The present members of the executive committee are:

Glenn A. Claytor	William R. Morris
Clay L. Cochran	Juan J. Patlan
Marvin Davies	James Pierce
Pat B. Gish	Artley Skenandore
Alvin Hirshen	Hector Vasquez
Manuel Madrigal	Gordon Cavanaugh
Robert W. Maffin

The present members of the loan committee are:

Glenn A. Claytor, Chairman
Joseph Debro
Manuel Madrigal
Andy Popoli
Gordon Cavanaugh

The committee then reviewed the characteristics of the present board in terms of its representation of rural, urban or a mixture of rural and urban concerns (or, if a board member was not involved with an organization, whether he was urban or rural), its representation of black, Spanish-speaking, non-Spanish-speaking white and Indians; lastly, a review was made of the degree of representation of persons who were consumers or users of the housing programs supported by HAC.

The results of that analysis with regard to the whole board, except the executive director and the two vacancies are:

	Rural	Urban	Mixed
White	7	3	4
Black	0	7	5
Spanish-speaking	0	2	4
Indian	0	0	1

The breakdowns of the organization representatives and of the at-large representatives, respectively, are as follows:

a) Organization representatives

	Rural	Urban	Mixed
White	5	3	4
Black	0	1	4
Spanish-speaking	0	1	2

b) At-large

	Rural	Urban	Mixed
White	1	0	0
Black	0	6	1
Indian	0	0	1

The committee noted from the foregoing analysis that there is an under-representation of rural persons and interests on the board, that the present rural representation does not include blacks, Chicanos, Indians or other minorities and that there is almost no representation by persons representing users or consumers of the housing subsidy programs. It was also noted that the mid-west of the country was unrepresented.

The committee also reviewed the fact that, under the by-laws, the organizations presently named as entitled to representation on the board will lose that right at the annual meeting following the one scheduled for January, 1973, namely in January, 1974. (This is provided in Article II, Section 3(c)).

The committee concluded that major changes in the rural-urban, racial and ethnic, consumer and geographic composition of the board could best be achieved at the first annual meeting after the originally designated organizations no longer are entitled to a representative. It was felt that, in the meantime, the Council should give consideration to means for correcting, at the annual meeting in January, 1974, the imbalances noted above.

The nominating committee stresses the need to increase the representation on the board of consumers, as well as enlarging rural representation.

The committee also reviewed the qualifications and performance of the incumbent officers and the members of the executive committee, the loan committee members and the board. It concluded that, in the main, all had functioned well. It also believes that, in this initial period of operation of the Council, continuity in leadership is important. (Incidentally, at a future date, the question of electing all board members at one time or only a portion of the board at one time should be reviewed.)

The nominating committee now recommends as follows:

1) Organizations entitled to representation on the board should be immediately requested to submit by December 15, 1972, the names of their nominees for election as their representative at the annual meeting on January 17, 1973. If the nominee is not presently an incumbent, a resume should be included with the nomination.

2) The incumbent at-large members should be re-nominated.

3) The nominating committee will nominate a person representative of rural and consumer interests to fill the existing at-large vacancy after reviewing any nominations received by December 15th deadline and will circulate a resume of its nominee before the annual meeting.

4) Board members may submit nominees for election as at-large members and non-members may request nomination as at-large members, provided such nominations and requests are received at the Council offices by December 15, 1972, accompanied by a resume of the nominee, addressed in care of the executive director.

5) A list of all nominees and requests for board membership received by December 15th will be distributed to all board members, together with the accompanying resumes, at least two weeks before the annual meeting.

6) Election of the at-large board members should be by secret ballot, with the 13 at-large nominees receiving the highest number of votes to be elected.

7) The election of the organization representatives will be conducted first and then the election for the at-large representatives.

8) The incumbent officers, executive committee members, and loan committee members should be re-nominated for another term.

The above recommendations are based on the assumption that the incumbents in their various roles are members of the Council board at the time of the annual meeting and, with respect to re-nomination of the present officers and committee members, on the assumption that there is not a significant change in the composition of the board as the result of the election of board members at the annual meeting. Should either of these assumptions not be borne out, the nominating committee is prepared to make other recommendations.

The nominating committee wishes to re-state that, because of the constraints imposed by OEO in the composition of the board and the need for continuity in leadership in the early period of the Council's existence, it believes that now is not the proper time for re-organization of the board and its leadership. However, the committee strongly feels that steps should be taken promptly after the January, 1973 meeting to plan for increasing the representation of rural and consumer interests and achieving minority representation among the rural members.

EXTRACT FROM MINUTES OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

CONCERNING NOMINATING COMMITTEE

July 19, 1972
Juan Patlan, Chairman

Patlan: We need to appoint a nominating committee not only to deal with the officers but to deal with the nominations to the board meetings. This committee will set up some procedures or mechanisms which should be followed. At this time, I would like to appoint five persons to be members of the committee:

Claudio Arenas
Charles Davis
Alvin Hirshen (Chairman)
Ronnie Lopez
Artley Skenandore

It is up to you, Al, and the rest of the committee to come up with some recommendations on how we should proceed to select officers and the board.

Cochran: Point of information: How are you going to handle members for the designated organizations? Are you going back to them for re-recommendations or are you re-electing the incumbents? What is the procedure?

Patlan: I would assume that the task of the committee is to come up with some recommendations that they can bring to this board and the executive committee?

Cochran: By the time they bring it to this board, it will be too late.

Patlan: They can bring it back to the executive committee.

Cochran: Perhaps it is in the bylaws. Is there a limit to the number of consecutive terms a member can serve?

Patlan: There is no provision in the bylaws for that.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

The Housing Assistance Council announces the approval of $344,000 in loans to organizations planning the development of over 1500 units of subsidized housing for low income people who live in rural areas of this country. The funds will be used to facilitate the development of applications for federal housing subsidies primarily public housing.

In addition, HAC Director Gordon Cavanaugh, announced that repayment in full of the loan announced April 10, 1972 to the Hidalgo County Housing Authority of Weslcao, Texas, marked the first complete repayment of a loan made by the Housing Assistance Council. That transaction covered predevelopment costs enabling the Authority to apply for funding from the Farmers Home Administration to tear down an old labor camp in constant use since the 1940's and construct 150 new units of modern labor housing. When the Farmers Home Administration approved the request for a 90% grant, 10% loan under their Farm Labor Housing program the Hidalgo County Housing Authority reimbursed HAC for legal, architectural and engineering fees paid during the application process.

The new loans brings to thirty-eight the number of loans the Council has awarded. All these loans together will assist in various ways the development by rural housing producers of approximately 4600 rural housing units. The Council's $2 million loan fund has been almost fully allocated, though not completely disbursed, to groups in 23 states and the Virgin Islands. HAC is presently anticipating the approval of an additional $1 million from the Office of Economic Opportunity for the loan fund.

The Housing Assistance Council, which was funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity last year and which opened its door twelve months ago, provides in addition to loans, training and technical assistance in an effort to improve the delivery of subsidized housing to the poor living in rural areas.

A description of the loans announced follows:

MISSISSIPPI

Delta Housing Development Corporation, Indianola,

Loan Amount: $10,000

Delta HDC is developing housing under the home ownership program of the FmHA using self-help labor and mortgage interest subsidizies down to as low as 1% to reduce the cost to that affordable by poverty level families. It is a nonprofit group operating with funds from the Farmers Home Administration for technical assistance in developing self-help housing projects. The interest free loan from the Housing Assistance Council will be used to purchase a 10 acre site which the corporation intends to develop using a site development loan also from the Farmers Home Administion.

Once developed, the individual sites will be used for 34 units of self-help housing.

NEW MEXICO

Northern Pueblo Enterprises, Inc., Santa Fe,

Loan Amount: $100,000

Northern Pueblo Enterprises is a nonprofit, Indian owned development firm which plans to build 75 units of public housing under contract to the local Indian housing authority which serves seven pueblos. The construction firm is one of five enterprises sponsored by Northern Pueblos. The interest free loan from the Housing Assistance Council will be used for initial operating funds for the construction firm for the first several months of the proposed project. Granting of the loan is contingent on approval of the project by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

NEW YORK

Hadishoni, Inc. (formerly Builder's Cooperative, Inc.) Cattaraugus County,

Loan Amount: $119,000

The applicant is a home construction company owned and operated by Indian construction workers both skilled and semi-skilled. Hadishoni, Inc. is the legally sanctioned construction company of the Seneca Nation of Indians. The Seneca Nation Housing Authority will build 60 units of Turnkey III public housing for low income Indian families living on the reservation. Hadishoni, Inc. has been designated construction contractor for the project.

The interest free loan from the Housing Assistance Council will help defray initial operating expenses incurred by the cooperative. It includes funds for a collateral deposit with the Marine Midland Bank of New York State which has agreed to make a construction loan to Hadishoni, Inc. at lower-than-usual interest rates.

OHIO

Supporting Council on Preventative Effort (SCOPE), Dark, Greene, Miami, Warren and Preble Counties.

Loan Amount: $50,000

The applicant is an OEO funded community action program operating in the counties of Dark, Greene, Miami, Warren and Preble. SCOPE proposes to organize a multi-county housing authority and plans for the development of 1150 units of public housing over the two years to be dispursed throughout the five counties. The interest free loan from the Housing Assistance Council will provide for initial staff work involved in helping to organize the county authorities, negotiating an agreement among them for the multi-county authority and developing joint proposals to the Department of Housing and Urban Development for commitment of units.

WISCONSIN

ADVOCAP, Inc., Fond Du Lac,

Loan Amount: $24,000

This community action agency funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity is working to establish a housing authority for Fond Du Lac County and plans the development of 240 units of public housing. ADVOCAP, Inc. is performing the necessary organizing and administrative work, selecting sites, soliciting proposals from developers and submitting applications and development budgets to the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The units will be located throughout the county in unincorporated areas in an effort to serve the needs of low income people living in rural areas. The interest free loan from the Housing Assistance Council will provide administrative funding for the initial period of developing the authority and preparing applications to the Department of Housing and Urban Development for the necessary units.

Southeast Wisconsin Housing Development Corporation, Walworth County,

Loan Amount: $13,000 (supplemental loan)

Earlier this year, HAC approved $103,500 to this group to cover the cost of developing a site for 37 homes, most of which will be constructed with self-help labor. The interest free supplemental loan of $13,000 will cover higher than anticipated costs. The homes will be financed by the Farmers Home Administration home ownership loans with interest credits.

VIRGIN ISLANDS

Virgin Islands Amalgamated Workers Union, Sion Hill,

Loan Amount: $40,000 (supplemental loan)

The interest free loan will be used to collateralize a larger loan from a local lending institution for the purchase and rehabilitation of a 17 unit subdivision in Sion Hill. The federal program which will ultimately finance the project is a home ownership program known as Section 235 - J of the National Housing Act administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Self-help labor by union members on the rehabilitation of the units will help lower the housing cost per family.

Dr. Raymond Wheeler, President
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
3724 Warrington Drive
Charlotte, North Carolina 28211

Dear Dr. Wheeler:

The bylaws of the Housing Assistance Council entitles the Southern Regional Council, Inc. to a representative on our board of directors until the end of next year.

Directors for that period will be elected at our annual meeting on January 17, 1973 in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Your present representative on our board is Mr. Arthur C. Campbell. You may, of course, re-nominate him. If you wish to change your representative, you must submit to us a resume of any nominee no later than December 15th of this year.

(The bylaws provide for designated organizations, such as yours, nominating two persons, only one of whom will be elected; you may simply nominate one person if you prefer.)

A list of suggested items to be covered in the resume is enclosed.

Thank you for your cooperation. We look forward to working with you again in 1973.

Sincerely,

Gordon Cavanaugh

Dear Gordon:

Pursuant to HAC's agreement to pay board member's expenses to attend the Rural Housing Conference, I am submitting for reimbursement partial expenses totaling $137.62.

For your information, Southern Regional Council did finance Mr. Johnny Shepherd's (of Kinston, N. C.) trip to Washington to attend the Conference. I pass on to you his sincere gratitude for the experience as expressed in a letter to me.

Trust plans for setting up the regional office can be soon consummated.

I look forward to seeing you in January.

Sincerely,

Art

HOUSING ASSISTANCE COUNCIL, INC.
MINUTES OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING

September 14 and 15, 1971
Hotel Dupont Plaza, Washington, D. C.

Submitted by Clay L. Cochran, Secretary

September 14, 1971:

Executive Committee Members Present: Claytor, Cochran, Pierce, Maffin, Skenandore, Gish, Vasquez, Hirshen.

Executive Committee Members Absent: Madrigal, Morris, Davies, Patlan.

1. The Executive Committee met in the Dupont Plaza Hotel,prior agreement to interview applicants for the position of Executive Director. Those to be interviewed had been selected by written balloting by members of the Executive Committee. Five applicants were to be interviewed and a half day had been set aside for policy discussions and agreements on procedures for interviewing applicants.

2. All applicants had been furnished with a copy of the original grant application and a copy of the grant documents to guide them in the interview and make possible some preparation for the interview, since some of the applicants had not been involved with HAC prior to the application.

3. Cochran reported on a discussion he had with Gil Blankespoor of OEO regarding an earlier letter pointing to a discrepancy in grant language pertaining to SmSA's and the existence of area-wide or larger HDC's to be served by HAC. He reported that Blankespoor had said that the discrepancy was purely in the nature of a typographical error. (See copy of the original letter attached)

4. Blankespoor had sent over a list of HDC's which clearly indicated to be a year out of date, but was evidence that the area, state or regional HDC's available for HAC service were very limited in number.

5. It was decided that the Committee members would each put forward the considerations they felt were important to discuss in order to reach a mutual understanding before interviews were held with applicants. The discussion was far ranging (the first opportunity the Board of Directors or the Executive Committee have had to discuss the policy problems confronting the organization). At the end of the discussion, the President made a brief summary of the points that had been made and it was agreed (on suggestion by Maffin) that Cochran would review them with the applicants at the time of their appearance and that subsequently he would circulate his concept of an appropriate summary to be refined and edited by all members present. Only after this agreement will there be consideration of any suggestions to OEO for revision of the grant language.

6. Following is the Secretary's phrasing of the summary of the discussion, subject to correction and change by other members present where it is deficient, in error, or not clear:

(a) HAC serves any group working on housing within the confines of the Board resolution without reference to geographic area served or to be served.

(b) The education program is to cover all fronts, general education, and technical assistance on all types of housing programs which can be utilized for low-income people. There will be lower level TA and such advanced TA as necessary, recognizing that the latter will be limited. Care should be taken to coordinate the educational and technical assistance activities with other existing organizations working in the field; particularly the Nonprofit Housing Center, National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, and the Rural Housing Alliance. The aim is not to duplicate functions and staff, nor to produce a library of literature or films and other educational materials, but to borrow them whenever possible from existing sources, arranging for reprints if necessary.

(c) The job descriptions and even the number of employees shall be re-evaluated in light of the revised program.

(d) We are as concerned with the shaping of institutions and administrative policy and legal changes to make laws serve low-income people as we are in hustling the present inadequate housing programs.

(e) We have no bias on public or private groups in terms of our willingness to cooperate and give assistance. Function, i.e., the apparent capacity of the group to do part of the job, is the sole guide.

(f) Any expenditures for a sophiscated computerized system of controls on the revolving funds willbe postponed until need is shown and the Executive Director and the Board are agreed on the need and procedures.

(g) We are not primarily interested in a housing "track record," but rather in doing what can be done as expeditiously as possible and laying the groundwork for greater accomplishments later. In other words, the staff is not to put the number of starts at the head of the agenda, but be more concerned with the total picture, the income of those served, the creation of means for meeting the need.

(h) Growth centers are an academic concept, a reflection of psychology of "metropoliana." Where housing is needed and can be secured for low-income people, there is no bias against growth centers (which are apparently difficult, if not impossible to define), but where there is need and the possibility of meeting housing needs of the target population, the stress on growth centers is considered of relative unimportance.

(i) Perpetuation of the institution (HAC) is of minimal concern except insofar as its successful functioning (performance) may be assurance of adequate funds for continuation of its work. The staff is not to put perpetuation at the head of its agenda insofar as the charging of interest rates on loans, etc., are concerned.

(j) One of the primary functions of HAC should be to press for coordination among various agencies, including the combination of resources demonstrated by Pat Gish in Kentucky (combining HEW grants with mainstream labor and other resources for a housing rehabilitation program), as well as dogging the agencies to perform adequately, in terms of law and policy.

(k) The word for the program is "poor" people. Stress shall be placed on serving the poorest possible people rather than in achieving track records by creaming the target population. We are not out to serve moderate income people.

(l) The stress on the use of consultants in the present grant application and documents is dangerous unless carefully circumscribed by Executive Board policy, because the institutions which were assumed to be awaiting service are not there.

7. The balance of September 14 was spent in interviewing applicants Walter (Bob) Smith, Everett Rothchild, and James Twomey. There was lengthy discussion of these applicants at the end of the day as Hector Vasquez and Pat Gish could not be present for the second day.

September 15, 1971 - Minutes of the meeting of the Executive Committee

Present: Same as September 14, except for the absence of Gish and Vasquez and the presence of Juan Patlan.

1. The Executive Committee convened to interview Edward Billingsley and Gordon Cavanaugh.

2. After the interviews, the Executive Committee discussed the applicants and decided unanimously to offer the job of Executive Director to Gordon Cavanaugh (Director of the Public Housing Authority of the City of Philadelphia), at $30,000 per year. A meeting with him to discuss the matter further was to be scheduled by Claytor to be attended by as many members of the Executive Committee as are convenient to Washington and are able to attend.

3. (Post meeting note: The meeting is scheduled for September 29, 1971, at the RHA offices in Washington, D. C.).

ADDENDUM TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MINUTES OF
September 14-15, 1971

1. The Subcommittee of the Executive Committee met with Gordon Cavanaugh September 29, 1971. Present were: Claytor, Cochran, Maffin, Pierce, Skenandore. Patlan called in his regrets.

2. The Committee and Cavanaugh came to agreement that he would take the position of Executive Director at a salary of $35,000 per year. (This figure was arrived at after discussion of the nature of the job and the relatively brief tenure, as well as the expenses of moving from Philadelphia to Washington, D. C.) It was agreed that Cavanaugh would be hired effective November 1, 1971, but that in the interim he would furnish up to ten days of his time to get the program underway.

3. In a call to Bob Smith, Claytor arranged for all of the records of the organization to be sent to Washington, D. C. During this call it was ascertained that the bonding arrangements had not been concluded, but they would probably be concluded on said date. It was further ascertained that the $50,000 loan from LIHDC had never been consummated. There are no funds available and an outstanding obligation of several thousand dollars due to LIHDC from earlier expenditures.

4. Claytor announced that once the bonding procedures have been completed, OEO can make a letter of credit available within approximately a week.

5. It was agreed that temporary office space would be rented from the National Sharecroppers Fund in the Dupont Circle Building in Washington, D. C. where the records can be kept and a temporary secretary employed to carry out interim assignments from the Executive Committee and the Executive Director.

6. Cochran was authorized to hire the temporary secretary, arrange for telephone service and necessary equipment and supplies, establish a bank account in the names of the Officers of the Corporation, and carry out such other essential functions as are necessary, subject to clearance on all points with the Executive Director. The arrangement with Cochran is strictly transitional and designed only to take care of essentials which would otherwise delay the establishment of a functioning organization.

7. The Secretary was instructed to inform OEO of the decision on the Executive Director, and solicit their approval of the selection, a condition of the grant.

8. The President was requested to advise all members of the Executive Committee of the decision by telephone and letter.

9. It was agreed that the offer and acceptance of the job and all other details would be kept confidential until Cavanaugh has time to inform his Mayor and that a press release would be put out only after clearance with the Mayor of Philadelphia (Cavanaugh's boss) and approval from OEO. The Secretary will make the release when these conditions precedent have been met.

10. It was agreed that the Executive Director would study the documents at hand and prepare a set of recommendations for consideration by the Executive Committee on staff, table of organizations, any budget re-organization, change in program and to recommend a program of operation. He will do this as expeditiously as possible and when ready to present it, the President will call a meeting of the Executive Committee to consider the results.

11. It is apparent that some of the Board members have not been sending in expense accounts. It should be possible to make reimbursement shortly, and you are urged to render your expense accounts as soon as convenient. Address them to the Secretary up to November 15, 1971. As indicated earlier, reimbursable expenses are generally limited to travel, cab fare, and $ 25 per diem. Any expenditures beyond this will be subject to disapproval.

12. All Board members will be advised as soon as there is a telephone and established mailing address.

HOUSING ASSISTANCE COUNCIL, INC.
MINUTES OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING
January 11, 1972
Hotel Dupont Plaza, Washington, D. C.

Submitted by Clay L. Cochran, Secretary

MORNING SESSION:

Executive committee members present: G. Claytor, C. Cochran, M. Madrigal, P. Gish, A. Skenandore, A. Hirshen, R. Maffin, J. Patlan, J. Pierce, W. Morris and G. Cavanaugh (non-voting).

Staff present: C. Richardson, H. Severson, W. Powers, M. Echols, Y. McCoy, G. Cawley, S. Butler, A. Collings, A. Downes and L. Norman.

Others present: Attorney Arnold Sternberg and William L. Porter and Yvonne Speight, of the Council's auditing firm of Williams, Broadus & Lee.

1. The executive committee met in the Hotel Dupont Plaza following written notice of the meeting by President Claytor to the members of the committee, mailed November 30, 1971. Submitted at the meeting, together with said notice, were the following documents:

(a) Minutes of the last executive committee meeting.
(b) Staff biographies and organizational chart.
(c) Balance sheet.
(d) Actual expenditures to December 31, 1971.
(e) Six-month budget projection.
(f) Introductory letter from Williams, Broadus & Lee, Certified Public Accountants.
(g) Summary of information and assistance requests.
(h) Statement of Purpose, Viewpoints, Objectives, and Principal Activities.
(i) Criteria for eligibility for seed capital loan funds and other HAC services.

The Statement of Purpose, Viewpoints, Objectives and Principal Activities and the Criteria for Eligibility for Seed Capital Loans were also mailed in advance to other members of the board of directors with a request for comments.

2. CALL TO ORDER--President Claytor called the meeting to order at 10:30 a. m. The secretary determined that a quorum was present. Madrigal moved, Skenandore seconded a motion to adopt the agenda. Motion carried unanimously.

3. APPROVAL OF MINUTES--Gish moved, Maffin seconded a motion to accept the minutes as presented of the September 14-15, 1971 executive committee meeting at Washington, D. C. Motion carried unanimously.

4. EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR'S REPORT:

(a) Cavanaugh introduced employees at the meeting, who were:

C. Richardson, Assistant Director-Technical Assistance;
H. Severson, Assistant Director-Revolving Fund/ Administration;
W. Powers, Chief Housing Development;
A. Downes, Public Housing Senior Housing Specialist;
A. Collings, FmHA Senior Housing Specialist;
M. Echols, Accounting Director;
L. Norman, Information Director;
S. Butler, Research Director;
G. Cawley, Executive Secretary;
Y. McCoy, Administrative Assistant.

He also introduced William Porter and Yvonne Speight of the Council's auditing firm of Williams, Broadus & Lee. President Claytor asked Porter if the accounting procedures established by HAC met OEO requirements. Porter responded that at this time they do meet these requirements. Cavanaugh also introduced Attorney Sternberg, counsel for HAC. From 80 to 100 applications were processed in selecting staff.

(b) Report on office space--Cavanaugh reported on the leasing of 4,645 square feet of office space at 1601 Connecticut Ave., N. W., in Washington, D. C. at $6.35 per square foot, noting that this was the only space offered on two-year basis in accord with OEO requirements. The basic transaction on alternative space did not materialize. Cavanaugh expressed gratitude and appreciation to James Pierce and the National Sharecroppers Fund for providing temporary office space.

(c) Insurance coverage--Liability and general coverage insurance policies are in effect. Bids are to be received the week of January 17 on fringe benefits for the employees. Five firms are submitting bids for this coverage. Insurance includes bonding of all employees and officers of the organization.

(d) Compliance with OEO requirements--Besides approval of the accounting system, Cavanaugh reported that HAC had provided OEO with its personnel policy (embodied in office procedure manual, a copy of which was supplied to directors), certification of wage comparability, job descriptions of assistant directors and the accounting director and biographies of most of the staff members. OEO has approved appointment of the assistant directors and the accounting director.

(e) Correspondence report--HAC has advised all identifiable state housing agencies, OEO regional directors, state economic opportunities officers, state technical assistance specialists and all OEO nonprofit housing organizations operating in rural areas of the establishment of HAC and requested information on rural housing activities in their areas from these groups. Cavanaugh also reported on the conferences held with several groups and individuals from various parts of the nation. (A fuller report on these activities was included in the material provided the directors which has been filed with the permanent set of minutes of the committee). Cavanaugh reported also on meetings with RHA, NAHRO, the Non-Profit Housing Center and other Washington-based housing organizations.

(f) Fiscal report--Cavanaugh called attention to the record of disbursements included in the written report to the committee, a six-month operating budget with comparison with OEO estimates for the same period and a balance sheet of expenses and revenues.

5. QUESTIONS ON BUDGET: Several questions were raised concerning the budget, primarily relating to the purchase of equipment as compared with rental of the equipment. Cavanaugh and Severson responded that the least expensive alternative was followed in each case, using GSA sources when available but other sources if cheaper. President Claytor noted that RHA had made a loan of $50,000 to HAC before release of HAC funds was authorized on December 24, 1971. That loan has been repaid, Cavanaugh reported, as has the amount due the North Carolina Low Income Housing Development Corporation for organizational expenses.

6. QUESTION OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR--Cochran asked whether the executive director was an officer of the organization. Sternberg said that he is second vice president of the corporation and a member of the executive committee without vote. As second vice president, in the absence of the first vice president and the president he has all the powers of the president.

7. AUTHORIZED SIGNATURES FOR CHECKS--Cavanaugh requested that the executive committee authorize additional signatures for checks, to include the accounting director and an employee (Assistant Director-Revolving Fund/Administration) and that this authority include checks to pay for the normal operating costs of the association, payment vouchers against the letter of credit (grant funds), and for revolving fund checks. Throughout the discussion, several questions were directed to the attorney concerning the provisions of the bylaws concerning disbursements of the fund. A summary of the comments made by Sternberg in this regard:

--The executive director, who is also the second vice president, must sign all checks.

--The treasurer "shall disburse" all funds (i.e., sign checks) so that his signature or the signature of his designee must be on all checks.

--The secretary is specifically forbidden from signing checks.

--The treasurer can delegate his authority to sign checks to other persons.

It was also pointed out that OEO requires two signatures on all checks. Opinions on this subject included:

President Claytor felt that the officers of the Council should retain control by having a signatory other than employees and not to do so is to presume that "everything is going to go all right" and that to adopt the recommendation was relinquishing a basic control.

Cochran said he did not have time to study each check, that he did not have authority to refuse payments and that the accounting director should be the employee principally responsible for determining whether payments should be made. He also noted the difficulty and inconvenience of having only two people who are authorized to sign checks.

Maffin noted other controls of the committee; the statement of accounts, an independent auditor, legal counsel, OEO audit and the executive director being fully responsible to the board and executive committee.

MOTION AND ACTION--Hirshen moved, and it was duly seconded, that the bylaws be clarified so that any two of the following officers and employees be authorized to sign checks for normal operating purposes, for the revolving fund and to sign payment vouchers against the letter of credit for this purpose. Those officers and employees: the president, first vice president, second vice president, secretary, treasurer, chairman of the board, accounting director and an assistant secretary/assistant treasurer.

Before action on that motion it was amended in three ways:

1. to delete the secretary from the list.

2. to provide that the executive director (second vice president) sign all checks.

3. and that rather than clarifying bylaws that the second signature be the treasurer or one of his designees.

The motion acted upon was thus:

"Be it resolved that all checks of the Housing Assistance Council, for operating expenses and for the disbursements from the revolving fund, and for payment vouchers against the letter of credit shall in all instances include the signature of the executive director and in all instances shall also include the treasurer or any one of the following persons who are hereby authorized by the treasurer to sign checks: the president, first vice president, chairman of the board, accounting director, and assistant secretary/treasurer."

The president called for a vote on the resolution by a show of hands. Voting for the resolution were: Cochran, Gish, Skenandore, Hirshen, and Maffin. Opposing the resolution were: Madrigal, Claytor, Pierce, Patlan, and Morris. Having failed to get a majority,the resolution failed.

Maffin said that he opposed the motion because of the authority given to employees concerning the revolving fund. Several other directors said that this was also their objection to the resolution. Maffin then suggested that the resolution delete the authority concerning the revolving fund. Hirshen accepted this change and moved that the resolution be adopted with this change, as follows:

> "Be it resolved that all checks of the Housing Assistance Council and payment vouchers against the letter of credit shall in all instances include the signature of the executive director and in all instances shall also include the signature of the treasurer or the signature of any one of the following persons who are hereby authorized by the treasurer to sign checks or payment vouchers: the president, the first vice president, the chairman of the board, the accounting director, and the assistant secretary/ assistant treasurer."

The above motion passed.

8. ASSISTANT TREASURER NAMED--Cochran moved, and it was duly seconded, that the post of assistant secretary/ assistant treasurer be created and that Harlan M. Severson, assistant director-revolving fund/administration, be elected to that position. The president called for a vote on the motion. Motion passed unanimously.

President Claytor recessed the meeting for lunch. Meeting with executive committee at lunch were: Gil Blankespoor, Housing Specialist; David Engel, Chief, Housing Branch; Lenin Juarez, Housing Specialist, who discussed the prior approval requested of the governors for HAC to grant seed money loans in their respective states. States approving at this time are:

Alaska	Massachusetts
Arizona	Michigan
California	Missouri
Colorado	Montana
Georgia	New York
Hawaii	North Carolina
Iowa	South Carolina
Louisiana	South Dakota

AFTERNOON SESSION:

President Claytor called the afternoon session to order at 1:30 p.m. Director Marvin Davies was present for the afternoon session.

9. Pierce moved, Hirshen seconded a motion to consider agenda item 5, formation of loan committee, as first item of business for the afternoon. Motion carried.

10. FORMATION OF LOAN COMMITTEE--Action of the board at the last meeting was discussed. It was ruled, without any dissenting opinion, that the board of directors had adopted Article 2, Section 5 of the bylaws establishing the loan committee and that the executive committee was duly authorized to name the members of that committee.

It was moved by Pierce, seconded by Hirshen, that the president of the Council be a member of the loan committee and be chairman of that committee. In the discussion of this motion, Cochran asked about the legality of naming to the committee persons who are not members of the Council board of directors.

Sternberg said that while persons who are not members of the Council can be legally appointed to the loan committee, that he would suggest to avoid abdication of the responsibility of the board on an issue as important as this, that the number of members of the committee who are not Council board members be such so that they in combination with other board members, could not overrule the directors on the committee.

President Claytor suggested that the executive committee name five members of the board to the committee at this time, commenting that appointing persons who are not members of the board of directors to the loan committee could be interpreted as a delegation of responsibility rather than an abdication of responsibilty.

11. FIVE NAMED TO LOAN COMMITTEE--President Claytor called for a vote on his nomination to the loan committee. He was elected unanimously. Gish moved, Cochran seconded that Andrew Popoli, executive director, Rural Housing Improvement, Inc., Westminster, Mass., be named to the loan committee. Motion carried unanimously. Claytor moved, Morris seconded, that Joseph Debro, director, National Association of Minority Contractors, Inc., San Francisco, California, be named to the loan committee. Motion carried unanimously.

Patlan moved, Maffin seconded that Treasurer Manuel Madrigal be named to the loan committee. Motion carried unanimously. The executive director is a member of the committee according to provisions of the bylaws.

12. QUORUM ESTABLISHED FOR LOAN COMMITTEE--Cochran moved, Gish seconded a motion that a quorum of the loan committee be three members of the committee. In discussion of his motion, Cochran urged support of it because a larger committee costs more money and it is more difficult to get people together. Cochran said his motion that a quorum be three members means that this number would apply regardless of the size of the committee, which could be up to nine members. The motion failed. Maffin offered a substitute motion, seconded by Pierce, that a quorum of the loan committee be a simple majority of the number of members on the committee. Motion carried.

13. DISCUSSION OF VIEWPOINTS, OBJECTIVES, PRINCIPAL ACTIVITIES--President Claytor asked for an explanation of the method of developing the statement of the viewpoints, objectives and principal activities presented by Cavanaugh and the staff. In response to this question, Cavanaugh outlined the following procedure:

(a) The staff reviewed the proposal to OEO, the grant document and the accompanying special conditions of the grant.

(b) A series of conferences were held with representative housing groups from throughout the nation. Queries made to HAC by correspondence were all reviewed and summarized.

(c) Conferences were held with allied organizations in Washington, D.C.

(d) From these discussions and correspondence the staff concluded (among other conclusions) that there are very few organizations operating on a broad geographic basis and because of the lack of administrative funds and experienced staff, have produced little housing for the rural poor.

(e) The staff, in drafting the statement, followed the suggestion of several that guidelines be flexible because the opportunities vary from state to state and region to region.

Cavanaugh called attention to the addendum concerning HAC attempting to work with groups on as broad a geographic basis as possible, a point stressed in discussing the proposed statement with OEO housing officials.

Hirshen asked where two concepts concerning a summary of discussion on HAC's purpose September 14, 1971 were included in the proposed statement. The concepts he referred to are:

> "We are as concerned with the shaping of institutions and administrative policy and legal changes to make laws serve low-income people as we are in hustling the present inadequate housing programs....The word for the program is 'poor' people...Stress shall be placed on serving the poorest possible people rather than in achieving track records by creaming the target population. We are not out to serve moderate income people."

Cavanaugh said that these points were dealt with in Viewpoints number 2, 5, and 6 and in Objectives 4 and 5.

Hirshen commented that he was especially concerned that after HAC assistance or effort that there would remain institutions with expertise to help to house the rural poor.

Cavanaugh called attention to objective number 3 and the last sentence of objective number six: "This includes continuing consultation with OEO and other agencies to develop a balanced and coordinated national network of viable rural housing delivery organizations." He commented that this would require coordination of the OEO regional funding programs with the HAC programs.

Hirshen questioned further whether the provision on criteria for eligibility of loans concerning 25 percent of income being maximum amount would provide housing in the rural areas. The provision to which he referred:

Cavanaugh said that the purpose of the language was so that programs that resulted in costs of more than 25 percent of a family's adjusted income would be excluded from support--that the 25 percent was a lid or a maximum that HAC would oonsider as a basis for providing support.

Morris pointed out that the 235 program required only 20 percent and that HAC should not require a greater amount.

Cavanaugh pointed out that the total housing costs in almost all cases (including utilities) in the 235 and 236 programs, were in excess of 25 percent.

Davies said that criteria that limits HAC assistance to those programs that provide housing for less than 25 percent restricts HAC's assistance to public housing, the only program that gets below this cost.

Claytor added that many are paying up to 50 to 60 percent for substandard housing.

Cavanaugh said that it is the intent of this language to provide flexibility so that organizations with proposals to obtain subsidies that result in payments in excess of 25 percent can be encouraged to adapt their programs so that some of the people to be served will fall in the category below 25 percent.

Gish said that she thought that HAC assistance was for only those organizations serving only the poor as defined by the OEO-income guidelines.

Cavanaugh said that the flexibility was provided so that those with 235 and 236 programs could be encouraged to get rent supplement, public housing leasing, or Turnkey III for some portion of their proposal.

Gish said that thus five poor families of 250 to be served would make the organization eligible.

It was also pointed out that there is a provision that rates the application on the level of the income of those to be served and the proportion of the poor to the total served of any project.

The point was again made that to serve the poorest of the poor required using the public housing programs.

Cavanaugh said further that the staff found there is increased activity in public housing in rural areas, and one of the highest priorities is to work with some newly organized state and multi-county housing authorities... But that HAC may well be unable to work in many areas of the nation if it were restricted to those programs--and that rather what was being proposed was that those with 235 or 236 programs or FmHA programs could be encouraged to re-think or revise their plans to include a portion of it to serve the poor that would not otherwise be served.

Maffin raised the question about "existing" housing production organizations in the statement of purpose. Maffin also noted:

--Viewpoint No. 1--that the qualifying statement that "opportunity should be provided where the family lives or chooses to live whenever possible" is modified later in the statement and should perhaps be revised.

--Viewpoint No. 2--that the language should point out that there are substantial inequities in the federal housing programs for all poor people. HAC priorities should be devoted to correcting the inequities of the rural poor and that comparisons should not be drawn between urban and rural programs that can leave the impression that the urban housing programs are in good shape.

--Viewpoint No. 3--that providing suitable housing in the rural areas "alleviates" the urban housing problems is questionable.

--Technical Assistance - Item No. 1--that there is no reference to construction or getting the houses constructed.

--Training - Item No. 4--that the language may be restrictive--that HAC should take help where it can get it.

Cochran noted that RHA was getting a request a week from organizations such as the Jaycees and that such activity should be minimized.

The question of "how broad is broad" in the definition of organizations for which HAC would provide its services was discussed at length.

Cavanaugh pointed out that throughout the grant, statewide, regional and multi-county organizations are mentioned as the recipients of the services. The proposed policy statement also includes local organizations, he said, because if the grant were used only for the broader based organizations this would limit activity greatly. He gave examples of each type of organization that had requested aid from HAC.

Morris said that his principal interest at the meeting was the statement being considered. He raised the following points:

(1) In regard to the seed capital loans to "housing organizations"--Morris questioned whether this included Limited Dividend Corporations. Cavanaugh pointed out that the staff regarded this language as meaning primarily housing authorities and nonprofit organizations. Sternberg said that the Articles of Incorporation specifically mentioned working with organizations "for profit."

(2) That in 1-A in regard to seed capital loans that the language should read "that all of the housing to be..." Morris suggested that the second paragraph under 1-(a) might be rewritten to be more concise.

(3) That 1 (c) should be changed to read: "That there is a clear demonstration by the organization borrowing such funds that it has or will be provided..." with the underscored portion being the addition suggested by Morris.

(4) In paragraph 4 concerning Technical Assistance, Morris suggested that special efforts should be made to use small and minority consulting firms in its operation--and that the language should so emphasize this purpose.

(5) In the section on Training, paragraph 1, Morris suggested that the word "existing" should not be used to describe the type of organization that HAC would assist.

Morris asked whether the assistant director for training had been eliminated as indicated by the organization chart. Cavanaugh said that the position was not eliminated at this point, but that a decision had not been made on filling it, pending determination of the need for such a position.

(6) In definition of the area served, Morris felt that the proposed language eliminated everything but rural, and that previous language adopted by the board put a priority on serving the rural areas, rather than eliminating other areas.

(7) Morris felt that greater emphasis should be made on the race issue in the document. He pointed out that recent statistics show that 50 percent of the blacks are in substandard housing, while only 8 percent of whites are in substandard housing. He said that HAC should have an equal concern for the job opportunities for the minorities as for providing the housing, and that such purpose should be noted in the statement.

Cavanaugh pointed out that the "no discrimination" idea was the first criterion in the eligibility for seed capital loans. Morris said that this phase is in all housing language but that the minorities are still not housed. Cavanaugh said that there was no reluctance on the part of the staff to include stronger language.

Claytor commented that the language prepared by Cochran as a summary of discussion was stronger on this issue and should be incorporated. Cochran suggested that a reference could be made to that language.

Cavanaugh asked for decision on the geographic areas to be served. Cochran suggested that the original language of the board be made a footnote to this section to clarify any misunderstanding.

14. Cochran moved that the executive committee accept the Statement of Purpose, Viewpoints, Objectives and principal Activities "in the main" but that the staff attempt to incorporate in the appropriate places language that takes care of the critical comments made by the executive committee members and that it be resubmitted to the committee members by mail for further consideration. The motion was seconded.

Cavanaugh asked if approval by members of the committee could be expedited by providing their comments by mail soon after receiving them so that housing organizations that have requested the guidelines could have them soon after January 31. The committee agreed to this procedure.

The President asked for a vote on the motion. It passed unanimously.

15. ADMINISTRATION OF LOAN FUND - Madrigal moved, Patlan seconded, a motion directing the staff and the loan committee to take due cognizance of the ancillary benefits that could be available to minority groups or individuals from the existence of HAC. Specifically mentioned were job opportunities arising from consulting or from construction contracts. Motion passed unanimously.

16. DISCUSSION OF CRITERIA FOR ELIGIBILITY FOR SEED CAPITAL LOAN FUNDS - Claytor asked if the criteria would prohibit HAC from helping "one-shot" organizations, those that are developing only one project. Cavanaugh said that, in general, it is the intent that HAC will work with organizations organized to work on continuing housing developments, but that it is also clearly the intent that authority is provided to aid the one-project organization which is involved in a major development opportunity.

Gish said that the 18-month limit from the time HAC assistance of any kind first becomes available to the time of construction being commenced is "unrealistic" in the rural areas. She pointed to difficulties such as obtaining sewer and water, zoning, etc.

Claytor said that he interpreted this provision as more of a goal than a rigid requirement. Cavanaugh said the intent was to avoid working with organizations that "drag and drag" their activities so that construction is delayed with the result that the loan fund would not be revolved and made available to others. The committee agreed with Claytor's interpretation and the explanation of Cavanaugh on this time limitation.

Gish asked if the loan funds could be made available for construction loans or for providing a line of credit for such type of loans.

Use of the loan fund to provide bonding for minority contractors was also raised.

Davies recited the difficulty of minority contractors being bonded for the first time and said that he favored at least part of the HAC funds being used for this purpose and that further, some of the funds should be used for front money for such contractors.

Morris said that he wanted to emphasize "small" as well as "minority" contractors, because the small contractors, even if they are white, are having difficulty.

Cavanaugh called attention to the letters from William Pursell, director of the rural housing program of the North Carolina LIHDC and Andrew Popoli and the comments they made. The Pursell letter raised the question of whether construction loans could be made.

Claytor commented that because HAC had only a $2 million revolving fund, that construction loans are ruled out. Cavanaugh asked about using deposits to help get construction loans or to reduce interest rates on such loans. Gish said that construction loans could be useful, especially in cases of an organization having financing assured.

17. MOTION ON LOAN CRITERIA - Cochran moved, Skenandore seconded, a motion that the criteria for eligibility for seed capital loan funds be approved (supplemented by the revised policy statement) for guidance of the loan committee until the next meeting of the executive committee at which time the loan committee is instructed to submit any proposals for modification it believes to be desirable. Motion carried unanimously.

18. FURTHER DISCUSSION ON LOANS - Cavanaugh asked for clarification on making construction loans or providing collateral for such loans. Claytor repeated the point that the size of such loans limits the use of the funds. Cochran raised the question of whether use of funds is different after the loan funds have been returned and the money deposited.

Cavanaugh said that the loan funds must still be used for the same purpose as provided by the grant, but that the interest on such loans then goes to the Council, rather than to the federal government. Cavanaugh asked if the loan committee was authorized to adopt a policy to make construction loans. Sternberg said that the OEO grant conditions ruled out direct construction loans but that HAC could provide collateral or use its bank deposits to aid in obtaining such loans.

19. ADOPTION OF BUDGET - Cochran moved, Gish seconded, a motion to adopt the proposed six-month budget. Motion carried unanimously.

20. VACANCIES ON BOARD OF DIRECTORS - Cochran asked how many directors had been named. Cavanaugh replied that 33 directors had been named and that the bylaws provided for 36 directors, counting himself, and that the other two directors are to represent the non-designated state and local housing development corporations.

Claytor asked how many vacancies there were on the board of directors.

Cavanaugh said that there should be a 36-member board of directors, composed of:

---the executive director
---three incorporators of the organization
---32 elected board members

Of the 32 elected board members, 23 are from organizations designated in the bylaws and 12 are elected at large. Two organizations of the 23 organizations are described by kind, but not by name. They are each entitled to a director on the board. One such organization is the state government HDC's. The other is the non-OEO funded private HDC's. These organizations have never been designated so that no nominees have been named for consideration as board members. There are five other vacancies due to their designees having three consecutive absences, four of whom were organizational representatives (Bradley, Evans, Marshall and Woods) and one non-organizational representative, Moreland Smith.

The question of Andrew Yslas continuing on the board was raised because he no longer is chairman of the National Spanish-Speaking Housing Development Corporation.

Sternberg was asked to review the vacancies and the authority of the executive committee concerning naming of directors. He said that the executive committee had full powers of the board except that the committee:

(1) Cannot name members of the executive committee

(2) Cannot make changes in bylaws

(3) Cannot dissolve the organization

Sternberg said that the two vacancies created by there being no organization named to nominate one state government representative and one non-OEO private organization could not be filled because this would require designating organizations for "blanks" in the bylaws, which the executive committee was not authorized to do.

Sternberg said Yslas is one of the directors representing the three charter members, and while the National Spanish-Speaking Housing Development Corporation may wish to designate another director, Mr. Yslas would still be on the board for one full year.

The four organizational representatives (Bradley, Evans, Marshall and Woods) cannot be replaced because the organizations have not nominated another board member.

Mr. Moreland Smith could be replaced.

ELECTION - Cochran and Cavanaugh reported on the reasons for the absences of Marshall and Bradley. Cochran moved that Marshall be renamed to the board of directors. Motion was seconded by Madrigal. Motion carried unanimously.

Patlan moved, Hirshen seconded a motion that Bradley be reinstated as a board member. Motion carried unanimously.

Claytor suggested that Yslas serves on the board of directors as an incorporator and that the National Spanish-Speaking Housing Development Corporation was thus entitled to a director and should be so informed.

Madrigal moved, Pierce seconded that Yslas be designated a board member as an incorporator and that the National Spanish-Speaking HDC be so informed. Motion carried unanimously.

Cochran informed the committee that Mr. Woods is on leave of absence from the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing and that the organization has not submitted the name of another person to succeed him.

The committee ruled that Mr. Woods be taken from the list of directors, and that it would act on suggestion of his successor when that group submits a nominee.

Mr. Evans, representing the AFL-CIO, had not attended a meeting and there has been no communication from that organization on his successor.

Claytor directed that appropriate letters go to the two renamed directors and to the organizations listed above informing them of the vacancies on the board of directors.

The board confirmed that Moreland Smith was no longer a member of the board and deferred action on his successor.

22. DEPOSIT OF FUNDS - After a long discussion, concerning the convenience of establishing an account with a bank near the HAC office for the operating funds and concerning OEO directives on deposit of other funds, Cochran moved, Davies seconded, a motion that the staff be gratuitously admonished to keep any reserve funds in minority institutions of their choice and that the selection of the bank for the minimum operating funds be at the discretion of the executive director. Motion carried.

23. Cochran moved, Patlan seconded a motion to rent a safety deposit box. Motion carried, with the further directive that the executive director and two other employees be authorized to open the box and that any two of them will be required to open the box. The HAC Counsel was instructed to study the law on this to make sure that HAC assets not be locked away forever.

24. MEETINGS OF LOAN COMMITTEE - Cochran moved, Skenandore seconded a motion that the meetings of the loan committee be on call by the executive director, with consent and approval by the chairman, or by the request of a majority of the committee.

A question was raised on who could sign loan documents. Sternberg said that the bylaws provided that the president, first vice president or second vice president (or the executive director who is authorized to sign all documents of the organization) can sign loan documents. The motion by Cochran passed unanimously.

25. CHANGES IN ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION - Sternberg suggested that changes in the articles of incorporation should be considered to reflect more accurately the nonprofit nature of the organization.

26. MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS - Cochran moved, Madrigal seconded a motion that the board of directors meet in as provided in the bylaws unless the chairman of the board decides a meeting is needed before that time. A discussion of the bylaws followed the motion. The motion was withdrawn.

27. MEETING OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE - Cochran made a motion, duly seconded, that the executive committee meet on the call of the executive director after consultation with the president and chairman of the board, allowing as much advance notice of the meeting as possible. Motion carried unanimously.

28. COMMENDATION TO STAFF - Cochran moved that the executive committee express its appreciation to the executive director and to the staff for the manner in which they had pushed themselves to get the organization established and functioning. There was warm approval from all board members present.

29. APPRECIATION TO PIERCE - Claytor and members of the committee and the executive director expressed their warm appreciation to Director Pierce and employees of the National Sharecroppers Fund, Mrs. Pat Sabelhaus and Mr. John Wilson, for their aid in the early months of the organization.

30. MOTION TO ADJOURN - A motion to adjourn was made, duly seconded, and passed unanimously.

HOUSING ASSISTANCE COUNCIL, INC.

Minutes of the Loan Committee
Housing Assistance Council Office
February 24, 1972

Loan committee members present: G. Claytor, J. Debro, A. Popoli and G. Cavanaugh

Loan committee member absent: M. Madrigal.

HAC staff present: H. Severson, C. Richardson, L. Juarez, W. Powers, A. Collings Jr., A. Downes, G. Anders, L. Norman, Y. McCoy and C. Bernstein.

1. Chairman Claytor called the meeting to order at 10:30 a.m. and declared a quorum present. A proposed agenda was approved.

2. The committee decided that naming a vice chairman or other officers of the committee was not necessary. If it is impossible for the chairman to be present, he will designate someone to act on his behalf.

3. Cavanaugh reviewed the criteria for eligibility for HAC loans and reported that OEO had approved the statement of viewpoints, objectives and principal activities and the seed loan criteria as submitted to the board of directors.

4. Approval procedure--The form of approval of loans by the committee was discussed. The committee accepted the suggestion of Claytor that action by the committee on each loan was a firm commitment by HAC to the organization requesting the loan funds but the disbursement of the loan funds, all necessary contracts and security documents and details associated with this work be delegated to the staff. Claytor also directed that summaries of loan requests be mailed to committee members prior to the meetings of the committee.

5. Interest on loans--The committee reviewed the OEO provision that requires that HAC does not charge interest on its loans without prior approval by OEO. All interest earned on funds loaned for the first time would be paid to the U.S. Treasury. Interest earned thereafter can be used by HAC consistent with the purposes of the fund. The committee agreed that no interest would be charged on the loans that were to be considered at this first meeting.

6. General comments--Cavanaugh commented on the type and number of requests that HAC had received for use of loan funds and for other assistance. A substantial number of loan requests were for purposes other than those contemplated by the grant, such as to provide capital for housing factories, construction companies and administrative purposes. A number of those that wrote concerning the availability of loans did not have their development programs far enough along to qualify for consideration.

   Cavanaugh reported to the committee that the HAC staff has been assisting potential borrowers in preparing loan applications and will continue to do so.

7. Loan summary forms--A summary sheet with data and comments on each loan request were presented to the committee and are attached to these minutes to become a part of the permanent record of the committee action.

8. Action on loan requests--

   Wayne Housing Opportunities, Inc., Wayne County, New York.

   Description: This loan is for pre-development expenses of a 150 unit project to serve farm laborers to be financed by 514-516 FmHA loan and grant programs. (See Attachment "A")

   Staff recommendation: Approve $13,400 loan for site development with equal amount to be loaned by the Rural Housing Alliance (RHA) with loan funds for architect fees limited to preliminary drawings required for FmHA approval.

   Committee comments: Debro questioned the maximum amount for architect's fees in the proposal from WHO of $58,394, even though these were within the approvable limits of the FmHA.

   Committee action: Debro moved that the staff recommendation be approved. Cavanaugh seconded the motion. Motion carried unanimously.

Hidalgo County Housing Authority, Weslaco, Texas

Description: This loan is for pre-development expenses of project to provide 150 units for farm laborers to be financed by FmHA 514-516 loan and grant programs. (See Attachment "B")

Staff recommendation: Approve loan request of $38,500 and request set of preliminary plans.

Committee comments: Popoli asked about controls HAC would provide on funds once loan is approved by committee. Cavanaugh explained that all loan funds would be disbursed in accord with a schedule to be incorporated in the loan agreements, specifying purpose, amount and completion dates. Debro questioned the amount asked for architect fees. Claytor suggested HAC emphasize negotiating such fees and giving all applicants benefit of national practice and experience.

Committee action: Debro moved, Popoli seconded, a motion to approve the $38,500 loan but with use of our loan funds for architect fees limited to a maximum of $20,000. Motion carried unanimously.

Soledad Development Corporation, Monterey County, Calif.

Description: This loan request is for a site development loan which should be financed by a FmHA site development loan without HAC assistance. The project would provide 69 single-family homes under FmHA section 502 and additional units later under FHA section 236 or Turnkey III. (See Attachment "C")

Staff recommendation: Because FmHA site development loans take 14 to 18 months to process, the HAC staff recommended this loan to demonstrate the need for expediting FmHA loans of this type. Approve loan request of $195,601 for land cost and site development.

Committee comments: Popoli wanted to know the income levels of the families to be served and if the monthly cost for housing would be within the 25 percent criterion. In response to his question, the following information was provided:

--45 percent of the people to be served by the project are five-person families with yearly incomes of $4,000.

--Principal and interest payments on $11,500 anticipated cost of the homes would require monthly payments of $57 for 10 months and payments totalling $420 for the last 2 months of the year for taxes and insurance.

--Housing costs for this home, including real estate taxes, insurance and utilities would be approximately $100 monthly; seventy-two percent of those surveyed were paying $100 to $135 monthly for present housing.

Cavanaugh suggested with respect to the rental units scheduled on the site for a later date that Soledad be required to seek a lease agreement from the public housing authority for a number of the housing units or obtain rent supplements.

Committee action: Committee action on this loan request was taken at two different times during the meeting. The first action was on the general policy of making such loans. Debro moved, and Popoli seconded that it would be the policy of HAC to provide loans for site development to demonstrate the need for FmHA expediting this type of loan, with the provision that this policy be reviewed after six months. Cavanaugh and Debro supported the motion. Popoli opposed it.

It was also agreed that HAC would aid Soledad Development Corporation and its consultant the Rural Development Corporation (RDC) in getting prompt action on their site development loan application for this project. Only if not granted promptly would the site development portion of the above loan be granted.

After the additional information was obtained in response to the query from Popoli (at a later point in the meeting) Debro moved, Cavanaugh seconded, that the loan request of Soledad be approved with the provision that $15,000 should be moved from the development fund and placed in the land fund so that $95,000 would be authorized for land, $97,101 for development and $3,500 for administration, for a total loan of $195,601. Motion carried unanimously.

Kno Ho Co, Inc., Warsaw, Ohio

Description: This loan request is from a CAP agency using Neighborhood Youth Corps labor and sectional homes built by an OEO-funded factory to build three homes. The homes will be financed by FmHA section 502 loans. (See Attachment "D")

Staff recommendation: That a loan of $12,600 be approved for pre-development costs for a three-unit project.

Committee comments: Popoli asked what the monthly costs for the homeowners would be. The information at the time of the meeting was that monthly costs, exclusive of utilities (check this with field staff) would be $30 to $40 monthly. Cavanaugh suggested that the loan be approved on the condition that monthly costs should be determined before funds are made available.

Committee action: Debro moved and Cavanaugh seconded that the requested loan be approved. The motion was amended to provide that a portion of the families served by the project would not be required to pay costs in excess of 25 percent of their adjusted income. The amended motion passed unanimously.

Gwinnett Housing Development Corporation, Lawrenceville, Georgia.

Description: The loan is for traditional pre-development costs on a 120 unit 236 multi-family project. (See Attachment "E")

Staff recommendation: That a loan request for $20,000 should not be approved because the project does not meet HAC criteria: the families to be served do not have incomes that meet OEO guidelines; the area is not rural; no minority members serve on governing body.

Committee comments: The committee members agreed with the staff recommendation.

Committee action: Debro moved and Popoli seconded that the loan be rejected. Motion carred unanimously.

Self-Help Enterprises, Inc., Visalia, California

Description: This loan is for land and site development for two SHE projects: 16 self-help units financed by FmHA section 502 loans; 26 self-help units by FHA section 235 loans. The project will serve farm workers. (See Attachment "F")

Staff recommendation: That a loan request of $127,650 for site development be approved.

Committee comments: The committee commented that a portion of the homes should provide housing that will meet the twenty-five percent of adjusted income criteria.

Committee action: Debro moved, Cavanaugh seconded, that the loan of $127,650 be approved provided that a portion of the homes be provided to families whose monthly housing costs, including utilities, will not exceed 25 percent of their income. Motion carried unanimously.

Southeastern Wisconsin Housing Corporation, Walworth County, Wisconsin

Description: Loan is for developing sites for 37 self-help homes financed by FmHA section 502 loans. The group was refused a FmHA section 515 loan and is planning court action to protest this decision. (See Attachment "G")

Staff recommendation: That a loan of $103,500 for site development be approved.

Committee comments: Debro questioned the cost of $22,600 for 14 acres of undeveloped land. He requested the HAC staff to provide aid to housing groups in obtaining land at the lowest possible cost and that loans to purchase land should be accompanied by information on comparable land sold within the past six months. Debro requested a copy of the bond which the Sponsor agreed to furnish from Aetna Insurance Company as security for the loan.

Committee action: Debro moved, Cavanaugh seconded, approval of the loan of $103,500. Cavanaugh and Debro favored the motion. Popoli opposed the motion with the direction that the minutes show that he was not convinced that the project would provide housing for the poor as required by HAC criteria.

Newburke Housing Corporation, Burke County, Georgia

Description: This loan is to be used to finance engineering and a water system. First stage of the project is 19 units to be built by a contractor and financed by section 502 FmHA loans. Second stage will involve a 50-acre tract containing public housing. Sponsors of the project envision a new low-income community. The effort is being sponsored by the National Sharecroppers Fund and the Presbyterian church. (See Attachment "H")

Staff recommendation: That a loan of $38,325 be approved for site development.

Committee comments: Popoli asked the median income of those people to be served by the project. The median income of people of this area is $2,500 yearly and the houses to be constructed will cost approximately $13,000.

Committee action: Debro moved, Cavanaugh seconded approval of the loan request as submitted. Cavanaugh and Debro voted for the motion. Popoli voted against the motion and directed that the minutes show that he was not convinced that the project would serve a portion of the poor as required by HAC guidelines.

Missouri Associated Migrant Opportunities Service, Missouri

Description: This project is to move and rehabilitate 120 homes. The present location of the 120 homes will be flooded by a dam. On the Job Training labor is to be utilized for the rehabilitation and it is to be financed by a FmHA 502 loan. (See Attachment "I")

Staff recommendation: That a loan of $85,000 be approved but that funds would not be advanced until arrangements with the Department of Defense are obtained and until a new housing organization is formed to sponsor the project.

Committee comments: The committee questioned the cost of removing the homes from their present sites to the new sites. They noted the cost of the new sites and the risk of vandalism. Cavanaugh said that the proposal has much merit, but because it is a complicated proposal,action could await the development of more complete plans.

Committee action: Debro moved, Cavanaugh seconded,tabling of the loan request for 30 to 60 days until additional details have been provided. Motion carried unanimously.

SATAV Corporation, St. Mary's County, Maryland

Description: This loan is for financing engineering, a water system, land clearing and roads and for refinancing purchase of land. The Sponsor plans to build an initial 32 units, including self-help units. Part of the funds will be for engineering for the 80 unit project. (See Attachment "J")

Staff recommendation: That a loan of $74,540 for site development be approved, subject to engineering site plan being updated.

Committee comments: In response to a question by one of the committee members, the staff reported that the monthly housing cost on previous homes developed by this sponsor amounted to 17 to 27 percent of the gross income of the self-help buyers.

Committee action: Popoli moved, Cavanaugh seconded, approval of the loan as submitted. Motion carried unanimously.

Low-Income Housing Development Corporation, Durham, North Carolina

Description: LIHDC requested (a copy of the letter of request is attached as part of these minutes) a construction loan in the range of $350,000 to $500,000 for approximately 75 units to be financed by FmHA section 502 loans. The purpose of LIHDC's request was to reduce the house cost by eliminating high construction loan interest costs. (See Attachment "K")

Staff recommendation: That a construction loan of from $200,000 to $350,000 involves major policy decisions that should first be discussed before action on the request from LIHDC.

Committee comments: Cavanaugh suggested three possible policy positions that may be taken on loans of this type: 1) That such loans qualify 2) That such loans would qualify if HAC has funds that would not otherwise be used and 3) That such loans would qualify if development would not take place unless HAC makes such a loan. Cavanaugh reviewed the discussion of the executive committee, when Claytor said our funds should not be used for this purpose, and the OEO grant provision that forbids such loans. OEO had, however, indicated that this provision could be changed or an exception might be made to it.

Debro questioned whether as suggested by LIHDC obtaining a construction loan from a bank was more costly because the bank was not going to place the permanent mortgage, was valid because generally they would rather make construction loans than long-term mortgage loans.

Claytor indicated concern for the precedent of this type of loan, especially because of its size.

Cavanaugh said that one of the reasons advanced for an interest-free construction loan was that it would reduce the cost of the homes by approximately $500.

Claytor said if the issue was availability of construction funds, rather than the cost of such funds, he would be more disposed to favor a construction loan.

Debro said he would need a cost breakdown before he could consider the application, and felt that LIHDC did not provide sufficient reason for HAC to consider this loan.

Committee action: The committee agreed to defer action on the loan request, and asked the staff to get more detailed information on the costs involved in the project and the results of LIHDC's borrowing efforts.

Adams & Brown Economic Opportunities, Inc., Ohio

Description: Adams & Brown proposes to construct four units using Operation Mainstream labor, four teams to develop one house each in three months. The units would be financed by FmHA section 502 loans, and would serve OEO income poor. (See Attachment "L")

Staff recommendation: That the loan request of $84,000 from this sponsor be reduced to $56,000 and that it use $15,000 seed money available to it. That the reduced loan request be approved, provided further that a 60/40 payout schedule with FmHA developed.

Committee comment: Cavanaugh said that OEO would quite likely permit change of its grant provisions to serve this sponsor, because of the number of poverty objectives to be served by the project and the fact that without HAC assistance, the project may not be realized. Cavanaugh also pointed out differences between this construction loan request and that of LIHDC: Because of its experience, LIHDC can more easily get a private loan; the project would help improve the skills of otherwise unemployable people and the project would serve those of lower incomes.

Claytor asked how this project differed from the previous project finished by Adams & Brown. In the earlier project the labor cost was absorbed by the Mainstream program.

Committee action: The committee agreed to defer action on the loan request and directed the staff to determine if other sources were available for the construction financing. Popoli requested that the staff also determine:

a. A breakdown of previous housing costs.

b. Income level of the prospective tenants.

c. Monthly costs associated with the housing payments, such as taxes, insurance, utilities.

d. Monthly cost of labor and of subcontractors.

UP-CAP, Upper Peninsula, Michigan

Description: This loan is to enable the sponsor, a Community Action Agency, to continue its work with fifteen rural county housing authorities. The funds would be used for development programs for about 500 public housing units. The HAC funds would be matched by a grant from OEO. (See Attachment "M")

Staff recommendation: That a loan request of $40,000 be approved.

Committee comments: Cavanaugh emphasized that the HAC funds would be for traditional pre-development purposes and returned to HAC as they are recovered from HUD.

Committee action: Debro moved, Cavanaugh seconded, approval of the loan. Motion carried unanimously.

Weber-Davis Housing Corporate, Layton City, Utah

Description: Weber-Davis, an affiliate of the Utah Migrant Council, has a fund commitment from FmHA for 28 units using section 514-section 516 loan and grant for Chicano farm workers. The Layton City governing body denied Weber-Davis a building permit on the grounds that "it was not in the best interests of the community." The loan funds would be used to purchase a three-acre site for the project. The land purchase agreement of Weber-Davis would expire March 1, 1972 without money to purchase this land. (See Attachment "N")

Staff recommendation: That a loan request of $18,360 be approved.

Committee comments: Cavanaugh discussed the discriminatory action of the Layton City governing body and urged the committee to approve this loan as a clear advocacy case for HAC.

Committee action: Cavanaugh moved, Popoli seconded approval of the loan request. The motion carried unanimously.

9. Deferment on loan requests and proposals--Time did not permit the consideration of the other agenda items.

10. The meeting was adjourned.

Low Income Housing Development Corporation of North Carolina

Box 1108, Durham, North Carolina 27702

Walter L. Smith, Executive Director

(919) 596-2114

January 6, 1972

Received
JAN 10 1972

Mr. Gordon Cavenough
Housing Assistance Council
Suite 909
1346 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Gordon:

As per your telephone request of December 30, 1971 which was a followup of our conference in your office on December 28, I will outline via this letter our plans for the development of a fifty unit subdivision in a rural area of Rowan County, North Carolina. It is our hope that our agency will be in a position to utilize the Housing Assistance Council's revolving development fund in the development of the fifty single family, detached houses for sale to low income families. Since our knowledge of your grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity is limited, we cannot determine whether or not this request falls within the guidelines imposed by the Office of Economic Opportunity upon your agency. However, based upon my conversations with you, it seems that the request possibly does fit within your guidelines.

Over the past seven months we have gathered information regarding the feasibility of the development of the subdivision and our estimation of the capital outlay required for the project. This information can be made available for your review when needed. It indicates that the total cost of the subdivision will be $775,000. The development fund which we have at our disposal amounts to $300,000 upon which we have made commitments. The projected balance which will be available for Rowan County from this revolving fund is $200,000. Needless to say, the remaining necessary monies must be secured in loans from some other lending institution or by careful control of the cash flow so that our revolving fund can be increased. While all factors indicate that we will have no difficulty securing monies locally for the project, certain economies would result from a loan from your agency. Some of these economies would be direct via the reduction of interest rates, others would be indirect. Our projections indicate that the indirect savings would be equal to and possibly exceed the direct savings. I shall attempt to outline for you each of these savings.

First, the projected direct savings related to interest rates would be substantial. As I discussed with you, we have been able to secure loans at a rate of 8 percent per annum plus a 1 percent origination fee (based upon the total loan amount), plus a 1 percent penalty (based upon the individual unit loan amount) per unit if the lender does not receive each permanent mortgage. Immediately you will recognize that this process is oriented toward the Federal Housing Administration's 235 interest subsidy program. Since houses sold to individual families under the Farmers Home Administration 502 Interest Credit Program are financed by that agency to the families as direct loans and not insured as under the Federal Housing Administration 235 program, it is difficult (and sometimes impossible) to interest lending institutions in committing funds for subdivision development when permanent financing is scheduled to be supplied by the Farmers Home Administration. If such a loan can be secured, preliminary conversations indicate that the probable interest rate will be in the range of 12 to 14 percent for a Farmers Home Administration subdivision thus counteracting the savings gained through the utilization of the Farmers Home Administration 502 program. Assuming that a loan of $500,000 for the subdivision is secured from a traditional lending institution for a period of 12 months at the most favorable rate which we have received previously (the 8 percent + 1 percent + 1 percent as referred to above), the interest on that loan would amount to approximately $30,000 or $600 per house (computed as follows: [$500,000 total loan for 12 months] one percent origination fee + one percent penalty fee + eight percent on an average outstanding balance [one-half of total loan - $250,000]; total interest is $30,000). If a loan is secured as has been indicated at a rate of from twelve to fourteen percent, it would also amount to $30,000 (at 12 percent) or up to $35,000 (at 14 percent) for a range of $600 to $700 per house. (Computed as follows: twelve percent [and 14 percent] on an average outstanding balance [one-half of total loan of $250,000]; total interest is $30,000 to $35,000). A loan of $500,000 from the Housing Assistance Council would amount to a direct savings of $30,000 to $35,000 if the money were used for a period of twelve months. Our experience indicates that the total length of the loan would probably not exceed nine months. In addition, our experience indicates that repayment of the loan would begin when approximately two-thirds of the total loan amount had been expended.

Indirect savings probably do not need to be outlined in this letter since they are well known to those involved in rural housing - those savings made possible by use of the Farmers Home Administration 502 program as opposed to the Federal Housing Administration 235 program. However, it might be wise to indicate the savings as they are reflected in this particular subdivision. A total savings for the subdivision would amount to $51,956 with an average savings of $1010 per three bedroom house and a savings of $1122 per four bedroom house. These savings are based upon a projected cost of $13.00 per square foot (a figure which is high).

When the direct and indirect savings are calculated, a maximum possible savings of $86,956 would be the result of a $500,000 loan from the Housing Assistance Council. The loan would mean that a total possible savings in a three bedroom house would amount to $1610 and a total possible savings of $1722 per four bedroom house. These savings would mean that we as an agency would be able to reach farther down the income scale than we have been able to in the past.

Hopefully, we will be able to add to the savings outlined above an additional writedown for the houses for which we now have a provision in our grant. In an attempt to qualify the poorest possible families, we have the resources to absorb an additional loss not to exceed $4500 per house so that conceivably we will be able to offer some units for as low as $9500 to $10,500 per house. The end result of this would mean that a family with a gross income of approximately $3000 to $3500 could be provided a well-built house in a quality subdivision and that that house would be appraised at approximately $16,000 to $17,500 by the Farmers Home Administration.

It is very important that we know the intention of your organization regarding this request at your earliest possible convenience. Our option on the site expires at the end of January. While it is our intention to develop the site with or without a loan from the Housing Assistance Council, the terms of purchase will be greatly affected by your decision and must be included in our purchase contract which must be signed at the time of the expiration of our option.

My apologies for such a lengthy and detailed letter. If there are any questions, do not hesitate to call me.

Sincerely,

Bill

William R. Pursell
Director, Rural Housing Program

e. Status of the project with the funding source:
Farmers Home has set aside funds for WDHC until March 18, 1972.

6. Income levels of those to be served:
People served will be Mexican-American migrant farm laborers. Information regarding their actual incomes has not yet been received.

7. Projected term of the loan and method of security:
Term of the loan cannot be determined as yet. Please see narrative explanation. The property will be secured by first mortgage or trust deed and has excellent resale value.

8. Staff recommendation: (See Other Side)

Weber/Davis Housing Corporate has an earnest money agreement on 3 acres of property and have applied to Farmers Home Administration for $425,688 -- 90% grant, 10% loan -- to build 28 units of farm labor housing. Farmers Home has set aside funds for the project until March 18. The land must be purchased on March 1 or WDHC will lose it and their downpayment of $1,200 -- the only terms available on the property because of local resentment and prejudice. Last week the City Council of Layton City refused to approve the subdivision "in the best interest of the community."

Control of the property is critical. The action of the City Council is clearly discriminatory. There is evidence that the Council agreed to a density of 48 units on that 3 acre site -- a private project which fell through. The Migrant Legal Action Program and attornies for the WDHC feel there is a good chance of winning a discrmination suit against the City of Layton. An investigation into the situation is being initiated by the Department of Justice. The HUD water grant to Layton City has been stopped because of the charge of discrimination. If the land is not purchased on March 1 the City will receive its HUD water grant (already approved) and Farmers Home Administration will withdraw the set aside funds for the project. The project will have been effectively killed. If the land is purchased on March 1, 1972, a suit charging discrimination will be made against Layton City and the Hud water grant will be held pending the outcome of the case.

The further issue of allowing Farmers Home to withdraw the set aside funds is involved here also. If the site is obtained by WDHC and FmHA in the meantime has withdrawn set aside funds, the point of the project is moot. It may be possible by court action to enjoin FmHA from releasing the funds.

To allow the property to be lost to Weber/Davis Housing Corporate would be to kill the project and play into the hands of the City Council which obviously would rather see the matter dropped and keep the Mexican-American farm laborers out of the town.

March 3, 1972

To the Board of Directors:

The Housing Assistance Council loan committee met for the first time February 24 and approved seed-money loans totalling $647,476 for 10 housing projects serving poor people in areas which are clearly rural.

Present for the meeting were Glenn Claytor, Joseph Debro, Andy Popoli and myself. Manuel Madgrigal, the other member of the committee, was unable to attend. The executive committee at its January meeting named Board President Claytor as chairman of the loan committee.

The loans will help more than 2,000 families get decent housing.

Chairman Claytor stressed that approval by the committee of the loans is a commitment of the Council to the organizations.

The staff is charged with paying out the funds after loan documents are processed. Those documents will include schedules for paying out the money and for returning it to HAC.

The committee stressed that loan funds be used for families whose income is low, as defined by OEO income guidelines.

The $647,476 is about one-third of the $2,000,000 HAC has available for such loans. Another $2 million is expected to be made available to HAC later this year.

Action on two loans was deferred because of incomplete data. Time did not permit consideration of several other applications.

Loans were approved for:

PRE-DEVELOPMENT LOANS

Wayne Housing Opportunities, Inc., Wayne County, New York

Loan amount: $13,400

WHO Inc. is a new, broad-based nonprofit group developing farm labor housing in Wayne County. The HAC loan will be for architect and legal fees, land option and purchase. WHO has applied to FmHA for a grant and loan under the farm labor housing program (Section 514 and 516) for 150 units. The Rural Housing Alliance will lend an amount from its revolving fund equal to the HAC loan. The extension service of Cornell University is providing staff assistance, as well as HAC.

Hidalgo County Housing Authority, Weslaco, Texas

Loan amount: $23,500

FmHA has approved 150 units of farm labor housing for this housing authority under the FmHA Section 514-516 programs. The housing units will be built on the site of the old Weslaco farm labor housing camp. The HAC loan will be used for architect and legal fees and site engineering. Construction is scheduled to start in July. The houses will rent for $30 to $40 per month.

Southeastern Wisconsin Housing Corporation
Wisconsin

Loan amount: $103,500

This OEO-funded group operates in three counties. The loan is for developing sites for 37 self-help homes financed by Section 502 FmHA loans.

Newburke Housing Corporation, Burke County, Georgia

Loan amount: $38,325

Newburke is the beginning of a new black-sponsored community for rural industry and people with low incomes. The National Sharecroppers Fund and the Presbyterian Church are supporting the development.

This loan will be used to finance engineering fees and a water system. First stage of the project is 19 units to be built by a contractor and financed by Section 502 FmHA loans. Second stage will involve a 50 acre tract for low income rental and home ownership units.

Loan amount: $74,540

This loan is primarily for financing engineering, a water system, land clearing and roads and also for refinancing an eight percent purchase money mortgage on the land. The group plans to build an initial 32 units, including self-help units, and others financed by Section 515 FmHA loans and Section 502 FmHA loans. Part of the funds will be used for developing an application for a future 80-unit project. SATAV is a delegate agency of a CAP program. It has completed 12 self-help units on land it owns.

Soledad Development Corporation
Soledad, California

Loan amount: $195,601

The project will use a 16-acre plot within the city limits of Soledad for 69 single family homes, financed by FmHA Section 502 loans. Approximately 2 1/2 acres will be for multi-family units using FHA Section 236 or Turnkey III programs. FmHA has given conditional approval for a site development loan (Section 524). Soledad is served by the Rural Development Corporation (a statewide HDC funded by OEO). The HAC loan will be used in part to free up for other developments, an earlier loan from RDC and to enable site development to begin in the event the Farmers Home loan for this purpose faces an unreasonable delay. Construction is scheduled to start in July. The project will provide housing for Chicano farm workers.

Kno-Ho-Co Neighborhood Youth Corps, Warsaw, Ohio

Loan amount: $12,600

This organization is a three-county CAP planning to use Neighborhood Youth Corps labor to build three homes. Sectional houses will be provided by an OEO-funded factory nearby. The loan is for usual "front-end" costs. The homes will be financed by FmHA Section 502 loans.

SITE DEVELOPMENT LOAN REQUESTS

Self-Help Enterprises, Inc., Visalia, California

Loan amount: $127,650

FmHA Section 524 site development loans are taking 14 to 18 months to be approved. This loan is to avoid that delay and the increased costs that occur during that time. One site is for 16 self-help units financed by FmHA Section 502 loans. The other site is for 26 units of self-help housing using Section 235 FHA loans. Both will use the interest-credit provisions of these programs. The money is for land and land options, engineering and land development. The project will serve farm workers.

HOUSING AUTHORITY LOAN REQUEST

Loan amount: $40,000

This loan is to enable a community action agency, which helped to form fifteen rural county housing authorities to proceed with the work necessary to obtain from HUD program reservations and approved development programs for approximately 500 units of public housing for these authorities. The units will be developed and managed by the group co-operatively. The HAC loan enabled UP-CAP to obtain a matching grant from OEO for additional work on area low income housing needs. HAC will provide considerable technical assistance in the development period.

SPECIAL REQUEST

Loan amount: $18,360

Weber-Davis, an affiliate of the Utah Migrant Council, is working desperately to provide housing for a group of Chicano farm workers in this small Utah community. The loan is to purchase three acres of land in the city. The sponsor has a fund commitment from FmHA for a loan and grant (Sections 514-516), which is threatened with cancellation due to apparently discriminatory action of the Layton City governing body denying a building permit to the project saying "it was not in the best interests of the community." Earlier, the governing body had approved a private development with twice as many homes on the same land.

The land purchase agreement would have expired March 1 without HAC assistance. Now, planned legal action by the Utah Migrant Council and Weber-Davis can continue. In addition, HUD is investigating whether it should proceed with a water and sewer grant for the city because of the apparent discrimination. The Justice Department is also investigating.

Details of each loan were examined carefully by the loan committee. The committee considered all issues and discussed all questions about the loans before voting on them. The staff and I are grateful to the members of the committee for their hard work and for their suggestions.

Because this was the first meeting of the committee, the staff had extra work to prepare for it. I appreciate their extra effort and dedication.

Even though no major effort was made to publicize the availability of HAC funds or assistance, more than 100 letters of inquiry and applications were received and processed in these first months of our operation. The need for the funds and for the assistance which HAC offers is much greater than all of us expected. The OEO grant to HAC is based on a critical, nationwide need. More funds will be necessary to meet that need.

Additional details concerning any of the loans are available to the members of the board upon request.

Sincerely yours,

Gordon Cavanaugh

Minutes of the Loan Committee
Housing Assistance Council Office
April 27, 1972

Loan committee members present: G. Claytor, J. Debro, A. Popoli, M. Madrigal, and G. Cavanaugh

Staff members present: H. Severson, C. Richardson, L. Juarez, W. Powers, G. Anders, A. Downes, Y. McCoy, L. Norman and Fred Cooper.

1. The loan committee was called to order by Chairman Glenn Claytor at 3:05 p.m. A quorum was established as all five members of the committee were present. The proposed agenda was accepted.

2. It was moved by Debro and seconded by Popoli that the minutes of the last loan committee meeting held February 24, 1972 be adopted. Popoli requested that the last sentence of the paragraph beginning, "Committee action" on page four of the minutes be stricken. The minutes were adopted with this correction.

3. Cavanaugh reviewed the revised summary form and pointed out that it now includes the monthly housing expense and a comparison of the adjusted family incomes needed to pay for the proposed houses and the OEO income guidelines. Cavanaugh also drew the committee's attention to the revised full loan application form pointing out it is somewhat more detailed and that it now puts greater emphasis on minority participation and affirmative action regarding the use of contractors and the leasing or marketing of the units. The application also now comes in sections which can be mailed out for further information if it's needed. The staff is available by phone to answer any questions applicants may have in filling out the form.

4. Cavanaugh suggested that the letter from the Low Income Housing Development Corporation of North Carolina not be discussed at the loan committee meeting as sufficient attention had been directed to it at the meeting of the executive committee earlier that day, and since it did not at that time, constitute a formal loan application.

He reported that all the loans approved at the last meeting of the loan committee with the exception of one, have been reduced to written agreements and two disbursements have been made. The staff is working actively with all the groups although two loans are still held up over governor's approval in California.

Hidalgo County Housing Authority will not use the HAC loan previously approved because the authority succeeded in reducing the architect's fees and will use a lesser loan they received from RHA. HAC has offered to take over that $10,000 loan from RHA if they find themselves short on loan funds.

Two other groups, Newburke and SATAV, found they had underestimated their needs and, after staff investigation, additional funds were made available to both groups under the discretionary power of the director. In each case, the additional funds needed were under $3,000.

Popoli expressed appreciation for the loan summaries mailed in advance of the meeting.

The committee's attention was drawn to the fact that some of the summaries had been revised after mailing to the members of the loan committee to reflect added details; the corrected summaries were the ones included in the loan packet distributed at the meeting.

5. Review of Applications:

North Florida Housing Development Corporation

Description: This HDC covering 27 counties in northern Florida funded by the OEO, and composed of eight CAAs, is proposing to package FmHA 502 loans for families they seek out and to provide them with counseling once they have moved in. They are requesting a $25,000 revolving fund to purchase sites.

Staff recommendation: That the $25,000 be approved but remain with HAC and individual draws on it be made upon receipt of title reports, breakdown of lot costs, projected development costs and projected development time.

Committee comments: Claytor questioned the smallness of the request. Staff pointed out the group has done no development to date and wants to start small and expand later. Popoli cautioned staff to keep a close track of this project as it is their first endeavor and to make sure the price of the houses stays within the ranges outlined in the summary. Staff pointed out that they recommend reviewing within 3 to 5 months.

Committee action: Popoli moved approval. Debro seconded it. Motion carried.

Low Income Section Housing, Inc., Lebanon, Virginia

Description: This is a nonprofit OEO funded housing corporation operating in two counties. They have produced forty houses through sectional construction. The wall panels come from their sectional factory. The houses have FmHA approval. They are requesting funds for the purchase and development of land to develop five sites for 36 houses to be financed under FmHA 502 program. In addition, they are requesting a bulk buying revolving fund of $56,000.

Staff recommendation: That the total amount of $108,000 be approved with a control system established over the revolving fund for bulk purchasing.

Committee comments: Debro cautioned that vandalism and pilfering often negate any savings accumulated by bulk-buying. Staff pointed out that the factory is enclosed although this wouldn't guard completely against losses. The staff questioned General Counsel Arnold Sternberg as to how the loan could be secured particularly the revolving fund for bulk buying. Sternberg suggested working out an agreement whereby HAC would hold legal title to the materials. He also suggested that staff investigate the current financial status of LISH so that the inventory is not subject to attachment. Debro felt that there ought to be a more efficient use of $56,000 than bulk buying and expressed reservation that savings will actually be effected in light of possible loss of inventory. Staff pointed out that LISH needed funds to purchase materials to keep their crews employed on an even, full-time basis.

Committee action: Cavanaugh moved the approval of the loan. Debro seconded the motion. The loan was approved.

Adams and Brown Housing Corporation, Ohio

Description: The proposal was brought before the committee at the last meeting. The request is for $56,140 to be used as a revolving fund for the purchase of land, materials, labor and subcontractors to build 24 houses using unemployed persons in the 18-22 age bracket. The houses are to be financed under FmHA 502 program with interest credit. The proposal was brought before the committee at the last meeting and returned for further study because it was a construction loan request.

Description: (Cont'd)

The committee also wanted to find out how Adams and Brown had financed the first 35 houses it had built. Staff has encouraged the group to go to the Ohio Housing Development Board for financing since they are unable to obtain it locally. The OHDB, however, is unable to make loans on 502 projects.

Staff recommendation: Waiting for individual loan closings makes it difficult to schedule construction crews and also causes hardships for families who must begin making payments on the loans before the houses are completed while they continue to pay rent. Since the group is unable to obtain private financing the staff recommends funding.

Committee comments: Popoli asked what subcontracting was done. Staff said it was to used for wells, plumbing, and some heating work.

Committee action: Debro moved and Madrigal seconded a motion to approve the project. Popoli wanted to know if they had received a conditional commitment from FmHA and if so why a local bank wouldn't finance the houses. Staff pointed out that Adams and Brown had been to one bank locally and had been turned down even though they did have conditional commitments from FmHA. General Counsel Sternberg suggested that staff investigate collateralizing a loan from a local bank so that a local lending institution could begin to get familiar with the program. Staff agreed to try this route. Staff also said they would try to get the OHDB to reconsider their refusal to make a loan for 502 development and if they would not, to challenge the decision. The motion carried.

Colorado Housing, Inc.

Description: (1) The project plans to develop a 23 acre site for 80 housing units of a mixture of programs: Turnkey III, FmHA 502 and FHA 203(b). They are requesting $64,855 for development of the site. Good cooperation has been received from the town and the Army Corps of Engineers is putting in the water and sewer at no charge.

Staff recommendation: Approval of the loan.

Committee action: Popoli moved acceptance; Madrigal seconded the motion. The loan was approved.

Colorado Housing Inc. (Cont'd)

Description: (2) The second loan application from the Colorado Housing Inc., requests $25,000 to provide additional funds to existing revolving funds to allow for land banking. CHI indicates it will raise funds privately to match the HAC loan.

Staff recommendation: Approve with review of effectiveness after one year.

Committee action: Popoli moved to approve the application. Madrigal seconded the motion. The loan was approved.

Maysel Manor, Inc., West Virginia

Description: This nonprofit corporation was set up in order to establish a FmHA 515 elderly project. They have received assistance from the West Virginia Commission on the Aging. The project will build 10 units of housing. A grant from the Bendum Foundation is being used to reduce the mortgage and bring down the cost. The grant however, will not be available until March 1973 at the latest. The request for $30,000 will be used for interim financing until the grant from the Bendum Foundation is made available.

Staff recommendation: Approve since this is the first 515 project in West Virginia and the Commission on Aging, the most active statewide group deserves support. Unless the loan is made the mortgage will have to be changed forcing up the total project cost and the rent on the individual units also.

Committee comments: Debro suggested that staff look at a balance sheet of the Bendum Foundation.

Committee action: Cavanaugh moved and Debro seconded a motion to approve the loan. The loan was approved.

Rural Housing Improvement Inc., Massachusetts

Before discussion of these four loan requests began, Popoli declared his interest in the requests as director of RHI and withdrew from participation in any consideration or vote on these loans.

Rural Housing Improvement, Inc., Massachusetts (Cont'd)

Description: (1) Athol, Massachusetts The request is for $82,185 for pre-development costs for the construction of 70 units for cooperative ownership under the rent supplement program 221(d)(3) with 100% rent supplements.

Staff recommendation: Recommend approval of total request though the option fee of $900 to initial closing may not be recoverable if the option expires.

Committee action: Debro moved and Cavanaugh seconded a motion to approve the loan. The loan was approved.

Description: (2) Orange, Massachusetts
The request is for $59,000 pre-development fees for the rehabilitation of four basically sound structures to be rehab'd into 25 multi-family units with 100% rent supplements.

Staff recommendations: Approval of the $59,000 request based on a favorable option.

Committee comments: Popoli explained that the option RHI has signed is a refundable option.

Committee action: Debro moved and Cavanaugh seconded the motion to approve the project. The loan was approved.

Description: (3) Gloucester, Massachusetts
The request is for $27,100 for land option and purchase, and pre-development costs for the development of 20 units of new construction of rental housing with 100% rent supplements. A zoning change is required and RHI must develop site plans to present to the zoning board.

Staff recommendations: Approval of $3,350 to develop preliminary plans to take to the board.

Committee action: Cavanaugh moved approval of the project. Claytor seconded the motion. The loan was approved.

General Counsel Sternberg asked if the options would run both to RHI and the Housing Assistance Council. Should the main party have to back out, the option would then be held by HAC. Popoli said that this is being negotiated. Sternberg suggested that he develop for the Council a standard, formal option for borrowers from the HAC fund to use if appropriate.

Rural Housing Improvement Inc. (Cont'd)

Description: (4) Templeton, Massachusetts

Committee action: The loan request was deferred without prejudice pending further development.

Inter-County Action Council, Inc., Minnesota

Description: This CAA plans to organize a regional housing authority and assist with management and development during the first year of administration. They plan for 500 units of low rent public housing. They are requesting $105,000 from three sources - $50,000 from OEO grant, requiring a matching contribution, $35,000 from HAC for the development of a preliminary loan application, and $20,000 from state housing finance agency grant.

Staff recommendation: HAC approve their loan request for $35,000 to make the other sources of funding available.

Committee comments: Debro felt the committee should give the staff a good amount of discretion to make the project workable as it may require further negotiation. Cavanaugh suggested that we explore dividing the loan equally with OEO if we were unable to get the housing finance agency to put up their share. Claytor suggested using HAC funds as strategy to show our interest to see if this will entice the housing finance agency to put up their funds. If it doesn't work, HAC can provide more funds which would only require a brief re-submission to the loan committee. Claytor's objection to approving the larger amount now is that he dislikes the notion of exceeding the request. Cavanaugh asked if the committee could be solicited by mail on this matter. The committee agreed. Claytor drew the staff's attention to item 11 on the summary and asked for more details on the applicant's affirmative action program. Cavanaugh suggested that staff get from the project what contractual consulting services they will have and indicate that they be more specific and include more minority consultants or give us an explanation of why they cannot. Staff was advised of the sentiment of the loan committee on the subject of minority participation in these projects.

Committee action: Popoli moved and Debro seconded a motion to approve the project. The loan was approved.

Counsel asked staff if HAC will be specifically named in both the administrative contract and the preliminary loan agreement, Staff acknowledged this was the case.

Gwinnett Nonprofit Housing Corporation, Lawrenceville, Georgia

Description: This is a nonprofit housing development corporation requesting $64,721 for the purchase and development of land for housing. The group plans 32 units of FmHA Section 502 and will develop an FmHA 515 application. Some of the 515 units will be leased to the local housing authority. The HAC loan will be repaid partly from sale of first 20 lots and in full from closing of an FmHA Site Development Loan.

Staff recommendation: Approval subject to the development of a definite affirmative action program. Although the 502 programs will hit only the upper portion of the OEO income guidelines, the nonprofit is working toward a close working relationship with the housing authority and this should be supported.

Committee comments: The committee requested that staff question the director of the project as to why there was so little allocated for legal fees. The committee also raised the question of how the architectural work was going to be paid for and suggested that the project look into having an architect represent them on the 515 loan from FmHA so that he could watch the builder. Popoli indicated he felt that permanent financing combined with leasing to the local housing authority is just about as good as can be obtained, and stressed that it is a good model for rural apartments.

Committee action: Cavanaugh moved that the loan request be approved. Popoli seconded the motion. The loan was approved.

Builders Cooperative, Inc., Cattaragus, New York

Description: This is an Indian controlled firm trying to use a waiver provision of HUD's regulations which would eliminate a required bidding procedure. The group plans construction of sixty units of public housing on two reservations built under Turnkey III. The group requested $199,000 to be used as bond premium fee, and indemnification, construction supervisor's contract, working capital, architectural fee and consulting contract.

Staff recommendation: Approve request based on being named developer by HUD. Staff recommends this partially in recognition of the need to support minority contractors.

Committee comments: Debro suggested that the group may need technical assistance and management assistance before they get to the construction stage. The committee expressed interest in the project and its willingness to put more funds into the project than was originally requested. But the committee also felt that the group needs additional assistance. Question was raised about the means for securing the loan. General Counsel Sternberg said that working with an Indian reservation would present some unique problems which would have to be worked out in one of a number of different ways. Claytor suggested that consultants be employed to work out some of these unique problems and that staff spend more time in developing this proposal. Sternberg proposed that he make a trip to discuss with the Tribe's lawyer and the lawyer for the bank providing the financing to work out agreements satisfactory to all concerned. Claytor suggested that the committee authorize funds for whatever is necessary to further develop this proposal so that the committee can make a judgment on it. Staff also said they would recommend pressing the Small Business Administration to respond to the needs of this group (i.e. a $10,000 debt) and pointed out that if HAC gives some support to Builders Cooperative that this may enhance the possibility of SBA participation. Cavanaugh said that staff would identify whatever other special assistance might be needed and visit the Builders Cooperative with Sternberg to review some of the concerns raised by the committee. Debro said he would be in favor of allocating some funds for payment of the outstanding debt and some consultant money. Claytor expressed concern about security arrangements for the HAC loan. Cavanaugh said he would favor looking at the possibilities for breaking the job into pieces and possibly involving other entities in the project or even cutting the job in half to begin with. Claytor recommended authorizing the use of whatever consulting is deemed necessary by the executive director as soon as possible. And if it is then deemed necessary to advance debt consolidation, the committee can take a second look at the proposal. The committee indicated that staff could make a more specific recommendation regarding architectural work after reviewing the project. Cavanaugh agreed the staff would proceed immediately to have the necessary consultations with the project, and the bank and to engage appropriate consultants to review the issues raised at the loan committee meeting, and make an initial judgment on whether or not the HAC should extend funds to the group. The staff will also examine the question of security and bring the results of this work back to the committee by phone for their consideration.

Committee action: Tabled pending information described above.

Northwest Nebraska Housing Development Corporation

Description: This HDC spun-off from a community action program has requested $27,625 to pick up tax delinquent sites in the town of Gordon, Nebraska. The funds will be used for land purchase, architect and engineering fees and filing fees on factory built FHA 235 homes. Operation Mainstream labor will be used to construct the houses.

Staff recommendations: Staff has concerns about which prebuilt factory house the group is using. This is being investigated. Staff convinced them to go through the FmHA and hence they will not need architect and engineering funds. Staff recommends allowing the group a $7,000 revolving fund for land purchase and development.

Committee action: Debro moved and Cavanaugh seconded a motion to approve the staff recommendation. The motion was approved.

Debro suggested to Cavanaugh that on the projects where HAC is taking land as collateral we might have a local appraiser give preliminary appraisal on the land and make this document part of the file on the project.

Cavanaugh pointed out that the request from Payne-Noble HDC needed additional information before being presented to the loan committee. The application was not discussed by the committee pending the approval of the local town of Stillwater receiving rent supplement reservations.

Marion County Housing Authority, Salem, Oregon

Description: The Authority is applying for 500 units of farm labor housing on a 90%-10% grant-loan from the Farmers Home Administration. They are requesting $14,595 to be used for pre-development costs in preparing application to FmHA for a labor housing grant loan program.

Staff recommendation: Approval

Committee action: Debro moved approval. Cavanaugh seconded the motion. The loan was approved.

Thames Valley Council for Community Action, Inc., Connecticut

Committee action: The loan was deferred pending the receipt of more information from the applicant.

United Migrants for Opportunity Inc., Michigan

Description: The group wants to purchase a site, now a labor housing camp soon to be torn down by the state of Michigan. They want to build four single family 502 houses on the site for "settling out" migrants and need $6,500 for purchase of the land. They will build the houses with self-help labor. They are a Title III grantee receiving assistance from the Rural Housing Alliance.

Staff recommendation: Approval

Committee action: Debro moved and Cavanaugh seconded a motion to approve the loan. The loan was approved.

The meeting was adjourned at 5:47 p.m.

HOUSING ASSISTANCE COUNCIL, INC.

Loan Summary Application

1. Applicant: Missouri Housing Alliance Corporation

A. BACKGROUND:

At the present time, the Army Corps of Engineers has authorization to construct four major reservoirs in the State of Missouri. In time, construction of these reservoirs will flood areas presently occupied by nearly 900 individual homes. The Missouri Housing Alliance Corporation's (Mo-HAC) proposal addresses itself to the first reservior under construction, known as the Truman Reservoir. The site to be flooded, a map of which is attached, originally contained 384 farm homes. Of these, 307 are estimated to be both movable and fixable. 160 to 180 units have already been sold or salvaged by private contractors. There are 120 units remaining which Mo-HAC is proposing to purchase, move, rehabilitate and relocate to communities surrounding the Truman Reservior site.

The Mo-HAC has negotiated an agreement with the Army Corps of Engineers whereby all further units in the Truman Reservoir site will be reevaluated and sold on a block basis to Mo-HAC. Authority to negotiate for the sale of these units has been passed on by the Army Corps of Engineers to the supervisor in charge of the Truman Reservior site who is actually located there. The structures will be moved from the reservoir site by a private contractor who has had previous experience in house moving. The houses will be moved to the towns of Clinton, Windsor, Deepwater, Appleton, Lowery, Rockville, Osceola, and Lincoln, (The location of these towns is marked on the attached map). All of these towns are located within a maximum 20 mile radius of the proposed reservior. The Mo-HAC has presentlyidentified 174 available and developed sites onto which the houses can be moved.

The Missouri Associated Migrant Opportunity Services (MAMOS) program is presently funded by the Department of Labor to conduct an on-the-job training program (O.J.T.). MAMOS has committed thirty of these O.J.T. slots to this project.

B. PROGRAM STAFFING:

The director of the program for the Missouri Housing Alliance is Mr. Roger Elsinger, most recently the director of MAMOS', Mobilization of Resources grant. Previously, Mr. Elsinger spent two years on the staff of the Rural Housing Alliance. He has been instrumental in conceiving this program and in coordinating its development to this time. His primary responsibilities as director of the state-wide Housing Development Corporation will be the effective coordination of the various resources needed to carry out the rehabilitation program at the Truman Reservoir, as well as to prepare the development of the other reservior sites.

Coordinating the actual on site activities will be Mr. Logan Stoudt, who for the past four years has served as the Director of the on-the-job training program with the West Central Missouri Rural Development Corporation, and who previously was a general contractor, with twenty years of experience, in the Kansas City Metropolitan Area. In addition, there will be an assistant director four construction supervisors, each with a crew of eight trainees, two field workers, primarily assigned to the Farmer's Home Administration for loan processing, a secretary and a bookkeeper. Funding for all but the OJT trainees is being provided through a 14 months grant from the Rural Housing Alliance.

C. COST:

Purchase of House (Average)[1]	[2]	$ 500.00
Purchase of Site (Developed with utilities)		1,200.00
Moving Cost (Average)		700.00
Rehabilitation Cost (Average)		4,600.00
Total		$ 7,000.00

[1] Actual purchase price of the individual houses may turn out to be lower depending on final negotiations with the Army Corps of Engineers.

[2] Site Costs are based upon the cost of developed sites within the following cities:

Appleton City	$600 to $900
Clinton	$900 to $2,000
Deepwater	$600 to $900

D. MONTHLY COST TO FAMILIES:

Monthly Amortization based upon a $7,000 mortgage at

1%	$ 21.00
Insurance & Taxes per month	9.00
Utilities per month	20.00
Total	$ 50.00

Based upon the requirements that no more than 25% of a family's income be spent towards housing, families with an adjusted annual income of $2,400 and up will be eligible for these loans. These income levels are well within the O.E.O. income guidelines. It should be noted that the annual median family income in this rural area in 1966 was $3,662.00.

E. RECRUITMENT OF FAMILIES:

Individual families for this project will be recruited from the nine county area, served by a local Community Action Agency. At the present time, the CAA has identified 780 heads of households who are seasonal farm workers and most of whom are within the O.E.O. income guidelines. Non-seasonal farm workers are present in substantially greater numbers. (HAC has been provided with a li of some 40 specific families which have been identified by the CAA in the area.) In addition to the recruiting by the CAA the Housing Development Corporation will use its two Farmer's Home Administration workers in recruiting families for this project. These field workers will also do the initial screening and processing of the Farmer's Home Administration applications.

F. LOAN REQUEST FROM HAC:

Land Acquisition Revolving Fund	$30,000.00
Land Option Fund	5,000.00
Material Inventory Fund (10 houses)	50,000.00
Total Loan Request	$85,000.00

This fund will enable Mo-HAC to purchase up to a maximum of 60 lots; option up to 25 lots; and have a material inventory of up to 12 houses.

The Missouri Housing Alliance is requesting an initial drawdown of $43,400.00. This is based on a 6 house initial development.

Purchase of 6 houses at $500 per house	$ 3,000.00
6 sites at $1,200 per site	7,200.00
Moving and Reh'b Cost for 6 houses @ $4,000 per house	24,000.00
Sub-Total	$ 34,200.00
25 Options at $200 per option	5,000.00
Total	$ 39,200.00

Due to the impending reservoir construction the cost of properties in the immediate area is escalating. The ability to place a large number of properties under option will enable the Mo-HAC to maintain the property cost within the projected amounts.

This initial drawdown will enable MO-HAC to operate until August 1st., 1972 at which time it is anticipated that the project will be in full operation. Prior to any additional funds being disbursed, the Housing Assistance Council will require an evaluation of the project's progress. If necessary this will include an on-site visit.

Further monitoring of the project will be done by the Rural Housing Alliance which is providing the administrative funds for Mo-HAC. Rural Housing Alliance's monitoring will include frequent on-site visits.

G. METHOD OF SECURING LOAN:

It is recommended that the initial units and lots purchased by Mo-HAC with HAC monies, be secured by first mortgages. Subsequently, pending an initial evaluation, HAC will secure the loan by a promissory note agreement from Mo-HAC. Although the assignment of individual mortgages to HAC would offer greater security, potentially the transfer of 120 individual titles may amount to substantial legal fees. These can and should be avoided if the project is properly monitored.

H. STAFF RECOMMNEDATIONS:

It is recommended by the staff that:

1.) HAC approve a revolving loan fund of $85,000 to the Missouri Housing Alliance Corporation.

2.) That an inital drawdown of $43,800 be disbursed by April 20th., 1972.

3.) That subsequent monies be made available upon a review of the project's progress.

4.) That Mo-HAC provide HAC with the name of the moving contractor and endorsements of his capabilities.

5.) That Mo-HAC provide HAC with a copy of their affirmative action plan, and an outline describing its application to this project.

6.) That Mo-HAC provide HAC with a first mortgage on all initial purchases made with HAC funds. Following a HAC review of the project, the loan security arrangements may be renegotiated.

7.) That Mo-HAC provide, for each house purchased, a statement certifying that they have inspected the house and that it can be rehabilitated within the estimated projected costs.

8.) That Mo-HAC submit to HAC a monthly progress report which shall include a breakdown of expenditures made during that month.

Mr. Clarence Richardson
Housing Assistance Council
1601 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Washington, D. C.

Dear Clarence,

This letter is written in reference to our recent conversations at the Second National Rural Housing Conference and by phone, concerning the PLBA Development Corporation's request for a housing development loan from HAC.

At present one of the gravest problems facing the PLBA Development Corporation in our housing effort, is engineering and approval of a water and sanitation system. The Alabama Water Improvement Commission has ruled negatively on the use of Tom's Creek as the outlet for the effluent from out proposed lagoon or treatment plant. There is a need to develop alternative proposals for the sewage disposal system that could meet AWIC approval. A letter from the Alabama Regional Medical Program, whose assistance we have solicited in this matter, indicates some possibilities of relief for this problem.

We would like to request direct assistance, from the Housing Assistance Council in the form of a grant and/or human resources, in solving the technical problems we face in providing a water and sewage system for these houses.

We would also again like to impress upon you and the HAC Loan Committee, the unique aspect of our program, as a total approach to the housing needs of our members. The PLBA Development Corporation is concerned that the loan from HAC will enable us to arrange the landholding and mortgage situation, in such a way as to reserve a portion of the land out of the PLBA Housing Co-op's mortgage with FmHA, for commercial purposes. This land, along Alabama Hgwy. 39, would be held by PLBA Development Corporation for leasing and development. Any returns generated by this commercial activity could be utilized to assist the PLBA Housing Co-op in a. its community recreational facilities operation and b. to supplement the reserve funds of the co-op, to build up a pool that could be used to buy back the equity of co-op members, leaving the area. FmHA feels this equity question is important to making the Rural Cooperative Housing Loan (Section 515) a viable program.

The PLBA Development Corporation would like to request that HAC recognize the desirability of this flexibility in land acquistion and development as a part of its consideration of our loan. As this commercial property is developed by PLBA Development Corp., HAC's loan will be repaid first from the land use proceeds, and then the other benefits will accrue to the PLBA Housing Co-op. We feel the use of the "development corporation" in tandem with the "housing co-op" is a distinctive tool, to help generate housing for low income people and we hope HAC will endorse this experimental concept.

I am enclosing a list of the names and addresses of persons who have already signed a "subscription agreement" to join the PLBA Housing Co-op. Of these 36 families, more than two thirds have someone in the family employed either at the Federation or at another job. The remaining families are on some form of public assistance and will require help from their own relatives and/or an income supplement program from FSC.

I hope this information is adequate and helpful to you in preparing for the HAC Loan Committee meeting.

Peace,

John Zippert

NOTES

A. In addition to the three categories shown on first page of Summary, the Master File includes the following categories: There are 4,224 units Proposed, of which approximately 2,112 can be expected to advance to the In Planning stage. (See Note H.) Also, several Proposed sites exist for which the number of units has not been set. 26,971 units Did Not Materialize, of which 23,782 were included in the previous Summary of August 15, 1970. Thus, 3,651 more units Did Not Materialize than have reached all three categories combined of In Planning, Under Construction and Completed. (The majority of these losses were due to disapprovals of sites, a large portion of which were denials of zoning petitions.) 5,439 units originally listed have been dropped from totals as Did Not Qualify because excessive rentals did not qualify then for low or moderate income housing (See note C.)

B. From November 1966 through December 1969, 29,149 units were reported by the Housing Code Division as repaired (rehabilitated) However, those figures included units found in compliance on original inspection. It is estimated that only 75% of this figure, or 21,862 substandard units, were actually brought into compliance through rehabilitation during that period. 6,033 units were reported as rehabilitated during January through October 1970. Consequently, an estimated total of 21,862 + 6,033 (27,895) units have been actually rehabilitated by the Housing Code Division since this program started. Also since beginning of this program, 960 units have been rehabilitated by the Housing Authority in the West End Urban Renewal area; 90 in Bedford Pine; and 342 in Model Cities. (Total units rehabilitated in U. R. and NDP projects since beginning of this program, 1,392.) These rehabilitated units do not increase the number of housing units available, but do increase the supply of standard units

C. Units in the Private Development (Conventionally Financed) category have been considered for this program only when construction costs (generally taken from Permits) do not exceed $10,000 per multi-family unit, $12,000 per duplex unit and $15,000 per Single-Family unit. Due to insufficient staff, until last summer the Housing Resources Committee was unable to obtain bedroom composition and monthly rentals or sales payments on most of these units. However, when rental of units in this category have been found to exceed maximum amounts authorized for the Rent Supplement Program, they are thus considered beyond the reach of low and moderate income families and consequently have been dropped from the Program (5,439 units to date). Through the services of an Urban Corps Intern on duty with this office last summer, for the first time it was possible to obtain bedroom composition and monthly rents of all units in this category. Consequently, drastic reductions have been made in previous edition of this report in Private Development, (Conventionally Financed) category (where rents and/or sales prices generally appear to be whatever the market will bear). It has also been determined that rents for this category have generally increased $10-15 per month during the last year. Cost to occupants (upper limits) used for this category in this report, excluding utilities costs: Efficiency - $100.00, One Bedroom - $127.50, Two Bedroom - $142.00, Three Bedroom - $165.00, and Four or more Bedrooms - $177.00. Utilities, where not furnished, add an extra $25.00 to rent.

D. There is a strong desire by low and moderate income families for: (1) Single Family detached homes; and (2) Town Houses or Cooperative units. Few builders are interested in such developments in the low and moderate income categories because of the small margin of profit. They prefer to build for higher income brackets for which there is also a strong market and higher potential profit. Also there is an urgent requirement for low and moderate income housing (including multi-family) near industrial developments in nearby unincorporated areas. It appears that in order to get low and moderate income housing where it is most needed, that perhaps the City of Atlanta, Atlanta Housing Authority, some element of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce J.C.'s or neighboring counties should seriously consider going into actual housing development as non-profit sponsors themselves. This would be unique for the Atlanta area, but it is legal, practical and perhaps the only way adequate low-income housing will get developed in sufficient quantities where and when needed.

E. Another feasible approach which is highly desirable, is that the State Legislature and Local governing bodies seriously consider, Tax Incentives for development of low-income housing. Tax incentives have proven successful at the national level for industrial development and should prove equally appropriate at the State or local level for low-income housing. This do not mean tax elimination, or abatement of any current taxes, but rather would apply to future new developments or rehabilita of existing units. It might well be on a sliding scale for the first 3-6 years only. For example, on new developments duri construction and for the first year of occupancy, perhaps no tax at all; for the second year, pay only 25% of the normal tax for the third year, 50%; for the fourth year, 75%; for the fifth year, 85%; and thereafter the full normal tax would be coll in the long run, this would probably produce more actual increase in the tax digest eventually than would otherwise be obtai able without the Tax Incentives.

F. Zoning for apartments is generally vigorously opposed by single-family home owners wherever it is proposed. The greatest opposition, from both Whites and Blacks, is invariably to low-rent Public Housing developments. This neighborhood oppositic in both the City of Atlanta and neighboring unincorporated areas is increasing and has made zoning for low-rent Public Housing sites most difficult, if not almost impossible to obtain. There are frequently charges from the communities involve of misrepresentation and occassionally even fraud in apartment zoning. It thus appears that the current Apartment zoning concept needs to be seriously considered and perhaps changed. In residential zoning the size of the lot, front footage, and floor area required for the various Residential Zoning districts, R-1 through R-9, generally determine or dictate the size a cost of the dwelling units placed thereon. This is not true in Apartment zoning; for example, a tract zoned A-1 may be developed for varied type apartments (1-3 stories), from luxury apartments renting for $700.00 per month to low-rent Public Housing apartments costing the occupant about $30.00 per month. It is therefore proposed that A-1 Apartment zoning be divid into 3 categories, i.e., A-1 (a), A-1 (b), and A-1 (c) for luxury apartments, middle income apartments and low-income apartments respectively. This would more nearly conform to the various categories of Residential zoning; it should let all concerned know in advance the general type of apartments to be expected on an Apartment zoned tract; and should minimize misunderstandings and accusations of misrepresentation and lowering of property values in the neighborhoods whenever apartme developments are proposed.

G. Explanation of adjustment of Private Development (Conventional) computations: Although Conventional Projects included in th low and moderate income housing summaries have consistantly been limited to construction costs per unit (obtained from build permits), as indicated by the note at the bottom of the Summary page, recently acquired statistics reveal that rents on a large portion of these conventionally development projects exceed the maximum limts fixed by FHA for federally-assisted, privately developed programs. It has thus been determined that during the period 5-1-69 to 5-1-70, a total of 3,459 (45.9%) units previously carried in the Completed and Under Construction categories, Did Not Qualify (rent-wise), and have therefore been dropped from previous computations of totals in those categories. This indicates that only 54.1% of units in conventionally financed projects currently In Planning can be expected to qualify by the time construction is completed.

H. Adjustment of Proposed Computations: Statistics reveal that a high percentage of Proposed Projects do not materialize to the In Planning stage primarily because of zoning denials. A percentage deflator would present a more realistic figure for this category of Proposed Projects that may be expected to actually reach the In Planning stage. During the period August 1969 - July 1970, seventeen (17) zoning applications were denied; in the same period, thirty (30) were approved. Thus forty seven (47) applications were acted upon (exclusive of those deferred), of which only 63.8% (30/47) can be expected to materialize in the In Planning category as a result of zoning denials alone. However when other factors are considered, it is estimated that probably not more than 50% of all Proposed projects will ever materialize to the In Planning stage.

1. The 5 year goal of 16,800 units established by the City of Atlanta in 1966 and used in this report was based on anticipated relocation requirements from displacements to be caused by governmental action projects then in execution or planned through 1971. That figure did not provide for in-migration, formation of new families, or natural growth of the area. Based on past experience, it is estimated that after completion of the current 5-year program the City of Atlanta or adjacent unincorporated areas will need 3,000 additional units of Low and Moderate Income Housing per year for the next 10 years.

PREFACE

An ironical notion to which most Americans subscribe is that the South, the traditional home of discrimination against black people, will be the first area to substantially resolve the problems which arise from racial differences. The bases for this claim are the common Southern experience in which blacks and whites have shared and the familiarity of each racial group with the attitudes and customs of the other. The physical proximity of the races has frequently been established as a primary source of biracial understanding and tolerance, even within the framework of segregation in socially sensitive matters.

In Atlanta, Georgia, today, this important source of racial tolerance is dissipating rapidly. The physical proximity of the racial groups in Atlanta is exceptional, rather than standard. The common Southern experience has dissolved into racial experiences and awareness. While some forms of racial solidarity are salutary, the spatial separation of the races imposes an unhealthy dimension of racial togetherness into an increasingly divided city. Racial myths proliferate among Atlantans whose misconceptions about the other race are largely the result of a lack of personal contact.

The separation of the racial groups by areas of residence exists in Atlanta to a very significant degree. Atlanta's claim to leadership in the New South as a racially progressive city is being seriously threatened by the consequences of racial segregation in the city's residential neighborhoods. In 1964, a reporter for the New York Times recorded the racial housing situation in Atlanta in an account which is equally applicable today. He wrote,

> Although Atlanta has led the South in some phases of integration, it has not broken the old residential patterns...Atlanta has never experienced lasting integration in middle-class neighborhoods.[1]

A visible consequence of residential segregation has been the racial crisis in the public schools, whose segregated classrooms reflected the racial homogeneity of most neighborhoods. Court orders to dismantle the dual system created by racial housing patterns have only exacerbated tensions. In the midst of an Atlanta school crisis following a court-imposed desegregation plan in January, 1970, the Metropolitan Atlanta Housing Conference issued a statement which read,

[1]"Atlantans Press for Open Housing," New York Times, November 29, 1964, p. 50.

> We must look beyond this moment and begin to respond to the basis of our current crisis. To do this will require the removal of the residential barriers which have been raised, based on race and income, for these barriers will serve only to keep our city and our schools in a perpetual condition of turmoil, prevent our children from receiving a full educational opportunity and will inhibit our sharing in an open, inclusive and mature city life.[2]

Similarly, a professor of sociology at Atlanta University declared in 1968, "Residential segregation occupies a key position in patterns of race relations in urban America." The effects of segregated housing extend beyond the neighborly relations between the races and include the clientele and quality of all public accomodations and services. He concluded,

> It is not surprising that proponents of segregation know that through the control of housing, they can accomplish de facto what can no longer be established de jure."[3]

The first chapter of this thesis, "Politics, Real Estate, and Encrbachment," discusses the deliberate attempts by the white leadership in politics and business, particularly real estate, to control the residential expansion of the black population in Atlanta after World War II. The system of clearances through which land was made available for black occupancy insured the racial homogeneity of all neighborhoods. The two decades following the end of World War II witnessed the increasing entrenchment of residential segregation as a formidable trend against those who have attempted to reverse it.

The groups opposing Atlanta's traditional racial housing patterns - their composition, motives for formation, and areas of consensus and divergence - are examined in Chapter II, "The Voices of Dissent." The primary basis of agreement among these dissident groups is that the private real estate industry substantially controls racial housing patterns in Atlanta and is primarily responsible for the perpetuation of residential segregation in the city.

These charges against real estate firms are discussed in Chapter III, "The Patterns of Exclusion." Residents and stabilization organizers in Atlanta's transitional areas relate their experiences with "blockbusters," following which a theoretical framework of real estate control over the racial composition of residential areas is proposed. Having defined blockbusting as a product of discriminatory real estate practices, the chapter proceeds to present the available evidence of discrimination by realty agents in Atlanta against black prospective homebuyers.

The notions which determine realty behavior in situations where race and residency are concerned are discussed in the final chapter, "The Racial Real Estate Ideology." This chapter attempts to determine, within the Atlanta real estate industry, the elements of a definable ideology upon which realty agents rationalize their racial practices. The components of the real estate institution are exposed to establish their contribution to the formation of this ideology, and the relevant features of the individual broker's self-image are discussed.

The conclusion presents the author's prognosis of the possibilities for changes in the racial real estate ideology originating indigenously within the industry or originating through public pressure.

This thesis rests on the proposition that the element of physical proximity of the races, which is central to the Southern experience, must be regained if Atlanta is to become a viable community. The author is sufficiently devoted to his native city to hope that the rigid separation of the races by areas of residence will dissolve in the near future - whether by economic or public opinion pressure. The consequences of a racially divided city, among the greatest of which are the obstacles to biracial communication, must be avoided if Atlanta is to be a healthy urban area.

Acknowledgements for assistance and support in my research will be limited to the most important few: first of all, my wife, Kathy, to whom this thesis is dedicated; Arthur Campbell and Horace Barker of the Southern Regional Council; Mrs. Pat Chapman; the staff of the Urban and Environmental Studies Library of Princeton University, and my adviser, Professor Rowland Egger.

It is my hope that this study will be used by open housing activists as a source of supplemental information and insight into the work they are pursuing.

CHAPTER I

POLITICS, REAL ESTATE, AND ENCROACHMENT:

The Formative Years of Residential Segregation in Atlanta

Commissioner Carlton: Is it the policy of your city to promote racially separated areas so that each race would have its own area, so long as you could do it with good will?

Mayor Hartsfield: Yes. We must live with public opinion, and that is the overwhelming public opinion here in the South.

Hearing of the United States Commission on Civil Rights. Atlanta, Georgia, April 10, 1959.

Racial housing patterns in Atlanta were not sources of serious controversy before the end of the Second World War. The supply of housing and land for blacks was generally adequate and cheap, since their neighborhoods were usually in the least desirable areas, often along the railroad tracks. The encroachment of blacks into established white neighborhoods was extraordinary; buffer zones such as public housing projects, industrial areas, cemeteries, and creeks effectively contained the black community in most instances.[1] Careful city planning further limited the mobility between black and white neighborhoods by minimizing the number of streets connecting the two areas.[2]

Despite the severe restrictions imposed on the black community in the selection of areas for occupancy, the "Index of Residential Segregation" in housing in Atlanta, according to one study, was lower in 1940 than in 1950 and 1960.[3] A few neighborhoods were integrated in the sense that blacks occupied an area of inferior or substandard housing adjacent to an affluent white neighborhood. In some cases, black families even lived on the same street as whites, although usually on opposite sides. The desegregation in these areas was accepted or even promoted by the white residents who benefited from the convenient access to sources of cheap domestic labor.[4]

The erection of public housing projects in the pre-war period substantially expanded the opportunities in decent housing for blacks in Atlanta. However, as the war approached, overcrowding and the poor quality of most privately owned dwellings became the prominent characteristics of the black housing supply in Atlanta.[5] The accelerated migration of blacks to Atlanta for war-time employment and the rising economic status of many blacks as a result of increased job opportunities and wages significantly expanded the post-war demand for black housing. During the 1940's, the black population of Atlanta increased approximately 17,000, the largest ten-year increase to that time.[6] It was estimated in 1946 that while blacks composed over one-third of the total population of the city, they occupied only ten per cent of the available residential land.[7] The consequences of this disparity were serious. In 1946 a reporter for the New York Times wrote,

> The pressure of housing conditions in all Southern cities is enough to cause some Negroes to try to erupt beyond the confines of their segregated areas. Throughout the South are heard predictions that the housing problem may succeed the overcrowded buses of the wartime period as the greatest potential for inter-racial quarrels and, perhaps, violence.[8]

By the end of the war, the black population of Atlanta "had overflowed the maximum possible use of existing facilities [for housing]" with the result that black families were being forced to seek housing in fringe areas of white occupancy.[9]

The most logical direction for the black community to expand was westward. By 1940, nearly 40% of the black population of Atlanta lived on the West Side. Speculation in land in that area was initiated in the 1920's by Heman E. Perry, a black businessman. Perry purchased over two hundred acres of land in order to secure the area "before Negroes were fenced in by whites."[10] The location of the Atlanta University complex on the West Side and the nearby black business district also fostered the tendency for blacks to seek housing on the West Side.

The first area in which the conflicts of expansion arose was the Mozley Park neighborhood on the West Side. In the late Forties and early Fifties, this was "a wedge-shape white community between two fully Negro communities, both bursting at the seams."[11] The settlement of the conflict between the rising black demand for housing which sought partial satisfaction by attempting to purchase homes in Mozley Park, and white opposition to encroachment and determination to maintain segregated communities, required unprecedented involvement by some community and political leaders, and led to the formation of a series of committees and prescriptions for the resolution of similar conflicts in other situations.

Tensions between white residents and blacks on the brink of entering white West Side areas such as Mozley Park erupted into violent conflict along the frontier of the black expansion in November, 1946. Members of the Columbians, a Klan-type organization, were responsible for the bombing of several homes recently purchased by blacks. The Columbians also harrassed and assaulted a few black home-buyers.[12] Tensions were exacerbated by some black real estate brokers, who proliferated rumors saying that the area of white residency was being "rezoned" for black occupancy in an attempt to induce the purchase of homes by blacks.[13] Among the major sources of controversy in the Mozley Park area were the municipal recreation center and school whose racial status was threatened by the approach of blacks.

It became apparent to the white political and business leadership in Atlanta that the possibility of disorderly and violent racial transition in Mozley Park and areas of future black encroachment could not be tolerated. White leaders felt that the circumstances demanded their intervention for a number of reasons: to prevent violence during the period of approach or entry of blacks; to satisfy at least temporarily the housing needs of an increasingly influential black voting bloc; to define more clearly racial boundary lines in order to protect other white areas from black invasion and to foster the recognition of these boundaries through bilateral agreements of black and white real estate brokers and lending institutions; and to promote the orderly transition of the area of immediate concern (Mozley Park) in order to stabilize and maximize the property value of homes sold by the white owners. The combined impact of these intentions constituted an attempt to control, largely through private enterprise, the housing and land resources available for black development and occupancy.

One of the first significant acts of overt political intervention in racial housing problems in the post-war period occurred early in 1946. Mayor William B. Hartsfield sent a letter to the all-white Atlanta Real Estate Board and urged the board to prevent what the Mayor considered a dangerous tendency of some brokers to sell houses to blacks in white neighborhoods. The president of the board agreed to Hartsfield's suggestion that board members pledge not to effect such transactions.[14]

Later in 1946, the first of a series of committees was established to investigate and document the housing needs of blacks, to locate desirable and feasible areas for black expansion, and to coordinate the development of these areas and the introduction of the black occupants. The initial group of black businessmen and politicians was convened by the Atlanta Urban League and was designated as the Temporary Coordinating Committee on Housing (TCCH). The first items on the committee's agenda were to determine the number of housing units needed immediately for the expanding black population and to locate areas for expansion. In 1947, the TCCH, which became known as the Atlanta Housing Council, issued a report designating six areas into which blacks could safely expand. The report stated:

> It is recognized that the above areas cannot legally be designated as areas for expansion of Negro housing. However, in order to provide adequate housing in complete self-contained neighborhoods, to raise the standard of living for the minority group, to permit subsistence gardening, and to make possible the reclamation of the present blighted areas, all properly guided for accomplishment by private enterprise, it is hoped that business and civic groups alike will recognize and endorse the above recommended areas as being in fact, if not by law, the proper areas in which Negroes may build and live without racial or economic conflict to strive with all of us for a more prosperous and more democratic community.[15]

Several black lending institutions provided the financial resources for the immediate but limited implementation of the committee's proposals. The committee's work received an official endorsement in 1952 from the Metropolitan Planning Commission, the planning agency of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, which issued a major planning document in which the TCCH's concept of designated areas for black expansion was adopted.[16]

Another group founded during the same period of the post-war racial crisis in housing shared some of the goals of the TCCH, and even some of the membership, but represented basically a different set of interests. The ad hoc biracial group known as the "Mayor's Committee" was formed in 1952 to resolve the problems arising from the black threat to Mozley Park and to its accompanying recreational and educational facilities, and to serve as a permanent mediating board for similar conflicts in the future. The committee was appointed by Mayor Hartsfield and consisted of three white and three black residents of the West Side. The group became known later as the West Side Mutual Development Committee. In the words of one of the original black appointees, the committee "was a new and timely approach to a problem which was increasing in intensity as Atlanta's population expanded beyond its capacity to adequately and equitably house both races."[17]

The first major outcome of the committee's work was achieved in September, 1952, when the Empire Real Estate Board, a black professional real estate organization in Atlanta, agreed to cooperate in containing the movement of blacks within a specified boundary. In return for the real estate board's cooperation, the West Side Committee tacitly recognized the allocation of the Mozley Park area, and subsequently the community's park and school, to blacks.

[17]U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, op. cit., Alexander, p. 474.

In a recent assessment of the westward expansion of the black community in the post-war decade, an Atlanta city planning consultant regarded the agreement to concede a large area on the West Side to black occupancy as "avant-garde liberal," considering the racial attitudes and conditions prevailing at the time.[18] In the Mozley Park area alone, 737 homes were made available for black occupancy with about 300 of the homes being transferred from white to black occupancy during 1954 and 1955. Between 1945 and 1956, approximately 10,550 housing units in the city were added to the available supply for blacks. Eighty per cent of the newly acquired units were new houses.[19]

However, these gains were not achieved without a cost, which has been a lasting burden. Regardless of the partial satisfaction of the housing needs of black Atlantans, the "gentlemen's agreements" of the post-war decade widened the gap between the "Two Atlantas," one white and the other black. Most of the areas for the new housing developments and the racial transfer of homes had to be politically cleared by groups such as the West Side Committee. Furthermore, according to a committee member, "the only basis upon which the committee could honorably proceed with its work" consisted of policies which were designed to insure the racial homogeneity of all neighborhoods.[20] The author of a recent article on the Mozley Park conciliation offers the following interpretation of the committee's work:

> This agreement at the time was hailed by many as a model example of how white and Negro interests could work together for the good of both races... Overlooked - or, more probably, deliberately ignored - was the fact that the committee operated strictly within the framework of segregation. The business of the committee was to effect "peaceful transition," not neighborhood stabilization or peaceful integration...More important, some Negro civil rights leaders now say, was that the acceptance of an artificial demarcation line beyond which Negroes could not move, in effect, was an admission by Negro real estate interests of the inevitability of segregation. When - a few years later - Negro expansion needs again reached a critical state, the agreement was seen to have had only short-term benefits.[21]

Mayor Hartsfield expressed the consensus opinion of the city's white political and business leaders in his overwhelming satisfaction with the performance of the West Side Committee. He was keenly aware that the housing restrictions on the black community were a primary source of racial tensions in Atlanta. He established the "Mayor's Committee", later the West Side Mutual Development Committee, to provide a forum for the calm deliberation of the city's racial housing problems. On the results of the committee, the mayor said,

> ...out of that committee certain agreements were made voluntarily, all on a high basis, nobody's pride was hurt, in which the Negro citizen agreed to stay out of certain sections that were tension areas. The white citizen agreed that the Negro needed more land area, and there was in this section [Mozley Park] ...a white subdivision that acted as a bottleneck to the growth, normal expansion of Negro people. That bottleneck was eliminated.

Concerning the implementation of the committee's recommendations, the Mayor stated:

> Now, those agreements, when they were worked out, real estate people on both sides began to get on with this committee and to respect its finding. The loan people did; before anybody would make a loan they would find out what West Side Mutual Development had agreed on.

The committee, according to the mayor, "did a very fine job and...a pioneering job in this very troublesome field, housing, here in the South."[22]

The success of the West Side Committee in the orderly and complete racial transition of Mozley Park led to the publication, in 1958, of a policy proposal "regarding the operation of the real estate market with respect to race of occupancy."[23] The committee's recommendations were "offered as a body of guiding principles applicable to the entire Atlanta metropolitan area."[24] A review of this document reinforces the previous evidence concerning the creation of additional housing opportunities for black Atlantans accompanied by the deliberate maintenance of rigidly segregated communities. The document is particularly informative on the involvement of the private housing industry, especially the real estate sector, in the perpetuation of segregated housing patterns.

The policy set forth in the document was "designed to help resolve the fundamental problem of race of occupancy as it affects the operation of the real estate market," and was based on the six-year experience of the West Side Committee.[25] The committee urged the City of Atlanta to adopt its recommendations. The goals of a proposed city-wide housing policy would be to preserve and to enhance property values, to prevent violence, to provide accurate housing information, to prevent misrepresentation, and to foster "the orderly and harmonious development of the City of Atlanta." In pursuit of the goals, the committee emphasized the recognition of "the primary role of the private real estate market" in meeting the city's housing needs.[26]

To implement the proposed housing policy the committee recommended the appointment by the mayor and Board of Aldermen of a "citizens committee with city-wide representation," furnished with a professional staff to supply the citizens committee complete and accurate information and to maintain "a continuing public clearing-house...for bringing into closer harmony private enterprise activities, public activities, and the policy objectives of the committee."[27] The recommendations were very specific on the research activities of the staff. For example, it was suggested that the staff draw up a "Residential Areas Map" which would indicate not only past and present trends of racial occupancy, but also would suggest land uses for areas in the following categories:

1. Vacant land clearly indicated for future white occupancy.
2. Vacant land clearly indicated for future Negro occupancy.
3. Developed areas clearly indicated for transition.
4. Developed areas found to be stable.[28]

The policy proposal also recommended that the citizens committee act as a mediating panel in areas of conflict or that it designate a group of residents in the afflicted community to resolve the problems of encroachment.

The rest of this document was devoted to an elaboration of the committee's "underlying policy considerations." The first consideration was the existence of two distinct real estate markets, one Negro and one white. The committee wrote, "Houses and property are either on one market or the other by the owner. In the minds of buyers and prospective buyers, the intended race of occupancy is an important consideration."[29] Secondly, the committee recognized the increasing demand for housing of both races and the limited amount of land available for residential use within the city limits. The inevitability of residential developments outside the city limits was asserted. Thirdly, the committee recognized the limited supply of housing available for racial transfer and the hardships that accompany transition. However, the committee stated that "transition is an essential adjustment mechanism enabling the real estate market to meet some of the housing needs..."[30] Furthermore, the committee recognized the dynamics of transition - that is, the absence of a real estate market for homes in an area where the residents do not attempt as a group to sell all their homes on one racial market or the other. Finally, the committee emphasized the necessity "to make the indicated race of residents for all areas of the metropolitan community a matter of mapped, public information."[31] This innovation was intended especially for the benefit of mortgage firms and real estate brokers and for the prevention of conflict over disputed territories.

Some of the most striking characteristics of this document are its insistence that its recommendations be adopted by an official agency of the city government and, furthermore, that the coordinating committee be highly centralized in order to effectively handle planning problems relating to racial occupancy. The structural alignments insured that the housing committee would be responsible primarily to the mayor and Board of Aldermen, the two most influential sources of white political power. Another important matter was the questionable constitutionality of the proposed committee's role in the planning of racial occupancy for particular areas. In the introduction to the policy proposal, the West Side Committee recognized the "misconception" of some of its critics that it "zones for race, a practice which has long been declared illegal by the courts." Instead, the policy proposal, like the West Side Committee, "would serve as a guide to advise and influence property buyers and sellers, realty and home finance firms, and city departments, but would have no power to compel involuntary compliance."[32]

An unsuccessful attempt was made to determine the extent to which the policy proposal was implemented. There is no evidence in the available literature indicating that the city officially adopted any of the committee's recommendations. However, this does not discount the probable significance of the document as an informal guide for the policies and practices of real estate brokers and other components of the local private housing industry. Furthermore, the committee's acceptance and advocacy of a dual housing market - resulting in racially separate neighborhoods - influenced public opinion as well as business practices.

Another important document in the modern history of racial housing in Atlanta is the hearing of the United States Commission on Civil Rights in Atlanta in April, 1959. The commission was primarily concerned with the housing opportunities for blacks in the city. The hearing allowed black and white business and civic leaders to report on the recent progress in meeting the black housing demand and to propose the means for dealing with black housing needs in the future.

A large part of the hearing consisted of a glorification of the housing gains by blacks as a result of the public housing program and the peaceful transfer of homes in previously white areas. Special praise was reserved for the responsiveness of the West Side Committee and Mayor Hartsfield to the housing needs of blacks. The chairman of the Commission on Civil Rights was so impressed with the housing opportunities for blacks in Atlanta that later he stated in congressional testimony that "there was a story in Atlanta that could well be told to the country...I was surprised and pleased at what we found in the housing area in Atlanta."[33]

Accompanying the comments of many of the witnesses who were pleased with the trends in racial housing patterns was an insistence that the federal government, through its housing agencies and laws, must not attempt to integrate public or private housing. To do so would disrupt the allegedly peaceful relations between the races and would jeopardize the future of the public housing program, whose chief beneficiaries were black citizens. For example, the chairman of the Citizens Advisory Committee for Urban Renewal declared that the Urban Renewal program would "become unacceptable to the community" if the federal government attempted to use it "as a tool in race relations."[34]

A review of the testimony offered at the hearing reveals the extent to which segregation in housing of all kinds pervaded local policies. Furthermore, the fact of segregation was unchallenged. The executive director of the Atlanta Housing Authority said, "In the South no one seriously raised a question as to whether public housing would be racially integrated or not."[35] Accordingly, all the public housing projects in the city were segregated. The hearing was also the occasion at which Mayor Hartsfield replied affirmatively to a question concerning the promotion of residential segregation by the city, as found on the title page of this chapter.[36] Commenting on the fact of segregated housing in Atlanta, on which the broadest biracial concensus was based, a black spokesman said,

> Patterns of residential segregation by racial groups are absolute. Residential housing patterns on racial bases are not supported by law - federal or state. Policies with the force of law, however, are to the effect that whites live in areas where Negroes do not live- and Negroes live where they may live - never in "white" areas. Residential segregation by race is voluntary in Atlanta - as to Negroes, the extent to which this is voluntary is that it is unavoidable - that is, "voluntary" within that which may be.[37]

It has been established previously that the builders, sellers, and financiers of private housing in Atlanta were intimately involved in formal and informal plans for perpetuating racial segregation. Their views were represented by officials of two prestigious institutions. The president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board said,

> We accept as an established fact that the traditional pattern of housing in the city of Atlanta has been, is, and will continue to be one of segregation between white and Negro housing.[38]

The president of a large savings and loan association offered the position of his institution on financing integrated housing.

> My institution has a policy that does not invite, does not make any loans on property located in an area where there is racially mixed housing. As a business proposition we do not consider investments in an area of this kind stable and attractive. On the broader picture, we do not want to be a party to or encourage any action which would tend to stimulate unrest among our people.[39]

Earlier in his testimony the bank president had expressed the overwhelming judgment of Atlanta's white businessmen that "private enterprise in the housing field is doing the job...in a way which I think is in the best interest of all our citizens."[40]

There were some voices of disagreement with the latter statement and of discontent with the current black housing situation. Criticism came from black religious, political, and business spokesmen at the hearing. Although they conceded that some positive steps to relieve the housing shortage had been taken by the Hartsfield administration, they attributed the quantitative gains in housing largely to the growing voting strength of blacks, and especially to the fact that Mayor Hartsfield had relied heavily on the black vote in his bid for re-election.[41] These black critics also recognized that the creation of more available housing had resulted in increased dependence on a system of political clearances, controlled largely by white businessmen and officials, who influenced and often dictated the terms of black expansion and insured the continued segregation of housing and community facilities.

The most emphatic criticism of the black housing situation was offered by the president of the Empire Real Estate Board, Q. V. Williamson. He began his testimony with the unequivocal statement, "Equal opportunities in housing are being denied hundreds of Atlanta citizens because of their color and race." He conceded the superior housing conditions for blacks in Atlanta compared to other cities in the country, but he pointed out that the achievements in Atlanta have been effected "within the framework of a segregated pattern."

Furthermore, the housing gains for blacks have had an additional undesirable effect:

> There is at present an adequate supply of residential vacant land within the city limits of Atlanta, but it is difficult to acquire land for nonwhite housing since developers are not sure that they can get the land "politically cleared" for use by nonwhites.

The director of the Metropolitan Planning Commission had testified already that in the City of Atlanta in 1959, the white population, 64% of the total population of the city, occupied 84% of the developed residential land; on the other hand, blacks composed 32% of the city's population but occupied only 16% of its developed residential land.[42] To that, Williamson added that the artificial land shortage forced blacks to pay from twenty to thirty per cent more for housing than whites paid for a similar home in a similar area. The pattern of discrimination and restriction on the black housing market, Williamson concluded, accounted for the fact that "Atlanta housing is actually more segregated today [1959] than it was twenty or more years ago."[43]

To complete the description of black housing in Atlanta at the advent of the 1960's, a source other than the Civil Rights Commission hearing should be mentioned. An employee of the City of Atlanta Planning Department conducted a study on the growing housing shortage for blacks in the city in 1960. Having accounted for the rising economic levels of many black families, the political restrictions on uninhibited black expansion, and the demolition of large areas of black slums, the author estimated that the total number of housing units needed by blacks in the next five years (1960-65) would be 16,920 units. Discounting the number of units planned for construction by government projects, it was estimated that over eleven thousand units must be provided by private enterprise, either through racial transition or through new developments. On these alternatives the author commented, "A great deal of additional transition will mean racial strife, and the disruption of existing communities. Making vacant land available for development seems to be the logical

answer, but THE QUESTION IS WHERE?"[44]

The consequences of these projected housing needs were apparent early in the Sixties. The pattern of territorial disputes between the races which emerged in the years immediately following World War II was repeated in several communities in the city, and the areas of controversy were not confined solely to the West Side. Black expansion from the center of town also created encroachment problems in northeast and southeast Atlanta. However, the most volatile situation arose in a neighborhood in west Atlanta in 1960. The story of racial transition in the area known as Adamsville consisted of a series of ineffective racial boundaries and "gentlemen's agreements", unscrupulous real estate tactics, attempted biracial negotiations, white panic and disgust, and the bombing of a home recently purchased by a black family. Efforts by an organization patterned after the West Side Mutual Development Committee to effect orderly transition were largely unsuccessful.[45]

Nevertheless, the response of the city's white business and political leaders to black housing need continued to be formed along conventional lines. For example, in 1960, Ivan Allen, Jr., President of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, declared that the best way to preserve segregation in Atlanta would be to provide adequate housing for the city's growing population. In traditional form, the future mayor attached segregation to the creation of housing opportunities for blacks and implied that intervention into the natural machinery of the housing market would be necessary to accomplish both goals.[46]

As mayor in 1962, Allen's inclination to continue the pattern of enlightened intervention resulted in a grave miscalculation and a serious political blunder. The territorial controversy with which Allen was involved projected nationally a contradiction of the racially progressive image of Atlanta. The dispute over the Southwest Atlanta area known as Peyton Forest reinforced many of the racial housing trends that began with the Mozley Park transition and established some new guidelines for the behavior of the real estate industry in areas of transition.

The story of Peyton Forest emerges in September, 1962, when proposals to zone for the containment of the black westward expansion were conceived. The Board of Aldermen approved a zoning to permit the construction of a black cemetery which would serve as a buffer between the white Peyton Forest area and the nearby black community. Mayor Allen vetoed the zoning and announced an alternative plan to effect the same results. Allen's proposal was more subtle. He suggested that certain streets in the area be rerouted to eliminate the direct passage from the white community to the black community to the north.[47] The theory was that an obstacle to the free flow of traffic would protect the white community from black invasion, or at least reduce the possibility of black entry by making access less convenient. His scheme was not new; in fact, many major thoroughfares in Atlanta have been planned along the same lines.[48] Nor was his plan adopted.

Meanwhile, the threat of black encroachment became more ominous to the residents of Peyton Forest. In December, 1962, the mayor recommended to the Board of Aldermen that the city close the two streets that provided direct access from the black community to Peyton Forest. The severing of Peyton Road and Harlan Road, according to a newspaper account, "was intended to assure white residents of the area to the south that buying of existing homes by Negroes could be halted."[49] As usual, the other part of the bargain offered additional land, on a segregated basis of course, for development by blacks. In this instance, approximately 250 acres were guaranteed for immediate availability if the blacks promised not to purchase property in Peyton Forest.[50]

On December 18, 1962, barriers were erected across Harlan Road and Peyton Road. Black leaders responded with contempt for the action and directed their disgust toward the mayor. Allen had been elected as mayor in 1961 in a runoff with Lester Maddox, and the margin of Allen's victory came from the black vote.[51] To black leaders, the barriers indicated that Allen would betray them when their needs conflicted with white prejudices.[52] They immediately planned an economic boycott of white merchants in the nearby West End business section. They also filed suit against the City of Atlanta on the charge that the barriers were erected solely on racial grounds and therefore created an unconstitutional restriction of movement from one part of the city to another.[53] Overnight, the barriers became known nationally as "Atlanta's Berlin Wall."

Following the script of previous attempts to resolve racial territorial disputes, Mayor Allen invited a group of dissident blacks to a summit conference for negotiations. In the past, black leaders had felt that these conferences presented an opportunity to gain additional housing even though the gains were accomplished by reinforcing segregation and white political control. However, Allen's invitation was rejected by the president of the Atlanta N.A.A.C.P.

who promised that he and other black leaders would not participate in any negotiations "until the walls come down."[54] The refusal to negotiate was based perhaps on the following considerations: the decisive role of the black vote in the 1961 mayoral election; the expectancy by black leaders of a greater degree of participation in important decisions made by Allen, and their subsequent disgust and frustration when Allen did not consult with them before the barriers were erected; the visibility of the device used to contain black expansion compared with less obvious means employed in the past;[55] and the strength of the emerging civil rights movement in Atlanta in the early Sixties.

An additional grievance of the blacks was the unacceptable offer of new land for development. Black leaders argued that the proposed land was undesirable for the construction of single-family dwellings since it was located in an area with a high concentration of heavy industries. The N. A. A. C. P. president said that blacks needed land for individual dwellings which was available to the south of the barricades, regardless of the feelings of the white residents. He said,

> As far as blockbusting is concerned, if it's blockbusting when a Negro buys a house that he needs and can afford, then blockbusting will just have to stay because we have to expand somewhere.[56]

Mayor Allen's credibility with the black community was diminished considerably, not only as a result of erecting the barriers and their symbolic meaning to blacks, but also because of his tenuous defense of the act. Although the most common account of the incident resembled closely the report in the New York Times, which said that "the acknowledged objective [of the barriers] was to discourage Negroes from buying homes...in a white neighborhood,"[57] Mayor Allen denied that his actions had been racially motivated. In a written reply to his black critics, he argued that some unscrupulous real estate dealers of both races were attempting to create "an artificial, unnatural condition" through unethical misrepresentations "to panic the residents of that community." The barriers served as a warning to these real estate dealers "that Atlanta will not tolerate under the guise of 'race discrimination' the destruction of fundamental values among any of its citizens."[58]

White residents of Peyton Forest were pleased with the barriers. They formed the Southwest Citizens' Association, designed ostensibly to achieve "stabilization," although its basic motives were restrictionist. The group defended the barriers as "a last resort" to reduce racial tensions and emphasized the part of the bargain that would make new land available to the blacks.[59]

In March, 1963, the barriers were removed after a county judge declared that their effect was to unconstitutionally segregate property ownership. A spokesman for the Southwest Citizens Association expressed disappointment over their removal but considered them to have been helpful in their stabilization efforts.[60] Mayor Allen commented tersely that the incident fortunately had focused attention on the plight of black Atlantans in their search for adequate housing.[61] After the removal of the walls the Peyton Forest residents rapidly began to list their houses for sale to blacks. Within three weeks, thirty homes had been listed by one black real estate firm. Regarding integrated residential neighborhoods, the president of the Southwest Citizens Association said, "It just isn't practical here. It's not something that has been accepted so far in this city and in this state. It just won't work."[62]

However, a requiem for Peyton Forest would not be complete without an examination of the role that the so-called North Side "power elite" played in the process of transition.[63] It has been a common notion among West Side whites that people on the North Side have "written off" west and southwest Atlanta and have negotiated away the racial homogeneity of the West Side for the protection of the North Side. In the Peyton Forest case, the white North Side business, social, and political elite has been charged with deliberately allowing transition to occur by refusing to make available to Peyton Forest residents the financial and political resources necessary to arrest the black invasion.

In a determination of the validity of these charges, a number of prejudices must be taken into account. First, the general socio-economic inferiority of white West Side residents has fostered an attitude of the contempt for the affluent "Establishment" residing on the North Side. An additional dimension of this inferiority complex is based on the racial composition of the West Side. The racial homogeneity of an area in Atlanta traditionally has been considered a primary factor in the determination of the area's social status. A final source of prejudice was the different political orientations of citizens of the two areas.

[63]The following remarks are based largely on personal experiences as a third-generation resident of Atlanta's West Side.

The North Side developed a reputation for voting habits that were considered moderate or liberal by Southern standards. On the other hand, the West Side tended to support candidates of a more conservative outlook.

Nevertheless, even after discounting the weight of these prejudices, the idea persists that the North Side elite could have intervened beneficently to halt the black encroachment in southwest Atlanta. The advocates of this notion emphasize the exhaustive measures that West Side whites took to reverse the black housing trend. For example, the Southwest Citizens Association indigenously collected over $200,000 to purchase property from whites in Peyton Forest who were threatening to sell on the black market.[64] That, obviously, still constituted insufficient resources. According to a study published by the Southern Regional Council,

> The white group did not have the city's big financial muscle behind it and could not match the combined resources of Negro insurance companies, banks, and real estate firms.

The author of this report completes his analysis with the following statement.

> Some Atlanta Negroes today [1965] believe that had major white capital really wanted to block Negro entrance into the area, it could have been done so either by outbidding the Negroes or exerting enough indirect pressure on them to force > them to give up. But apparently these white interests decided that keeping Peyton Forest all-white was not worth a major power play and certainly they were wise enough to see that Negro occupancy of the area represented a natural extension of Negro neighborhoods. Had Negro financial interests been attempting to buy property in Buckhead, Sandy Springs, or Paces Ferry Road - all gilt-edged white neighborhoods [on the North Side] - the story would doubtless have been different.[65]

As the stages of transition advanced in Peyton Forest, a new series of top-level biracial conferences of real estate leaders was held at the request of Mayor Allen to try to prevent future territorial disputes and to draft a "voluntary code of ethics covering the sale and disposition of property in transitional areas."[66] In May, 1963, a "statement of purposes" was issued jointly by the white Atlanta Real Estate Board and the black Empire Real Estate Board. The policy paper contained extremely vague statements and appeared to emerge as a least common denominator between the interests of the groups. The document recognized the need for professional real estate guidance in providing adequate housing for all Atlantans and for "peaceful real estate transactions ethically negotiated with the least amount of friction" in areas where racial occupancy is changing. Representatives from the two groups also agreed on their opposition to "artificial barriers... designed solely as racial buffers";[67] however, following the Peyton Forest fiasco involving artificial barriers, this was hardly an area of controversy. Although the document did not imply that the brokers intended to eliminate discriminatory housing policies, it at least avoided some of the pitfalls of former biracial agreements which usually contained explicit references to racial boundaries or to a dual housing market. However, this "statement of purpose" was couched in such vague terms that its effect has not been obvious. Furthermore, the available information on housing in Atlanta makes no further mention of its implementation.

The racial succession in Peyton Forest redirected the path of the black expansion on the West Side. By 1963, the supply of vulnerable white-owned housing in the direct line of the westward expansion was nearly exhausted. With the racial transfer of Peyton Forest, the black residential movement took a turn to the south. The story of racial transition in Atlanta's West Side is set in Southwest Atlanta after 1963. A study conducted in 1969 by a group of graduate students in city planning at the Georgia Institute of Technology focused on zoning problems of an area in Southwest Atlanta, including Peyton Forest and other neighborhoods to the south which have undergone extensive racial transition. The group arrived at the following figures concerning the area's racial composition:[68]

TABLE 1

Racial Composition of Southwest Atlanta, 1950 - 1968

Year	White Population	% of Total	Non-white Population	% of Total	Total Population
1950	2188	79%	578	21%	2766
1960	5731	72%	2268	28%	7999
1968	3689	35%	6859	65%	10,548

The chart reflects not only the rate of succession in Southwest Atlanta but also the general growth of the area during the past two decades.

There is a substantial body of quantitative data which traces the development of segregation as one of the prominent characteristics of Atlanta's housing patterns and estimates the impact of this pattern on the availability and physical condition of housing for blacks.

In a landmark study on urban residential segregation in 1965, sociologists Karl and Alma Taeuber compiled an "index for residential segregation" for over a hundred

American cities, including Atlanta. The index value represents the percentage of non-whites that would have to shift from one block to another in order to effect an even, unsegregated racial distribution. For Atlanta in the years 1940, 1950 and 1960, the "index of residential segregation" rose from 87.4% in the former year, to 91.5% in 1950 and to 93.6% in 1960.[69] The Taeubers' evidence indicates that a progressively greater redistribution of non-whites was necessary during each decade in order to achieve a racial balance in residential housing patterns.

Additional evidence of increasing housing segregation in Atlanta can be derived from census-tract data collected by the Atlanta Region Metropolitan Planning Commission. The most recent figures on population by race and by census tract are based on 1970 census estimates.[70] An "index of racial homogeneity" can be compiled from this data for the years 1950, 1960 and 1970. This index reveals the percentage of census tracts in the city that are racially homogeneous: "Racial homogeneity" is designated when the people of one race compose at least 90% of the census tract's total population.

% of Black Population per Census Tract	Number of Census Tracts
	1950	1960	1970

36 - 65	4	5	8
66 - 89	12	10	9
90 - 100	13	21	37

Table 2 reveals that from 1950 to 1970 the number of census tracts in which blacks were the dominant occupants rose from 25 to 46. Furthermore, the number of census tracts in which blacks composed at least 90% of the total population almost tripled. This substantial redistribution of land occupancy from white dominance to black reflects very roughly the city's growing black population, which in 1970 accounted for over 50% of the city's people for the first time. Obviously, a large part of the growth of the black population can be explained by expansion into previously white areas. In fact, when the racial composition in 1970 was determined for the census tracts that were predominantly white in 1950, it was discovered that 51 had retained their dominance of white occupancy while 27 had shifted to a predominantly black composition. Of these 27 census tracts, about half (13) had become at least 90% black by 1970. These figures may also be used to reveal the propensity of segregated areas to retain their degree of homogeneity or to become resegregated with members of the other race. Of the 56 census tracts that were at least 90% white in 1950, 36 maintained their racial composition through 1970; of the remaining 20 census tracts in this group, 12 had shifted to a predominantly black occupancy by 1970. The data on the original all-black census tracts reveals this trend even more clearly. All thirteen of the tracts that were at least 90% black in 1950 remained all-black through 1970.

1970	80	74.8

Table 3 builds on the data provided in Table 2 and reveals the significant growth in the rate of homogeneity by census tract and race from 1950 to 1960. The index of racial homogeneity is unchanged for the past decade. However, the figures in this table indicate that in Atlanta today, three of every four census tracts are occupied nearly entirely by people of one race.

The impact of the high degree of segregation on the physical conditions of private black housing is significant. Previously mentioned was the testimony of the director of the Metropolitan Planning Commission, who stated before the Civil Rights Commission that in Atlanta in 1959, blacks occupied 16% of the developed residential land although they composed 32% of the total population of the city.[71] More recent figures indicate the continued shortage of available land for black occupancy. In 1969, blacks occupied 20% of the developed residential land in the city while they composed 47% of the city's total population.[72] A comparison of these two sets of figures reveals that the black population has expanded in proportion to the total population of the city far greater (almost by four times) than it has expanded in terms of acquired land.

[72] Tom Walker, "Gunpoint Ghettoes," June 3, 1970; remarks by Nat Welch.

Overcrowding is one of the chief results of this trend. The following description in 1969 of black housing conditions in Atlanta sounds remarkably similar to an earlier description from the pre-World War II era.

> One half of the city's population has somehow ended up living in extraordinarily poor conditions, in dilapidated, overcrowded housing placed in the poorest environment, and walled off from the other half of the city. The startling fact that fifty percent of all black residents live in only one-fifth of the total residential area of Atlanta leaves much to be desired in elevating its housing standards.[73]

The trends and forces that emerge from a review of the post-World War II black expansion on the West Side of Atlanta form the basis for the current patterns of housing segregation and discrimination. To attribute the existence of these problems solely to recent or current phenomena obscures the strength of conventional thought and practice. In an account of the origins of the West Side Mutual Development Committee, a black committeeman recalled the process by which housing segregation and discrimination had developed to the point of widespread public acceptance.

> It is interesting how custom and practice can become so much a part of a pattern that it is considered by many to be a matter of > law rather than of tradition...Traditional patterns, if followed long enough, eventually begin to be accepted as law.[74]

Racial segregation and discrimination in Atlanta's residential housing are entrenched firmly in tradition and practice and only rarely are questioned. However, with the emergence of several neighborhood groups involved in stabilization and open housing, the voices of dissent have become more numerous. These groups, which are the subject of the next chapter, are devoted to the goal of arresting the progress of Atlanta's racial housing tradition before the trend becomes irreversible.

CHAPTER II

THE VOICES OF DISSENT

"There are hopeful signs that the city is ready to unite a divided community and we should recognize these...We are hearing people speak up where we heard silence before."

Leon Eplan,
Metropolitan Atlanta Conference on Equal Opportunity in Housing,
May 29, 1968.

The voices of dissent from the traditional housing patterns in Atlanta have become more numerous in the past decade. Previously, the principal advocates of open housing or open occupancy were largely confined to black civil rights groups such as the Atlanta chapter of the N.A.A.C.P. and the Atlanta Urban League, and black professional groups such as the Empire Real Estate Board. In the 1960's, these groups continued to pursue the goals of equal opportunity in housing as one phase of the national civil rights movement. However, the Sixties also witnessed the emergence of a number of biracial and all-white organizations devoted to reversing the trend of complete racial transfer when a white neighborhood was "busted", and to achieving metropolitan-wide open housing as the most effective means to prevent the resegregation of neighborhoods in transition. These white crusaders reflected the growing awareness of whites throughout the city that the fulfillment of the black housing demand was not solely the black man's problem and that a more satisfactory solution to the housing problem must be found to replace the traditional pattern of racial succession. The alternative that they perceived - an all-black city surrounded by white suburbs - provoked them to action.

The advent of organized open housing activity occurred in 1964 when the biracial Council on Human Relations of Greater Atlanta proposed a program of open occupancy for implementation in the all-white Druid Hills-Emory section of northeast Atlanta. The council perceived the prevalance of residential segregation as one of the most pressing problems that faced the city. The program intended to encourage the residents of the chosen area to create an atmosphere conducive to peaceful integration and neighborhood stabilization. The council planned to sponsor workshops and community meetings which would provide a forum for dialogue on matters of neighborhood improvement and nondiscriminatory housing opportunities.[1]

The residents of the Druid Hills-Emory target area responded immediately with emphatic hostility to the council's plan. Their opposition was provoked initially by the fact that an unintended press leak announced the program before the residents were privately consulted. They believed that the program constituted an attempt to force them to accept blacks in their neighborhood. The president of the Druid Hills Civic Association charged the council with subterfuge and claimed that the public announcement of the program offered unethical real estate speculators an excellent opportunity to manipulate the fears of the white residents and to induce sales of homes in the area to blacks. He feared that the end result would be complete transition.[2] In a letter to the editors of an Atlanta newspaper, a resident of the area wrote,

> In my opinion the recent threat to the property in the Druid Hills-Emory section has done a great deal of harm to the cause of the Council on Human Relations and to good relations of the races.[3]

The Council on Human Relations apparently was unable to generate community support for the proposed program. No further mention of the plan is made in any of the available literature. Besides the untimely announcement of the plan, the program's failure might be attributed to two factors: first, the appearance that the council was functioning in the role of an "outside agitator" attempting to impose its will on the community; secondly, the absence of an immediate and "natural" threat to the community's racial homogeneity. The second factor was more subtle but perhaps equally compelling in the community's reaction. If the community had perceived an immediate threat of black invasion, it might have considered the council's program a means of saving the community from complete transition. Sensing no threat, however, the residents were not inclined to risk a black invasion by announcing a policy of open occupancy.

On the other hand, residents of some areas undergoing racial transition have responded to the threat to the stability of their communities by establishing organizations whose initial purpose was to achieve peaceful integration. One of the most significant developments of the post-Peyton Forest transition in southwest Atlanta was the formation, in January, 1967, of the Southwest Atlantans for Progress (SWAP). SWAP was organized at the time when the entire southwest area was being disrupted by unscrupulous real estate dealers attempting to scare whites out of their homes in order to dispose of their property quickly and profitably on the "black market." Membership in the organization grew from 32 to 250 in 1967 alone. The orientation of many SWAP meetings resembled that of inter-racial "sensitivity training" seminars: The group primarily intended to provide a forum for discussions of the community's problems which related largely to racial "myths" - for example, the decline of property values and the rise in crime accompanying the entry of blacks. If the success of SWAP is measured by the extent to which it slowed the rate of transition, its impact must be considered minimal.However, SWAP's defenders have maintained consistently that it never intended to effect a particular racial quota for the area, but merely to foster harmonious relations among the residents and to provide a basis for the resolution of common problems.[4] To a large extent, SWAP has been superceded by a newer organization, Concerned Citizens of Southwest Atlanta, which more aggressively pursues the interests of the community, particularly in the areas of zoning and responsive political representation.[5]

The most active stabilization organization in the Atlanta area today is the South DeKalb Neighbors, an affiliate of the National Neighbors, a group devoted to integrated housing. The South DeKalb group was formed in 1969 when a fair housing organization and a stabilization group operating in adjacent neighborhoods merged. The consolidation of the groups' activities was designed to permit a more efficient and concentrated attack on the forces of transition. The Neighbors' functions include bi-monthly meetings and the publication of a monthly newsletter to the residents of the area. A recent description of the Neighbors' activities included an assessment of the group's accomplishments.

> ...at the moment, the South DeKalb area seems to have survived an intense period of fear, real estate blockbusting and white flight, occasioned by the first movement of blacks into what had been an all-white neighborhood.[6]

Although SWAP and the South DeKalb Neighbors were organized primarily to arrest the process of racial transition in its early stages, they evolved into vocal advocates of equal housing opportunities for blacks in all sections of the metropolitan area. They realized that the success of their stabilization efforts depended on a territorial redistribution of the black housing demand which would reduce the pressure on their communities as the primary sources of used housing for blacks. Stabilization might be achieved if blacks were not restricted in their selection of areas for possible residency. An officer of SWAP said in 1970, "The concept of fair housing has much to do with whether or not southwest Atlanta is a sound community. Outside forces act negatively on the community and hinder stabilization and efforts to build a sound community."[7]

A number of less publicized stabilization groups have been formed in transitional areas around the city. A few of these are located in areas south of SWAP's territory in the Ben Hill section of southwest Atlanta. The most recently founded group consists of residents of a neighborhood in southeast Atlanta, who organized in March, 1971. Their announced purpose is to seek to prevent the common pattern of integration followed by "re-segregation to an all-black neighborhood."[8] [8]Bill Buchanan, "East Atlanta Goal is Stabilization," The Atlanta Constitution, March 19, 1971.

SWAP's example inspired the formation of several small fair housing groups in prestigious white neighborhoods on the North Side. The activities of these groups have ranged from informing the residents on the provisions of federal open housing laws to actively soliciting black families to purchase homes in the neighborhood. The purpose of one of these organizations was described as: "To support and encourage freedom of residence in our community so that every person, regardless of race, religion, or natural origin can secure the housing he desires, and to initiate and support programs for the betterment of the entire community."[9] However, community participation in these organizations has not been widespread. The group which most actively sought to effect the integration of the community was temporarily successful: A black family occupied a home in the area for about nine months, and then failed to renew the lease on the home.[10] Today, at least one of the organizations is defunct while most of the others lie dormant, waiting perhaps to respond to a crisis in the immediate area or to provide assistance to groups in troubled neighborhoods.

Attempts to alter Atlanta's traditionally segregated housing patterns have achieved a broader base in recent years.

Although a coordinated citywide or metropolitan open housing movement has never evolved, groups with a broad representation have become concerned about discrimination and transition in Atlanta's housing. In 1967, the City Hall reporter for The Atlanta Constitution wrote,

> Open housing is being talked about more and more in Atlanta. Although the principle isn't ready to join the flag and motherhood in the non-controversial category, more and more folks are saying open housing is inevitable. And the talk is no longer left to the "knee-jerk liberals" and the theorizing sociologists.[11]

That summer, the chairman of the city's Housing Resources Committee, also a close associate of Mayor Allen, challenged a group of affluent white North Side residents to help to "settle Negroes in suburban areas." He said that the continuation of Atlanta's current housing patterns would create an all-black city, a consequence he considered as "disastrous to both races."[12] This same housing official had protested the government's use of the urban renewal program "as a tool in race relations" only eight years before in the Civil Rights Commission hearings.[13] His advocacy in 1967 of suburban desegregation and of the dispersal of

of public housing throughout the city reflected the growing dissatisfaction with Atlanta's housing scene, a large part of which was based on the fear that Atlanta might become "a 128 square-mile black ghetto."[14]

In 1968, the sponsorship of fifty-six prominent citizens and organizations, including most of Atlanta's church groups and a number of civic organizations, led to the formation of the Metropolitan Atlanta Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing. According to the executive director, the committee's primary goals were to prepare Atlanta for the provisions of the federal fair housing law, to urge a strict implementation of the law in the Atlanta area, and "to create a climate where people will accept, rather than oppose, the right of citizens to live where they want to and can afford."[15] In May, 1968, the committee held the first metropolitan-wide conference on open housing. The conference was divided into several workshops from which emerged a number of recommendations concerning the local implementation of the open housing law and the adoption of two resolutions, one calling for the passage of fair housing ordinances by the five counties and forty-one municipalities of the metropolitan area and the other urging the dispersal of low-cost housing throughout all areas of the city and the suburbs.[16]

Also in May, 1968, the Georgia State Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights released a report entitled Toward Equal Opportunity in Housing. The report focused on housing discrimination and segregation in Atlanta and was based largely on hearings held by the committee in Atlanta the previous spring. The committee indicted the builders and sellers of housing, and government officials for complicity in schemes designed to exclude blacks from occupancy in certain areas of town. This was one of the committee's principal findings:

> Currently, as in the past, serious barriers, including violence, practices of the housing industry, and public and private policy, have restricted Negroes to certain sections of the city and to growth only on the fringes of the ghetto.[17]

The committee also recommended the adoption of local fair housing ordinances in the metropolitan Atlanta area.

Further evidence of the growing strength of the voices of dissent was the initiation in 1970 of a program in neighborhood stabilization and open housing by the Atlanta Community Relations Commission, an agency of the city government. The mayor and the Board of Aldermen approved the creation of the position of a permanent field representative for the commission in this area. The new position was filled by the appointment of Mrs. Pat Chapman, the founder and president of the South DeKalb Neighbors and one of the Atlanta area's most aggressive stabilization and open housing advocates. The commission's program plan in neighborhood stabilization and open housing divided the field representative's responsibilities into the pursuit of "general goals in the field of open housing" and the pursuit of stabilization in a particular transitional neighborhood. In July, 1970, the Therrell High School district in southwest Atlanta was chosen as the area in which the commission would seek to effect stabilization. According to the program proposal, "this area may be a prime target for blockbusting, but it is also a neighborhood in which a project of stabilization will have a good chance for success." The possibilities for success were estimated largely on the current racial composition of the area; that is, the field representative felt that the area had not yet reached the "tipping point" in black occupancy and therefore could be rescued from complete transition. The commission intended to rely on indigenous community leadership to provide the initiative in the stabilization program and to support the community by taking its problems directly to the appropriate city officials. In the general goals of open housing, the commission promised to solicit the cooperation of real estate dealers, to seek the adoption of local fair housing ordinances, to offer assistance for the settlement of racial problems in the public schools, and to cooperate with church groups and stabilization organizations throughout the city.[18]

The Atlanta news media have given considerable support for the goals of fair housing and have provided extensive coverage of the activities of open housing and stabilization groups. Some of the leading radio stations, such as WSB and WGST, have editorialized in support of open housing. The daily newspapers, The Atlanta Journal and Constitution, and the black paper, The Daily World, have been outspoken on these matters, particularly since the Peyton Forest debacle in 1962. Since the founding of SWAP in 1967, the papers have featured the activities and problems of SWAP and other stabilization and fair housing groups. A large part of the editorials have included challenges to the white businessmen and politicians to become concerned about the possible adverse consequences of a continuation of Atlanta's racial separation by residence. For example, after the passage of the federal fair housing law in 1968, the editors of the Journal and Constitution urged the local implementation of the law "with as little hanky-panky by realtors, lending institutions and individuals as possible."

[18]Community Relations Commission, Atlanta, Georgia, "Proposed Program for Neighborhood Stabilization," June, 1970; also a large part of the information on the CRC's program is based on my experience as summer intern with the commission in 1970.

The editors concluded by saying, "The full weight of the influential people of Atlanta should be brought to bear to guarantee this."[19]

Perhaps in response to these editorial challenges, but more probably as a result of the fear that Atlanta might become a predominantly black city if blockbusting and discrimination in housing are not arrested, Atlanta's business leaders have begun to express an interest in open housing affairs. The city's business "elite", also called the Peachtree Street "power structure," has been credited with fostering the development of harmonious race relations in the past. Consequently, Atlanta's "progressive" image has continued to attract major industries and offices of national and international companies. The business elite's emerging concern over open housing is indicated by an article on blockbusting and stabilization efforts in Atlanta printed recently in the monthly publication of Atlanta Chamber of Commerce.[20] Further evidence consists of the endorsement of open housing in September, 1970, by the Atlanta Region Metropolitan Planning Commission, whose orientation on racial matters is closely allied with that of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The planning commission also joined the growing list of the advocates of local fair housing laws. Atlanta's Mayor Sam Massell considered the commission's recommendations an important step toward the realization of open housing throughout the metropolitan area.[21]

This completes the list of groups which emerged in the Sixties as organized advocates of open housing and peaceful residential integration and as voices of dissent from the firmly entrenched racial housing patterns in Atlanta. However, the discussion is not complete without noting that the voices of dissent do not always speak in unity. In fact, there is an important source of dissonance that should be mentioned.

The discord arises from a conflict of priorities assigned by the advocates of change to the principles of neighborhood stabilization, open occupancy, and adequate housing for blacks. In many instances, blacks perceive that the former goal presents an obstacle to the fulfillment of the latter goals. On the other hand, whites are more easily aroused to participate in affairs designed to prevent the complete racial transfer of a white community undergoing transition. Often, the immediate crisis of transition is not perceived by whites to be the symptom of deeper problems - the shortage of decent housing for blacks and the restrictions on the selection by blacks of areas for occupancy. This narrow perspective is especially typical of the basis for the emerging concern of the city's white business elite in racial housing affairs.

For blacks, the deliberate creation of stable, integrated communities must be considered a secondary goal until blacks can find housing wherever they can afford to buy, regardless of the racial composition of the neighborhood. The black perspective is reflected in an editorial in the black newspaper, the Atlanta Daily World, in June, 1967.

> We do not like to see any community disturbed, but on the other hand, there continues to exist a shortage in housing for our people. And as long as this is true, the people desiring housing will seek it wherever they can find it.[22]

The conflict between the differing priorities of the black and white voices of dissent was most clearly portrayed in a meeting of the Atlanta Community Relations Commission (CRC) in May, 1967. The subject of debate was a request by a West Side white civic group that the CRC recommend to the Board of Aldermen the adoption of an ordinance which would ban "for sale" signs on property in residential areas. The proliferation of signs in transitional areas was considered to be a source of panic and an incitement for white residents to abandon their property. The commission approved the request as a result of the growing concern over transition in southwest Atlanta. However, some of the black members disagreed with the commission's decision. For example, the Reverend Samuel Williams said the ban on "for sale" signs would only be "an aspirin which will relieve but not cure." He said further, "The basic issue is race. Houses were bought and sold for years and there was no problem. The sign has nothing to do with it." Another black commissioner said that the ban on real estate signs would work against blacks. He added that "obviously taking a house off the market will mean a Negro can't buy it." Expressing the sentiment of the majority of the commission, the Rabbi Jacob Rothschild was symphathetic to Reverend Williams' view and said that "ultimately the only solution is open housing, but to use the vernacular, 'such a situation we ain't got.'"[23]

In spite of these differences of emphasis, there persist firm grounds of agreement on the direction of attack against the current forces of restriction and segregation in Atlanta's housing. A consensus has emerged among the voices of dissent which states that the private real estate industry in Atlanta is the most influential source in perpetuating the city's racial housing tradition. Open housing and stabilization advocates of both races appear to be unanimous in the assertion that fundamental changes in the outlook and practices of real estate dealers are necessary if Atlanta is to avoid the severe consequences of becoming all-black with a white suburban fringe. In the following chapter, the charges of discrimination and blockbusting against realty firms will be examined.

THE PATTERNS OF EXCLUSION

The proponents of the idea that real estate dealers are largely responsible for the perpetuation of Atlanta's segregated housing patterns represent various levels of experience and involvement in racial housing affairs. From different perspectives, they perceive the role of the real estate industry as an institution and of individual realty agents in the establishment of racially distinct neighborhoods.

The real estate critics who are most frequently exposed to the racial policies and practices of realty firms are stabilization leaders in the city's transitional neighborhoods and individual white residents of these areas. To them, real estate agents employing scare tactics to induce the sale of homes and thus to resegregate their neighborhoods are the most visible forces in the process of racial change. Although stabilization activists occasionally overdramatize the contribution of realty agents to racial transition and tend to overlook the forces of tradition and public opinion which dictate against the existence of successfully integrated communities, the perceptions which proceed from their intimate involvement in neighborhood affairs are instructive for the construction of a model of real estate influence in racial housing matters. Specifically, their comments and experiences contribute significantly to an accurate determination of the role of real estate brokers as agents of social change. This role will be defined later in terms of the realty salesman as the "gatekeeper" or "gatecrasher" of the neighborhood.

The most aggressive stabilization activists in the Atlanta area today are residents of the South DeKalb area in Decatur, Georgia, adjacent to the City of Atlanta to the east. This community lies directly in the line of a block-by-block expansion of blacks from an established black area in east Atlanta. The patterns of racial transition and resegregation in South DeKalb resemble closely the story of black expansion in west and southwest Atlanta. In 1969, according to a recent account of the area's transition, "South DeKalb was an embattled area, the victim of a massive and unscrupulous blockbusting effort."[1] A resident of the neighborhood offered the following account of the situation in January, 1970:

> South DeKalb County today lies under a siege - siege by a most sinister and irresponsible collection of real estate peddlers who, I am sure, cause good and honest men of the profession to cringe in disgust. These peddlers make their fortunes on the home-starved and ill-informed black homeseeker and the tradition-scarred white homeowner.[2]

[2]Jack Tatum, "Blockbusting in South DeKalb," The Atlanta Journal, January 17, 1970.

In the spring of 1969, a predominantly white group of residents led by two housewives, including Mrs. Pat Chapman, formed the South DeKalb Neighbors to try to combat blockbusting and the resulting rapid rate of transition. Before integration arrived in her neighborhood, Mrs. Chapman never understood why racial transition occured. She said, "It never dawned on me that real estate men would scare people out of their homes...that real estate people were the cause of so many areas going from white to black." She listed some of the techniques used extensively by real estate salesmen in her neighborhood.

> Some of the scare tactics they use are to tell you that if you don't move now, you may be left holding the bag...property values are going down...people with children are moving...Gordon High [a nearby school] is going down...the whole area will be black in three months...just anything to terrorize people.[3]

In an upper middle-class area of southwest Atlanta, white homeowners have experienced similar forms of real estate harrassment. In 1969, a resident said, "Frankly, the real estate people are just scaring the hell out of everybody by constantly calling them and hinting that the neighborhood will eventually be occupied exclusively by Negro families." Another resident reported, "They [realty agents] harrass us almost every day. They come to your door and call you on the telephone at all hours of the day and night to ask if you're ready to sell."[4] A white homeowner on a street where "for sale" signs dotted the landscape said, "The psychological effect of these signs waving at you is terrible," to which a neighbor added, "It's like living in a cemetery with all these signs."[5]

More subtle but equally disturbing real estate practices have been reported by transitional area residents. A lady on a recently integrated street received a letter from the sales manager of a realty firm with the following message:

> I have been following with great interest the sales of homes in the area. Are you going to be selling your home soon? I am in the real estate business and I am offering my service to you...I appeal to your better judgment, let me list your home now while the market is good. Our sales staff want to and will work hard for you.

The recipient of this message wrote the editors of an Atlanta newspaper and related her feeling about the realty firm's letter. She said, "Can you imagine what happens when a person receiving this letter sees a Negro realtor at his neighbor's house (uninvited, of course) trying to solicit the neighbor's home to sell?"[6]

The success of harrassing tactics is difficult to quantify. However, one indication of the effectiveness of these techniques is the rapid rate of racial change in the areas of the heaviest real estate activity. In 1969, for example, the president of a fair housing group in southeast Atlanta said that in one section of her neighborhood a single real estate agent had listed eleven of fifteen houses on a street by contacting all the homeowners. She adds, "As the saying goes, that street went colored."[7]

The first blockbusting suit against a realty firm in the Atlanta area was filed in 1969. The suit was also the first case of blockbusting brought to court by private plaintiffs under Title VIII, the "fair housing" provision, of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 which among other things prohibits references to race as a means for realty agents to induce the sale of property. One of the forms of blockbusting most familiar to stabilization workers was exposed in the suit filed against a firm in South DeKalb which had spread rumors concerning the changing racial composition of the neighborhood. Residents of the area testified that certain agents of the firm urged them to sell their homes immediately because the area "was going colored" and soon would be "all occupied by colored." The presiding judge said, "In a determination of credibility, it is found that the statements [regarding race] were actually made and the only motivation discoverable from the facts would be the inducement to list and sell with the consequent commission profit to the defendants." The firm was enjoined from blockbusting, and punitive damages of $750 were awarded the complainants.[8]

The adverse publicity that accompanies a blockbusting suit is considered by realty brokers to be a serious threat to the reputation of the firm and consequently to the firm's financial security. Thus it would appear that federal and state laws which prohibit racially motivated sales techniques would deter the indulgence in such acts. However, open housing advocates argue that the incidence of blockbusting far exceeds the cases that are brought to court. The deterrents to the initiation of a blockbusting suit include the elements of time, complexity, and awareness of the laws.[9] The program plan of 1970 in neighborhood stabilization and open housing for the Atlanta Community Relations Commission says,

> The legal tools with which we can work in promoting neighborhood stabilization and open housing are inadequate to effectively cope with the problem. The complicated procedures involved in executing alleged cases of blockbusting hinder the speedy withdrawal of illegal real estate activity in a transitional area.[10]

[8]William B. Williams, "Judge Orders Injunction On Blockbusting In DeKalb," The Atlanta Journal, September 3, 1969.

[9]The president of SWAP estimated in 1970 that only about 10% of the people in Atlanta are aware of the current blockbusting laws.

[10]Atlanta Community Relations Commission, "Proposed Program for Neighborhood Stabilization," 1970, p. 2.

The current laws against blockbusting do not provide preventive measures. They only provide a means to respond to the act after it has been committed, and usually after the damage has been done to the stability of the community. The initiation and prosecution of a suit on blockbusting charges consume more time than is often required for a few effective salesmen to induce the sale of homes in a white community to black buyers. Furthermore, the blockbusting laws only prohibit overt references to race by the realty agent. Some sales tactics are employed which do not mention the neighborhood's changing racial composition but which communicate the same message to the homeowner.

Thus the legal remedies for blockbusting have been incommensurate with the scope of the problem in Atlanta. The close correlation of real estate harrassment and scare tactics to the racial transfer of a particular neighborhood has become a standard pattern. The end results have been a perpetuation of the segregation in Atlanta's residential housing and a fading confidence in the belief that integration might be achieved without complete transition.

Open housing and neighborhood stabilization advocates admit that only a fraction of the total number of real estate brokers in Atlanta openly indulge in blockbusting.[11] To their colleagues in real estate, these relatively few blockbusters are considered marginal operators. According to a prominent black broker in Atlanta, the established, reputable and financially secure realty firms are highly unlikely to engage in blockbusting. He said that smaller, newer, and less reputable firms are involved more often in blockbusting as a means to make "fast money."[12]

[11] Tom Walker, "Blockbusting Gives Bad Image," The Atlanta Journal, June 5, 1970, p. 20-A.

However, this does not intend to absolve the large majority of realty firms from any blame for the tactics of the few. In fact, as a current student of race and residence in Atlanta points out,

> ...most real estate brokers contribute to racial transition by placing newly integrated areas into the black housing market. Areas in the early phases of transition are shown only to potential black purchasers and hence most of the purchasers are black. The expressed reason of real estate brokers for not showing housing in these areas to whites is that white families are not interested in such integrated areas. But the white purchaser is seldom questioned as to his interest.[13]

A recent survey conducted for the purposes of this thesis provides data which reinforces at least partially the analysis offered immediately above. Almost 90% of the firms responding to a questionnaire (22 of 25 firms total) replied affirmatively to the question, "Does it appear to you that a dual housing market exists in Atlanta, one white and the other black?"

Residents of transitional areas offer similar supporting evidence. A stabilization leader says, "Our experience in South DeKalb has been that...some real estate agents will only show to Negroes," to which another South DeKalb resident adds, "I've come to the conclusion that a lot of people who move to a new neighborhood are not there by choice, but because the real estate brokers assumed their choice...These Negroes in South DeKalb didn't have that choice."[14] Stabilization leaders in South DeKalb and in southwest Atlanta also allege that most real estate brokers with listings in these areas only advertise the homes in the city's black newspapers.[15] This practice significantly reduces the chances that the information on the availability of homes in these areas will reach white prospective homebuyers.

Thus emerges the close relationship between blockbusting and discriminatory real estate practices which tend to restrict sales to blacks to certain areas, particularly transitional or potentially transitional areas. In fact, blockbusting is a product of restrictive real estate practices. As a result of real estate techniques which prohibit or at least discourage the purchase of homes by blacks in white areas, the demand for black housing can be fulfilled only in black, transitional, or potentially transitional areas. In the diagram on page 69, the author of a master's thesis in city planning at the Georgia Institute of Technology illustrates the dynamics of racial transition.[16] The author's analysis of this diagram contributes significantly to the design of a model of real estate involvement in housing segregation in Atlanta and other cities.

He writes that the preliminary conditions that enable transition to occur are "the existence of exclusively black and white residential areas and the scarcity of stable integrated residential areas." Housing in Atlanta fulfills these conditions. Rising black demand for more housing, better housing, and housing in better neighborhoods is also a major prerequisite for transition. Those involved in real estate at all levels in Atlanta, including all the black brokers recently surveyed for this thesis, affirm the shortage of housing for blacks who can afford property in decent residential areas.

On the frustration and fulfillment of the need for black housing, he writes,

DYNAMICS OF RACIAL TRANSITION

> Rising black housing demand must be viewed in relation to segregated housing patterns. Black Americans compete for an artificially limited amount of housing. These artificial limits are determined by factors which frustrate the fulfillment of black housing demand and cause the demand to accumulate.
> Discrimination in the sale and rental of housing prevents black families...from obtaining generally available housing outside black residential areas and there is a lack of sufficient new housing construction inside black areas.

With other sources of fulfillment being frustrated, black housing demand "eventually becomes sufficient to inundate an entire white neighborhood which is suitable for racial transition." A "suitable" or "potential" white neighborhood for racial change is determined by its "proximity to black neighborhoods, the type of housing in the neighborhood, and the ability and desire of white residents to move, and the extent of white housing demand exerted on the neighborhood."[17]

The role of real estate brokers as agents of social change and control is firmly established in the history of race and residence in Atlanta. Perhaps the most vivid portrayal of this role is contained in an examination of the Peyton Forest transition in 1963. Even if the severely limited supply of housing for the growing black population is taken into account as a major factor in the Peyton Forest transition - which of course it was - there remains a residue of charges that the activities of realty firms operating in the area precipitated the territorial dispute. The forces of opposition to black entry in Peyton Forest have been discussed already. This discussion will focus on the role of real estate agents as a primary instigating force behind the entry of blacks, the subsequent complete racial transfer, and the contribution of realty agents to the protection of other white communities from black entry.

The framework for this discussion is provided by the author of a study involving the social and psychological determinants of race relations in transitional areas. He wrote,

> The initial definition that a given neighborhood is appropriate for Negro entry may not be made by a Negro at all. There are instances in which Realtors have made this definition, have introduced Negro occupants into hitherto all-white communities, have exerted themselves to frighten whites into leaving and have then benefited by the increased turnover of homes as panic and erosion ensue.[18]

This pattern of transition characterizes the Peyton Forest situation to a significant degree. The available evidence on the causes for the initial disruption in the community forms a reasonable basis to believe that certain black and white brokers agreed on the expediency of introducing blacks into the area.

The factors which determine the definition by brokers that an area is ready for transition are enumerated by the author of the study mentioned above. The most important dimension of "Realtor definition" include the social, political, and economic status of the white residents, and the proximity of the white area to a black community. He wrote, "There are indications that Realtors...make as carefully reasoned (or rationalized) choice of neighborhood as when the initial definition is made by Negro families themselves." The considerations influencing the broker's decision are enumerated:

> Neighborhoods without residents of some power, authority, or influence, either because of their recency or because of the nature of the social class occupying them, and neighborhoods contiguous to heavily Negro districts make the most likely targets for this type of Realtor definition.[19]

The conformity of Peyton Forest to these criteria is impressive.

In line with the model of "Realtor definition", the following considerations may be identified as determinants in the decision of real estate brokers to open Peyton Forest for black occupancy through blockbusting tactics.[20]

[19] Ibid., p. 133.

[20] The information for this part of the discussion is based on my personal familiarity with the Peyton Forest transition and my acquaintances among several of the original white residents of the area.

The residents of the area were of a middle-class and upper middle-class economic base; they were mostly white-collar workers with a few professionals. Most of the homes were approximately five years old and were purchased at prices ranging from $20,000 to $50,000. The community was separated from a large black residential area by only a few miles. As a guarantee to the white developer, Peyton Forest was designated by real estate speculators of both races as "off-limits" for black intrusion. Nevertheless, its proximity to large black communities, and its location in the line of the westward black expansion later made it highly vulnerable for black invasion and for "Realtor definition" of the propriety for blacks to reside there.

Furthermore, a widely accepted belief throughout the city contended that the political clout of white residents of west and southwest Atlanta was diminishing relative to that of whites on the North Side. One reason was that the number of whites in the older communities on the West Side was decreasing. In these areas, political and social alliances were once strong and the residents exerted considerable influence over city affairs. As the occupancy of these areas changed completely and rapidly, the sources of cohesion and influence were dispersed and coalitions were severed. The newer white areas on the West Side, such as Peyton Forest and other communities known as West Manor, Cascade Heights, and Beecher Hills (all of which have changed racial occupancy significantly), have not regained the political and social prestige and power that former occupants of the older West Side areas enjoyed. In fact, the incidence of high political, social, and economic status is greater among the new black residents of these areas than among the former white residents.

Finally, in terms of status, to whites in other areas of Atlanta and particularly on the North Side, the fact that the West Side contained large areas of concentrated black occupancy contributed to the notion that the area was being "written off" by the city father's as an area of inevitable transition. The relation between status and race and residency in Atlanta is indicated by the nomenclature of streets on which both races live, although in separate communities. An example is a street in northeast Atlanta which originates in a black community and continues into a white area. At the intersection which separates the two communities, the name of the street changes from Boulevard to Monroe Drive. Even more extraordinary is the fact that during a period of rapid racial transition in a West Side community, the name of the connecting street changed as the transition proceeded block by block.[21]

The elements of "Realtor definition" that are identified in the Peyton Forest conflict serve as a guide to understanding the continuing racial transition and resegregation of southwest Atlanta. However, it is not unusual for transitional area residents today to feel that their community has been deliberately chosen for racial transfer by real estate dealers. The obnoxious presence of pestering realty agents and the proliferation of "for sale" signs largely account for this notion, particularly when the residents perceive the tranquility of similar neighborhoods in other areas. This belief was articulated by a southwest Atlanta resident at a recent "Town Hall" meeting of the Atlanta Community Relations Commission. He said,

> What happens, the black real estate people in this town call me up every day, pester me, to sell my house...I have not seen this happening in any other area of Atlanta, which leads me to believe that this is a planned area for the black man and the white man is not wanted in Southwest Atlanta. The only thing it [real estate solicitation] is doing is turning all of Southwest Atlanta black.[22]

A similar but less radical claim of stabilization advocates is that the harrassing sales techniques of realty firms are dictated by the agents' definition of complete racial transfer as the inevitable result of black entry. Real estate practices which are designed to conform to the irreversible trend of resegregation actually increase the likelihood that complete transition will be effected. In South DeKalb, for example, Mrs. Chapman claims that she had occupied her present residence for twenty years without being solicited by real estate agents inquiring about her intentions to sell her home. She feels it was no mere coincidence that realty agents began to contact her after the first black family bought a home in the area.[23] Similarly, in a suit initiated by the Justice Department in 1970 against six realty firms allegedly engaged in blockbusting in South DeKalb, the prosecuting attorney presented affidavits of residents of recently integrated neighborhoods who had resided there for nineteen years without ever being contacted by real estate firms until blacks moved nearby. The attorney also presented an affidavit from a resident who claimed that he told an agent of the firm cited for blockbusting that the agent's solicitations in the neighborhood were severely hindering the residents' attempts to stabilize the area. The agent responded by referring to Kirkwood, an adjacent community which experienced complete racial change, and told the resident that once an area began the transition, it could not be contained.[24]

[22]Atlanta Community Relations Commission, "Comments Made By Citizens At Town Hall Meeting," March 31, 1971, p.3; remarks by Marion Wood.

However, these indications of the existence of a [illegible]erent pattern of "Realtor definition," and the accompany[illegible]g real estate practices designed to fulfill the definition, constitute only half of what the author meant by the term "Realtor definition." Projected onto the Atlanta scene, [24]William B. Williams, The Atlanta Journal, September 3, 1969.

this term also refers to the protection from black invasion which real estate brokers have provided certain white areas of the city, particularly the socially, economically and politically prestigious and racially homogeneous North Side. The credentials of this white area dictate against the initiative of realty firms to promote the entry of blacks. According to the author of the term "Realtor definition," "Thus Realtors act not only as the 'gate keepers' of status-ful neighborhoods but as 'gate crashers' of nonstatus neighborhoods."[25]

The author of a PhD. dissertation at Yale University built on the "gatekeeper" concept his theory concerning real estate influence in the determination of the composition of residential neighborhoods. The author wrote,

> This study in social control explores the role of the real estate agent as a "gate-keeper" of the community's residential areas. It is proposed that...real estate agents play a significant role in the structuring of residential areas by selling houses in any given area to those customers who, by virtue of their statuses and personal character-istics, symbolize cultural values which are similar to the cultural values symbolized by the past and present residents of that given area.[26]

[25]Fishman, op. cit., p. 133.

[26]Stuart H. Palmer, "The Role of the Real Estate Agent in the Structuring of Residential Areas: A Study in Social Control" (unpublished Ph.D. thesis, Yale University, 1955), pp I, 16-17.

Conversely, realty agents do not sell homes to customers who symbolize cultural values which are dissimilar to the residents of an area. The most important cultural values are race, ethnic origin, religion, and income. As the basis for his thesis, the author examined the past three sales of fifty real estate brokers in New Haven, Connecticut. He discovered that 90% of the sales were made to customers whose cultural values were similar to those of the residents in the area where property was purchased. In nearly all these cases, the matching of cultural values did not occur merely by chance. He found that it happened either because the real estate agent guided the customer into an area whose cultural values were approximately equal to those of the customer or because the customer chose such an area and the agent concurred in that choice.[27]

The agents' most frequently employed techniques of control included the automatic matching of customers and areas, distortion of facts concerning the availability of property for sale, and the agents' warning to the unwanted customer of unhappiness as a resident in the area. Other methods included the agents' avoidance of a customer and warning to the customer of physical harm if he purchased property in an inappropriate area. The high incidence of the agents' success in matching customers to communities led the author to conclude, "Unquestionably, agents are efficient gatekeepers of the community's residential areas."[28]

However, realty agents do not perform their discriminatory acts in a social vacuum and they do not deserve all the blame for the perpetuation of segregated housing patterns. Responsibility must be dispersed among lending institutions and builders as well as realty agents. The former sectors of the private housing industry commonly play less visible roles in the scheme of residential segregation and discrimination but are influential participants in determining the success or failure of peacefully integrated neighborhoods.

According to the Commission on Race and Housing, mortgage institutions have "provided major support for racial segregation by their policy of lending to non-whites only in certain areas and refusing to finance the purchase of housing by non-whites in white neighborhoods."[29] Similarly, in 1968 the Georgia State Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights reported that the "overriding concern" of most of Atlanta's bankers was for "tranquility" rather than for the formation of policies to aid in the development of an open and desegregated city.[30] Commenting on his firm's policy concerning mortgage loans to blacks purchasing homes in white or "controversial" neighborhoods, an officer of one of Atlanta's largest lending institutions told the committee, "I think we'd be reluctant to do that due to it might - and it has - caused discord and reflect upon us in some way."[31] The committee concluded, "Generally, the bankers did not feel that their institutions bore any responsibility for encouraging equal opportunity in housing in Atlanta."[32]

Similarly, the committee discovered "a denial of basic responsibility" in the attitude of builders toward establishing an open housing market.[33] In reply to questions concerning the willingness of builders to sell houses to blacks in all-white subdivisions, a representative of the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Atlanta said,

> If this question implies that a builder might...sell to a Negro family or construct for a Negro family in a location not otherwise being marketed to Negro families, we doubt very much whether such could be accomplished in Atlanta, Georgia, at this time.
> We believe there are several distinct and separate housing markets in this community. There is a white housing market and a Negro housing market.[34]

Nevertheless, the component of the housing industry in Atlanta that most directly contributes to the perpetuation of segregated housing patterns and therefore is most frequently criticized for many aspects of its involvement, is the private real estate industry. A former Justice Department attorney who prosecuted blockbusting and discrimination cases against realty firms in Atlanta from 1968 to 1970 asserts that nearly every white real estate broker in the city is engaged in discriminatory practices. Furthermore, he is convinced that most black firms deliberately seek to perpetuate the system that excludes blacks from white areas. The financial rewards for their participation are great.[35]

The forms of discriminatory and exclusionary real estate practices in Atlanta may be divided into three categories: refusal to deal with blacks seeking homes in all-white areas, "negative selling," and misrepresentation on the availability of homes in white areas. Although these practices are not mutually exclusive of each other and may be employed simultaneously by a realty agent to prevent a black from buying in a white area, they will be explained individually here. The main sources of evidence which point to the existence of these practices are the allegations of open housing advocates, the experiences of citizens who have received discriminatory treatment from realty agents and the investigation and subsequent exposure of some of these practices in housing discrimination suits.

Misrepresentation of the availability of homes in white areas is a common form of real estate discrimination, according to the president of the Southwest Atlantans for Progress (SWAP). Based on his experiences, he claims to know of some cases and to suspect many other instances in which a realty agent informed an inquiring black customer that a home in a white area either had been withdrawn from the market by the owner or that a contract for the purchase of the property had just been signed, when in fact neither was the case.[36] This practice was exposed in a recent law suit brought by the Justice Department against an Atlanta firm, Northside Realty Associates. Among other charges which will be discussed later, the company was cited for "representing to prospective Negro purchasers that homes are unavailable which are in fact on the market."[37] The effect of misrepresentation is, as in the other forms of discrimination, to exclude blacks from purchasing property in particular areas and to force them to seek property in areas "open" for their occupancy.

The same official of SWAP alleges that "negative selling" techniques are commonly employed by realty agents to discourage the purchase by blacks of property in white areas. He explains that selling a home normally requires a certain effort on the part of the salesman. An effective way for a realty agent to inhibit the intentions of a customer and to frustrate the customer, for example, is by delaying his request for an appointment to see the property or by not keeping an appointment to show the property.[38]

Negative selling might also include the salesman's efforts to make the property appear as unattractive as possible. This practice was admitted by the owner of one of Atlanta's luxury apartments who was attempting to keep his apartments all-white.[39] Evidence of this practice also emerges from a study conducted in 1967 on the racial policies and practices of randomly selected Atlanta realty firms. The study was carried out by Al Henry, a black research assistant of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta. He responded to newspaper advertisements which listed property for sale in white areas in Atlanta. When Henry inquired at a realty firm about a certain listing in a white neighborhood in southwest Atlanta, the agent replied that Henry would find life in the area quite unpleasant. However, as an alternative, the agent attempted to accomodate Henry's apparent desire for property in southwest Atlanta by offering to show him a home for sale on a street already partially occupied by blacks.[40]

Another form of "negative selling" has elements of misrepresentation; that is, the practice of a realty firm to raise the price on a piece of property in a white area when the firm discovers that a black family is interested in its purchase. Evidence of this practice is based on the experiences of a black woman testifying in 1967 during the hearings of the Georgia State Advisory Committee in Atlanta. Relating her experiences as a bona fide prospective homebuyer seeking property in a white neighborhood, she told the committee,

> Most of the homes were listed by white Realtors, and they were wonderful over the phone. They were not able to detect [my] race. I was given prices, and appointments were established. Once [my racial] identity was known, the houses were not available, and if available, the price had increased from $2,000 to $4,000.[41]

Another black woman told an Atlanta church group in 1968 about the obstacles she faced in finding cooperative realty agents who would help her to locate a home in a white area. Of the treatment commonly accorded to her by the real estate dealers she contacted, she said, "We've been getting the 'run-around.' When they find out I'm a Negro the price goes up or they decide it's not for sale.[42]

In the course of the research on the racial practices of Atlanta realty firms by Al Henry, he discovered that a number of firms had a policy of not showing homes in white areas to black customers. Posing as a homebuyer interested in property listed in white areas, he was consistently refused service by white real estate firms. An example of the response he received to his inquiries is contained in the following account of a conversation with a white real estate salesman. The home in question was located in a white subdivision north of Atlanta.

> Henry - "Is this area open to Negroes?"
> Salesman - "No, it is not open! It is less open than any other area."
> Henry - "Why?"
> Salesman - "It is further from the city. There are no Nigras concentrated in this area. The people here are less tolerant. There won't be any Nigras in that area for 30 years. If a Nigra tried to come in it would be for agitation and not because of desire."[43]

More recent instances of the refusal of Atlanta realty firms to deal with blacks seeking homes in white areas have been exposed in two housing discrimination suits initiated by the Justice Department. The first suit was brought to court in June, 1970, and an injunction against the continuation of the firm's discriminatory practices was issued by a federal judge in November. The court found that the realty firm followed a policy of refusing to show or to sell homes to blacks except in all-black or transitional areas. Furthermore, the firm deliberately discouraged white customers who expressed an interest in property located in all-black or transitional areas. The incident upon which the case was based took place in South DeKalb County. The realty company refused to sell a house on an all-white street in the area to a black customer. The owner of the property told the firm's agent that "he preferred not to sell his property to a Negro, to which the agent replied that he would 'do his best.'"[44] In response to a challenge to the legality of his company's policy, a co-owner of the firm replied, "I don't care about federal laws. I have my own company policy and I will not sell to a black family where there are no other black families living nearby."[45] He also told the prosecuting Justice Department attorney that the company had a policy of "not being the first real estate company to sell a house to a Negro in any white area," and that the policy was implemented by concealing from black customers the listing of property available in white areas.[46]

Open housing advocates have alleged the existence of another source of housing discrimination which was exposed in a law suit recently. It has been a common notion that most white real estate firms on the North Side have sought to systematically exclude blacks from purchasing property in North Atlanta. These suspicions were largely confirmed when the Justice Department filed a housing discrimination suit against a reputable real estate company located on the North Side. The company, Northside Realty Associates, was responsible for the largest residential sales volume in the state in 1970. For the past year, Northside reported a sales volume of $60.5 million on 1,402 sales; its nearest competitor in Atlanta effected sales totalling $23.5 million.[47] Even more significant, however, is the fact that the executive vice-president of the firm Ed Isakson, is the chairman of the Georgia Real Estate Commission, the official state regulatory body over real estate firms in Georgia.

In the suit, filed July 10, 1970, Northside Realty was accused of simply refusing to deal with blacks in general, and specifically of refusing to show or sell homes to blacks who inquired about homes in all-white areas. The suit charged further that blacks attempting to purchase homes are referred to other firms which traditionally have sold homes to blacks and which sell homes in all-black or integrated neighborhoods. Finally, the company was charged with misrepresenting the availability of homes in white areas to prospective black buyers.[48]

The attorney who is now prosecuting the case for the Justice Department reports that a pre-trial conference is set for April 29. He is confident of the conclusiveness of the evidence against Northside Realty. The witnesses include two black couples who were refused service by the firm when they indicated a desire to purchase homes listed by the company on the North Side. The Justice Department attorney suspects that similar discriminatory practices are employed by many white real estate firms in all sections of the Atlanta area. He adds that some black realty firms cooperate in this scheme of discrimination by accepting referrals of black homebuyers from white firms and by showing them only homes in black or transitional neighborhoods. These black firms are reluctant to expose their white compatriates because of the financial rewards available through this scheme to themselves.[49]

An Atlanta real estate broker and two officials of the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards, an affiliate of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, confirmed in personal interviews the illegal practices with which Ed Isakson and Northside Realty are charged. The broker, who is a close associate of Isakson, deals mainly in residential property in southwest Atlanta, including the black and transitional neighborhoods in the area. He admits to having had Isakson refer blacks to him after Isakson either refused to deal with them or after they were unable to fulfill the economic requirements of purchasing a home on the North Side.[50] Another close friend of Isakson offered similar evidence. This man is also a broker, as well as being the director of the largest real estate school in Georgia and the 1971 president of the Georgia Real Estate Board. He also acknowledged Isakson's participation in the discriminatory practices for which he is charged and he named a black real estate firm on the West Side as a primary recipient of Isakson's referrals.[51] Finally, the executive vice-president of the Georgia Real Estate Board and another admirer and confidante of Isakson provided an additional insight. She asserted that Isakson "won't sell to 'niggers' and never has, and never will."

[51]John C. Correll, Director, Georgia Institute of Real Estate, Incorporated; owner, The Realty Group, Inc., Atlanta; personal interview, December 16, 1970.

She also claimed that Isakson personally admitted to her that he refused to deal with the black homebuyers who are the principal complainants in the suit against his firm.[52]

Commenting on the suit against Isakson and Northside Realty, a former Justice Department attorney who was the original prosecutor in the case summarized some of the major themes of this chapter which seeks to establish the role of the real estate industry in the perpetuation of Atlanta's segregated housing. His comments draw the focus sharply onto the Atlanta housing scene. He said, "The pattern all over Atlanta is very much related. If Isakson is referring Negroes to southeast and southwest Atlanta firms it makes it possible for them to blockbust...It makes the black fellow who comes to Northside for a house available as a tool to be used by blockbusters." He added that if homes were available to blacks on a non-discriminatory basis in the North Side areas, there would be less pressure on transitional areas to supply the housing necessary to meet the black demand.[53]

Even though the Isakson case involves an allegedly prime source of housing discrimination in Atlanta, its impact as a deterrent against the practices of other companies similarly engaged in discriminatory acts is uncertain. The real estate broker previously mentioned as a recipient of black referrals from Isakson does not expect him to suffer financially or to find his position on the state Real Estate Commission to be in jeopardy if Isakson receives an unfavorable disposition of the case against him.[54] Furthermore, although open housing advocates in Atlanta are pleased with the exposure of Isakson's firm, they are largely dissatisfied with the nature and the enforcement of the open housing laws. As in blockbusting, the incidence of discriminatory acts committed by realty firms far exceeds the number of cases that are brought to court. The enforcement of the federal fair housing law is based almost wholly on individual complaints. This system requires the individual citizen to comprehend the provisions of the law and to spend a great deal of time initiating the legal procedures. Commenting on the orientation of the Nixon Administration to concentrate its fair housing resources mainly on the individual report system, the author of an article in the March, 1971, edition of South Today writes,

> ...reliance on individual complaints to the exclusion of other administrative policies is an unrealistic and inadequate method of coping with such a complex and widespread problem in housing discrimination.[55]

[55]Horace Barker, "Open Housing," South Today, II, No. 7 (March, 1971), p. 4.

A final source of discrimination and segregation in Atlanta's housing is the segregated institutional structure of the real estate industry in Atlanta. The professional real estate boards, the Atlanta Real Estate Board and the Empire Real Estate Board, are racially homogeneous except for one black firm which was admitted to the Atlanta Board in 1969. Although the executive secretary of the Atlanta Board denies that race is involved in membership invitation,[56] an influential Atlanta Realtor summarily dismisses the idea of admitting any more black firms to the board on the grounds that most black real estate brokers are simply not good enough businessmen to assume the title of"Realtor," which accompanies membership in the board.[57] On the other hand, members of the Empire Board do not perceive a need to actively seek membership in the Atlanta Board. The president of the Empire Board has said, "There has been no great exodus of blacks out of the Empire Board to the Atlanta Board, and there won't be. What can happen is that blacks might dissolve themselves in a white group and lose their identity and effectiveness. This is to admit white superiority."[58]

[58]Tom Walker, "Open Housing Pinch Hurts," The Atlanta Journal and Constitution (Sunday edition), October 26, 1969, p. 16-H; remarks by Otis Thorpe.

A direct consequence of racially separated real estate boards is the existence of racially homogeneous multiple-listing systems through which brokers share their listings of property for sale and advertise them in common. Any broker who is a member of the system becomes eligible for a commission on finding a buyer for any of the listed properties. According to Professor Duane Lockard, "This is the major method of marketing housing, and the exclusion of Negroes from participation achieves two goals. It rules out Negro broker competition and more importantly reduces the chances that a Negro purchaser will bid on a house."[59] One of the multiple-listing systems in Atlanta consists of twenty prestigious white North Side firms, which specialize in property in north Atlanta. The other system consists of forty-nine white realty firms, dispersed throughout the metropolitan area. Black firms are glaringly absent from membership in these systems in Atlanta, thus creating the situation described by Professor Lockard.

Further evidence of the racially separated territories in which black and white brokers operate was provided by the brokers in Atlanta who responded to the survey for this thesis. The brokers were asked, "In which general section(s) of the Atlanta area are most of your sales made?" The sixteen white brokers replied that they operate mainly in white neighborhoods on the North Side and in the lower southwest Atlanta area. Of the nine black brokers, five replied only southwest Atlanta, and four replied southwest and parts of northwest Atlanta, both areas containing large black populations.

Apparently, cooperation between black and white brokers is limited to the lucrative form of discriminatory referrals of black customers from white North Side firms to black firms dealing mainly in property in black or transitional areas, thus perpetuating the separate societies. The president of the Empire Board has said that "an avenue of open housing would be to admit black brokers to currently all-white multiple-listing services."[60] However, this statement may be discounted largely as rhetoric, considering the continued complicity of black realty firms in schemes of exclusionary practices.

The cumulative force of the tradition of segregated housing in Atlanta and of the prevalence of exclusionary real estate policies toward blacks creates an oppressive atmosphere for blacks seeking decent housing outside the ghetto. The notion that segregated residential areas are inevitable pervades the Atlanta environment. Recently, a black housing consultant was exposed to the feeling, which he explained in the following way:

[60]Walker, op. cit.; remarks by Otis Thorpe.

> Once I got lost in suburban Atlanta. It was a terrible feeling, because all the people stared at me. They seemed to be thinking, "What's a black man doing in this neighborhood?"
>
> We'll never have integrated housing in Atlanta unless that attitude is erased. And only the institutions that go into building a community - the banks, the developers, the real estate men - can erase it.
> Unlike a white man, I can't move anywhere I please.[61]

Added to these sources of restriction is the fear of physical harm or hostility if the black man defies tradition, refuses discriminatory treatment, and breaks into a "protected" white area. Professor Lockard articulates this fear and its consequences.

> ...it must be admitted that part of the reason for the perpetuation of the ghetto is to be found in the attitudes of Negroes themselves...The Negro understandably does not wish to be the target of open violence or sullen hostility, and does not press against the walls of the ghetto as hard as he might, for he does not have to search much to find ample evidence of the hostility that has been turned upon those who do break out.[62]

[61]Maxine A. Rock, "Housing Bias in Atlanta Is Criticized," The Atlanta Journal, October 14, 1970; remarks by James S. Robinson.

[62]Lockard, op. cit., p. 106; Professor Lockard proceeds to make an important point, but one which is tangential to this discussion. He writes, "To some extent also the Negro prefers the company of 'his own kind,' to use the cliche' of the racist. Because in a degree the Negro exists in a subculture within the United States, he is therefore more at ease among his own race." (pp. 106-107).

Relating his personal experience as the first black on a white street in Atlanta in 1965, Samuel Adams recalls,

> I remember the first night - the sound of gunshots fired above the house, the sight of cherry bombs and Molotov cocktails tossed on the lawn...It is not possible to erase such memories.[63]

Although the anticipation of such extreme hostility may not cross every black homeseeker's mind, at least the anticipation of discriminatory treatment may inhibit the search by blacks of property outside black or transitional areas. Regardless of the specific form of restriction - deliberately imposed by a discriminatory realty agent or self-imposed as a result of the anticipation of unwanted events - a recent survey conducted for this thesis of a group of black residents in previously all-white areas of southwest Atlanta and South DeKalb yielded data which points to the existence of these restrictions as perceived by black Atlantans. Out of sixteen respondents to the questionnaire which attempted to determine their experience in the Atlanta housing market, twelve (75%) responded affirmatively to the question, "During the period of time when you were considering the purchase of a new home, did you feel that racial matters restricted the areas in which you might buy a home?"[64]

A white housing consultant in Atlanta feels that

"every step along the way of purchasing a home, there are restraints on blacks." He discounts the importance of neighborhood opposition by white residents as a major deterrent against the purchase of property by a black. He says that the heads of the leading housing institutions are the chief deterrents. "The whole system is at fault" for Atlanta's rigid racial separation. Where there is no overt discrimination, there is at least no receptivity to blacks who wish to exercise territorial freedom in the selection of property and a home. The system is negative toward successfully integrated residential areas. Under the current system, a black family must be willing to sacrifice a great deal to live on the North Side. Finally, he emphasizes, the tradition of racially separate neighborhoods dictates against an altered pattern. The only way to end this tradition is to force change, either through additional legislation or through a massive assault on public opinion. He feels that the prospects for indigenous change in the housing industry are extremely dim.[65]

A stabilization leader in South DeKalb, who also is a former community worker with the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) in Atlanta, has written, "As a result of various studies done by the AFSC and the National Committee

Against Discrimination in Housing, I do not believe that the [real estate] industry is prone to change.[66] A former Justice Department attorney concurs in this analysis.[67]

In April, 1969, Reg Murphy, the editor of The Atlanta Constitution, began an editorial by discussing the response to an article printed in the Constitution a few days earlier. The previous article described how a real estate salesman tried to induce white residents in southwest Atlanta to list their homes for sale. Murphy wrote that many of the people responding to the article suggested that "there was a need for either the federal government or the real estate boards to act." He then posed the question, "But will they?"; and as evidence which prompted his doubt, he reprinted part of a letter from the executive secretary of the Atlanta Real Estate Board concerning the paper's previous article. The real estate official focused on the newspaper's misuse of the term "Realtor", which was applied to the realty agent described in the earlier article. The official explained the meaning of the term and urged the newspaper to avoid the error in the future. The letter offered no opinion on the realty agent's block-busting practices. The tone of the letter was pedantic, and it concluded with, "Thank you for the proper use of our Realtor term in the future." Obviously annoyed by the narrow-minded perspective of the board official, Murphy wrote in his editorial, "I leave it to you, gentle reader, to say whether an association that thinks like that is likely to take any constructive steps to stop blockbusting."[68]

An explanation for the behavior of the real estate official described in Murphy's editorial would require an incisive exploration into the nature of the real estate industry in Atlanta - particularly its perceptions of the open housing movement and its perception of its own role in the social and racial environment. An exploration of the real estate industry in its institutionalized forms as well as its individual components might yield clues to the prospects for change in Atlanta's segregated housing patterns, established by tradition and maintained currently by real estate influence. Such an exploration is attempted in the following chapter.

CHAPTER IV

THE RACIAL REAL ESTATE IDEOLOGY

> A Realtor should never be instrumental in introducing into a neighborhood a character of property or occupancy, members of any race or nationality, or any individuals whose presence will clearly be detrimental to property values in that neighborhood.
>
> NAREB, Code of Ethics
> Article 34, Part III, 1924-50.

The factors which explain the behavior of real estate dealers in Atlanta on matters of race and residence are found in the nature of the real estate industry, its institutions and ideology, and in the perceptions of the individual realty agent concerning his service to the community. Also of importance in determining patterns of behavior are the rewards, financial especially, which accrue to the agent through the performance of certain activities and which are defended against change by brokers as a group.

The literature on the orientations of the real estate institution in its various forms and of individual brokers toward the issues of race and residence points to the existence of a definable set of beliefs which largely determine the behavior of realty agents in situations where race is involved. The most comprehensive study of the racial orientation of the real estate industry was conducted by Rose Helper and recorded in Racial Policies and Practices of Real Estate Brokers, published in 1970.[1] On the basis of Miss Helper's survey of the racial practices of brokers in Chicago, she offered the concept of a "racial real estate ideology", defined as "a group of related ideas, values, beliefs and principles," whose "logical outcome" constituted the basis for the brokers' racial practices.[2] This chapter attempts to ascertain the existence of this ideology within the framework of the real estate business in Atlanta, to determine the origin of the particular elements, and to estimate the influence of this ideology on real estate practices in Atlanta.

Seeking to establish the position of the real estate institution within the industry as a whole, Miss Helper wrote,

> One concerned with the racial policies and practices of real estate men cannot avoid being concerned with the real estate institution, for it is within the framework of the institution that the racial policies and practices of real estate men took shape and are maintained. And it is through the real estate men, the practitioners of the institution, that these racial policies and practices have to be understood. Thus, the study on the restriction on housing of the minority group becomes largely the study of the real estate institution... This institution is the force operating behind the real estate man's practices.[3]

The institution includes not only the organizations through which the collective goals and interests of real estate dealers are articulated and actively pursued, but also the sources of real estate education and the regulatory agencies.

In the Atlanta area, the principal real estate organizations are the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards, the Atlanta Real Estate Board, the DeKalb Board of Realtors, and the black Empire Real Estate Board. The first three organizations are affiliates of the National Association of Real Estate Boards (NAREB). The conformity of the constituent boards with the pronouncements of NAREB may not be absolute in all cases, but a high degree of uniformity is emphasized throughout the organization and does appear to exist. Miss Helper wrote, "The real estate institution becomes articulate as a unified whole through the National Association of Real Estate Boards. NAREB represents the consensus of the views of most real estate boards in the United States."[4]

The local boards' insistence on strict adherence to the national Code of Ethics is one of the most visible sources of organizational unity. The Code pronounces the proper practices and relations which the broker should maintain with his colleagues, his clients, and the general public. Membership in the board is limited by a selection process which, in the case of the Atlanta Board, requires recommendations for membership by at least three active members of the Board and a determination of acceptability by the Board's Membership Committee. The applicant must supply evidence to the committee which indicates, in accordance with the By-Laws of the Board, that "he has established in the community a favorable reputation for professional conduct..." Furthermore, he must "subscribe in writing to the Code of Ethics of the Board and the National Association of Real Estate Boards."[5] These requirements insure the conformity of new members not only to the Code, but also to the current patterns of thought among Realtors and to the traditions and mores of the organization.

[4]Ibid., p. 190.

The registered title of "Realtor" accompanies membership with the board and is reserved solely for the identification of the members of NAREB. "Realtor" is advertised as the sign of a real estate dealer whose business is conducted in a highly professional manner. Board officials assert that the possession of the title pays financial dividends. Open housing advocates also recognize this fact. According to Charles Abrams, author of Forbidden Neighbors, expulsion from the board for a violation of the Code of Ethics, and consequently the loss of the title "Realtor", would mean "the loss of livelihood since...mortgage companies, banks, insurance companies, other 'realtors', and larger property-owners generally deal only with 'realtors'."[6]

Unity throughout the organization is indicated also by the consistent opposition of the national board and its affiliates against proposed plans of outside intervention,

particularly by the government in the role of a regulatory agency, which would restrict the individual Realtor's discretion in the performance of his business and might reduce the financial rewards which the Realtor secures through the execution of certain policies. A prominent example of this sign of unity was the attempt by NAREB and its local boards and members to prevent the passage of Title VIII, the so-called "Fair Housing" provision of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, which made blockbusting and racially discriminatory real estate practices illegal.[7]

These examples of institutional conformity and unity within NAREB point to the need to determine the contribution of the national organization to the formation of an alleged racial real estate ideology. NAREB, through the Code of Ethics, position papers drafted and adopted at national conferences and conventions, its educational resources, and congressional testimony and lobbying efforts, has disseminated ideas on the nature of the real estate business. These sources may not mention race specifically, but they often are relevant to the Realtor's proper conduct when racial concerns enter into the sale and transfer of property. These ideas have been widely accepted throughout the industry as standard rules of behavior and constitute important elements of the racial real estate ideology.

The most concise expression of the main goals and ideas of Realtors is contained in the Code of Ethics. The "Preamble" to the Code asserts the role of the Realtor as one of great responsibility for the welfare and development of the country. It reads:

> The Realtor is the instrumentality through which the land resource of the nation reaches its highest use and through which land ownership attains its widest distribution. He is a creator of homes, a builder of cities, a developer of industries and productive farms.
>
> Such functions impose obligations beyond those of ordinary commerce. They impose grave social responsibility and a patriotic duty to which the Realtor should dedicate himself, and for which he would be diligent in preparing himself.[8]

One of the primary obligations of the Realtor to the public is to prevent damage to the property values in the community he serves. Miss Helper wrote, "The emphasis on property values pervades the business of real estate."[9] Article 5, Part I, of the Code instructs the Realtor:

> The Realtor should not be instrumental in introducing into a neighborhood a character of property or use which will clearly be detrimental to property values in that neighborhood.[10]

Taken alone, this statement might appear to have little relevance to matters of discrimination toward minority groups. However, the interpretation of Article 5 must also include the history of its original adoption and subsequent amending. The influence of the real estate institution on the development of a racial real estate ideology which is highly unfavorable to blacks and which supports the exclusion of blacks from white areas, is established most clearly through an examination of the conception of Article 5.

A prominent component of the racial real estate ideology expressed by NAREB is the racial theory of property values which states that property values decline when blacks enter a white neighborhood. According to John Denton, author of Apartheid American Style, "The doctrine that minority entry means declining real estate values was developed by NAREB and became one of the cornerstones of appraisal theory and practice."[11] The origin and development of Article 5 provides the basis for this statement. The derivative of the current Article 5 was conceived at the NAREB national convention in 1924. From 1924 to 1950 it read:

> A Realtor should never be instrumental in introducing into a neighborhood a character of property or occupancy, members of any race or nationality, or any individuals whose presence will clearly be detrimental to property values in that neighborhood.[12]

The Article was enforced under the penalty of expulsion from the board. Its form remained essentially the same until 1956, when it was amended to the present form.

Miss Helper ascertained from a series of interviews with board officials in Chicago that the amendments to Article 5 did not alter its original meaning and that the phrase, "a character of property or use," covered the introduction of blacks.[13] In 1963, a Realtor in Sarasota, Florida, was expelled from her local board for charges based on her policy to sell property without racial restrictions, although her policy was not named in the case as the basis for dismissal.[14] In 1967, Denton wrote,

> The change in the Code of Ethics has had little impact on the practice of realtors; and throughout the industry it has been recognized that the change in the wording was a mere device to create a better image for the realtor. Realtors continued their discriminatory patterns of behavior and few seemed to understand that a board member who would fight for his rights could now sell to a non-white buyer in a previously all-white neighborhood without risking expulsion from the board.[15]

In recent personal interviews, an official of the Real Estate Board and of the Georgia Board both denied any guideline that Article 5 might provide today for the Realtor's behavior in the disposal of property where race was involved.[16]

However, perhaps a bit unrealistically, the official of the Atlanta Board, whose denial was more emphatic, asserted that the Code's racial overtones were immediately erased upon the amending of Article 5. Overlooked, or perhaps deliberately ignored, was the force of the tradition that sanctioned for over forty years racially discriminatory practices by the Realtor. Consequently, there remains a residue of suspicion that many local boards privately scorn members who sell property without racial restriction and may initiate measures to socially and commercially ostracize the erring members, without creating a public furor by expelling the Realtor from the board.

The racial theory of property values, originating in Article 5 of the Code of Ethics, was disseminated and reinforced in textbooks which prepared students for the licensing examination. These books, most of which were written under the auspices of NAREB and sometimes by NAREB officials, overwhelmingly supported the racial theory of property values. At the basis of this theory is the notion that residential homogeneity - by race, ethnic origin, and income level especially - enhances the desirability of property in a neighborhood and thus maximizes and stabilizes property values. Following a survey of the material most widespread in real estate courses, Miss Helper reflected on its contents.

> According to my sources...homogeneity makes for stability.
> Negroes are different racially and have different economic and social levels from white people. When Negroes enter an area, they break down its compatability and hence its stability... Values decline from the time Negroes begin to approach the area.[17]

The logical conclusion of this reasoning is that the stability of property values in white residential neighborhoods depends on maintaining racial homogeneity.

The Realtor's obligation to the (white) community comes into sharper focus now. Article 5 directs the Realtor to exclude from the neighborhood anything which might damage property values. The available information and prevailing public and institutional thought advocate homogeneity as the prerequisite for stable property values. Under these circumstances, the Realtor could reasonably perceive his role in the sale of property to a black person in a white area as a violation of the Code of Ethics. Harm to the neighborhood and to his professional group would clearly be the results of the Realtor's failure to exclude blacks from white areas. He may help blacks to acquire housing, but not in white neighborhoods.

The basis for NAREB's opposition to proposed federal legislation promoting open housing exposes another set of beliefs which contribute to a racial real estate ideology.

[17] Helper, op. cit., p. 216.

The ideological grounds for opposition to fair housing laws, which declare illegal any complicity of real estate brokers in discriminatory practices, are based largely on beliefs concerning the absolutely worthwhile qualities of the free enterprise system and private property ownership.

The "Preamble" to the Code of Ethics states, "Under all is the land. Upon its wise utilization and widely allocated ownership depend the survival and growth of free institutions and of our civilization."[18] After having absorbed numerous NAREB policy statements and interpretations of the Code, Miss Helper discerned the following pattern: "In all these documents, there is the same emphasis on individual enterprise as the mainspring of the American way of life and on the right to own property as the most basic human right."[19] Fair housing legislation violates both of these principles: It restricts the discretion allowed the Realtor in the execution of his business by denying him the right to discriminate against customers who the broker feels do not conform to the social values of the residents of a particular area; and it restricts the right of the property owner to dispose of his property as he sees fit, regardless of the racial or ethnic implications of his actions.

The authors of The Politics of Fair-Housing Legislation, state,

[18] Code of Ethics, "Preamble."

[19] Helper, op. cit., p. 194.

> Real estate brokers have been the group most stubbornly opposed to fair-housing laws. For some years now they have labeled the legislation "forced-housing laws," charging that by this means the state is infringing on property rights by forcing people to dispose of their housing to persons they would not ordinarily choose.[20]

In 1963, NAREB issued a policy statement on minority housing in which it expressed its opposition to open occupancy legislation that would restrict the rights of the owner in regard to his property. It read in part,

> Realtors may properly oppose any attempt by force of law to withdraw from property owners the right freely to determine with whom they will deal with respect to their property... and any law or regulation which would operate to prevent a real estate broker from representing any property owner or faithfully abiding by the terms and conditions of any agency stipulated by the property owner.[21]

Article 11, Part II, of the Code of Ethics provides an additional base for the Realtor's opposition to fair housing legislation. This Article asserts that the Realtor's "obligation of absolute fidelity in the client's interest is primary..."[22] Fair housing laws create a fundamental conflict between the Realtor's obligation to his client and to federally imposed legal requirements.

[22] Code of Ethics, Article 11, Part II.

In a NAREB document entitled "Forcing the Door," a Realtor argued against adoption of the "forced housing title," Title IV, of the proposed Civil Rights Bill of 1966. The Realtor's arguments, which were presented before a congressional subcommittee considering the bill, included many of the strands of institutional real estate opposition to fair housing legislation. The Realtor introduced his remarks by citing the formal policy statement of NAREB concerning the proposed statute. The statement asserted NAREB's "support of the principle of equal opportunity in the acquisition and enjoyment of real property" as well as "the right of individuals to determine the disposition of that property."[23] The NAREB statement said further: "We raise our voice against the injection of the element of legal compulsion - of the police expedient - in the relations of a home owner or any other residential property owner and the one who seeks to buy or rent his property." To that, the Realtor added, "Compelling the home owner or rental owner of real estate to enter into a contract with one not of his choice is an affront to the American tradition of freedom of contract..." The Realtor claimed also that attempts at enforcement of the bill "are certain to affect adversely the sale or transfer of homes." Finally, he argued, race relations "will be retarded, not enhanced, by the enactment of this measure."[24]

In summary, although NAREB has traditionally advocated homogeneity as the natural characteristic of a stable neighborhood, it has recently endorsed the principle of equal opportunities in housing. However, NAREB's endorsement must be considered token in light of its consistent opposition against attempts to implement open housing. According to NAREB, the means proposed to enforce fair housing legislation not only violate some of the basic principles of the American way of life, but also order Realtors to conduct their business in a manner which they might perceive as unethical.

The contribution of NAREB's constituent boards to the formation of an institutional racial real estate ideology consists largely of conformity with national pronouncements of policy and communication to board members of the board's stand on issues of local concern. In Atlanta, the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards, the Atlanta Board, and the DeKalb Board are considered the elite of the local real estate industry. Their influence over local real estate practices appears to be substantial, even though the Atlanta and DeKalb Boards contain only about one-fourth of the total number of real estate agents actively engaged in the business in the Fulton-DeKalb County area. Evidence of the boards' control over local realty policies and practice was exposed in a recent anti-trust suit against the Atlanta Board. The Justice Department charged the Board with exercising such strict control over the commission rates charged by real estate dealers in Atlanta, that Atlantans have been denied the right of "competitively determined prices." The suit alleged that the board and its members have agreed to uniform commission rates that have been published, circulated and adhered to by most brokers in Atlanta.[25]

Board officials, however, deny any control the Board may possess over the practices of non-Realtors, especially where matters of business ethics are concerned. They are quick to distinguish between Realtors who allegedly operate within a strict ethical framework, and non-Realtors who they claim conduct their affairs in an ethical and institutional void. Mrs. Tommie Jackson, the executive secretary of the Atlanta Board, indicts nonmembers in general as renegades in the industry. She claims that their compliance with the Code of Ethics is absolutely voluntary. Therefore, they are eminently more prone to violate the Code's provisions than Board members. On the other hand, she expresses unequivocal confidence in board members to conform to the Code. She reports that during her ten years with the Board, she has received only one complaint concerning an Atlanta Realtor involved in unethical racial sales tactics, while she has received hundreds of complaints provoked by the actions of non-Realtors.[26]

Of course, such generalizations produce distortions. The truth of her comments about the reputable practices of Realtors and the disreputable affairs of non-Realtors probably lies somewhere between the two extremes. Also, her comments must be considered in light of the Board's deliberate attempts to portray the Realtor as an enlightened businessman. Furthermore, the probability that a real estate dealer might be receptive to enlightened racial practices does not necessarily depend on his adherence to the NAREB Code of Ethics.[27]

The record of the local boards in the Atlanta area on fair housing legislation conforms closely to the consistent opposition of NAREB to such legislative schemes. In 1963, for example, the Atlanta Board issued a statement which expressed opposition to "forced housing" laws and concern

[26]Mrs. Tommie Jackson, personal interview, December 16, 1970.

[27]This final point was established in the discussion of NAREB influence in the formation of a racial real estate ideology.

"about the rights and freedoms of the individual property owner." The statement was issued as an endorsement of the policy NAREB previously had announced on minority housing. The Atlanta Realtors declared their sympathy with inequalities in housing opportunities, but said that the problem must not be solved by destroying the rights of property owners to freely dispose of their property. The Board stated further,

> It is our solemn belief that the individual American property owner...must be allowed to retain the following rights: Privacy; to have friends, to own and enjoy property; to occupy and dispose of property without governmental interference...[28]

On another occasion, the Atlanta Board president said that board members uniformly supported NAREB's opposition to state and federal laws barring discrimination in housing. On the Realtor's role in the transfer of property where biracial parties are involved, he reiterated the national policy: "It is always the owner's decision as to who the buyer will be."[29]

Similarly, in 1966 the DeKalb Board of Realtors declared that the objective of open occupancy was worthwhile, but that the proposed federal fair housing bill was not the appropriate way to abolish racial discrimination. The president of the Board said that racial prejudice in housing can be abolished only by "understanding and education fostered voluntarily by churches, schools and all men of good will. It cannot be achieved by the federal government with all its vast power, wiping out freedom of choice and contract under the guise of providing a new right for minority groups."[39] Noticeably absent in this and all other declarations of institutional opposition to fair housing legislation is the basic fact that discriminatory real estate practices would be outlawed and therefore that the real estate dealer would legally be prohibited from participating in practices which conform to the racial real estate ideology; that is, those practices that insure racial homogeneity by residence.

In fact, Mrs. Jackson of the Atlanta Board emphatically denies any contribution of real estate dealers to the city's segregated housing patterns. She attributes housing segregation primarily to the "birds-of-a-feather" theory. Although many blacks in Atlanta can afford to purchase homes in prestigious white areas, they prefer to remain in traditionally black neighborhoods or in recently converted black areas. Considering the emergence of the black solidarity movement, Mrs. Jackson's opinion is not entirely unfounded. However, "black awareness" is only a recent phenomenon, has not achieved a universal acceptance among blacks, has not been established as a motive in the selection by blacks of areas for occupancy, and because of its recency does not go far toward explaining the past history of housing segregation in Atlanta. Furthermore, the "birds-of-a-feather" notion forms the basis of a dead-end prophecy which dictates against any disruption of the status quo. Assuming that housing segregation is the overwhelming preference of most Atlantans of both races, Mrs. Jackson perceives no rational basis for dissatisfaction with existing housing patterns or for the open housing movement in Atlanta.[31] Thus, as a result of the adoption of policies initiated by NAREB and of the status quo orientation toward local housing patterns, the Atlanta Board can not reasonably be expected to support the goals of open housing and neighborhood stabilization in Atlanta, nor to actively seek to undermine the efforts of open housing advocates, unless a fair housing ordinance is proposed in the city. In fact, the most reasonable behavior that can be expected from the Atlanta Board is a continuation of its institutional insulation from fair housing critics by asserting its monopolization of real estate ethics in the city.

[31]Mrs. Tommie Jackson, personal interview, December 16, 1970.

Neither can the advocacy of open housing be expected to emerge from the leadership of the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards. In fact, the most racist elements of the racial real estate ideology were articulated by the executive vice-president of the Georgia Board, Mrs. Bette Belvins, in a recent personal interview.[32] She introduced her remarks with the declaration that the primary goal of the Realtor is to mate the proper person to the proper home. Enumerating the guidelines which the Realtor should follow in the pursuit of this goal, Mrs. Belvins emphasized that the homogeneity of a neighborhood is necessary to insure the happiness of property owners. "People are happier with their own kind," including blacks, who Mrs. Belvins claimed feel uncomfortable in white areas. She also stressed the racial theory of property values. She felt that property values are bound to decline when blacks enter a white area. Black people in general, she asserted, inherently lack pride of home ownership. Therefore, they ignore the maintenance of their property. She cited numerous instances in the Atlanta area of the physical decline of neighborhoods as an alleged result of the slovenly nature of black people.

Mrs. Belvins divided her remarks between the opinions that involved her status as board official and those that related to her personal beliefs about open housing. She personally was repulsed by the idea of living in the same neighborhood with a black family. She traced the development of her beliefs concerning the civil rights of blacks to the point at which she accepted the notion that blacks are entitled to share public accomodations on an equal basis with whites. An extension to include equal housing opportunities, she could not accept. She claimed to be willing to drive from Augusta to Atlanta (120 miles) every day to work if that was necessary to avoid living near a black family. She was particularly opposed to legislative schemes that "force integration," and preferred gradual or "natural" integration. On the subject of local fair housing groups, Mrs. Belvins asserted that they have been misguided into taking stands against irreversible trends, such as the inevitability of complete racial transition in an integrated area. She also discussed her opposition to federally subsidized home-buying. Noting that about seventy-five percent of applicants to F.H.A. for loans to increase housing opportunities are blacks, she claimed that if a person with his own resources alone can finance the purchase of a $15,000 home, the "government will tell him that that home is not good enough for him" and that he could receive a subsidy to purchase a $25,000 home. The potential effect of federal subsidies to home-buyers is to disrupt the economic and possibly the racial homogeneity of a neighborhood. She said that a better alternative was to confine home-buyers to housing that conforms more closely to their personal purchasing power.

Speaking for the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards, Mrs. Belvins said that the Board officially opposed the adoption of the 1968 Fair Housing Law on the grounds that it created an unconstitutional restriction of free trade and a burden on the free enterprise system. She also mentioned the Board's opposition to blockbusting. However, she defended the solicitation of home-owners in transitional areas by Realtors not mentioning race as an ethical sales tactic, even when circumstances in the community tend to magnify any contact with real estate dealers.

This outline of Mrs. Belvins' racial real estate ideology does not intend to indict the entire leadership or membership of the Georgia Board as racists. Her views are presented here to reinforce the conclusion that the real estate institution in Atlanta and in the state of Georgia is not likely to support open housing locally or nationally and that these professional boards pose a threat as potential forces of obstructionism to fair housing.

However, the most readily identifiable source of frustration and outrage among open housing advocates in Atlanta is the Georgia Real Estate Commission. Since the inception of the open housing movement and particularly in the past two or three years, the Real Estate Commission has been the most frequently criticized component of the real estate institution for its alleged involvement in fostering discriminatory housing practices, or at least for failing to exercise its potential as a leader in eliminating discrimination in housing. Criticism has been focused not only on the overt actions of the commission, but also on the commission's composition, the racial orientation of its members, and its political alliances.

In the commission's role as a regulatory body, it is authorized by law to punish real estate dealers for violations of the rules it adopts and the regulations authorized for its enforcement by the state legislature. In June, 1969, the commission adopted a regulation forbidding licensed agents to engage in blockbusting.[33] Less than a year later, the Georgia General Assembly passed a bill with similar provisions and authorized the Real Estate Commission to enforce the legislation by the revocation of a salesman's license for a maximum period of five years. For the first time, the commission was authorized to participate in the elimination of blockbusting practices. Previous cases involving blockbusting charges had been tried by the commission, but on grounds of generally unethical conduct.[34]

Since the passage of the enabling legislation, open housing advocates have charged the commission with refusal to enforce the law. The executive director of the Atlanta Community

Relations Commission said that the Real Estate Commission had taken no action on the numerous complaints from homeowners who had been subjected to real estate scare tactics.[35] The Atlanta Community Relations Program of the American Friends Service Committee distributed a pamphlet which declared: "We are concerned that the Georgia Real Estate Commission does not support open housing, has ignored blockbusting real estate peddlers, in fact does not appear to be at all concerned about real estate ethics, does not have sufficient staff, which means that laws cannot be enforced."[36] The president of SWAP similarly has charged the commission with inaction on blockbusting complaints filed under the state law.[37]

So far, the only blockbusting complaint to which the commission has responded resulted in a dismissal of the charges against the realty firm. The complaint was initiated by Mrs. Pat Chapman in behalf of the South DeKalb Neighbors against a firm which had been found guilty of blockbusting by a federal court and had been enjoined from further acts of blockbusting by the presiding judge. The incident took place in January, 1969, and the case was decided in court in September, 1969. In the complaint filed with the Real Estate Commission in December, 1969, Mrs. Chapman sought the revocation of the agent's license. However, the commission procrastinated for almost a year. On December 13, 1970, the case was brought before the commission. In spite of the availability of the text of the court hearing, Mrs. Chapman was forced to produce the witnesses who had testified previously against the realty agent. The key witness in the court hearing was unavailable for testimony before the Real Estate Commission, and the commission denied a motion which would have entered the witness' court testimony into the record of the commission's hearing. Subsequently, the commission voted to dismiss the complaint "for want of sufficient evidence," thus ignoring the findings of the federal court and refusing to account for the extensive passage of time from the inception of the complaint to its disposition, to which Mrs. Chapman attributed her inability to reproduce the necessary evidence.[38]

Seen in the context of the racial orientation of commission members, the commission's record in blockbusting complaints is interpreted by its critics as a clear indication of its hostility to the goals of open housing and neighborhood stabilization. The chairman of the commission, Ed Isakson, is also the executive officer of the largest realty firm in Georgia. As previously mentioned, his firm, Northside Realty Associates, has been charged by the Justice Department with refusing to deal with blacks seeking property in white areas on Atlanta's North Side. Open housing advocates consider him an adversary not only for his company's alleged practices, but primarily because of his unenlightened views on race.[39] In an interview in 1970 with an Atlanta newspaper reporter, Mr. Isakson said, in words reminiscent of George Wallace, "I was born a segregationist. I am a segregationist. I will die a segregationist." However, somewhat ridiculously claiming that his personal beliefs do not interfere with his role as the commission chairman, he said that he respects the property rights of Negroes as set forth in the federal fair housing law. In fact, the only form of biracial contact to which he claimed to object is miscegenation.

Responding to the criticism of the commission from local fair housing groups, Isakson said,

> I don't think these people have a justifiable complaint about the real estate industry. It seems to me that people in southeast and southwest Atlanta are trying to get the real estate industry to integrate the areas on a percentage basis. Under the free enterprise system, no one should be, or could be forced to buy or sell, unless it was his own individual decision.

> The real estate commission is charged with upholding the laws of the state of Georgia and protecting the public interest. It is not charged with the regulation of public desires or wants.[40]

A further charge against the Real Estate Commission was voiced by the president of SWAP. He stated that the commission is more concerned with defending the real estate industry against public criticism than with protecting the public from unethical and discriminatory real estate practices.[41] Indeed, there is substantial evidence to support the claim that the Real Estate Commission is the captive of Georgia's real estate industry, particularly the organized professional groups. For example, all three commissioners are actively engaged in the real estate business. Open housing advocates argue that at least one citizen who is not a real estate dealer should serve on the commission.[42] Various groups, such as the Metropolitan Atlanta Conference on Equal Opportunity in Housing, have proposed an expansion of the commission's membership from three to seven to allow a more diverse representation of interests.[43]

Not only are all three commissioners real estate brokers, they are also all Realtors. The previously mentioned official with the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards claims that the Board exercises a substantial degree of control over the governor's selection of commissioners. In fact, she says that the Board submits a list of recommended candidates to the governor, from which any recent governor has diverted only rarely. Thus, the Board is assured that only Realtors will occupy seats on the commission.[44] Non-Realtors are not likely to be consulted or to make any input into the governor's decision because their interests are not actively pursued by any organized group.

The current process of appointing commissioners allows for a considerable degree of control by organized Realtors as well as by the governor, and little input from public interest groups. Political favoritism is conceded by the Georgia Board official in recent appointments. For example, she asserts that former Governor Lester Maddox appointed Isakson as the commission chairman largely because of their lifelong friendship. Another Maddox appointee, Ernest Brauda, received his position as a result of political debts which Maddox owed. Mrs. Belvins said that Brauda is essentially Isakson's lackey, a situation which insures that Isakson's desires will prevail.[45]

The important question of accountability arises with a review of the appointment process. Isakson asserted, "I'm a Lester Maddox appointee,"[46] and his conduct reflected that he was primarily accountable to the governor for his actions. The commission's activities are loosely coordinated by the joint secretary of the state examining boards, of which there are over fifty. The joint secretary operates under the secretary of state. This structural alignment creates a diffusion of power and responsibility for the commission's work, and allows for substantial control by the governor and the professional boards.[47]

A state legislator from southwest Atlanta, who is also the current president of SWAP, plans to introduce a bill in the next session of the General Assembly which would attempt to rectify some of the evils of the existing system of appointments to the Real Estate Commission. His plan would expand the commission's membership and would reduce substantially the governor's authority to make appointments. The state legislature's role in the appointment process would be magnified. Therefore, he hopes that the commission will be made more aware of its public accountability to the legislature rather than to private interest groups and to the political motivations of of the governor.[48]

However, the chances for the legislature's passage of the bill are questionable, especially in view of the close links between real estate interests and the legal profession,[49] both of which in Georgia supply a significant number of state legislators. In the current state House of Representatives, of the 195 members, over fifty are lawyers and twenty-five are in real estate.[50] Furthermore, the President of the State Senate, Lieutenant Governor Maddox, is also a licensed real estate salesman and a Realtor. His support for a bill which would dilute the Realtor groups' influence in the Real Estate Commission can hardly be expected. On the other hand, the southwest Atlanta legislator claims that Governor Jimmy Carter has indicated confidentially that he might be in favor of a structural change in the Real Estate Commission to allow for a wider representation and greater public accountability.[51] Perhaps the governor will propose some of these changes next year under his recently acquired powers to substantially reorganize the state government's bureaucracy.

Less visible but equally influential in the development of local real estate practices and ideology are the sources of real estate education. The two largest state universities, the University of Georgia at Athens and Georgia State University in Atlanta, offer undergraduate and graduate degrees in real estate. The Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards has established in Athens an institute for the continuing education of real estate businessmen.[52] In the Atlanta area, the city and county school systems offer adult vocational education programs including courses in real estate selling, licensing examination preparation, and real estate mathematics. The fee for enrollment in these courses ranges from five to ten dollars.

However, the prime source of real estate education in the city and state is the Georgia Institute of Real Estate in Atlanta, directed by John C. Correll.[53] The institute's productivity in terms of graduates who are licensed salesmen is truly awesome. Mr. Correll claims that over 5,000 of the approximately 15,000 real estate brokers and agents in Georgia are graduates of his school. In the Atlanta area, of the 83 salesmen responsible for real estate transactions in excess of $1,000,000 in 1969, twenty-three were graduates of his school. Correll's Institute, as it is commonly called, is the largest and the oldest real estate institute in Georgia. Its graduates are dispersed throughout twenty-two states.

The institute's record in adequately preparing its students for the state licensing examination is equally impressive. While only 46% of all applicants for a real estate license pass the test, Correll claims that about 95% of his students pass, although he is quick to add that his institute's program is not designed merely to prepare graduates for the licensing test.

However, there are reasonable grounds to believe that Correll's Institute does not adequately train its students to cope with the contemporary problems of race, residence, and the role of the real estate agent. The institute's faculty consists solely of licensed brokers, all of whom are also Realtors. Thus, the student can hardly expect to avoid extensive contact with the elements of the racial real estate ideology which originate with NAREB's doctrines and traditions. Mr. Correll stresses the importance of securing a faculty of Realtors actively engaged in the real estate business because of their daily exposure to current real estate practices and thought. In fact, he conforms to this rule as a Realtor and the owner of a realty firm operating out of four offices on the North Side.

Impressions based on a recent personal interview with Mr. Correll lead to the conclusion that his institute's program is oriented more toward disseminating techniques of effective salesmanship than toward impressing the student with his social responsibilities as a realty agent. Frederick Mosher, author of Democracy and the Public Service, notes the consequences of increasing concentration upon work substance in professional preparatory education. Writing in 1968, he says,

> Partially in consequence of the concentration... upon work substance, there has been a much less than parallel treatment of the ecology of the profession in the total social milieu: of the consequences and purposes of the profession and of the constraints within which it operates.[54]

This description seems to reflect accurately the educational program at Correll's Institute. For example, Mr. Correll admits frankly that he does not encourage classroom discussions concerning the role of the real estate man in matters of race and residence, and only rarely does such a discussion arise. Personally, he attributes residential segregation to the "birds-of-a-feather" theory.

Considering the prevalence of myths that surround the entry of blacks into white neighborhoods, it is tragic to discover that most graduates of Correll's Institute probably enter business without having had any of these racial fallacies challenged. The consequences of this lack of preparation in a field of intense public concern are immeasurable. Catherine Wurster, author of Social Questions in Housing and Town Planning, described the consequence in the following terms: "Decisions of basic importance for the future of social relations and conflicts have to be resolved, for better or worse, by people with little training in this field."[55]

[54]Frederick C. Mosher, Democracy And the Public Service (New York: Oxford University Press, 1968), p. 108.

[55]Catherine Bauer Wurster, Social Questions in Housing and Town Planning (London: University of London Press, 1952), p. 27.

Mr. Correll's inability or refusal to perceive the problems created by segregated housing patterns and the potential role of the real estate dealer in contributing to the end of segregated housing conforms closely with the perceptions of other constituents of the local and national real estate institution. In fact, his personal involvement in other aspects of the real estate industry is impressive. For example, he has served several times on the committee which annually drafts the licensing examination for the Real Estate Commission. His service on this committee has led to charges by some real estate dealers that his students are given special consideration when they apply for licenses.[56] A further example of his dual role as Realtor and educator is his position as the president of the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards for 1971.

The discussion of sources of real estate education and their orientation toward racial matters completes the outline of the primary institutional forces contributing to a racial real estate ideology that pervades the industry in Atlanta. However, it must not be overlooked that the institutions described so far in this chapter are controlled and patronized almost exclusively by white real estate dealers and organizations. This does not imply that many elements of the institutional real estate ideology are not subscribed to by black real estate dealers also. However, the black real estate organization in Atlanta, the Empire Board, offers a different outlook on some matters to which its members are encouraged to adhere.

The Empire Board is affiliated with the National Association of Real Estate Brokers which was organized in 1948 to offset "a system which perpetuated segregation in housing at every level of our government." Members of this group are referred to as "Realtists." The Empire Board has been active in the civil rights movement in Atlanta outside of the recent open housing movement. The board, for example, paid the bond for blacks arrested in Atlanta during the lunch counter sit-ins in the early Sixties.[57]

The Realtist's Code of Ethics pronounces the organization's support of open housing. It directs the Realtist "to take an affirmative stand in the true principle of our theme and philosophy of democracy in housing."[58] In 1959, the Empire Board reaffirmed its advocacy of open occupancy in a policy statement which declared, "We firmly believe in open occupancy and the right for every man to buy a house wherever he wishes according to his means without any restrictions." The Board also declared its opposition to "any designation of boundary lines, stopping points, or gentlemen's agreements" which were designed to arrest black expansion into white areas.[59]

The philosophical bases for the Realtist's advocacy of open housing are similar to the grounds on which NAREB stands in opposition to attempts to implement fair housing laws. Both groups are opposed to certain forms of imposed restrictions in the sale and transfer of property. Seen in the context of racial housing matters, however, NAREB seeks to protect the right of the white homeowner to discriminate in the sale of his property, thus enabling the exclusion of blacks from white areas. On the other hand, the Empire Board and the national association of Realtists seek to remove the restrictions on the black homebuyer who faces racially imposed obstacles in his search for property.

The Empire Board offers a different racial real estate ideology to brokers in Atlanta. The impact of its doctrine must be considered minimal, however, in light of the continuing discriminatory real estate practices in the city and the tight control over real estate thought and practices which the local NAREB affiliates exercise. Furthermore, in light of the evidence which points to the complicity of black realty firms in discriminatory practices, the Realtists' sincere advocacy of open housing must be considered with a good deal of skepticism.

[59] "Housing Plans As 'Open Occupancy'", Atlanta Daily World, September 18, 1959; remarks by Joseph T. Bickers.

The institutional and ideological framework within which the individual Atlanta real estate dealer operates accounts largely for his behavior where race and residence are involved. The institutional influence is not the sole determinant of real estate behavior, however, and the individual agent's conformity with elements of the institutional racial real estate ideology is not absolute. The agent's perception of his role in the social and racial environment and of his obligations to the community he serves may either reinforce or dilute the institutional influences. In either case, his perceptions of his own business and his conceptions about his role in determining the racial composition of residential areas constitute additional dimensions of the racial real estate ideology. The final part of this chapter is devoted to presenting the elements of the broker's self-image which might influence his conduct in matters of race and residence.

A large part of the information on which this discussion is based was obtained through a survey of thirty-five white and eighteen black randomly selected real estate firms dealing in residential property in the Atlanta area. The survey was taken in the form of a questionnaire which was mailed to the firms in February, 1971. The responses received from the white firms totalled sixteen, or approximately 46%; the total received from the black firms was nine, or 50%. The questionnaire was designed to minimize the inconvenience to the respondents and to maximize the credibility of the purposes of the study. There may have been some factors hindering a larger return, such as the contents of the questionnaire which dealt with racial matters; legal circumstances concerning race and residence in Atlanta;[60] the distance factor; and the credibility of a survey conducted by a student at an Ivy League institution. Nevertheless, the responses received reveal some identifiable patterns in real estate thought and provide adequate information for the limited purposes of this thesis. Other sources dealing with the attitudes on race and housing of real estate businessmen include Miss Helper's study in Chicago,[61] Stuart Palmer's study in New Haven,[62] and recent personal interviews with brokers and agents in Atlanta.

One of the primary areas of consensus emerging from the previous studies conducted in other cities and the recent study of Atlanta brokers is that a real estate broker is reluctant to effect the sale of property in a white area

[60]Recent blockbusting and housing discrimination suits against local realty firms have created almost a state of paranoia among some realty brokers. These people might reasonably be reluctant to respond to a questionnaire dealing with their business practices and personal attitudes.

[61]Rose Helper, Racial Policies and Practices of Real Estate Brokers.

[62]Stuart H. Palmer, "The Role of the Real Estate Agent in the Structuring of Residential Areas" (unpublished Ph.D. thesis, Yale, 1955).

to a black buyer. Palmer recorded that in New Haven practically all the agents whom he interviewed made in effect the same point: "They strongly wished to avoid being among the first to sell to Negroes in white areas."[63] The response from the white realty firms in Atlanta was unanimously affirmative to the question, "In most cases, would a real estate salesman be reluctant to sell a home to a Negro buyer in a white residential area?" Miss Helper's study revealed a similarly strong tendency for brokers to avoid being a party to the first sale in a neighborhood to a black buyer.[64]

Probing further, Miss Helper discerned a pattern of behavior that prevails among brokers when a black customer expressed interest in property located in a white area. In determining his policy in such a situation, the broker takes into account the racial situation in the neighborhood. Of particular significance to the broker are the number of homes in the area occupied already by blacks and the incidence of recent sales to blacks in and around the particular area. The broker who wants to retain his favorable reputation with the community he serves will attempt to delay his participation in a sale to a black buyer until the time that he cannot be blamed for instigating the racial change in the area. She wrote, "When the people themselves believe the block is 'gone', they will not hold it against him if he begins to sell to Negroes in that block...At that time what was reprehensible behavior - namely, selling to Negroes in a white area or block - becomes acceptable behavior."[65]

[64]Helper, op. cit., pp. 109-113.

A Realtor in southwest Atlanta confirmed the pattern Miss Helper described. He traced the development of his firm's policy toward selling to blacks in white or transitional neighborhoods in the territory surrounding his office. He was initially reluctant to sell homes to blacks in southwest Atlanta because of the lack of community acceptance. Now he does not hesitate to show property for sale to blacks in white or fringe areas in the southwest section. He concluded his remarks by saying that the broker's reputation is his chief asset in the community.[66]

Brokers expect to be severely penalized if they are instrumental in the introduction of a black family before the conditions are favorable. In Miss Helper's study, over two-thirds of the brokers were firmly convinced that they would suffer some harmful consequences if they sold property without any racial restrictions. Most of this group expected adverse financial and social consequences. She reported that the most prevalent fear concerned damage to the broker's reputation and the loss of social standing in the community.[67]

[66] Cliff Bullard, owner, Bullard Realty Co., Atlanta; personal interview, December 28, 1970.

As previously mentioned, the racial theory of property values which has been promoted primarily by NAREB dictates against the broker's role in introducing a black family into a white area. A reasonable extension of this theory states that it is the broker's obligation to protect property values, and thus to exclude blacks from areas where their occupancy will depress property values. Miss Helper determined that 75% of her sample subscribed to this theory.[68] The theory is similarly widespread among white brokers in Atlanta. Of the fifteen white brokers responding to the question, "In your experience, have you found that property values decline when Negroes enter an area?", ten (67%) replied affirmatively.

The broker's beliefs about the public acceptance or rejection of integrated communities also help him to determine the appropriate policies to pursue in racially infused situations. Miss Helper reported that most realty brokers believed that whites have unfavorable feelings about blacks and do not wish to have blacks as neighbors. Accordingly, about two-thirds of the brokers she interviewed felt that residential segregation would continue as the basic housing trend, and 90% felt that residential integration would not be achieved in the near future.[69] The recent survey of white brokers in Atlanta revealed similar perceptions of public desires. The question submitted to the brokers was, "Do you think that most people in Atlanta prefer to live in communities with neighbors of the same race?" The unanimous response was "yes". The consequences of this opinion for real estate practices are serious. If brokers perceive that the public will be satisfied if they act to bring about segregated neighborhoods, then they will be likely to employ sales techniques which seek to accomplish this goal.

Further indications of the brokers' personal opinions are contained in their replies to questions involving open housing in principle and in practice. In Miss Helper's study, approximately 2/3 of the brokers were personally opposed to residential integration.[70] The brokers in Atlanta were asked, "Outside of your compliance with the federal 'fair housing' law, do you feel that 'open housing' is an important and valuable goal for American society?" Ten of the sixteen respondents replied negatively. Of the six who replied affirmatively, four were brokers operating primarily in southwest Atlanta. Their indication of support for open housing in principle may be based on their desire to save their home territory from inundation by blacks through the creation of housing opportunities for blacks in other areas.

For the purpose of ascertaining the attitude of brokers toward the groups actively seeking implementation of open housing laws, they were asked, "Do most real estate dealers feel that the advocates of 'open housing' are pushing for social change too far and too fast?" Fourteen of the fifteen respondents to this question replied affirmatively, indicating that most brokers in Atlanta would prefer at least a less aggressive enforcement of open housing laws.

The response to the latter question also implies the brokers' status quo orientation in racial housing affairs. Their rejection of more affirmative enforcement of open housing laws indicates their desire to be left alone to pursue their business as they see fit. A further indication of the prevailing defense of the real estate industry is contained in the response to the question, "Do you feel that the real estate industry in general has been unreasonably attacked for its alleged role in the fields of 'open housing' and 'blockbusting'?" Ten of the fifteen respondents replied "yes."

An attempt to consolidate and to organize the response of brokers whose racial policies were ascertained was made by Miss Helper. She offered the concept of an "exclusion ideology" to which about 75% of her sample conformed in varying degrees.[71] To an impressive extent, the white brokers in Atlanta whose responses were obtained also may be identified as advocates of this ideology. Not all of the elements of this ideology were probed in the questionnaire sent to the brokers in Atlanta. However, the responses from several questions posed in the Atlanta survey substantiate a number of the ideas contained in Miss Helper's exclusion ideology.

The main components of the exclusion ideology are: (1) Most blacks do not make desirable neighbors. (2) Most whites do not want blacks as neighbors. (3) Property values decline when blacks enter an area. (4) Most neighborhoods decline physically and socially as a result of black entry. (5) Racial residential integration is impossible currently. Complete racial transfer will continue as the inevitable result of black encroachment. (6) White residents suffer when blacks enter their neighborhood. (7) Selling or renting property to blacks in white areas violates the principles of real estate ethics and the personal preferences of most brokers. (8) Most brokers wish to see their own area remain racially homogeneous (9) The broker who is involved in the sale of property to a black in a white area will suffer financially and socially. (10) By attempting to exclude blacks from white areas, the broker protects his reputation and the standards of the community.[72]

The survey of white brokers in Atlanta reveals agreement with the exclusion ideology on several matters. First, the brokers replied unanimously that whites in Atlanta do not want blacks as neighbors. Based on this response the implication is that the brokers did not feel that residential integration was possible currently. Third, there was substantial agreement on the racial theory of property values. Fourth, a majority indicated personal opposition to open housing in principle, and a nearly unanimous response expressed opposition to the aggressive enforcement of open housing laws. Finally, there was a substantial current of opinion regarding the damages to the broker who sells property without racial restrictions.

Of course, black brokers as well as their white colleagues have been implicated in certain discriminatory practices. However, the answers of the black respondents to the survey in Atlanta indicate their differing perceptions on some critical issues. For example, the black brokers (nine responding) were unanimous in their support of open housing as "an important and valuable goal for American society," and in their support of the work of open housing advocates. Although a majority believed that most Atlantans prefer to live in segregated neighborhoods, three brokers said that most whites prefer to live with neighbors of their own race while most blacks do not possess a similar desire to reside in racially homogeneous areas. Another area of difference was the black brokers' feelings about selling property to blacks in white areas. Over two-thirds of the black brokers replied that they would not expect a realty agent to be reluctant to effect such a sale. The implication here is that black brokers, not white brokers, would not be inhibited in this way. Further evidence of this implication is the fact that two of the respondents stated this opinion specifically.

The sympathetic tendencies of black brokers for the goals of open housing form a rivaling ideology to the opinions of white brokers in Atlanta. The black respondents' views conform closely to the advocacy of open occupancy which the Empire Board has expressed. However, the small number of black brokers in Atlanta plus the substantial control over local realty practices exercised by the Atlanta Board dictate against the widespread acceptance of the black real estate ideology. Furthermore, once again it should be mentioned that the black brokers' sympathetic responses for open housing must be discounted at least partially as mere rhetoric.

In conclusion, it appears reasonable to declare that there are elements of a definable racial real estate ideology which prevails among most white brokers in Atlanta. The components of the real estate institution - the local professional boards and the national organization, the regulatory agency, and the sources of real estate education - contribute in varying ways to the formation of an ideology which is unfavorable to open housing in principle and particularly hostile to the implementation of fair housing laws. Among the elements of the racial real estate ideology which originate with the institution are the notion that homogeneity makes for good neighborhoods, the racial theory of property values, and the consequent obligation of the realty agent to protect the community against unwanted neighbors and neighbors whose presence tends to damage property values. Within the current social and racial environment, the racial real estate ideology directs the broker to employ techniques which are designed to exclude blacks from white areas and to accelerate the process of racial transition when the entry of blacks occurs.

Surveys of real estate brokers in Chicago, New Haven, and Atlanta, reveal the high degree of conformity of brokers with the racial real estate ideology. The majority opinion of brokers in Atlanta is that property values do decline when blacks enter an area. The recognition by brokers of their role as servants to the community leads to the adoption of a number of significant policies for racial housing matters. Among the most important of these is the notion that the broker will suffer for the sale of property to a black in a white area unless the local circumstances allow for such a sale. Basically, the average broker wishes to avoid being responsible for initiating what he considers to be the inevitable trend to resegregation. The broker's belief that segregated neighborhoods are essential for the happiness of the residents reinforces his desire to exclude blacks from white areas.

CONCLUSION

THE PROSPECTS FOR CHANGE

"People moving out, people moving in -
All because of the color of their skin:
Run, run, run,
But they sure can't hide."

The elements of the racial real estate ideology which pervades the industry in Atlanta are conceived within a tightly-knit institutional framework. The policies initiated by NAREB are transmitted to the local boards of Realtors which in turn communicate national pronouncements to board members and establish the implementation of these policies in accordance with local circumstances. The real estate practices which emerge from the "exclusion ideology" are rarely, if ever, challenged by the official regulatory body over licensed realty firms - and the supposed advocate of the public interest - the Georgia Real Estate Commission. Nor do the primary sources of real estate education question the prevailing ideology; in fact, any estimate of their influence in the formation of the exclusion ideology must conclude that it is substantial. Furthermore, the institution's declarations of policy are popularly accepted by other segments of the housing industry and by private citizens as standard rules of real estate behavior. As a result of the reinforcements of the exclusion ideology which occur at all stages of its development and the inherent forces of conformity, the individual broker or agent is not inclined to deviate from these principles.

Moreover, the agent's self-image as a guardian of the community's interests dictates against practices whose outcome might offend residents of the area he serves.

Thus, the system which produces the principles of the racial real estate ideology appears to be closed to any significant input from sources of dissent. The opportunities for dissident interest groups to participate in the formulation of principles which guide realty behavior in race and residence are limited, if not totally absent. Furthermore, the coherence of the institutional ideology insulates it from dismantlement by opposing groups.

However, one of the notions upon which the racial real estate ideology is founded also bears the seeds from which ideological change might be conceived. The institution claims that the primary obligation of the real estate broker is to faithfully execute the wishes of his client and the community he serves. In the fulfillment of this obligation, the broker may reasonably perceive his duty to include employing racially discriminatory practices as a means to prevent the purchase of property by a black customer in a stable white community. The broker's primary assumption is that whites do not want black neighbors because of the damage to property values and social status that accompanies black entry.

According to the same notion of the broker's social responsibilities, a radical change in prevailing public opinion would alter the procedures through which the broker seeks to satisfy his constituents' desires. If popular opinion evolved to the point of widespread acceptance and advocacy of integrated residential living, the broker would be forced to abandon his exclusionary practices against blacks, and to eliminate tactics which foster the resegregation of transitional areas.

Furthermore, the racial theory of property values, whose origin has been traced to NAREB influence, also plays a dual role as a principle into which open housing advocates might penetrate and disprove. Although the theory of declining property values has been disputed eloquently by extensive research studies, such as the landmark work of Dr. Luigi Laurenti,[1] it has rarely been disproved in practice. The theory still serves as a primary catalyst for the departure of whites from integrated areas. It will continue to dominate real estate and popular opinion as long as the pattern of white panic and exodus is repeated.

The chance that the racial theory of property values will be conclusively refuted depends on the success of stabilization efforts and the widespread exposure of peacefully integrated neighborhoods. For example, if one neighborhood in Atlanta was integrated and still retained its social stability and the stability of property values, it might serve as a model of success for other racially disputed areas. The theory of declining property values would lose much of its persuasiveness. On a larger scale, a national proliferation of stable, integrated, and well-publicized communities would provide additional tools to uproot the entrenched racial theory of property values.

[1]Luigi Laurenti, Property Values and Race (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1960).

The change in values that must precede the termination of the real estate institutional opposition to open housing can not be expected to emerge from indigenous initiative within the industry. However, the sources necessary to provoke a public consensus against the real estate exclusion ideology do not appear to exist in Atlanta or in the nation. The previously described voices of dissent are currently the only safeguard against the perpetuation of racially separate neighborhoods and a racially divided city. A local or national consensus favorable to the development of peaceful residential segregation depends substantially on political leadership. The leaders of the Atlanta city government cannot afford to aggressively promote open housing in the city alone without similar support from other municipalities in the metropolitan area. The unilateral adoption by the city of a fair housing ordinance would merely accelerate the white flight to the suburbs, and there are few indications that suburban communities will risk their racial homogeneity by announcing a policy of open occupancy. The consequences to the entire metropolitan area of a core black city surrounded by white suburbs are not yet visible enough to provoke a unified advocacy of open housing. The likelihood that substantial public pressure will be brought upon the real estate industry is further reduced by the policies of the Nixon Administration. The President has consistently refused to initiate a national program which would expand the opportunities for minority-group property ownership in predominantly white suburbs.

Sole reliance upon popular opinion and political leadership obscures the strength of economic forces as determinants of the future success in reversing Atlanta's segregated housing trends. In fact, there is a substantial current of thought which states that economic conditions will be primarily responsible for any change in racial housing affairs.[2] The income level of blacks in Atlanta has increased considerably in the past decade. In Atlanta reside thirteen black millionaires, the largest number of any city in the nation.[3] With black income levels rising, and construction costs for homes for whites in the suburbs becoming prohibitive, integration may be forced upon residents of all-white neighborhoods in the city while the outlets for whites are becoming closed. The coalescence of these trends may dictate public acceptance, although reluctantly, of residential integration.

[3]James A. Hefner, "Black Employment in Atlanta," manuscript for unpublished study, Atlanta University, 1971, p. 82.

However, such a situation does not exist today. The tradition of segregated housing in Atlanta and its current reinforcement and perpetuation by real estate dealers operate within a closed system. The voices of dissent are attempting to penetrate the institutional barriers of the real estate industry in order to reverse firmly entrenched trends, ideologies, and practices, whose combined force is leading to a racially divided society. However, the dissidents have not enlisted substantial popular opinion or political leadership to their cause. Perhaps the major sources of optimism are blacks who will push harder against the walls of the ghetto, and whites in transitional areas of Atlanta who have posted a warning on their property to real estate agents: "This Is Our Home. It Is Not For Sale."

THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964

CIVIL RIGHTS UNDER FEDERAL PROGRAMS

An Analysis of Title VI

CCR Special Publication—Number 1

January 1965

"As far as the writ of Federal law will run, we must abolish not some but all racial discrimination . . . All members of the public should be equally eligible for Federal benefits financed by the public."

State of the Union Message of
President Lyndon B. Johnson
January 8, 1964

The Civil Rights Act of 1957, as amended in 1960 and 1964, authorizes the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights to review Federal laws and policies with respect to denials of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution. The 1964 Civil Rights Act directs the Commission to serve as a national clearinghouse for civil rights information. Pursuant to these directives, this Commission publication is designed to explain Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act which requires non-discrimination in federally assisted programs, including:

* the kinds of discrimination prohibited
* the Federal programs covered
* compliance procedures under Title VI

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights
Washington, D.C. 20425

SUMMARY OF RIGHTS GUARANTEED BY TITLE VI

All persons in the United States shall have the right to receive any service, financial aid or other benefit under the federally-aided program regardless of their race, color or national origin.

Specific discriminatory practices prohibited include:

* Any difference in quality, quantity or the manner in which the benefit is provided
* Segregation or separate treatment in any part of the program
* Restriction in the enjoyment of any advantages, privileges or other benefits provided to others
* Different standards or requirements for participation
* Methods of administration which would defeat or substantially impair the accomplishment of the program objectives
* Discrimination in any activity conducted in a facility built in whole or part with Federal funds
* Discrimination in any employment resulting from a program established primarily to provide employment

All Federal offices responsible for federally-assisted programs must implement Title VI by issuing regulations approved by the President.

Any persons who believe discrimination because of race, color or national origin exists in a federally-aided program have the right to challenge such discrimination by making a complaint to the officials responsible for that program.

* Prompt investigations will be made of complaints received.
* If discrimination is found, negotiation and persuasion will first be used in an effort to eliminate the prohibited practices.
* Should these efforts fail, Federal assistance may be terminated or discontinued after a fair hearing.
* Other means authorized by law, including court action, may also be used to enforce nondiscrimination.

(For a complete text of Title VI, see page 15*)*

". . . SIMPLE JUSTICE . . ."

President Lyndon B. Johnson, explaining the basic reasons underlying the principle of equality under Federal programs, stated on December 10, 1964:

> "It is simple justice that all should share in programs financed by all, and directed by the government of all the people."

Simple justice has not always governed the operation of Federal aid programs. As has been amply documented by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, many of our citizens, because of their race, color, or national origin, have not been free to participate equally in programs supported by Federal funds. For example, the Commission has found that in some circumstances:

* Libraries receiving Federal aid either have not allowed Negroes to use the facilities or have subjected them to segregation or discrimination.
* Elementary schools built and operated with Federal aid have discriminated in the admission and treatment of students.
* Hospitals constructed with Federal funds either have refused to admit patients because of their race or have discriminated in their placement after admission; they also have refused to allow Negro physicians to practice there.
* Vocational training programs established with Federal funds have not been available to all students.
* Employment offices financed entirely by Federal funds have refused to refer all job applicants to available openings on a nondiscriminatory basis.
* Agricultural Extension Service offices operating with Federal funds have been established on a segregated basis and have provided unequal service to Negroes.
* Dormitories have been built with Federal grants in colleges that have discriminatory admission policies.
* Employers receiving business loans from the Federal Government, designed to increase employment opportunities, have discriminated in their hiring policies.

In addition to the legal and moral grounds for correcting such discriminatory practices, there are very practical reasons for moving promptly to eliminate them from Federal programs.

A Federal grant program which is enacted for the general welfare fails in its objectives if some citizens are intentionally excluded or provided inferior service. If a program is designed to promote better health standards, it will not achieve its purpose by allowing only white persons to benefit while Negro families are denied needed medical services.

In addition to frustrating the basic objectives of a given program, discrimination denies to those who are excluded an opportunity to improve themselves. For instance, both the Negro family and the economy suffer when the family's breadwinner is denied equal opportunity to participate in a federally supported job training program.

Federal payments to State and local governments, to private institutions and businesses play an important role in financing the many educational, health, welfare and economic programs required for our continued growth and development. When any person is denied the benefits of these programs because of race, color, or national origin, the fabric of our democratic society is weakened and our progress as a Nation is retarded.

EVOLUTION OF FEDERAL POLICY

The principle of equality under Federal programs was reflected in presidential actions long before the Civil Rights Act of 1964 became law. In the past twenty years, every President of the United States has directed the elimination of discrimination in a number of Federal programs and activities. Areas covered by presidential orders include: equality of treatment in the Armed Forces; employment by the Federal Government, by Government contractors and on construction projects financed with Federal funds; and equality of opportunity in federally-aided housing.

Other actions taken through departmental regulations have prohibited discrimination in particular programs. These include the Manpower Development Training activities, teacher-training institutes, mental health and mental retardation projects, apprenticeship programs, and employment in State agencies administering certain Federal programs.

Prior to the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, all of these orders and regulations depended on executive initiative which was supported by a growing body of judicial decisions. These court rulings, based on constitutional requirements, held that no person, because of race or color, could be denied the benefits of a program receiving Federal assistance. However, these presidential orders, departmental regulations, and court rulings were limited to particular Federal activities or to only parts of Federal programs. In addition, in recent years attempts made in Congress to amend specific Federal aid proposals in order to prohibit discrimination have been unsuccessful.

By adopting Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, Congress has now written into law the right of all persons to participate in and receive the benefits of any federally-aided program or activity without discrimination on account of race, color, or national origin. The application of Title VI to federally-assisted programs is uniform and all-inclusive.

SCOPE OF FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Congress has enacted many programs providing Federal funds to support public and private activities in such areas as health, education, employment, individual welfare, and the economic well-being of the general society.

Many citizens are not fully aware of the nature or extent of Federal assistance provided State and local governments, private institutions, businesses and individuals. The average citizen is likely to know about Social Security, veterans benefits, and a few other programs involving direct Federal administration. However, many significant Federal aid programs are administered at the local level by the States, localities and private institutions which share in their costs. As a result the degree of Federal support is not usually apparent.

Federal financial assistance includes grants and loans of Federal funds, donations of equipment and property, detail of Federal personnel, proceeds from Federal property, and any other arrangement by which Federal benefits are provided.

In all, more than 190 aid programs are sponsored in whole or in part by the Federal Government and there are many 'sub-programs' within these. Major areas of Federal involvement include:

Aids to Education

- College Facilities Construction
- College Dormitory Construction
- Research Grants and Equipment
- Surplus Materials Distribution
- National Defense Education Activities
- Impacted Areas School Construction and Assistance
- School Lunch and School Milk Programs
- Vocational Education Activities
- Economic Opportunity (Anti-Poverty) Programs
- Loans to College Students

Aids to Communities

- Accelerated Public Works
- Urban Renewal Projects
- Public Housing Projects
- Airport Construction
- Library Services and Construction
- Economic Opportunity (Anti-Poverty) Programs

Aids to Health

- Vocational Rehabilitation Grants
- Hill-Burton Hospital Construction
- Research Grants
- Nurses Training Programs
- Loans to Medical Students
- Mental Health and Retardation Programs
- Public Health Programs

Aids to Employment

State Employment Offices
Manpower Training Activities
Area Redevelopment Grants and Training
Loans to Small Businessmen
Highway Construction Projects
Public Works Acceleration Projects
Other Construction (Schools, Hospitals, etc.)
Economic Opportunity (Anti-Poverty) Programs

Aids to Welfare

Old-age Assistance Programs
Services to the Blind and Permanently Disabled
Maternity and Infant Care Projects
Child Welfare Services
Other Public Welfare Programs
Economic Opportunity (Anti-Poverty) Programs

Aids to Agriculture

Extension Services
Watershed/Flood Control
Conservation Projects
Rural Electrification
Forest Protection

In short, citizens in all walks of life derive benefits directly or indirectly, from the services and assistance provided by the Federal Government.

During the fiscal year 1963, payments by the Federal Government to public and private recipients totaled nearly $11 billion or ten percent of all Federal expenditures. Federal payments average 14% of the total revenues collected by States and localities; in some States these payments reach as high as 32% of all revenues.

TYPES OF DISCRIMINATION PROHIBITED BY TITLE VI

The effective administration of Federal programs depends on the cooperative efforts of both the Federal Government and the recipients of Federal aid. The aims of these programs cannot be fully achieved until they are equally available to all citizens. Thus it is vitally important that aid recipients and the Federal Government work closely together to eliminate segregation and discrimination in the programs for which they share responsibility.

In drafting the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Congress attempted to provide every possible means for voluntary compliance with the Act. Regulations, issued pursuant to Title VI, reflect this congressional intent by directing Federal officials to seek the cooperation of recipients and to provide guidance and assistance to help them comply voluntarily with the Act.

As a first step in the process of voluntary implementation of Title VI, all concerned should fully understand the types of discrimination which must now be eliminated.

In order to be eligible for assistance under Federal programs, a recipient must give assurances that

NO PERSON SHALL BE EXCLUDED FROM PARTICIPATION, DENIED ANY BENEFITS, OR SUBJECTED TO DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF RACE, COLOR, OR NATIONAL ORIGIN.

Type of discrimination prohibited by Title VI are best illustrated by specific examples.

A recipient of Federal financial assistance violates his assurance to comply with Title VI if, because of race, color, or national origin, the recipient:

(1) denies an individual any service, financial aid or other benefit under the program;

EXAMPLES: A federally-supported State Employment Office refuses to place a qualified job applicant because of his race.

A redeveloper of land in an urban renewal project area denies an apartment or office space to an applicant because of his race, color or national origin.

A National Guard Unit refuses to accept a volunteer because of his race, color, or national origin.

(2) provides an individual with a service, financial aid or other benefit which is different, or is provided in a different manner from that which is provided to others under the program;

EXAMPLES: An Agricultural Extension Agent encourages and teaches white farmers, but not Negro farmers, to grow a variety of crops to increase their income.

A library receiving Federal aid requires some readers, because of race, to request books through a branch librarian rather than allowing the direct access available to others.

(3) subjects an individual to segregation or separate treatment in any matter related to his receipt of any service, financial aid, or other benefit under the program;

EXAMPLES: A federally-aided State Employment Office, Agricultural Extension Service Office, or airport maintains racially separate waiting rooms.

The aided program assigns employees of a certain race or color to serve only persons of the same race or color or to process job applications only from such persons.

(4) restricts an individual in any way in the enjoyment of services, facilities, or any other advantage, privilege, or benefit provided to others under the program;

EXAMPLES: A federally-aided college admits students of a particular race but discourages their attendance at sports events and other college gatherings.

An aided hospital admits all patients but discourages use of the recreation room or specifies certain hours for use to patients of one race.

(5) treats an individual differently in determining whether he satisfies any admission, enrollment, quota, eligibility, membership, or other requirement or condition which is a prerequisite to the service, financial aid or other benefit provided under the program;

EXAMPLES: A federally-aided hospital refuses to permit doctors of a particular race to practice in the hospital because such doctors are not members of a medical association which discriminates.

A State Employment Office refuses to send a Negro applicant to fill a job request because he is not enrolled in an apprenticeship program which discriminates against Negroes.

(6) uses any criteria or methods of administration which would defeat or substantially impair accomplishment of the program's objectives for individuals of a particular race, color, or national origin, or which would subject such individuals to discrimination;

EXAMPLES: In selecting or approving projects or sites for the construction of public libraries which will receive Federal assistance, a State agency uses standards which will have the effect of limiting use of the facilities by members of a particular race.

In a district where students are assigned to schools on the basis of their race, free and reduced-price lunches are not provided on an equitable basis.

(7) discriminates against an individual in any program or activity which is conducted in a facility constructed in whole or in part with Federal funds;

EXAMPLES: A hospital constructed or improved with Federal funds segregates patients by race or discriminates in the selection of interns or student nurses. A hospital caring for indigent patients under contract with a welfare agency that receives Federal funds discriminates in like manner.

A federally-aided public housing authority either excludes tenants from a project or segregates them within a project because of their race, color, or national origin.

(8) subjects an individual to discriminatory employment practices under any Federal program or activity whose primary objective is to provide employment:

EXAMPLE: Employers receiving Area Redevelopment loans hire on a discriminatory basis.

The above illustrations do not reflect the full scope of possible discriminatory practices. Nor do they include all the programs which are subject to Title VI. Whatever the federally-aided programs may be and whatever form the discrimination may take, the language of Title VI and the intent of Congress is to assure to every individual equal opportunity and access to Federal benefits.

It should be noted that if the final Federal payment for a project was made to a recipient before applicable Title VI regulations went into effect, the recipient is not covered by Title VI for that particular project. On the other hand, after applicable Title VI regulations went into effect, all Federal aid recipients had to agree to comply with these regulations in order to receive or to continue to receive Federal assistance.

EXAMPLE: A hospital received approval in 1963 for Federal funds to pay part of the cost of a new addition and Federal installment payments were still forthcoming when Title VI regulations became effective. As a condition to receipt of these additional installment payments, the hospital must agree to administer the entire facility in accordance with Title VI nondiscriminatory requirements.

COMPLIANCE UNDER TITLE VI

Title VI regulations provide the necessary framework for protecting the rights guaranteed to the recipients and to the ultimate beneficiaries under federally-aided programs. Compliance will first be sought by affirmative and voluntary means whenever possible. But in addition, provision is made for complaints, field reviews, investigations, informal adjustments, and, when necessary, more formal proceedings.

1. AFFIRMATIVE MEASURES

Recipients of Federal aid are to be given guidance and assistance to help them comply voluntarily with Title VI regulations. In public and private meetings and in instructions which accompany required nondiscrimination agreements, Federal aid recipients are to be assisted in making the changes necessary to bring their operations into compliance with Title VI.

2. COMPLIANCE REPORTS

Records and other information designed to show the extent of compliance with Title VI agreements must be maintained by recipients and reports sent to program administrators on a regular basis. A recipient is also required to inform the ultimate beneficiaries, participants and other interested persons of the provisions of Title VI regulations and of their applicability to the aid program.

3. PERIODIC FIELD REVIEWS

Reviews by designated officials are to be conducted on a scheduled basis to ensure compliance by aid recipients. Compliance reports, books, and other records may be reviewed during these regular field visits.

4. COMPLAINTS

An individual or organization may challenge any unlawful discriminatory practice in a Federal program or activity. All complaints must be filed with the appropriate Federal agency and should include sufficient information to serve as the basis for an investigation.

5. INVESTIGATION AND ADJUSTMENT

When a field review, complaint, or any other information indicates a possible violation of Title VI, an investigation is ordered. If any violation of the regulations is found, informal persuasion and conciliation will be used to secure the elimination of the prohibited discriminatory practices. During this entire process, names of complainants will be kept confidential to the extent possible.

No recipient or other person may intimidate, threaten, coerce, or discriminate against any individual because he has made a complaint, testified, or assisted in a Title VI investigation, proceeding or hearing.

6. FORMAL ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDINGS

If informal efforts at persuasion have failed to correct the situation, formal means for resolving violations of Title VI regulations are available.

a. Termination of Funds

Title VI authorizes "the termination of or refusal to grant or continue assistance" under any Federal program in which there has been a violation of nondiscrimination requirements. This action may be taken only after:

(1) the recipient has been given an opportunity for a fair hearing and a finding is made that Title VI has been violated, and

(2) appropriate congressional committees have been notified 30 days before any termination of assistance.

A recipient may seek judicial review of the final order issued by the agency.

b. Other Formal Actions Authorized by Law

Rather than follow internal administrative proceedings, an agency may take other formal actions authorized by law, including:

(1) Referral to the Department of Justice for appropriate legal action.

If there is a formal contract with a nondiscrimination agreement between the Government and the recipient, the appropriate legal action may be a civil suit to enforce the agreement or to invoke any other contractual remedies.

If the recipient is a public institution, such as a public hospital or a public school, the appropriate legal action may be a civil rights suit to secure a court order barring the unlawful practices under Title III or IV, respectively, of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

(2) Referral to State or local authorities responsible for enforcing similar nondiscrimination standards.

When a recipient's violation of Title VI involves discriminatory employment practices, the case may be referred to a State or local Fair Employment Practices Commission or comparable body.

7. LIMITATIONS ON COMPLIANCE PROCEEDINGS

Compliance proceedings may only be directed against 'recipients' of Federal aid who are conducting a program for the benefit of others. A 'recipient' does not include the individual who ultimately receives the service, financial aid or other benefit under the program.

A farmer receiving Federal aid is not required to adopt nondiscriminatory policies in the operation of his farm.

An individual receiving unemployment insurance is likewise not a recipient. However, the State unemployment insurance office is a 'recipient' of Federal aid and must not discriminate against applicants for assistance.

In addition, any compliance activities must be limited to:

a. the particular recipient found to be in violation of Title VI; and

b. the particular program or activity in which noncompliance is found.

WHEN TITLE VI DOES NOT APPLY

The statutory language in Title VI specifically excludes programs involving "a contract of insurance or guaranty." Activities such as the FHA home mortgage insurance program are thereby excluded. However, Executive Order 11063, which prohibits discrimination in all Federal housing programs, continues in full force and effect.

CONCLUSION

The administration of Federal grant-in-aid programs over the years has been marked by a high degree of cooperation among the Federal, State and local agencies and private institutions involved.

Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 affords an additional opportunity for these agencies and institutions to improve the administration and efficiency of cooperative programs. The President expressed confidence in the future when he signed the first set of Title VI regulations on December 4, 1964:

> "The broad and encouraging compliance with the Public Accommodations Title of the Civil Rights Act has demonstrated the overwhelming desire of the people of this Nation to accept and to comply with the law of the land. I am confident that the provisions of the Civil Rights Act to be implemented by these regulations will be received in the same spirit of acceptance and cooperation."

The 1964 Civil Rights Act directs the Commission on Civil Rights to serve as a national clearinghouse for civil rights information. Accordingly, Commission resources are available to assist interested persons seeking information on Federal laws and programs and applicable civil rights policies.

The Commission is collecting data on successful patterns of compliance with Title VI. It is also developing information on major Federal programs operating in particular cities and localities. Recipients of Federal aid, State and local officials, private citizens and other groups may all benefit from this information and assistance.

Interested persons may also obtain information from Federal, State and local officials and from other recipients of Federal aid responsible for the administration of particular programs.

TITLE VI—NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERALLY ASSISTED PROGRAMS

Sec. 601. No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

Sec. 602. Each Federal department and agency which is empowered to extend Federal financial assistance to any program or activity, by way of grant, loan, or contract other than a contract of insurance or guaranty, is authorized and directed to effectuate the provisions of section 601 with respect to such program or activity by issuing rules, regulations, or orders of general applicability which shall be consistent with achievement of the objectives of the statute authorizing the financial assistance in connection with which the action is taken. No such rule, regulation, or order shall become effective unless and until approved by the President. Compliance with any requirement adopted pursuant to this section may be effected (1) by the termination of or refusal to grant or to continue assistance under such program or activity to any recipient as to whom there has been an express finding on the record, after opportunity for hearing, of a failure to comply with such requirement, but such termination or refusal shall be limited to the particular political entity, or part thereof, or other recipient as to whom such a finding has been made and, shall be limited in its effect to the particular program, or part thereof, in which such noncompliance has been so found, or (2) by any other means authorized by law: Provided, however, That no such action shall be taken until the department or agency concerned has advised the appropriate person or persons of the failure to comply with the requirement and has determined that compliance cannot be secured by voluntary means. In the case of any action terminating, or refusing to grant or continue, assistance because of failure to comply with a requirement imposed pursuant to this section, the head of the Federal department or agency shall file with the committees of the House and Senate having legislative jurisdiction over the program or activity involved a full written report of the circumstances and the grounds for such action. No such action shall become effective until thirty days have elapsed after the filing of such report.

Sec. 603. Any department or agency action taken pursuant to section 602 shall be subject to such judicial review as may otherwise be provided by law for similar action taken by such department or agency on other grounds. In the case of action, not otherwise subject to judicial review, terminating or refusing to grant or to continue financial assistance upon a finding of failure to comply with any requirement imposed pursuant to section 602, any person aggrieved (including any State or political subdivision thereof and any agency of either) may obtain judicial review of such action in accordance with section 10 of the Administrative Procedure Act, and such action shall not be deemed committed to unreviewable agency discretion within the meaning of that section.

Sec. 604. Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to authorize action under this title by any department or agency with respect to any employment practice of any employer, employment agency, or labor organization except where a primary objective of the Federal financial assistance is to provide employment.

Sec. 605. Nothing in this title shall add to or detract from any existing authority with respect to any program or activity under which Federal financial assistance is extended by way of a contract of insurance or guaranty.

ORDER AND JUDGMENT ON DEMURRERS AND MOTION TO DISMISS AND GRANTING INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION

THE CASE

This is a suit brought by plaintiffs against defendants in the Superior Court of Fulton County, Georgia, seeking to enjoin the defendants, jointly and severally, from continuing to impede and interfere with the flow of pedestrian and vehicular traffic along Peyton and Harlan Roads in the City of Atlanta, Georgia; from continuing to prevent and deny to plaintiffs the use of said Roads as public thoroughfares; from continuing to obstruct, impede and interfere with the movements of pedestrian and vehicular traffic along said Roads; from obstructing, closing, vacating or abandoning said Roads, and for the declaration and judgment that certain portions of Ordinances of the City of Atlanta are unconstitutional and, therefore, null and void.

This order and judgment relates to the hearing on the question of the grant of an interlocutory injunction and on demurrers and a motion to dismiss filed in said case, as hereinafter set forth.

THE PLEADINGS

The pleadings in the case are as follows:

1. Original petition of L. K. Googer and others against the City of Atlanta and others, filed on December 17, 1962, with

(a) Paragraph 1 of demurrers of defendants [illegible] 21, 1962, as renewed, is sustained as to the individual defendants and each of them, in their individual capacities, and plaintiffs' petition as rewritten and as amended is hereby dismissed as to said individuals and each of them, in their individual capacities.

(b) Paragraph 1 of said demurrers of defendants filed December 21, 1962 as renewed is overruled as to the individual defendants and each of them, in their official capacities as members of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Atlanta.

(c) All of the remaining demurrers of the defendants, consisting of defendants' renewed and additional demurrers filed February 4, 1963 and all renewed demurrers other than paragraph 1 of the demurrers of the defendants filed December 21, 1962 as renewed (which paragraph 1 is passed on by paragraphs numbered (a) and (b) immediately preceding this paragraph (c)), are each and all hereby overruled.

RULING ON MOTION TO DISMISS

On January 16, 1963 all of the individuals, and each of them , except defendant Cecil Turner, filed in this case their motion to dismiss the above captioned action on the following grounds and the following reasons:

"1. These defendants, and each of them, move the Court to dismiss plaintiffs' petition as to them on the grounds that said petition shows on its face that all acts of these defendants, which are complained of and set out in plaintiffs' petition, were acts performed in their official capacity as Mayor and Members of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Atlanta and that plaintiffs' petition shows on its face that plaintiffs are not entitled to proceed against these defendants in their individual capacities."

According to the Court's construction of the plaintiffs' rewritten petition Ivan Allen, Jr. was named as a defendant only in his official capacity as Mayor of the City of Atlanta. The remaining individuals, including Cecil Turner, were named as defendants individually and in their official capacities as members of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Atlanta.

Upon consideration of said motion to dismiss, the same is hereby sustained and said action is hereby dismissed as to each and all of the individual defendants therein named, in their individual capacities.

PLEADINGS, ADMISSIONS AND STIPULATIONS

The pleadings as they presently exist and in respect of which hearing was had and this order and judgment are entered, are plaintiffs' rewritten petition filed January 14, 1963. The written petition consists of paragraphs numbered 1 through 12, both inclusive, together with paragraphs numbered 12(a), 13, 14, 14(a) and 15. By the answer of all defendants except defendant Cecil Turner, filed January 16, 1963, paragraphs 1 and 2 of the petition are admitted; defendants say paragraph 3 requires no answer and they deny paragraph 4 and paragraphs 6 through 14, both inclusive. As to paragraph 5 of the petition, the defendants in paragraph 4 of their answer allege: "Answering paragraph 5 of plaintiffs' petition, defendants admit that the ordinances referred to therein as Exhibits A and B were duly enacted by the Board of Aldermen of the City of Atlanta and signed by the Mayor, all of which was done in compliance with and in the manner prescribed by the Charter of the City of Atlanta. For further answer, defendants show that said ordinances speak for themselves as to their content." Thus defendants virtually admit all of paragraph 5.

In their answer defendants make no answer as to paragraphs 12(a), 14(a) and 15, although in their renewed and additional demurrers filed on January 16, 1963, the same date on which their answer was filed, they demurred specially, in paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof, to paragraph 14(a) of the plaintiffs' rewritten petition; and also demurred therein to paragraph 15 of plaintiffs' original petition, thus being mindful of the fact that paragraph 14(a) was and is in plaintiffs' petition; and by defendants' renewed demurrer filed February 4, 1963, which was filed after plaintiffs' amendment of January 21, 1963, adding paragraph 16 to their petition, the defendants, by paragraph 1 of said demurrer of February 4, 1963, renewed "each and every one of their demurrers as originally filed and renewed herein." Paragraph 16 added to plaintiffs petition by said amendment of January 21, 1963 met paragraphs 2 and 3 of defendants' renewed demurrers filed January 16, 1963.

By paragraph 14(a) of plaintiffs' rewritten petition it is alleged: "Plaintiffs show that Section 1 of the respective ordinances and the implementing action on the part of the defendants in erecting the respective barriers referred to above, is further in derogation of the respective constitutional provisions set out above for the reason that said sections of the respective ordinances and the said implementing action was for the purpose of establishing a 'racial buffer' to control the place of residence of the negro plaintiffs herein, and others similarly situated." By the failure of defendants to answer said paragraph 14(a), the defendants admit said paragraph and certainly that portion thereof which alleges factually that Sections 1 of the respective ordinances and the implementing action on the part of defendants in erecting the respective barriers referred to "was for the purpose of establishing a 'racial buffer' to control the place of residence of the negro plaintiffs herein, and others similarly situated."

A similar observation in respect of the failure of defendants to answer paragraph 12(a) of plaintiffs' petition is not made in respect of that portion of sub-paragraph (d) of said paragraph 12(a) relating to the abandonment of the respective portions of the two roads "for the benefit of private persons," for the reason it cannot be said that the respective paragraphs of the ordinances show upon their face that the closings were "for the benefit of private persons."

Section 1 of each of these ordinances shows that the portions of the roads are "abandoned for street purposes as no longer needed as such." The words "as such" are to be construed as meaning "for street purposes." It is significant, however, that the particular purpose or purposes for which the portions of the roads were abandoned are not indicated on the face of the ordinances, the ordinances being entirely silent in that respect. It is also significant that Section 2 of the ordinances reserves to the City of Atlanta "a general easement for all utilities, both public and private, now located in said street."

In respect of the effect of the failure of defendants to answer paragraphs 12(a) and particularly paragraph 14(a) of the plaintiffs' rewritten petition as dispensing with proof thereof, and that the allegations of such paragraphs not answered are to be taken as true, see Nations v. Lassiter, 94 Ga. App. 504, CITING Moss v. Youngblood, 187 Ga. 188 (2), and Evans v. Bredow, 95 Ga. App. 488, 489, 490. See also Georgia Code, Annotated, Section 81-103, Section 81-305, Section 81-306 and Section 81-308.

On the hearing there was offered by counsel for plaintiffs and admitted in evidence on behalf of plaintiffs, and identified as "P-3", affidavit of Mrs. Ruby L. Camp and others, to which there was attached as a part thereof marked Exhibit "A" a so-called photograph showing a barricade or barrier, and also a sketch or map showing location of barriers thereon identified by "X" marks. It was stipulated on the hearing by counsel for the parties that the barricades thus shown on the sketch on Peyton Road and Harlan Road, respectively, are of wooden structure supported by steel beams dug into the ground, which barricades run across the street from curb to curb, if there was in fact a curb, and that such barriers prevent vehicular travel at such points, and also pedestrian travel unless the pedestrian went over or around the same; and it was also stipulated by counsel for the parties on the hearing that said barriers were put up a short time after the signing of the ordinances in question, and are substantial in nature.

EVIDENCE FOR PLAINTIFFS AND RULINGS ON OBJECTIONS THERETO.

The evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiffs consists of the following:

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 1, certified copy of ordinance in relation to abandonment of Peyton Road, S.W. (The certificate thereto attached relates to abandonment of a portion of Harlan Road, S.W., but this is regarded as immaterial);

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 2, certified copy of ordinance relating to abandonment of a portion of Harlan Road, S.W.;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 3, affidavit of Mrs. Ruby L. Camp and others with Exhibit "A" attached;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 4, affidavit of Ruby L. Camp and others;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 5, affidavit of Mrs. Harold Johnson and others;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 6, affidavit of D. L. Hollowell, with Exhibits "A", "B" and "C" attached;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 7, certified copy of Map showing Peyton Road;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 8, certified copy of Map showing Harlan Road, and a portion of Peyton Road;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 10, affidavit of Joseph T. Bickers;

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 11, certified copies of six deeds.

Plaintiffs' Exhibits 1, 2 and 3 above set forth were offered and admitted in evidence without objection.

Paragraphs 4 of plaintiffs' Exhibits 4 and 5 were objected to on the ground that same constituted a mere conclusion, "there being no facts on which they previously testified to to substantiate it." Said objection is overruled. See Burton vs. O'Neill Mfg. Co., 126 Ga. 805.

Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 6 Affidavit of D. L. Hollowell.

Objections of Defendants

Paragraph 1 of affidavit of D. L. Hollowell of date January 17, 1963 contains, among other things, the following:

"That on September 6, 1962, there appeared in The Atlanta Journal an article which reflected that the Mayor indicated that the road patterns in the Harlan and Peyton Roads area would be changed so as to effect a 'racial buffer.' A copy of said article is attached hereto, marked Exhibit A, and incorporated herein by reference." Attached to said affidavit is Exhibit "A."

Counsel for defendants objected to that portion of paragraph 1 of said affidavit above set forth and to the Exhibit thereto attached, on the grounds:

1. (a) That it is of hearsay, an article that is written by a newspaper reporter, and this one, incidentally, carries the by-line of Raleigh Bryans. It is obviously the words of that newspaper reporter and it is of hearsay; (b) that it is an opinion.

2. Counsel for defendants objected to the entire newspaper article, and to the affidavit of D. L. Hollowell "on the ground that the words used by the affiant, 'racial buffer,' are his own words, apparently."

3. Counsel for defendants objected to the portion of said affidavit "wherein the affiant describes the contents of the newspaper article on the ground that his description of it is his own personal opinion, which has no probative value. He can't testify as to his opinion from this newspaper article."

4. Counsel for defendants also objected to the article in its entirety on the ground that it is of hearsay.

5. Counsel for defendants further objected to that portion of the paragraph in the newspaper article which is attached as Exhibit A "on the ground that it is obviously an opinion of the writer of this newspaper article; that if it were otherwise admissible, which we dony, it would still be objectionable on the ground that it is mere opinion of this newspaper writer, since, except for the quoted portions of it, it simply gives his resume of what he thinks happened at that time, and what conclusions he draws from it; and for that reason, we say it is inadmissible."

Paragraph 2 of affidavit of D. L. Hollowell, of date January 17, 1963, contains, among other things, the following:

"Affiant shows further that it is common knowledge that the abandonment of the portions of Harlan and Peyton Roads as reflected in the ordinances which are attached to the original petition in the instant case, marked Exhibits A and B, was for the purpose of establishing a 'racial buffer' zone between white and negro citizens of the City of Atlanta."

Counsel for the defendants objected to the portion of said paragraph 2 above set forth "on the ground that that is merely an opinion of the affiant; his opinion, of course, being it's common knowledge is not a statement of fact, but is merely a statement of opinion, and unless the Court undertakes the view that the Court can take judicial notice of this so-called common knowledge, then it is merely his opinion. There are no facts on which to substantiate it. * * * I think that the Court could not take judicial notice of anything that can be disproved. The only common knowledge that is before the Court at this time is what the newspaper says, and that doesn't make it common knowledge that your Honor can take judicial notice of. That makes it the knowledge of the newspaper."

Paragraph 2 of affidavit of D. L. Hollowell, of date January 17, 1963, contains, among other things, the following:

"That direct and indirect indications of this purpose have been reflected repeatedly in the metropolitan press as shown by Exhibits A and B and C, to this affidavit, all of which are incorporated herein by reference."

Counsel for defendants objected to the statement of the affiant "that the direct and indirect indications of this purpose have been reflected repeatedly in the metropolitan papers (press), for the reason that that is the opinion of the affiant. It recites no facts upon which to base the opinion and is purely a conclusion and opinion of his, and for that reason is not admissible."

Counsel for defendants also objected to the sentence in said portion of said paragraph 2 "wherein Exhibits A and B, and Exhibit C is some sort of a bulletin that was put out by some organization called the Southwest Citizens Association, on the ground that anything contained in Exhibits A, B and C would be * * * hearsay. It doesn't purport to be anything other than the statement of some third party, either a newspaper report or some other individual, and it would have no probative value in this Court; secondly, it would be clearly hearsay."

Paragraph 3 of affidavit of D. L. Hollowell, of date January 17, 1963, contains, among other things, the following:

"Affiant further shows that in at least two meetings since January 1, 1963, which meetings were attended by the affiant, the said Mayor has reiterated the fact that the roads were closed for the purpose of 'effecting stability in the Harlan-Peyton Road Area.'"

Counsel for defendants objected to said paragraph upon the following grounds: (1) "It is hearsay to say what the Mayor said; and (2) that even if the Mayor said it, it would not be heard in this Court to go behind the ordinance and tell us or the Court what his motives were in passing that ordinance, and, therefore, it is not admissible under either theory."

Paragraph 4 of affidavit of D. L. Hollowell, of date January 17, 1963, contains, among other things, the following:

"That the applicants for the abandoning of the said portions of Harland and Peyton Roads have publicly stated that their reason for same was to 'stabilize' the area generally known as Cascade Heights, Utoy Creek and Peyton Forest."

Counsel for defendants objected to said portion of said paragraph on the ground "that this affiant cannot state what some other persons have stated simply because it is hearsay; that is particularly true since these applicants for the ordinance are not adverse parties; their statements would not bind anybody; it wouldn't be statements against their interest; it would simply be rank hearsay."

Paragraph 4 of affidavit of D. L. Hollowell, of date January 17, 1963, contains, among other things, the following:

"That by stabilizing is meant the maintenance of the present racial character of the general area, namely, Caucasian."

Counsel for defendants objected to that portion of said paragraph 4 on the ground "that it is a conclusion of the affiant. It has no probative value. For him to say what is meant by someone else's stating the word 'stabilizing' is a conclusion. He first says what the people said it was for, to stabilize the neighborhood. Then he states it in other words, by stabilizing is meant the maintenance of the present racial character of the general area, namely, Caucasian. In other words, he is telling you what stabilizing means and we say he is not competent to do that. It is his own conclusion. Certainly, as a lay witness, he can't testify to it."

Each and all of the objections to the affidavit of D. L. Hollowell and the Exhibits thereto, and to portions of said affidavit, are hereby overruled. In this connection see the portions of this Order and Judgment, supra, at Pages 6 and 7 thereof in relation to failure of the defendants to answer paragraph 14(a) of plaintiffs' original petition. The Exhibits to said affidavit are matters of common knowledge of which judicial notice may be taken.

In respect of paragraph 3 of affidavit of D. L. Hollowell and defendants' objection thereto, as hereinabove set forth, and also in respect of the enactment of the city ordinances relating to the abandonment of portions of Peyton Road and Harlan Road, and their approval by the Mayor of the City of Atlanta, reference is had to the Charter and Related Laws and Code of General Ordinances of Atlanta, 1953, as set forth in Sections 13.1, 13.10 and 13.11 thereof, and to Georgia Laws 1939, pages 833 and 835, and to Georgia Laws 1874, pages 117 and 118. The Mayor of the City of Atlanta was evidently acting in his official capacity as such in the meetings referred to in paragraph 3 of the affidavit of D. L. Hollowell.

As to judicial notice, reference is made to that portion of this Order and Judgment, infra, dealing with that matter.

In respect of alleged hearsay evidence, see Moore vs. Atlanta Transit System, Inc., 105 Ga. 70, and particularly the history and background of the Hearsay Rule and its exceptions as set forth at length by Eberhardt, Judge, in his Opinion beginning at page 73. Reference is also had to the case of Dallas County vs. Commercial Union Assurance Company (United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit), cited in the Moore case, wherein the views of Wigmore and other law writers on the Hearsay Rule are set forth in the Opinion and the footnotes thereto. In view of the fact that neither the Mayor nor any of the members of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Atlanta were used by the defendants as witnesses in the case at bar, either by way of affidavits or depositions, to testify as to the purpose or purposes or object or objects of the enactment of the ordinances under attack in this case, and in view of the further fact that the only defenses offered were of the invocation of the rule that their motive or motives in the enactment of the ordinances, and the approval thereof by the Mayor insofar as his approval was concerned, could not be inquired into, and the purported defense predicated upon affidavits as to the character of the use of Peyton Road and Harlan exact (and the latter defense relating, if at all, to purpose or object) the Court does not regard the Hearsay Rule as inhibiting proof of the newspaper article and other publicity as history and background of the enactment of the ordinances and the purpose thereof. This is particularly the case in view of the admission by the defendants of the allegations of paragraph 14(a) of the plaintiffs' rewritten petition by their failure to answer said paragraph. The inference may be drawn that the defendants were content to abide the legal effect of their failure to answer that paragraph, wherein it was alleged that the ordinances and implementing action in erecting the barricades or barriers was for the purpose of establishing a "racial buffer." The Dallas case referred to in the Moore case, supra, is reported in 286 Fed. 2d. 388, and see particularly Divisions of Opinion 1-14 and 15 at Pages 396, 397, 398. See also that portion of this Order and Judgment, infra, dealing with the matter of judicial notice.

Plaintiffs' Exhibits 7 and 8, being certified copies of maps, were offered in evidence. Counsel for defendants objected thereto on the ground that said maps were immaterial, irrelevant and prejudicial "on the ground that they relate only to tax matters, and they are not admissible to show exact boundaries; they are not the highest and best evidence of boundaries; the deeds being the highest and best evidence of the boundaries." Said objection is hereby overruled.

On the hearing counsel for defendants proposed to read into the record in this case as evidence "certain portions of the testimony of witnesses in a prior case," bearing the certificate of the reporter who took that record (being transcript of a case that was tried in the Municipal Court of the City of Atlanta.) Counsel for defendants objected thereto on the ground "that the mere reduction of these witnesses' testimony and their statements in writing and having the court reporter put a certificate on it (said transcript) does not prevent it from being hearsay." Whereupon, the following took place:

"THE COURT: I don't think it would be admissible in any event because it is only admissible by way of impeachment. It is not admissible as independent proof because it is not the same case. This is in a different court.

"MR. HOLLOWELL: We submit that this evidence can constitute an affidavit relating to such matters.

"THE COURT: It's not an affidavit. It is merely a certificate of the Reporter that a certain person at a certain time and place testified as follows under oath.

"You can't use a transcript of one court in a different trial, and particularly, in a different court. Furthermore, it is not between the same parties. I can't conceive of it being admissible at all in that form.

"That record can't be used at all except for one purpose, I believe, and that is if the witness by affidavit or otherwise had testified to the contrary of what is reflected in this record, upon proper verification by way of impeachment. It is obviously not being offered for impeachment.

"MR. HOLLOWELL: I believe those are all of the affidavits that we have at this time. I would like, of course, to make an offer of proof as to what we would have put in.

"THE COURT: I don't think it is proper to do that. I would not consider as evidence any statement as to what you propose later to offer as evidence in the case.

"MR. HOLLOWELL: Very well, sir. Then that leaves us with the affidavits which we have already put in subject to the particular objections."

Paragraph 1 of affidavit of Joseph T. Bickers of date January 21, 1963 is as follows:

"That in the mid-fall of 1962, he, as President of the Empire Real Estate Board of this City, was invited, along with a delegation of four other members, to come to the office of Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., for a conference with the said Mayor and a delegation from the Southwest Civic Association. That at said meeting, the said Mayor presented to the affiant and five of his members a plan for closing Peyton Road and Harlan Road and forming a cul de sac the base of which would be generally Tee Road and the legs of which would be Harlan and Peyton Roads, respectively; that a similar cul de sac was proposed with a base being approximately 150 feet to the south of Tee Road and the leg of which would be generally Peyton Road and Harlan Road as they respectively extend to the south of said point; that a 100 foot 'no man's land' was proposed between the bases of the two said street layout. That the reason given for said proposal was to 'stabalize the Utoy Forrest-Peyton Forrest Areas which are located generally and more or less immediately to the south of the presently located barricades on Harlan and Peyton Roads."

Counsel for defendants objected to said paragraph 1 of said affidavit "on the ground that it is hearsay; and second, on the ground that it is irrelevant, immaterial and highly prejudicial in that it illustrates no issue in this case and has no probative value in this case." Said objections are each and all hereby overruled. In this connection see reference to the charter powers of the Mayor of the City of Atlanta referred to at the top of page 13 of this Order and Judgment and what has been said above in respect of Hearsay Evidence Rule.

Paragraph 2 of affidavit of Joseph T. Bickers of date January 21, 1963 is as follows:

"That later in the Fall, the said Mayor requested the affiant to appoint two people to meet with two persons to be appointed by one Mr. Dupree Jordan, a newspaper man in the southwest area of Atlanta, to further discuss the matter. That on or about November 27, 1962, the affiant, along with two persons appointed by him, met the said Mr. Jordan, a Mr. Virgil Copeland, President of the Southwest Civic Association, and a Mr. Bullard of Bullard-Mitchell Realty Company, for further discussion. That at said discussion meeting, the said Mr. Jordan and associates made known to the affiant and his associates the fact that the former were desirous of having the latter to sell the Negro community on the idea of closing Harlan and Peyton Roads in the matter referred to above so as to prevent them from opposing the petition which had been filed with the City of Atlanta by the said Mr. Copeland and others for the purpose of closing the above-mentioned streets. Further, the reasons given to the affiant and his associates were that the petition to close the roads was to prevent Negroes from buying and moving into the said Peyton Forrest-Utoy Forrest Area. It was reasoned by the delegation which was meeting with the affiant and his associates that if Negroes moved into the area, the white people presently living there would, among other things, 'panic' and sell their property at a loss. However, the affiant and his associates informed the other delegation that experience had proven the contrary to be true; that is, that with the advent of Negroes moving into a decent area, the sellers of the properties had normally been able to sell at a higher than normal market value rather than lower than normal market value. That upon the affiant and his associates having indicated their unwillingness to comply with the request of the other conferees, they, the other conferees, indicated that they would proceed on with their application to have the roads closed so as to prevent Negroes from buying land in the above-mentioned area."

Counsel for defendants objected to that portion of paragraph 2 beginning with the words "That at said discussion meeting," etc. and ending with the words "property at a loss." Counsel for defendants objected to said portion of said paragraph 2 of affidavit of Joseph T. Bickers "on the ground that it is hearsay. And Your Honor will note that the affiant is not telling us what he did and what he saw. He is telling us what someone else said to him; a third party, not a party to this litigation. * * * * And, Your Honor, I assume he is going to take it one step further, and further, therefore, the Mayor would have authority to bind these defendants by setting up such a conference. That is the only theory on which it could be admissible, Your Honor, as an admission against interest." . The Court thereupon stated: "Incidentally, collaterally, maybe there is a reference there to a petition which has been filed, or would be filed by a Mr. Copeland. Is there any such record as that?" To this query counsel for defendants stated: "We would expect that we would probably introduce later on in the trial the petition filed by certain citizens of the city which was acted on by the Mayor and Board of Aldermen. * * * It is a public record."

The first two sentences of said paragraph 2 of the affidavit of Joseph T. Bickers were not objected to. In the portion of said paragraph 2 beginning with the words "That at said discussion meeting," etc., there appears the statement in respect of opposing the petition which had been filed with the City of Atlanta by the said Mr. Copeland and others for the closing of Harlan and Peyton Roads. According to the affidavit of Bickers the meeting at which Bickers was present was held on or about November 27, 1962. It appears from the copy of notice of public hearing set forth on the certified copies of the two ordinances, that the notices bear date November 23, 1962; that the ordinances were introduced at the meeting of the Mayor and Board of Aldermen on November 19, 1962 with meeting of the Public Works Committee to be held on December 14, 1962, and the ordinances appear to have been adopted and approved December 17, 1962. Affidavit of Wyont B. Bean offered and admitted in evidence on behalf of defendants, and which is hereinafter referred to, has attached thereto signed petitions petitioning the Mayor and Board of Aldermen to close and abandon Peyton Road, S.W. for a distance of two hundred (200) feet. The reference in the affidavit of Bickers to the petition filed with the City of Atlanta for the purpose of closing the streets evidently had reference to the petitions referred to in the affidavit of Wyont.

The objection of counsel for the defendants to that portion of paragraph 2 of the affidavit of Bickers beginning with the words "That at said discussion meeting," etc., is hereby overruled.

Counsel for defendants also objected to that portion of said paragraph 2 of the affidavit of Bickers beginning with the word "However," and ending with the words "normal value," etc.,"on the ground that it is irrelevant, immaterial and highly prejudicial. It has no place in this law suit and this litigation; that the only conceivable purpose of inserting it in this affidavit is to prejudice this Court and these defendants by interjecting a racial issue into this case that has no bearing on the law suit as filed, and we object to it on that ground." Said objection is hereby overruled.

Counsel for defendants objected to that portion of paragraph 2 of the Bickers affidavit beginning with the words "the other conferees," etc. and ending with the words "above-mentioned area," on the ground that it is hearsay and a conclusion and an opinion of the affiant. Said objections are hereby overruled.

Counsel for plaintiffs offered and there was admitted in evidence without objection six warranty deeds.

MOTION OF COUNSEL FOR DEFENDANTS FOR DENIAL OF INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION.

At the conclusion of the plaintiffs' evidence and before defendants offered any evidence, and upon announcement by counsel for plaintiffs that they rested, counsel for defendants made an oral motion that the Court deny an interlocutory injunction on behalf of the plaintiffs. The Court regarded such motion as in the nature of a nonsuit and denied said motion at such stage of the hearing. In this connection see Kight vs. Gilliard, 214 Ga. 445 (2).

EVIDENCE FOR DEFENDANTS AND RULINGS ON OBJECTIONS THERETO.

Defendants offered in evidence six affidavits of individuals relating to the nature and character of Peyton Road and traffic thereon, some of said affidavits referring to the use of Peyton Road and others to the use of both Peyton Road and Harlan Road; reference being made to the use of said Roads as a "drag strip" and "speedway" and "racing areas by teenagers." Only one affiant, James L. Buffington, appears to reside on Peyton Road, his residence being 590 Peyton Road, S.W. None of the other affiants appears to reside either on Peyton Road or Harlan Road.

The remaining affidavit is by one Wyont B. Bean, Plant Engineer for the City of Atlanta, with petition attached directed to the Mayor and Board of Aldermen of the City and petitioning for the closing and abandonment of Peyton Road, S.W. for a distance of two hundred (200) feet east of the junction of the corners of Land Lots 204, 215, 212 and 213 (evidently intended as two hundred (200) feet west. In this connection see Map, Plaintiffs' Exhibit P-7..

Affidavit of James L. Buffington, identified as D-1, was objected to as to each and every paragraph thereof on the ground of hearsay, without probative value in this case; "none of these parties are plaintiff or defendants in the case; they are not parties, and there has been no allegation to the effect that they were the reasons that the road was closed. There is no evidence." This affidavit was also objected to by counsel for the plaintiffs on the ground that it was irrelevant and immaterial, and "incompetent for any proof that would be required in the case or any negativing of proof which has been made by the plaintiffs." Counsel for plaintiffs also stated "in addition to the objections which we have made dealing with the matters of hearsay, we also would state, Your Honor, that certainly if ownership is attempted to be proved by this instrument, itself, the only statement of the affiant to the effect that he owns the said property is not the highest and best evidence. All of the objections except that in relation to ownership are sustained. The objection in relation to statement of ownership is overruled. The affidavit is not regarded as evidence.

In respect of affidavit of Carlton J. Owens, identified as D-2, counsel for plaintiffs objected to each and every paragraph thereof on the ground "that it is completely immaterial, irrelevant, incompetent and a conclusion which, or the results which the affiant seeks to draw in the last paragraph are mere conclusions and therefore are not subject to being received as being admissible in this particular case;" also on the ground that the affidavit has no probative value in the case. Said objections are hereby sustained.

In respect of affidavit of Leonard Lee, identified as D-3, counsel for plaintiffs objected to the affidavit on the same grounds urged to affidavit of James L. Buffington and Carlton J. Owens, as above set forth, and on the ground that it has no relationship to the issue before the Court and has no probative value. Said objections are hereby sustained.

In respect of affidavit of Mrs. C. A. Porter, identified as D-4, and affidavit f Mrs. Colleen Ramsey, identified as D-5, counsel for plaintiffs made the same objections thereto as to affidavit of Leonard Lee, D-3. Said objections are hereby sustained.

In respect of affidavit of Mrs. Alexander S. Kobus, identified as D-6, counsel for plaintiffs objected thereto on the same grounds that were made to affidavit of Leonard Lee, D-3, except as to portion of said affidavit of said Mrs. Alexander S. Kobus hereinafter referred to. Said objections, with said exception, are hereby sustained. Counsel for plaintiffs did not object to that portion of the affidavit of Mrs. Kobus which states: "My husband and I are retired and have lived in this neighborhood approximately three years. Up to the time that the City of Atlanta closed Peyton and Harlan Roads both of these streets were used by drivers as a cut-through to Marietta and other points in that direction."

Counsel for defendants offered and there was admitted in evidence without objection affidavit of Wyont B. Bean, with petitions for closure of portion of Peyton Road attached.

JUDICIAL NOTICE

At the conclusion of the evidence, both for plaintiffs and defendants, counsel for plaintiffs asked the Court to take judicial notice of certain matters, stating, among other things, as follows: "We have for many months been in the general southwest area with relative to the expansion of Negroes into that area.

BOOK 377 PAGE 194

has been so openly and notoriously publicized by every routine and common communicative media or communication media that it is of such notoriety that it falls within the scope of that which we mentioned in American Jurisprudence twenty forty nine (evidently referring to Volume 40 American Jurisprudence, on the subject to Evidence, page 49, dealing with "matters of common knowledge.") I think that in light of the knowledge or the facts that have come into existence there we are then in a position to take judicial knowledge of what, if anything, has been done in an effort to either restrict or to expand this attempt one side to move in, and the attempt on the other side to keep them out."

Section 38-112 of the Code of Georgia, Annotated, provides that among other matters specifically mentioned therein "all similar matters of public knowledge shall be judicially recognized without the introduction of proof."

In Southern Railway Company v. Covenia, 100 Ga. 46, the Supreme Court quoted approvingly from cases in the Supreme Court of the United States as follows: "In the case of Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U.S. 321, Mr. Justice Harlan said: 'If a fact alleged to exist, upon which the rights of parties depend, is within common experience and knowledge, it is one of which the courts will take judicial notice.' In Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawyer, 560, Mr. Justice Field said: 'We cannot shut our eyes to matters of public notoriety and general cognizance. When we take our seats on the bench we are not struck with blindness, and forbidden to know as judges what we see as men.'"

Ohio Bell Telephone Company v. Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, 201 U.S. 292. And see 31 C.J. Sec. (Evidence), Sections 9, 11, 12 and 13.

In the case at bar the Court takes judicial notice as a matter of common knowledge throughout the community of which the Court has territorial jurisdiction that enactment by the City of Atlanta of the two ordinances under attack in this case, and their implementation by the erection of the barricades the maintenance of which is sought to be enjoined, was for the purpose of establishing a racial buffer, barrier or zone, with the view of stabilizing or effecting stability for white race ownership and occupancy, in undefined area referred to as the Harlan-Peyton Road area or Utoy-Forrest and Peyton Forrest areas lying south of said barricades, and preventing or attempting to prevent property ownership and occupancy of said area or areas by members of the negro race.

The Court does not take judicial notice of the physical nature and character of Peyton Road and Harlan Road and of the traffic thereon and the use of same as speedways as indicated in the proffered affidavits of James L. Buffington and others, hereinabove mentioned, as matters of common knowledge. Moreover, the use of such roads, if any, in violation of traffic laws and regulations were and are matters of law enforcement and not an excuse for closing or abandoning portions of roads, and particularly portions merely of two hundred (200) feet in length.

ORDINANCES VOID FOR WANT OF SUFFICIENT DESCRIPTION

The ordinance in relation to Peyton Road, S.W. provides: "That portion of Peyton Road, S.W. beginning at the northeast corner of Land Lot 213, 14 District of Fulton County, and running west approximately 200 feet as located in Land Lots 212 and 213, 14th District of Fulton County, be and the same is hereby abandoned for street purposes as no longer needed as such."

The separate similar ordinance in relation to Harland Road, S.W. provides: "That portion of Harland Road, S.W. from Tee Road [illegible] approximately 200 feet, as located in Land Lot 212 of the 14th District of Fulton County, be and the same is hereby abandoned for street purposes as no longer needed as such."

In the separate advertisements of Notice of Public Hearing in respect of each Road, it was stated that the ordinance was introduced providing for the closing and or abandonment of the following as a street or public thoroughfare "being no longer useful or necessary for the public use and convenience."

The authority thus sought to be exercised was evidently not under the ordinance of the City of Atlanta set forth in the Code of the City of Atlanta, Charter and Related Laws, as Section 24.9 of Code of Atlanta of 1953, but rather under the Act of the General Assembly of Georgia, approved March 3, 1962 (Georgia Laws 1962, Volume 2, Page 2743, et seq.), which expressly repealed said Section 24.9. The Act of 1962 is substantially the same as Section 24.9 so repealed. This Act, among other things, provides: "The Mayor and Board of Aldermen of the City of Atlanta are authorized and empowered by resolution or ordinance to vacate and abandon any street or portion of street which in their judgment is no longer useful or necessary for the public use and convenience." It also provides that if the Mayor and Board of Aldermen decide to vacate or abandon a street, "same shall thereafter cease to be a street for any purpose whatever." The Act also provides that "the City is authorized in such cases to accept a consideration for the vacation of a street."

It will be noted that the ordinances give the length of the portions of the Roads, respectively, as approximately 200 feet. The exact distance is not stated, nor does the 200 feet run to a fixed point.

In Little vs. Baskin, 135 Ga. 851 (2), it was held that an application for the establishment of a new road under state law contained an insufficient description of the road proposed to be established and was, therefore, subject to be dismissed on the ground of insufficient description.

In Green v. Road Board of Bibb County, 126 Ga. 693, it was held that an order establishing the road involved in that case was void for uncertainty of description of initial and terminal points.

Particular attention is called to the case of Smith vs. Georgia Industrial Realty Company, 215 Ga. 431, involving a suit for specific performance of an alleged contract for the sale of certain real property, wherein it was held that in metes and bounds description, call of a certain number of feet, more or less, to a point, without a specific description of the point, rendered the description so indefinite and uncertain as to render the contract void and incapable of specific performance. In the case at bar the length of the proposed closed portions of Peyton Road and Harlan Road is stated "approximately."

THE ORDINANCES ARE UNREASONABLE, ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS

Aside from the racial issue hereinafter discussed, the ordinances under attack are regarded by the Court as unreasonable, arbitrary and capricious, and are, therefore, illegal and void. Assuming the descriptions of the closures are legally sufficient, their length is only approximately two hundred (200) feet. The distance of Peyton Road from the barrier on that Road south to its junction with Harlan Road is approximately twelve hundred sixty (1260) feet. The distance from the junction south to Sewell Road shown on the sketch attached to affidavit of Ruby L.Camp and others, P-3, does not show any east and west cross-over streets, and there is no evidence that such cross-over streets exist. That affidavit shows inconvenience of use in the particulars therein set forth and the impeding of normal traffic as the result of the barricades. The reservation in the ordinances of general easements for all utilities, both public and private, lends support to the view that the ordinances are arbitrary and capricious. The charter provision (see page 24 of this Order and Judgment) provides that upon vacation or abandonment of a street, "same shall thereafter cease to be a street for any purpose whatever." In this connection, see also Gable vs. City of Cedar Rapids (Supreme Court of Iowa), 129 Northwestern, 737 (8), 739.

RE: RACIAL BUFFER OR BARRIER

By the amendment of plaintiffs filed January 21, 1963 it appears that the following plaintiffs are negroes: L. K. Googer, Mrs. Marion Googer, Mrs.Carrie Andrews, Harold Johnson, Mrs. Ernestine Johnson and Theodore Wyatt, and that the other plaintiffs are white persons. The intervenors Mrs.Sara C. Hall and Carl Thomas Kidd do not raise any racial issue in their intervention and are assumed to be white persons. None of the negroes reside on Peyton Road.

It does not appear that any of the negroes who are parties plaintiff own or occupy or contemplate becoming owners or occupants of any real property lying south of the barricades erected in Peyton Road or in Harlan Road, or in the area designated as the Utoy-Forrest or the Peyton Forrest areas. It appears that the negroes reside at the following locations or house numbers on Harlan Road: L. K. Googer and Mrs. Marion Googer, 40 Harlan Road; Harold Johnson and Mrs. Ernestine Johnson, 70 Harlan Road; Theodore Wyatt, 80 Harlan Road, and Mrs, Carrie Andrews, 140 Harlan Road. All of these persons reside north of the barrier which has been erected in Harlan Road. The plaintiffs who are white persons all reside on Peyton Road except Carl Thomas Kidd, one of the intervenors,who resides at 241 Harlan Road, which appears to be approximately four hundred (400) feet south of the barrier on Harlan Road. There is, therefore, no issue in the case at bar in respect of present ownership or use of property south of the respective barriers or in respect of such ownership or use of property in the Utoy-Forrest or Peyton Forrest areas. The question insofar as any racial issue is concerned is in respect of the legality and constitutionality of the ordinances and the implementation thereof by the erection of the barriers for the purpose of establishing a racial buffer, barrier or zone with the view of stabilizing or effecting stability for white race ownership and occupancy in an undefined area referred to as the Harlan Peyton Road area or Utoy-Forrest and Peyton Road areas lying south of said barriers and preventing or attempting to prevent property ownership and occupancy of said area or areas by members of the negro race, as hereinabove stated, and thereby preventing the use of Peyton Road and Harlan Road as public streets by the plaintiffs and intervenors as complained of in this case. That purpose of the ordinances and their implementation by the erection of the barriers is in the view of the Court supported both by the exercise of judicial notice and by the evidence in the case.

As early as forty-eight years ago the Supreme Court of Georgia, in Carey v. City of Atlanta, 143 Ga. 192, held that an ordinance of the City of Atlanta prohibiting white persons and colored persons from residing in the same block denied the inherent right of a person to acquire, enjoy and dispose of property, and for that reason were violative of the due process clause of the Federal and State Constitutions. This ordinance expressly recited that it was enacted "for preserving peace, conflict and ill feeling between the white and colored race, and promoting the general welfare of the City." This case was decided February 12, 1915.

In 1918 in the case of Glover vs. City of Atlanta, 148 Ga. 285, an ordinance of the City of Atlanta which prohibited colored persons from occupying as a residence any house upon any block upon which a greater number of houses were occupied as residences by white people, and vice versa, was held to be unconstitutional. The Glover case followed the case of Buchanan vs. Warley, 245 U.S. 60, involving the validity of a similar ordinance of the City of Louisville, Kentucky, and expressly overruled the case of Harden v. City of Atlanta, 147 Ga. 248.

See also Bowen vs. City of Atlanta, 159 Ga. 145, decided in 1924, in which a zoning ordinance of the City of Atlanta undertaking to zone certain residential districts as white districts and certain residential districts as colored districts was involved, and in which the Supreme Court held that the decision in Glover v. City of Atlanta, 148 Ga. 285, was controlling.

It being unlawful and unconstitutional to legislate in respect of ownership or occupancy of real property on the basis of race or color, the legal conclusion is inescapable and incontrovertible, and the Court so holds, that it is illegal and unconstitutional to legislate in respect of use of public streets or portions thereof for the purpose of effecting on the basis of race or color the ownership and occupancy of real property and the acquisition or disposition or the market value thereof.

Ever since the State Constitution of 1868, and carried forward in the State Constitutions of 1877 and 1945, it has been the fundamental law of this state that: "The social status of the citizens shall never be the subject of legislation."

In the case of Scott vs. The State, 39 Ga. 321, decided at the December Term, 1869 of the Supreme Court of Georgia, in Opinion by Joseph E. Brown, Chief Justice, it was said: "That Section of the Constitution forever prohibits legislation of any character regulating or interferring with the social status. It leaves social rights and status where it finds them."

In Wolfe vs. Georgia Railway & Electric Company, 2 Ga. App. 499, the Court, speaking through Richard Brevard Russell, Judge, said: "To recognize inequality as to the civil or political rights belonging to any citizen or class of citizens, or to attempt to fix the social status of any citizen either by legislation or by judicial decision is repugnant to every principle underlying our form of government."

The voluntary principle still remains with the individual in respect of all such matters.

"Neither the Fifth nor Fourteenth Amendment positively commands integration of the races but only negatively forbids governmentally enforced segregation.

Cohen vs. Public Housing Administration (U.S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit), 257 Fed. 2d. 73.

Desirable as it is to promote the public peace by preventing race conflicts, and important as is the preservation of the public peace, this aim cannot be accomplished by laws or ordinances which deny rights created or protected by the Federal Constitution.

GRANT OF INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION

Under the facts and circumstances of this case as disclosed by the evidence and also by taking judicial notice of matters of common knowledge as have been above set forth, it is the view and opinion of the Court that an interlocutory injunction should be granted in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendant City of Atlanta and against the individual defendants in their official capacity only as Mayor and Members of the Board of Aldermen, as hereinafter set forth. The Court regards the following cases as controlling in the matter of such injunctive relief.

Dunlap v. Tift, 209 Ga. 201, 208, 209, and cases cited;

Coker v. Atlanta, Etc. Railway Co., 123 Ga. 483;

Rider v. Porter, 147 Ga. 760 (2);

City of Blue Ridge v. Kiker, 190 Ga. 206;

Maddox v. Willis, 205 Ga. 596, 597 (6).

See also Barham v. Grant, 185 Ga. 601, 605.

While the Googer case, supra, related to vacation of street for private purposes, and while the rewritten petition in the case at bar, among other things, referred in paragraph 12(a) to the closure of the respective portions of Peyton Road and Harlan Road "for the benefit of private persons," there is in the Court's opinion no distinction between the closing of a street or portion of a street illegally or in violation of constitutional rights, from that of such closure for the benefit of private individual or individuals.

In respect of the question of inquiring into the motives of the members of a governing body, see Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U.S. 313, and cases cited, and particularly the case of Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 663, 661.

IT IS, THEREFORE, CONSIDERED, ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that an interlocutory injunction be and the same is hereby granted restraining and enjoining the defendant City of Atlanta and the individual defendants, in their official capacity only as Mayor and Members of the Board of Aldermen of the City of Atlanta, respectively, from continuing to maintain the barricades which have been erected in Peyton Road, S.W. and Harlan Road, S.W. pursuant to the ordinances of the City of Atlanta adopted and approved December 17, 1962, and also from continuing by said barricades or by other means to impede or interfere with the usual flow of pedestrian and vehicular traffic along said Peyton and Harlan Roads, and from continuing to prevent plaintiffs from the use of said Roads as public thoroughfares by said barricades, or otherwise.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that said defendants remove or cause to be removed said barricades and each of them on or before five o'clock P.M. on Monday, March 4, 1963.

ORDER AMENDING ORDER AND JUDGMENT OF MARCH 1, 1963.

On page 29 of Order and Judgment on demurrers and motion to dismiss and granting interlocutory injunction, entered March 1, 1963 in the above stated case, the citation of the case of Wittkamper vs. Harvey was inadvertently set forth as 1844 Fed. Supp. 715, whereas the citation should have been 188 Fed.Supp. 715.

Also on page 29 of said Order and Judgment in the fourth line from the bottom of said page, there appears by inadvertence the word "Googer," whereas the word should have been "Dunlap," referring to the case of Dunlap vs. Tift, 209 Ga. 201, 208, 209, cited on said page.

Also by inadvertence the number of the case in the title thereof on the first page of said Order and Judgment, as originally drafted, was set forth as No. A-97697, whereas the number should have been set forth as A-97679. This number, A-97697, however, was corrected on the original Order and Judgment in said case at the time of the filing of same in the Clerk's Office.

This order is hereby entered nunc pro tunc as of March 1, 1963 to amend said Order and Judgment of March 1, 1963 in the particulars and as hereinabove mentioned.

PUBLIC HOUSING ADMINISTRATION
HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY WASHINGTON 25, D.C. 20413

CIRCULAR
12-30-64

TO: Central Office Division and Branch Heads Regional Directors
Local Authorities
Managers, Directly Operated Projects

SUBJECT: Civil Rights Act of 1964, Public Law 88-352, July 2, 1964, 78 Stat. 241

Section 601 (in title VI) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 provides:

> "No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Section 602 authorizes and directs the Federal departments and agencies involved to effectuate the provisions of section 601 by issuing rules, regulations, or orders of general applicability, to become effective upon approval by the President.

Enclosed is a copy of the regulations of the Housing and Home Finance Agency issued under section 602 and approved by the President (24 CFR, Subtitle A, Part 1, sections 1.1 et seq.), effective January 3, 1965. Section 601 of the Civil Rights Act and these regulations apply to the low-rent housing program under the United States Housing Act of 1937. They prohibit discrimination in that program on the ground of race, color or national origin. In addition, discrimination in the low-rent program on the basis of creed is prohibited pursuant to Executive Order 11063 and the regulations thereunder.

Every project under the United States Housing Act of 1937 is subject to these prohibitions, regardless of the date when it was initially covered by a financial assistance contract, but the contract remedies in case of noncompliance may differ depending on the date when the project was initially covered by such a contract.

The following PHA requirements shall apply in the low-rent housing program under the United States Housing Act of 1937:

(Cont'd)

1. The Public Housing Commissioner is the "responsible Agency official" as defined in section 1.2(c) of the HHFA regulations.

2. A Local Authority having a project covered by a contract with the PHA for loans, annual contributions, or administration, regardless of the date when such contract was entered into, is a "recipient" as defined in section 1.2(f) of the HHFA regulations.

3. A Local Authority submitting an application for financial assistance in respect to a project is an "applicant" as defined in section 1.2(g) of the HHFA regulations, and any such application is an "application" as defined in section 1.2(g) and within the meaning of section 1.5(a) of the HHFA regulations, unless the project was covered prior to January 3, 1965, by a contract for financial assistance (other than preliminary loan). An application, voucher, or other request for funds in respect to a project which was so covered prior to January 3, 1965, shall not be deemed to be an "application" as defined in section 1.2(g) and within the meaning of section 1.5(a) of the HHFA regulations.

4. The discrimination prohibited in the low-rent housing program is any action of the kind set forth in section 1.4(a) and (b) of the HHFA regulations on the ground of race, color or national origin, and any action of the same kind on the ground of creed.

5. The low-rent housing program under the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall not be deemed to be a program or activity in which "a primary objective of the Federal financial assistance is to provide employment," within the meaning of section 604 of the Civil Rights Act and section 1.4(c) of the HHFA regulations. However, the employment practices of a Local Authority will be subject to such contract provision or provisions for nondiscrimination in employment or equal employment opportunity as have been or may be included in the contract or contracts between the Local Authority and the PHA, including any provision requiring the Local Authority to incorporate or cause to be incorporated a similar provision in contracts and subcontracts.

6. Pursuant to section 1.5(a) of the HHFA regulations, all contracts for annual contributions which initially cover a project or projects on or after January 3, 1965, shall contain the following provision applicable to such project or projects:

> "In connection with the development and operation of each Project No(s). _____, and for as long as each Project or any portion thereof is used for or in connection with low-rent housing for families of low income, the Local Authority will comply with all requirements imposed by title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Public Law 88-352, 78 Stat. 241; the regulations of the

Housing and Home Finance Agency issued thereunder, 24 CFR, Subtitle A, Part 1, section 1.1 et seq.; and the PHA requirements pursuant to said regulations. The Local Authority will, by contractual requirement, covenant, or other binding commitment, assure the same compliance on the part of any subgrantee, contractor, subcontractor, transferee, successor in interest, or other participant in the program or activity, such commitment to include the following clause:

> 'This provision is included pursuant to requirements of the Public Housing Administration and the regulations of the Housing and Home Finance Agency under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 24 CFR, Subtitle A, Part 1, section 1.1 et seq., and the obligation of the [contractor or other] to comply therewith inures to the benefit of the United States, the Public Housing Administration, and the Local Authority, any of which shall be entitled to invoke any remedies available by law to redress any breach thereof or to compel compliance therewith by the [contractor or other].'"

Such contracts will also provide that the Local Authority's failure to comply with the foregoing provision will constitute a substantial default under the contract by reason of which the Local Authority, at the option of the PHA, shall convey title to, or deliver possession of, the project or projects to the PHA.

7. All contracts for preliminary loans entered into on or after January 3, 1965, shall provide that upon approval by the PHA of a development program prepared pursuant to such contract, the Local Authority will execute an annual contributions contract or amend an outstanding annual contributions contract between the Local Authority and the PHA which will contain, applicable to the project or projects described in the development program, the provisions set forth and described in paragraph "6" above.

8. Contracts for preliminary loans entered into prior to January 3, 1965, shall be amended to include the provisions described in paragraph "7" above, before additional advances will be made thereunder; except that in case of a refusal or failure by a Local Authority to execute such an amendment, the PHA will nevertheless make advances necessary, in addition to any other funds of the Local Authority available for the purpose, to pay the principal and interest on outstanding Temporary Notes of the Local Authority and to liquidate its other valid outstanding obligations, if any, incurred in connection with the project or projects involved.

9. Pursuant to section 1.5 of the HHFA regulations, each Local Authority shall, in connection with its next request for funds with respect to any project initially covered by a contract for financial assistance (other than preliminary loan) prior to January 3, 1965, or prior to the execution of any further contract for financial assistance on or after January 3, 1965, whichever occurs first, submit to the appropriate PHA Regional Director a statement on Form PHA-3037, "Statement of Local Authority as to Compliance under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964," a copy of which is enclosed. The statement shall be accompanied by a certified copy of a resolution of the Board of Commissioners of the Local Authority adopting the statement and authorizing its execution and delivery to the PHA. The statement shall cover all projects in the Local Authority's federally assisted low-rent housing program with respect to which the Local Authority is a recipient (see paragraph "2" above). In case of failure or refusal of a Local Authority to submit such statement as prescribed, or in case the statement indicates any non-compliance and the Local Authority fails to provide such methods of administration as are found by the Public Housing Commissioner to give reasonable assurance that the Local Authority will comply with all requirements described in the statement, or reasonable assurance that the noncompliance indicated in the statement will be corrected, the provisions of paragraph "11" below will be applicable.

10. Local Authority records with respect to applications for admission to any low-rent housing assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall indicate as to each application the date of receipt; the determination of the Local Authority as to eligibility or noneligibility of the applicant; where eligible, the unit size for which eligible; the preference rating, if any; the applicant's expression of choice of project or location, if any; the date of assignment to a dwelling unit and identification of unit to which assigned; and, where applicable, the date of the Local Authority's offer and date of the applicant's rejection of a dwelling unit and identification of the unit offered. Local Authority records with respect to inquiries from families prior to commencement of formal application-taking or during a period of temporary suspension of formal application-taking shall indicate, as to each family, the date of inquiry, the name and address, and whatever further information is obtained, determination made, or action taken by the Local Authority with respect to such family. Local Authorities shall keep such other and further records as the PHA may from time to time require either by general requirement applicable to all Local Authorities or by specific requirement directed to a particular Local Authority. The retention periods for the foregoing records and for records related to the computation of income, reexamination of income, fixing of rent, and for tenant leases shall be the recommended periods stated in Part II, Section 8, Exhibit 1, of the Local Housing Authority Management Handbook.

11. (a) A final decision containing a finding of noncompliance by a Local Authority, including any failure or refusal by a Local Authority to comply with any requirement of paragraph "9" above, may result in one or more of the following actions by the PHA:

(1) Refusal to enter into further contracts for financial assistance with the Local Authority.

(2) Refusal to approve or to make further advances of funds on account of a loan to the Local Authority, except to the extent that such advances are pledged to payment of outstanding Temporary Notes or are necessary for payment of other outstanding valid obligations of the Local Authority.

(3) Refusal to pay the Local Authority, with respect to the project or projects involved, any otherwise payable additional subsidy for elderly families or any otherwise payable additional subsidy for displaced families authorized in section 10(a) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended.

(4) Declaration of a breach or default on the part of the Local Authority in accordance with the terms of its contract with the PHA covering the project or projects involved, and action to invoke such remedy or remedies as may be available to the PHA for breach or default under such contract including recovery of title or possession of the project or projects.

(5) Such other action as may be authorized by law.

(b) Notwithstanding any noncompliance on the part of a Local Authority, including any refusal or failure of a Local Authority to amend a preliminary loan contract as required in paragraph "8" above, or to submit a statement on Form PHA-3037, the PHA will not refuse to pay any funds due under any contract with the Local Authority to the extent that the funds payable have been pledged to payment of principal and interest on outstanding Temporary Notes or Bonds of the Local Authority, or to the extent that the funds payable are necessary, in addition to other funds of the Local Authority available for the purpose, to liquidate its other valid outstanding obligations, if any, incurred in connection with the project or projects involved; and PHA disbursing officers shall disburse such pledged or necessary funds when due in accordance with such contract.

12. PHA regulations issued pursuant to Executive Order 11063, Equal Opportunity in Housing, to the extent they are designed to prohibit discrimination against persons on the grounds of race, color, or national origin, are superseded by the HHFA regulations under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, but nothing in the HHFA regulations or PHA requirements thereunder shall be deemed to relieve a Local Authority of any obligation assumed or imposed under such superseded PHA regulations prior to January 3, 1965. PHA regulations issued pursuant to Executive Order 11063, insofar as related to discrimination on the ground of creed, remain in full force and effect.

13. All federally owned or operated projects shall be operated in conformance with the nondiscrimination provisions in Sec. 1.4(a) and (b) of the HHFA regulations and applicable PHA requirements herein; and in conformance with Executive Order 11063, Equal Opportunity in Housing, and PHA regulations thereunder.

AUTHORITY: The provisions of this Part 1 are issued under sec. 602 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, P.L. 88-352, 78 Stat. 252, 42 U.S.C. 2000d-1; sec. 502(a) of the Housing Act of 1948, 12 U.S.C. 1701c; and the laws listed in Appendix A to this Part 1.

§ 1.1 Purpose.

The purpose of this Part 1 is to effectuate the provisions of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (hereafter referred to as the "Act") to the end that no person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be otherwise subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance from the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

§ 1.2 Definitions.

As used in this Part 1—

(a) The term "Agency" means the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

(b) The term "Administrator" means the Housing and Home Finance Administrator.

(c) The term "responsible Agency official" with respect to any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance means the Administrator or other official of the Agency who by law or by delegation has the principal responsibility within the Agency for the administration of the law extending such assistance.

(d) The term "United States" means the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, Wake Island, the Canal Zone, and the territories and possessions of the United States, and the term "State" means any one of the foregoing.

(e) The term "Federal financial assistance" includes (1) grants, loans, and advances of Federal funds, (2) the grant or donation of Federal property and interests in property, (3) the detail of Federal personnel, (4) the sale and lease of, and the permission to use (on other than a casual or transient basis), Federal property or any interest in such property without consideration or at a nominal consideration, or at a consideration which is reduced for the purpose of assisting the recipient, or in recognition of the public interest to be served by such sale or lease to the recipient, and (5) any Federal agreement, arrangement, or other contract which has as one of its purposes the provision of assistance. The term "Federal financial assistance" does not include a contract of insurance or guaranty.

(f) The term "recipient" means any State, political subdivision of any State, or instrumentality of any State or political subdivision, any public or private agency, institution, organization, or other entity, or any individual, in any State, to whom Federal financial assistance is extended, directly or through another recipient, for any program or activity, or who otherwise participates in carrying out such program or activity (such as a redeveloper in the Urban Renewal Program), including any successor, assign, or transferee thereof, but such term does not include any ultimate beneficiary under any such program or activity.

(g) The term "applicant" means one who submits an application, contract, request, or plan requiring Agency approval as a condition to eligibility for Federal financial assistance, and the term "application" means such an application, contract, request, or plan.

§ 1.3 Application of Part 1.

This Part 1 applies to any program or activity for which Federal financial assistance is authorized under a law administered by the Agency, including any program or activity assisted under the Agency programs listed in Appendix A of this Part 1. It applies to money paid, property transferred, or other Federal financial assistance extended under any such program or activity after the effective date of this Part 1 pursuant to an application approved prior to such effective date. This Part 1 does not apply to (1) any Federal financial assistance by way of insurance or guaranty contracts, (2) money paid, property transferred, or other assistance extended under any such program or activity before the effective date of this Part 1, (3) any assistance to any person who is the ultimate beneficiary under any such program or activity, or (4) any employment practice, under any such program or activity, of any employer, employment agency, or labor organization, except to the extent described in § 1.4(c). The fact that a program or activity is not listed in Appendix A shall not mean, if Title VI of the Act is otherwise applicable, that such program or activity is not covered. Other programs or activities under statutes now in force or hereinafter enacted may be added to this list by notice published in the FEDERAL REGISTER.

§ 1.4 Discrimination prohibited.

(a) General. No person in the United States, shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be otherwise subjected to discrimination under any program or activity to which this Part 1 applies.

(b) Specific discriminatory actions prohibited. (1) A recipient under any program or activity to which this Part 1 applies, may not, directly or through contractual or other arrangements, on the ground of race, color, or national origin:

(i) Deny a person any housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits provided under the program or activity;

(ii) Provide any housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits to a person which are different, or are provided in a different manner, from those provided to others under the program or activity;

(iii) Subject a person to segregation or separate treatment in any matter related to his receipt of housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits under the program or activity;

(iv) Restrict a person in any way in access to such housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits, or in the enjoyment of any advantage or privilege enjoyed by others in connection with such housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits under the program or activity;

(v) Treat a person differently from others in determining whether he satisfies any occupancy, admission, enrollment, eligibility, membership, or other requirement or condition which persons must meet in order to be provided any housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits provided under the program or activity;

(vi) Deny a person opportunity to participate in the program or activity through the provision of services or otherwise, or afford him an opportunity to do so which is different from that afforded others under the program or activity (including the opportunity to participate in the program or activity as an employee but only to the extent set forth in paragraph (c) of this section).

(2) A recipient, in determining the location or types of housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits which will be provided under any such program or activity, or the class of persons to whom, or the situations in which, such housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits will be provided under any such program or activity, or the class of persons to be afforded an opportunity to participate in any such program or activity, may not, directly or through contractual or other arrangements, utilize criteria or methods of administration which have the effect of subjecting persons to discrimination because of their race, color, or national origin, or have the effect of defeating or substantially impairing accomplishment of the objectives of the program or activity as respect persons of a particular race, color, or national origin.

(3) As used in this Part 1 the housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits provided under a program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance shall be deemed to include any housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits provided in or through a facility provided with the aid of Federal financial assistance.

(4) The enumeration of specific forms of prohibited discrimination in paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section does not limit the generality of the prohibition in paragraph (a) of this section.

(c) Employment practices. Where a primary objective of the Federal financial assistance to a program or activity to which this Part 1 applies is to provide employment, a recipient may not, directly or through contractual or other arrangements, subject a person to discrimination on the ground of race, color, or national origin in its employment practices under such program or activity (including recruitment or recruitment advertising, employment, lay-off, or termination, up-grading, demotion, or transfer, rates of pay or other forms of compensation and use of facilities). The requirements applicable to construction employment under such program or activity shall be those specified in or pursuant to Executive Order 11114 (28 F.R. 6485).

(d) Exception. A person shall not be deemed subjected to discrimination by reason of his exclusion from the benefits of a program or activity limited by Federal law to individuals of a particular race, color, or national origin different from his.

§ 1.5 Assurances required.

(a) General. Every contract for Federal financial assistance to carry out a program or activity to which this Part 1 applies, executed on or after the effective date of this Part 1, and every application for such Federal financial assistance submitted on or after such effective date, shall, as a condition to its approval and the extension of any Federal financial assistance pursuant to such contract or application, contain or be accompanied by an assurance that the program or activity will be conducted and the housing, accommodations, facilities, services, financial aid, or other benefits to be provided will be operated and administered in compliance with all requirements imposed by or pursuant to this Part 1. In the case of a contract or application for Federal financial assistance to provide real property or structures thereon, the assurance shall obligate the recipient, or, in the case of a subsequent transfer, the transferee, for the period during which the real property or structures are used for a purpose for which the Federal financial assistance is extended or for another purpose involving the provision of similar benefits. In the case of personal property the assurance shall obligate the recipient for the period during which he retains ownership or possession of the property. In all other cases the assurance shall obligate the recipient for the period during which Federal financial assistance is extended pursuant to the contract or application. The responsible Agency official shall specify the form of the foregoing assurance for such program or activity, and the extent to which like assurances will be required of subgrantees, contractors and subcontractors, transferees, successors in interest, and other participants in the program or activity. Any such assurance shall include provisions which give the United States a right to seek its judicial enforcement.

(b) Pre-existing contracts—funds not disbursed. In any case where a contract for Federal financial assistance, to carry out a program or activity to which this Part 1 applies, has been executed prior to the effective date of this Part 1, and the funds have not been fully disbursed by the Agency, the responsible Agency official shall, where necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Part 1, require an assurance similar to that provided in paragraph (a) of this section as a condition to the disbursement of further funds.

(c) Pre-existing contracts—periodic payments. In any case where a contract for Federal financial assistance, to carry out a program or activity to which this Part 1 applies, has been executed prior to the effective date of this Part 1, and provides for periodic payments for the continuation of the program or activity, the recipient shall, in connection with the first application for such periodic payments on or after the effective date of this Part 1, (1) submit a statement that the program or activity is being conducted in compliance with all requirements imposed by or pursuant to this Part 1, or a statement of the extent to which it is not, at the time the statement is made, so conducted, and (2) provide such methods of administration for the program or activity as are found by the responsible Agency official to give reasonable assurance that the recipient will comply with all requirements imposed by or pursuant to this Part 1, or reasonable assurance that any noncompliance indicated in the statement under clause (1) will be corrected.

(d) Assurances from institutions. (1) In the case of any application for Federal financial assistance to an institution of higher education, the assurance required by this section shall extend to admission practices and to all other practices relating to the treatment of students.

(2) The assurance required with respect to an institution of higher education, hospital, or any other institution, insofar as the assurance relates to the institution's practices with respect to admission or other treatment of persons as students, patients, or clients of the institution or to the opportunity to participate in the provision of services or other benefits to such persons, shall be applicable to the entire institution unless the applicant establishes, to the satisfaction of the responsible Agency official, that the institution's practices in designated parts or programs of the institution will in no way affect its practices in the program of the institution for which Federal financial assistance is sought, or the beneficiaries of or participants in such program. If in any such case the assistance sought is for the construction of a facility or part of a facility, the assurance shall in any event extend to the entire facility and to facilities operated in connection therewith.

§ 1.6 Compliance information.

(a) Cooperation and assistance. Each responsible Agency official shall to the fullest extent practicable seek the cooperation of recipients in obtaining compliance with this Part 1 and shall provide assistance and guidance to recipients to help them comply voluntarily with this Part 1.

(b) Compliance reports. Each recipient shall keep such records and submit to the responsible Agency official or his designee timely, complete, and accurate compliance reports at such times, and in such form and containing such information, as the responsible Agency official or his designee may determine to be necessary to enable him to ascertain whether the recipient has complied or is complying with this Part 1.

(c) Access to sources of information. Each recipient shall permit access by the responsible Agency official or his designee during normal business hours to such of its books, records, accounts, and other sources of information, and its facilities as may be pertinent to ascertain compliance with this Part 1. Where any information required of a recipient is in the exclusive possession of any other agency, institution, or person and this agency, institution, or person shall fail or refuse to furnish this information, the recipient shall so certify in its report and shall set forth what efforts it has made to obtain the information.

(d) Information to beneficiaries and participants. Each recipient shall make available to participants, beneficiaries, and other interested persons such information regarding the provisions of this Part 1 and its applicability to the program or activity under which the recipient receives Federal financial assistance, and make such information available to them in such manner, as the responsible Agency official finds necessary to apprise such persons of the protections against discrimination assured them by the Act and this Part 1.

§ 1.7 Conduct of investigations.

(a) Periodic compliance reviews. The responsible Agency official or his designee shall from time to time review the practices of recipients to determine whether they are complying with this Part 1.

(b) Complaints. Any person who believes himself or any specific class of persons to be subjected to discrimination prohibited by this Part 1 may by himself or by a representative file with the responsible Agency official or his designee a written complaint. A complaint must be filed not later than 90 days from the date of the alleged discrimination, unless the time for filing is extended by the responsible Agency official or his designee.

(c) Investigations. The responsible Agency official or his designee shall make a prompt investigation whenever a compliance review, report, complaint, or any other information indicates a possible failure to comply with this Part 1. The investigation should include, where appropriate, a review of the pertinent practices and policies of the recipient, the circumstances under which the possible noncompliance with this Part 1 occurred, and other factors relevant to a determination as to whether the recipient has failed to comply with this Part 1.

(d) Resolution of matters. (1) If an investigation pursuant to paragraph (c) of this section indicates a failure to comply with this Part 1, the responsible Agency official or his designee will so inform the recipient and the matter will be resolved by informal means whenever possible. If it has been determined that the matter cannot be resolved by informal means, action will be taken as provided for in § 1.8.

(2) If an investigation does not warrant action pursuant to paragraph (d) (1) of this section the responsible Agency official or his designee will so inform the recipient and the complainant, if any, in writing.

(e) Intimidatory or retaliatory acts prohibited. No recipient or other person shall intimidate, threaten, coerce, or discriminate against any person for the purpose of interfering with any right or privilege secured by title VI of the Act of this Part 1, or because he has made a complaint, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing under this Part 1. The identity of complainants shall be kept confidential except to the extent necessary to carry out the purposes of this Part 1, including the conduct of any investigation, hearing, or judicial proceeding arising thereunder.

§ 1.8 Procedure for effecting compliance.

(a) General. If there appears to be a failure or threatened failure to comply with this Part 1, and if the noncompliance or threatened noncompliance cannot be corrected by informal means, compliance with this Part 1 may be effected by the suspension or termination of or refusal to grant or to continue Federal financial assistance, or by any other means authorized by law. Such other means may include, but are not limited to, (1) a reference to the Department of Justice with a recommendation that appropriate proceedings be brought to enforce any rights of the United States under any law of the United States (including other titles of the Act), or any assurance or other contractual undertaking, and (2) any applicable proceeding under State or local law.

(b) Noncompliance with § 1.5. If an applicant fails or refuses to furnish an assurance required under § 1.5 or otherwise fails or refuses to comply with the requirement imposed by or pursuant to that section, Federal financial assistance may be refused in accordance with the procedures of paragraph (c) of this section. The Agency shall not be required to provide assistance in such a case during the pendency of the administrative proceedings under such paragraph, except that the Agency shall continue assistance during the pendency of such proceedings where such assistance is due and payable pursuant to a contract therefor approved prior to the effective date of this Part 1.

(c) Termination of or refusal to grant or to continue Federal financial assistance. No order suspending, terminating, or refusing to grant or continue Federal financial assistance shall become effective until (1) the responsible Agency official has advised the applicant or recipient of his failure to comply and has determined that compliance cannot be secured by voluntary means, (2) there has been an express finding on the record, after opportunity for hearing, of a failure by the applicant or recipient to comply with a requirement imposed by or pursuant to this Part 1, (3) the action has been approved by the Administrator, and (4) the expiration of 30 days after the Administrator has filed with the committees of the House and Senate having legislative jurisdiction over the program or activity involved, a full written report of the circumstances and the grounds for such action. Any action to suspend or terminate or to refuse to grant or to continue Federal financial assistance shall be limited to the particular political entity, or part thereof, or other recipient as to whom such a finding has been made and shall be limited in its effect to the particular program, or part thereof, in which such noncompliance has been so found.

(d) Other means authorized by law. No action to effect compliance by any other means authorized by law shall be taken until (1) the responsible Agency official has determined that compliance cannot be secured by voluntary means, (2) the action has been approved by the Administrator, (3) the applicant or recipient has been notified of its failure to comply and of the action to be taken to effect compliance, and (4) the expiration of at least ten days from the mailing of such notice to the applicant or recipient. During this period of at least ten days additional efforts shall be made to persuade the applicant or recipient to comply with this Part 1 and to take such corrective action as may be appropriate.

§ 1.9 Hearings.

(a) Opportunity for hearing. Whenever an opportunity for a hearing is required by § 1.8(c), reasonable notice shall be given by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the affected applicant or recipient. This notice shall advise the applicant or recipient of the action proposed to be taken, the specific provision under which the proposed action against it is to be taken, and the matters of fact or law asserted as the basis for this action, and either (1) fix a date not less than 20 days after the date of such notice within which the applicant or recipient may request of the responsible Agency official that the matter be scheduled for hearing or (2) advise the applicant or recipient that the matter in question has been set down for hearing at a stated time and place. The time and place so fixed shall be reasonable and shall be subject to change for cause. The complainant, if any, shall be advised of the time and place of the hearing. An applicant or recipient may waive a hearing and submit written information and argument for the record. The failure of an applicant or recipient to request a hearing under this paragraph (a) or to appear at a hearing for which a date has been set shall be deemed to be a waiver of the right to a hearing under section 602 of the Act and § 1.8(c) of this Part 1 and consent to the making of a decision on the basis of such information as is available.

(b) Time and place of hearing. Hearings shall be held at the offices of the Agency in Washington, D.C., at a time fixed by the responsible Agency official unless he determines that the convenience of the applicant or recipient or of the Agency requires that another place be selected. Hearings shall be held before the responsible Agency official or, at his discretion, before a hearing examiner designated in accordance with section 11 of the Administrative Procedure Act.

(c) Right to counsel. In all proceedings under this section, the applicant or recipient and the Agency shall have the right to be represented by counsel.

(d) Procedures, evidence, and record. (1) The hearing, decision, and any administrative review thereof shall be conducted in conformity with sections 5–8 of the Administrative Procedure Act, and in accordance with such rules of procedure issued by the Agency as are proper (and not inconsistent with this section) relating to the conduct of the hearing, giving of notices subsequent to those provided for in paragraph (a) of this section, taking of testimony, exhibits, arguments and briefs, requests for findings, and other related matters. Both the Agency and the applicant or recipient shall be entitled to introduce all relevant evidence on the issues as stated in the notice for hearing or as determined by the officer conducting the hearing at the outset of or during the hearing.

(2) Technical rules of evidence shall not apply to hearings conducted pursuant to this Part 1, but rules or principles designed to assure production of the most credible evidence available and to subject testimony to test by cross-examination shall be applied where reasonably necessary by the officer conducting the hearing. The hearing officer may exclude irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence. All documents and other evidence offered or taken for the record shall be open to examination by the Agency and the applicant or recipient, and opportunity shall be given to refute facts and arguments advanced on either side of the issues. A transcript shall be made of the oral evidence except to the extent the substance thereof is stipulated for the record. All decisions shall be based upon the hearing record and written findings shall be made.

(e) Consolidated or joint hearings. In cases in which the same or related facts with respect to two or more programs or activities to which this Part 1 applies are asserted to constitute noncompliance with this Part 1 or noncompliance with this Part 1 and the regulations of one or more other Federal departments or agencies issued under title VI of the Act, the Administrator may, by agreement with such other departments or agencies, where applicable, provide for the conduct of consolidated or joint hearings, and for the application to such hearings of rules of procedure not inconsistent with this Part 1. Final decisions in such cases, insofar as this Part 1 is concerned, shall be made in accordance with § 1.10.

§ 1.10 Decisions and notices.

(a) Decision by person other than the responsible Agency official. If the hearing is held by a hearing examiner such hearing examiner shall either make an initial decision, if so authorized, or certify the entire record including his recommended findings and proposed decision to the responsible Agency official for a final decision, and a copy of such initial decision or certification shall be mailed to the applicant or recipient by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested. Where the initial decision is made by the hearing examiner the applicant or recipient may within 30 days of the mailing of such notice of initial decision file with the responsible Agency official his exceptions to the initial decision, with his reasons therefor. In the absence of exceptions, the responsible Agency official may on his own motion within 45 days after the initial decision serve on the applicant or recipient a notice that he will review the decision. Upon the filing of such exceptions or of such notice of review the responsible Agency official shall review the initial decision and issue his own decision thereon including the reasons therefor. In the absence of either exceptions or a notice of review the initial decision shall constitute the final decision of the responsible Agency official.

(b) Decisions on record or review by the responsible Agency official. Whenever a record is certified to the responsible Agency official for decision or he reviews the decision of a hearing examiner pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section, or whenever the responsible Agency official conducts the hearing, the applicant or recipient shall be given reasonable opportunity to file with him briefs or other written statements of its contentions, and a copy of the final decision of the responsible Agency official shall be given in writing to the applicant or recipient, and to the complainant, if any, by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested.

(c) Decisions on record where a hearing is waived. Whenever a hearing is waived pursuant to § 1.9(a) a decision shall be made by the responsible Agency official on the record and a copy of such decision shall be given in writing to the applicant or recipient, and to the complainant, if any, by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested.

(d) Rulings required. Each decision of a hearing examiner or responsible Agency official shall set forth his ruling on each finding, conclusion, or exception presented, and shall identify the requirement or requirements imposed by or pursuant to this Part 1 with which it is found that the applicant or recipient has failed to comply.

(e) Content of orders. The final decision may provide for suspension or termination of, or refusal to grant or continue Federal financial assistance, in whole or in part, under the program or activity involved, and may contain such terms, conditions, and other provisions as are consistent with and will effectuate the purposes of the Act and this Part 1, including provisions designed to assure that no Federal financial assistance will thereafter be extended under such program or activity to the applicant or recipient determined by such decision to be in default in its performance of an assurance given by it pursuant to this Part 1, or to have otherwise failed to comply with this Part 1, unless and until it corrects its noncompliance and satisfies the responsible Agency official that it will fully comply with this Part 1.

§ 1.11 Judicial review.

Action taken pursuant to section 602 of the Act is subject to judicial review as provided in section 603 of the Act.

§ 1.12 Effect on other regulations; forms and instructions.

(a) Effect on other regulations. All regulations, orders, or like directions heretofore issued by any officer of the Agency which impose requirements designed to prohibit any discrimination against persons on the ground of race, color, or national origin under any program or activity to which this Part 1 applies, and which authorize the suspension or termination of or refusal to grant or to continue Federal financial assistance to any applicant or recipient of such assistance under such program or activity for failure to comply with such requirements, are hereby superseded to the extent that such discrimination is prohibited by this Part 1, except that nothing in this Part 1 shall be deemed to relieve any person of any obligation assumed or imposed under any such superseded regulation, order, instruction, or like direction prior to the effective date of this Part 1. Nothing in this Part 1, however, shall be deemed to supersede any of the following (including future amendments thereof): (1) Executive Orders 10925 and 11114 and regulations issued thereunder, or (2) Executive Order 11063 and regulations issued thereunder, or any other regulations or instructions, insofar as such Order, regulations, or instructions prohibit discrimination on the ground of race, color, or national origin in any program or activity or situation to which this Part 1 is inapplicable, or prohibit discrimination on any other ground.

(b) Forms and instructions. Each responsible Agency official shall issue and promptly make available to interested persons forms and detailed instructions and procedures for effectuating this Part 1 as applied to programs and activities to which this Part 1 applies and for which he is responsible.

(c) Supervision and coordination. The Administrator may from time to time assign to officials of the Agency, or to officials of other departments or agencies of the Government with the consent of such department or agency, responsibilities in connection with the effectuation of the purposes of title VI of the Act and this Part 1 (other than responsibility for final decision as provided in § 1.10), including the achievement of effective coordination and maximum uniformity within the Agency and within the Executive Branch of the Government in the application of title VI and this Part 1 to similar programs or activities and in similar situations.

This Part 1 shall become effective on the 30th day following the date of its publication in the FEDERAL REGISTER.

Budget Bureau No. 63-R1084

STATEMENT OF LOCAL AUTHORITY AS TO COMPLIANCE
UNDER TITLE VI OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964

(For use by Local Authorities in connection with first request for funds on or after January 3, 1965, with respect to any project initially covered prior to January 3, 1965, by a contract for financial assistance (other than preliminary loan), or in connection with a further contract for financial assistance to be executed on or after January 3, 1965)

1. This statement covers the following low-rent housing projects of the Local Authority which are subject to title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the regulations of the Housing and Home Finance Agency effectuating title VI (24 CFR, Subtitle A, Part 1), and the requirements of the Public Housing Administration pursuant thereto (list all projects (including project numbers) covered by a contract with the PHA for loans, annual contributions, or administration, regardless of the date when such contract was entered into):

2. Operation of the projects listed above (is) (is not) being conducted in compliance with all requirements imposed by the aforesaid regulations of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and by the Public Housing Administration pursuant thereto.

3. Following is a statement of the Local Authority's policies and practices in receiving applications for low-rent housing, selecting tenants, and assigning applicants to dwelling units (insofar as provisions of the Local Authority's adopted admission regulations are relied upon in this statement, a copy may be attached):

4. (To be filled in only if the statement numbered "2" above is in the negative) Following is a statement of the extent to which the Local Authority's operation of the projects listed above is not being conducted in compliance with all requirements imposed by the regulations of the Housing and Home Finance Agency effectuating title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (24 CFR, Subtitle A, Part 1) and by the Public Housing Administration pursuant thereto:

The Local Authority will, on or before _____, take the following action to correct the noncompliance stated above:

"No person in the United States shall on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

—Title VI, Section 601
Civil Rights Act of 1964.

"It is simple justice that all should share in programs financed by all, and directed by the government of all the people."

—President Lyndon B. Johnson.

TITLE VI OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964

. . . as applied to HHFA Programs

General

1. Q. What is Title VI?

A. Title VI is that portion of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that deals with nondiscrimination in federally assisted programs. It provides that no person in the United States shall be discriminated against on the ground of race, color, or national origin in any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

2. Q. What HHFA programs are affected by the nondiscrimination requirements of Title VI?

A. All HHFA programs listed in the Appendix (see p. 5) are covered by Title VI.

3. Q. Are the FHA mortgage insurance programs covered by the language of the law?

A. No. Programs involving "a contract of insurance or guaranty" are specifically excluded by the language of Title VI. Activities under the FHA mortgage insurance programs are thus excluded. However, Executive Order 11063 on Equal Opportunity in Housing, which prohibits discrimination in all Federal housing programs, continues to apply to the FHA programs.

4. Q. What is the effective date of HHFA regulations under Title VI?

A. HHFA regulations were approved by the President on December 3, 1964 and published in the Federal Register on the following day. The regulations became effective January 3, 1965.

5. Q. How is "Federal financial assistance" defined under HHFA regulations?

A. "Federal financial assistance" is defined to include:

1. Grants, loans, and advances of Federal funds.
2. Donations of Federal property.
3. Detail of Federal personnel.
4. Sale, lease, and permission to use Federal property either at a nominal consideration or at a reduced consideration in order to serve the public interest.
5. Any Federal agreement which has as one of its purposes the provision of assistance.

6. Q. How is "recipient" of Federal financial assistance defined?

A. Under HHFA regulations "recipient" is defined to include any individual or entity—public or private—to whom Federal financial assistance is extended for any program or activity (such as a local housing authority in the public housing program), or who otherwise participates in carrying out such program or activity (such as a redeveloper in the urban renewal program).

7. Q. Does Title VI cover employment practices of recipients of Federal assistance?

A. No, unless a primary objective of Federal financial assistance is to provide employment, as in the case of the Accelerated Public Works Program.

8. Q. How are the regulations to be enforced?

A. Enforcement responsibility is vested in the Housing and Home Finance Agency. HHFA regulations require assurances of compliance from recipients and provide for compliance reports and reviews. In addition, the regulations provide for investigation of noncompliance.

9. Q. What assurances of compliance are required?

A. New applications and contracts for Federal financial assistance must contain or be accompanied by assurances that the program or activity will be conducted in compliance with all requirements of Title VI and the regulations. On contracts executed prior to the effective date of the regulations, but where funds have not been fully disbursed, similar assurance may be required if deemed necessary. On contracts executed prior to the effective date of the regulations, but providing for periodic payments to continue the program or activity, as in low-rent public housing, the recipient is required to submit a statement satisfying the Agency that the program or activity is being conducted in compliance with the requirements of Title VI and the regulations, or give reasonable assurance that any noncompliance indicated will be corrected.

10. Q. What happens in the case of a refusal to submit the required assurances?

A. A refusal to furnish required assurances constitutes a noncompliance with the regulations and appropriate procedures may be instituted to effect compliance.

11. Q. What actions may be taken in the case of a violation of the regulations?

A. The Agency may suspend, terminate, or refuse to grant or continue financial assistance, or take some other enforcement action such as referring the matter to the Department of Justice for appropriate proceedings.

12. Q. What are the procedures to be followed before financial assistance may be cut off?

A. Attempts will be made to secure compliance by voluntary means. If voluntary compliance cannot be secured, the recipient will be advised of his failure to comply and will be given an opportunity for a hearing. Following the hearing and an express finding on the record of a failure to comply, further compliance action must be approved by the Administrator. No action withholding financial assistance, however, may actually be taken until 30 days after the Administrator has filed with the Committees of the House and Senate having legislative jurisdiction over the program or activity involved a full written report of the circumstances and the grounds for such action.

13. Q. Is there a right of judicial review in the case of Agency action cutting off financial assistance?

A. Yes. Section 603 of Title VI provides for judicial review in the case of a cut off of funds.

Low-Rent Public Housing

1. Q. Is all federally aided low-rent public housing covered by the regulations?

A. The regulations apply to all federally aided low-rent public housing receiving Federal financial assistance on the effective date of the regulations. This means that except for those few federally aided projects that were paid off before the effective date of the regulations, every federally aided low-rent project provided since the inception of the public housing program in 1937 is subject to the nondiscrimination requirements.

2. Q. What kind of assurances of compliance must local housing authorities give under the regulations?

A. For new projects, a local housing authority must agree in writing that it will comply with all requirements imposed by Title VI and the regulations and PHA requirements issued thereunder. For existing low-rent projects, the local housing authority must also give assurance of compliance. It must state whether or not existing projects are currently operated in compliance with those requirements, and it must submit a description of policies and practices in receiving applications, selecting tenants, and assigning applicants to dwelling units. If existing projects are not currently operated in compliance, the local housing authority must explain the extent of noncompliance and action it proposes to correct it.

3. Q. What actions may be taken in the case of a violation of Title VI or the regulations?

A. Approval of further low-rent projects may be refused or, if the annual contributions contract so provides, remedies may be invoked for breach of the contract, including recovery of title or possession by the Federal agency. In addition the matter may be referred to the Department of Justice for appropriate judicial remedies. The sanction of cutting off annual contributions will not be used in the case of public housing violations, in that the full faith and credit of the United States are pledged to their payment as security for bonds issued for financing of the project.

Urban Renewal

1. Q. To what extent are federally aided urban renewal activities covered by Title VI and the regulations?

A. Title VI and the regulations apply to all future federally aided urban renewal projects and to all such projects already under way on the effective date of the regulations to the extent that any project land remained to be disposed of by the local urban renewal agency.

2. Q. What assurance of compliance is required of the local urban renewal agency?

A. The local agency must submit assurances in the form of a resolution of its governing body that it recognizes and will comply with all regulations and requirements under Title VI.

3. Q. Are private redevelopers of urban renewal project land affected?

A. Yes. Private redevelopers are expressly included in the definition of "recipient" contained in the regulations. All land disposal agreements between the local urban renewal agency and the redeveloper must require the deed to contain a covenant against discrimination by the redeveloper. The deed must stipulate that the United States is a beneficiary of the covenant and is entitled to enforce it.

4. Q. Do the regulations cover a facility proposed as a "noncash local grant-in-aid"?

A. Yes. Under the urban renewal program, public facilities such as schools and parks, or certain expenditures by colleges and hospitals may be offered for credit as part of the locality's required contribution to the cost of the urban renewal project. These will be accepted for credit on the condition that the facility or institution is operated on a nondiscriminatory basis.

Community Facilities

1. Q. Are all Community Facilities Administration (CFA) programs covered by the nondiscrimination regulations?

A. Yes. College Housing, Senior Citizens Housing, Public Facility Loans, Advances for Public Works Planning, and Accelerated Public Works. The nondiscrimination requirements applicable to the Accelerated Public Works Program extend also to employment practices.

2. Q. What assurance of compliance is required of recipients of CFA financial assistance?

A. Assurance of compliance must be submitted, signed by an authorized official and agreeing to comply with Title VI and all requirements imposed pursuant to HHFA regulations under Title VI.

3. Q. In the case of financial assistance for a public facility, is the required assurance limited to the particular facility aided?

A. No. The assurance extends to the entire system of such facilities operated by the recipient of the aid. For example, assurances of nondiscrimination in the case of a public library provided with Federal aid extend to the recipient's entire public library system.

4. Q. What assurances of nondiscrimination are required of colleges and universities?

A. The assurances from colleges and universities extend not only to the operation of the housing or other facilities provided with Federal financial assistance, but to the institution's admission practices and all other practices relating to the treatment of students.

5. Q. In the case of a college or university which operates several campuses, does the assurance of nondiscrimination extend to the entire institution?

A. Generally, yes. More limited assurance is permitted only where the institution can demonstrate that practices in part of its operation in no way affect its practices in the part federally aided. This would be a rare case.

6. Q. What assurances of nondiscrimination are required of hospitals?

A. Nondiscrimination must extend to the admission or other treatment of patients, to the admission or other practices relating to the treatment of interns, student nurses and residents, and to the privileges of physicians, dentists, or other professionals to practice at the hospital.

SUBJECT: Title VI of Civil Rights Act of 1964

Experience in the low-rent housing program under the HHFA regulations and PHA requirements issued pursuant to Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 indicates that clarification and greater detail are needed in respect to certain aspects of administration. The following requirements are designed to provide this clarification, in order to assist local housing authorities in meeting their obligations pursuant to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 in accordance with Government-wide policies applicable to Title VI-affected programs.

1. Methods of Administration. Methods of administration, staffing arrangements, assignment of responsibilities and procedures shall provide for the following (reports thereof, along with copies of all materials used or produced, to be furnished promptly to the PHA Regional Office):

   a. Administration of all dwelling units on a uniformly nondiscriminatory basis in respect to race, color or national origin, including nondiscrimination in maintenance, equipment, facilities, and services, and in the treatment of tenants.

   b. That the race, color or national origin of the tenants of the dwelling units or of the staff shall not be a factor in the assignment of managers and other staff responsible for the administration of the dwelling units.

   c. Such location of facilities for filing of applications for tenancy and such circumstances for acceptance of applications as will afford the applicant the greatest opportunity for the exercise of his rights under the tenant selection and assignment plan adopted by the local authority (see subparagraph d below).

   d. Establishment of a plan for selection of applicants and assignment of dwelling units to insure nondiscrimination on grounds of race, color or national origin. Examples of different types of acceptable plans are the following:

Each applicant is assigned his appropriate place on a community-wide basis in sequence based upon date of application, suitable type or size of unit, and factors affecting preference or priority on grounds (other than race, color or national origin) established by the local authority's regulations; and any suitable vacancies arising at a given time at any project or location are offered to the eligible applicant first in sequence at such time. If such applicant refuses to accept the offered vacancies on any grounds, the plan shall provide for one of the following: (i) that he remain in first place; (ii) that he remain in first place but if he rejects suitable vacancies on a stated number of occasions (two or three, for example) he be moved to last place; or (iii) that he be moved to last place.

Each applicant is offered the opportunity to state on his application in what project or projects, or in what location or locations, he wishes to obtain housing, or to state that he will accept housing in any project or location; and assignments of dwelling units to eligible applicants are made in accordance with such stated preferences insofar as consistent with the other pertinent factors (other than race, color or national origin) established by the local authority's regulations. Each applicant will be informed that he may indicate a preference for housing without regard to the race, color or national origin of the existing occupants of any project. Whenever there are one or more vacant units in a project for which no eligible applicant has expressed a preference, the local authority shall offer such units to the eligible applicant(s) having priority, whether or not the applicant has indicated that he will accept housing in any project or location other than his stated choice.

Under any plan, the applicant shall be fully informed, at the time of application, as to which projects contain dwelling units of the size and type suitable to his needs, and the location of all such projects.

The PHA may from time to time review and determine the adequacy of any plan for selection of applicants and assignment of dwelling units to accomplish the purposes of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the regulations and requirements pursuant thereto.

e. Nondiscrimination in reassignments or transfers to other dwelling units.

f. Instruction of the local authority's staff concerning its obligations under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the HHFA regulations and PHA requirements pursuant thereto, by suitable means such as providing them with copies of all pertinent documents, conducting training meetings, and maintaining review through regular supervisory channels.

g. Posting, in a conspicuous place in the local authority's facilities in which applications are received, of notice that the facilities and services in the authority's low-rent housing program are provided on a nondiscriminatory basis and of its plan for tenant selection and assignment of units; and inclusion of such information in material distributed to tenants and prospective applicants, to the general public, and to agencies, institutions, organizations, and political subdivisions which may refer applicants.

h. (1) Receipt and processing by the local authority of complaints from or on behalf of any person who believes himself to be subject to discrimination by the local authority or its staff; (2) keeping a record of each complaint including the date of the complaint, by whom made, investigation and hearing (if any), and evaluation; (3) a written notice to the complainant of action taken; (4) posting, in a conspicuous place in all facilities of the local authority which are open to the public, of a notice that complaints of discrimination may be filed with the local authority or the PHA Regional Office, at a designated address, including notice that the filing of a complaint with the local authority will not prevent the subsequent filing of a complaint with the PHA; and (5) posting with the above notice a copy of the PHA regulation under which complaints may be submitted to the PHA (copy enclosed--additional copies available from the PHA).

i. A prohibition against intimidatory or retaliatory action or threat thereof by the local authority or its staff against any applicant or tenant because of participation in civil rights activities or for having asserted any of his rights under the Civil Rights Act, and the regulations and requirements pursuant thereto.

j. Periodic review by the local authority of its practices to assure that they are in conformity with its obligations under the HHFA regulations and PHA requirements.

2. Reports on Complaints. Beginning with September 30, 1965, and thereafter at the end of every calendar quarter, or such less frequent intervals as the Regional Director with the approval of the Commissioner may determine to be consistent with the objectives of the provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the regulations and requirements pursuant thereto, each local authority shall furnish the PHA Regional Office with a report showing the number of complaints (if any) filed with the local authority during the reporting period, the nature of the matters complained about, and the findings made and action taken on such complaints.

3. Selection of Sites for New Projects. The local authority shall furnish, for inclusion in the PHA Project Planner's report on Form PHA-2651, "Preliminary Site Report," such supporting data or information as may be required to enable the PHA to include, in its tentative approval of the site selected by the local authority, a specific determination that the selection is in accordance with the policy established by the PHA under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (see Low-Rent Housing Manual Section 205.1).

The foregoing requirements shall be effective on September 1, 1965.

Complaint Procedures
Equal Opportunity in Housing

(As published in the Federal Register on November 27, 1963, 28 F.R. 12620-12621, 24 CFR 1500.6)

Effective November 19, 1963, Chapter III, Public Housing Administration, is amended by adding a new § 1500.6 Complaint procedures—Equal opportunity in housing, as follows:

§ 1500.6 Complaint procedures; equal opportunity in housing.

(a) Introduction. The procedures in this section are prescribed pursuant to Executive Order 11063, dated November 20, 1962, 27 F.R. 11527-30, and the statutory authority of the Public Housing Commissioner to make such rules and regulations as he may find necessary to carry out his functions, powers, and duties, 42 U.S.C. 1404a. They are for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of Executive Order 11063, Equal Opportunity in Housing, insofar as that order applies to the program of Federal financial assistance for providing low-rent public housing pursuant to the authority of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, 42 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.

(b) Definitions. As used in the procedures of this section, the term

(1) "Local Authority" means a "public housing agency" as defined in section 2(11) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, 42 U.S.C. 1402(11), having a contract for financial assistance with the Public Housing Administration pursuant to that Act.

(2) "Contract obligation" means the obligation of a local authority under either of the following provisions in any contract between the Public Housing Administration and the local authority:

The local authority shall not discriminate because of race, color, creed, or national origin in the sale, leasing, rental or other disposition of housing or related facilities (including land) included in any Project or Projects initially covered after November 20, 1962, by a contract for annual contributions under the United States Housing Act of 1937, or in the use or occupancy thereof. The local authority shall not, on account of race, color, creed, or national origin, deny to any family the opportunity to apply for such housing, nor deny to any eligible applicant the opportunity to lease or rent any dwelling in any such housing suitable to its needs.

The local authority shall not discriminate because of race, color, creed, or national origin in the sale, leasing, rental, or other disposition of housing or related facilities (including land) included in any project or projects, or in the use or occupancy thereof. The local authority shall not, on account of race, color, creed, or national origin, deny to any family the opportunity to apply for such housing, nor deny to any eligible applicant the opportunity to lease or rent any dwelling in any such housing suitable to its needs.

(3) "Discriminatory practice" means any practice or action which constitutes a violation of a contract obligation, or which would constitute such a violation if the project involved were covered by a contract obligation.

(4) "Project" means any low-rent housing project in receipt of financial assistance, or federally owned and operated, under the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended. Federally owned projects shall be treated as projects subject to a contract obligation and their Housing Project Managers shall be treated as local authorities for purposes of the procedures of this section.

(5) "Commissioner" means the Public Housing Commissioner.

(c) Complaints. (1) A complaint of a discriminatory practice may be filed with the appropriate Regional Director of the Public Housing Administration and must be filed within ninety (90) days from the date of the alleged discriminatory practice unless the time is extended by the Regional Director for good cause. A list of PHA Regional Offices, with their addresses and areas of jurisdiction, is published in the FEDERAL REGISTER under the heading "Housing and Home Finance Agency, Public Housing Administration, Description of Agency and Programs." Information as to locations and areas of jurisdiction of Regional Offices may also be obtained upon written request addressed to the Public Housing Administration, Washington, D.C., 20413.

(2) A complaint shall be in writing and signed by the complainant. It shall, insofar as known to complainant, name the local authority and/or the project involved; state the time, place, and nature of the alleged discriminatory practice; and set forth factual information known to the complainant supporting the allegation. It shall also state the complainant's interest in or relationship to the alleged discriminatory practice.

(3) A complaint may be filed by an authorized representative of the complainant, provided that the authorization of the representative to act for the complainant is filed with the complaint.

(d) Preliminary action on a complaint. (1) Upon receipt of a complaint, the Regional Director shall promptly and in writing acknowledge its receipt and request such additional information from the complainant as may be necesary.

(2) If it appears that the complaint relates to other than a project as defined in paragraph (b) (4) of this section, the Regional Director shall advise the complainant in writing that the Public Housing Administration lacks jurisdiction in the matter and state the reason. If the complaint relates to a project as defined in paragraph (b) (4) of this section, the Regional Director shall advise the complainant either that the project is subject to a contract obligation, quoting the specific contract provision, or that the project is not subject to a contract obligation but is subject to the "good offices" provision of section 102 of the Executive Order.

(3) If the complaint is not filed within the ninety (90) day period stipulated in paragraph (c) (1) of this section, the Regional Director shall send appropriate written notification to the complainant.

(e) Regional office inquiry. If the complaint relates to a project as defined in paragraph (b) (4) of this section, and is timely (either originally or by grant of an extension of time), the Regional Director shall conduct an inquiry into the facts. If such inquiry reveals that there is no factual basis for the complaint, and the Regional Director believes further inquiry would serve no useful purpose, he shall notify the complainant in writing that he finds no factual basis for the complaint, stating such reasons or facts as may be appropriate and advising that no further action will be taken unless the complainant submits further facts supporting the complaint. If such inquiry or any further statement submitted by the complainant reveals factual basis for the complaint, the Regional Director shall proceed as set forth below in this section.

(f) Informal action. The Regional Director or his designee shall undertake by informal means (including conferences, conciliation, and persuasion) to end, remedy, or prevent the recurrence of the discriminatory practice complained of. If the complaint is resolved by such informal means, the Regional Director shall in writing advise both the complainant and the Local Authority to that effect and that the Public Housing Administration will take no further action on the complaint.

(g) Formal action—(1) Cases under section 102 of the Executive Order. If the complaint is not resolved by informal means and the project involved is not subject to a contract obligation, the Regional Director shall submit a complete report in writing to the Commissioner for such further action, if any, as the Commissioner deems appropriate, and shall advise the complainant that the matter has been referred to the Commissioner and that the complainant will be advised by the Commissioner of any further proceedings or action taken and of the disposition of the complaint.

(2) Cases involving a contract obligation. (i) If the complaint is not resolved by informal means and the project involved is subject to a contract obligation, the Regional Director shall send written notification to the local authority which shall include available information as to the following:

(a) The name and address of the complainant;

(b) The date, place, and nature of the alleged discriminatory practice;

(c) A summary of the facts alleged by the complainant to constitute the discriminatory practice and of any other facts supporting the complainant's allegation;

(d) The fact that the project involved is subject to a contract obligation (quoting the specific contract provision applicable to the alleged discriminatory practice).

(ii) The local authority shall be requested to respond in writing within ten

(10) days after receipt of such letter, or within such reasonable extension of time, as may be requested within ten (10) days after receipt of such letter and granted by the Regional Director, admitting or denying the alleged discriminatory practice, stating any facts the Local Authority deems pertinent, setting forth any corrective action the local authority proposes to take, and including any other statement pertinent to the local authority's position with respect to the alleged discriminatory practice.

(iii) Upon receipt of the local authority's response, or if the local authority fails to respond, the Regional Director shall conduct such further inquiry or investigation into the facts as he shall deem appropriate. Hearings to resolve issues of fact may be held, if the Regional Director deems appropriate, by him or his designee. The Regional Director shall make findings as to the merits of the complaint and notify the complainant and the local authority of his findings. If he finds that the local authority has violated a contract obligation, the notification shall specify action to be taken by the local authority to correct the violation and state the action, if any, to be taken by the PHA. Both the complainant and the local authority shall be notified of their right to request a review by the Commissioner of the Regional Director's findings and/or proposed action. Inquiries and hearings shall be conducted, and findings and notifications made, without undue delay.

(h) Review. The complainant or the Local Authority may, within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Regional Director's notification of findings and proposed action, apply in writing for a review by the Commissioner; Provided, however, That such period may be extended in the discretion of the Commissioner for good cause. The application for review shall be accompanied by a written statement setting forth the reasons for reversal or modification of the findings and/or proposed action. After reviewing the record and conducting such additional inquiry or investigation of the facts (including the holding of a hearing) as the Commissioner may deem advisable, the Commissioner will affirm, modify, or reverse the findings and/or proposed action or make such other findings and statements of proposed action as the Commissioner deems appropriate and will notify the complainant and the local authority of the determination.

(i) Sanctions. Upon a final finding of a discriminatory practice by a local authority, the action to be taken against the local authority by the PHA may include:

(1) Declaring a breach or default on the part of the local authority, in accordance with the terms of the annual contributions contract covering the project in question;

(2) Refusal to enter into further contracts for financial assistance with the local authority;

(3) Cancellation or termination of contracts with the local authority;

(4) Such other action as may be appropriate and permitted by law.

(j) Waiver. The Commissioner may, for good cause, waive any of the procedural requirements in the processing of any complaint.

(k) Consultation with State or local agencies. In the inquiry into or resolution of a complaint, the Regional Director or his designee may consult with any officially constituted State or local agency charged with preventing or redressing discrimination because of race, color, creed, or national origin.

(Sec. 502(b), 62 Stat. 1284, 42 U.S.C. 1404a; sec. 203, E.O. 11063, 27 F.R. 11528)

Approved: November 19, 1963.

Dear Mayor Maier:

Your address on civil rights over Station WITI-TV is certainly pertinent. I know of no subject that is more difficult simply because of human stubbornness in accepting a person for his individual worth rather than for some emotional and superficial quality. I am constantly astounded, as I am sure you are, by the illogical arguments advanced on this subject and know of the painful path that men like yourself have to tread between the righteous and indignant calls for complete change on the one hand and the equally righteous but stubborn resistance to change on the other.

My congratulations for a most thoughtful presentation. I hope it was sufficient to bring the people of Milwaukee together so that they can persistently talk this trouble out, as is necessary throughout the entire nation.

If results do come from this that would be worth an article in THE AMERICAN CITY, I hope that we will be informed.

Sincerely yours,

William S. Foster

MAYOR HENRY W. MAIER'S ADDRESS ON CIVIL RIGHTS--WITI-TV, NOVEMBER 6, 1965

My fellow citizens:

Two groups of people are not likely to agree with my talk this evening.

One group is composed of those who prefer controversy to results--those who would sacrifice the common good in the name of civil rights.

The other group is made up of those who are bitterly opposed to civil rights. They would sacrifice the common good to prevent any progress.

Let me say at the outset that, where there has been too much freezing of positions, it is time for a thaw.

Where there has been too much emotion, it is time for reason in the interest of the common betterment of all.

My interest is not in controversy, but in results.

If there are those who disapprove, I am sorry but not surprised.

To those who approve, I pledge you my best efforts and I ask your active support.

On October 13th, I again stated my position in an address to the Milwaukee Commission on Community Relations.

New City Programs

At that time, I spoke of our many new city programs--the Community Renewal Program, our programs for economic and social development, our improved housing and zoning code enforcement. And this week another step was taken on the arduous trail of a fiscal renewal program.

I discussed the possible impact of these programs on the well-being of all of our citizens--and I emphasized the word, "all."

I also stressed the need for full citizenship--along with the sharing of the responsibilities of citizenship--by members of minority groups.

I called for a larger perspective by those who see the city's problems in only one dimension. I asked them to broaden their sights to help promote the common good of all of the people of our city.

Finally, and most important of all, I called for an all-out war against prejudice.

Reaction to Proposal

The reaction I have received from most Milwaukeeans to this plea has been favorable. I am disappointed, but not surprised, that some of the reaction has been bitter.

Here, for instance, is my photograph clipped from a newspaper and mailed to me. Someone has given me a Hitler moustache and inscribed "Heil Maier!" But like most of this kind of fan mail, the letter was anonymous.

Fortunately, Mr. No Name is not typical of Milwaukeeans. More typical were the responses of Milwaukeeans such as these:

A lady on North 70th who wrote: "Congratulations on your recent speech in the spirit of considerate brotherhood. This time you are right. If officials, and publicity media--especially newspapers--stress the rightness of giving everyone the equal treatment that each is entitled to--this would soon make discrimination unpopular."

A Sister of St. Francis of Assisi wrote: "Action must come from intelligent thinking men in order to counteract all the emotionalism which is involved in the racial issue."

The officers and members of the United Steelworkers Union at Nordberg voted unanimously to support the ideas and proposals given to the Community Relations Commission.

A Milwaukee business leader said: "I congratulate you on this program. It is timely and it is necessary. I believe it will be well received by the great majority of the people in this community who have a burning desire to make Milwaukee an even finer city in which to live and to bring up our families."

Another lady wrote: "Those of us who are members of minority groups feel very proud and inspired after having listened to your revelation of dedicating this year to the changing of the image of Negroes to other groups in the city."

Labor Approves Program

The action of the Milwaukee County AFL-CIO Labor Council which endorsed the proposed program against prejudice and also urged all of the members of the Milwaukee Common Council to vote for the appropriation needed to put it into effect.

These thoughts express the good will of our quiet decent majority in Milwaukee.

XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY

Nevertheless, many men and women of good will--both Negroes and whites--are concerned about the future of race relations in our city.

Some of this concern was seen during the recent school boycott. Fortunately, the boycott was carried our peaceably--in the Milwaukee tradition of peaceful protest.

Much credit for this goes to the deep respect for law and order held by both Negroes and whites in Milwaukee. Much credit must also go to the skillful work of our police department during this time of tension.

While many members of the community--both Negroes and whites--may believe that the boycott tactic was wrong, nevertheless, it is an important symptom of a problem which will not be swept under our urban rug. That problem affects this city--as indeed it affects cities all across the country.

Cites National Problem

There is no large city in the nation which does not have this racial problem in one form or another. This is simple a fact of life in modern, urban America.

It is a symptom of a vast national social upheaval, of a vast migration of peoples caused by the search for improved economic opportunity.

Nothing like it has been seen since the waves of immigrants from Europe flooded American shores decades ago. They, too, were searching for greater opportunities. But then, as now, cities found themselves facing great change. New accents were heard in the streets. There were people who looked different, talked differently, had different customs moving into the cities.

Instead of immigrants from Germany, Poland, Italy, Ireland, and many other nations, the immigrants who come to the cities today are native Americans.

Poor farmers, uprooted from their land by machines.

Indians, the almost forgotten Americans no longer enjoying the security of the reservation.

Appalachian whites, abandoning the worn-out soil and idled mines of mountain poverty.

Negroes, breaking away from old rural ways that branded them inferior by law and custom.

XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY

All of these are searching for the same freedom, the same opportunities that others looked for when they left the Old Country to come to America.

Can't Turn Back the Clock

Milwaukee can no more ignore the effects of this great national movement than it can turn back the clock to the simpler times of Solomon Juneau and his trading post. There is no escape from the Twentieth Century. What we must do is build here the great city in which all men share equally in the good life.

Our city is built upon the proposition that peoples of many different backgrounds, many different nationalities, can live together and work together as good neighbors.

In other times, the newcomers to our city, the Germans, the Italians, the Poles, the Irish--were all called dangerous by racemongers. They were considered un-American.

To the racist trapped by his own myths and superstititions, it was beyond belief that a Pole or an Italian or a German or a Jew would ever rise to a high place in the nation's government.

Those employers who put up signs outside their factories saying, "No Irish Need Apply," would have thought it mad fantasy that an Irish Catholic would some day become President of the United States.

Well, the truth is this: We are all members of minority groups. The only majority group to which we all belong is the human race. But some myths and superstitions still remain. To some, a dark skin or a Spanish accent is a disease. The real disease is prejudice--against the color of a man's skin, or his way of speech, or his way of worship. That is the disease, and that is what we must fight like any menace to public health.

Recommends Social Development Program

At the same time, there must be a social development program--supported fully by members of minority groups--to help the more disadvantaged members of our society become fully accepted in the community. The reason this must be done is that, all too often, the many are judged by the actions of the few.

It is also important because, in this day of rapid change, the new immigrant cannot become a contributing member of society unless he has skills many of us take for granted. He will remain only a consumer in our society--contributing little or nothing--unless he is provided with the means to help himself.

XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY

The city to which the new immigrant comes must seem even more strange than the New World to which the immigrant came years ago.

Often he comes here used to the ways of the land--in many cases, red clay lands that could hardly support him. In many cases, his home was a shack. The demands of life were harsh, but simple. His education, what there was of it, was inferior. Book-learning was often looked upon as a useless luxury.

His world changes. He comes into the modern city, where he cannot scratch an existence from the land. Often-times the city looks to him like a jungle. He has to be taught such simple things as how to shop at the grocery, or how to get from one place to another. Even modern plumbing and garbage disposal methods are unknown to him. To a man who lived in a shack, it's hard to get used to the idea of a house as a home. So the word goes around--he chops down bannisters; he throws garbage out the window. He does not fit in. His actions threaten property values and frighten the elderly. They show in crime statistics as he struggles to adapt as best he can to his new surroundings.

Of course, he doesn't fit in. Unless you want him to become a permanent welfare case, he must fit into life in the city, he must become a good neighbor. It follows then that steps must be taken to give him the basic help he needs.

Acculturation Program Needed

There is a word for the much needed process of helping the new immigrant adapt to the highly specialized life of the big city. The word is "acculturation"--the process which helps those from one culture to become adapted to new cultural patterns.

When the Social Development Commission of Greater Milwaukee was formed, one of its main charges was to undertake an intensified program to help these people adjust to life in the city. The importance of this acculturation program cannot be overestimated--because upon it hinges much that can be done to discourage discrimination in Milwaukee.

The fact is that in-migration has now slowed down and will continue to slow down as such federal actions as the voting rights law, integration of schools and massive poverty programs such as the Appalachia Bill eliminate the reasons for migration. So now--when the migration to Milwaukee has slowed down--now is the time to consolidate our community, to make our newcomers skilled urban citizens.

Tonight I call upon the Social Development Commission of Greater Milwaukee, which has federal as well as local backing, to proceed with an intensified program of acculturation. And I also call upon all those concerned with poverty programs including the Organization of Organizations--and also those concerned about our tax rate, including the Milwaukee Property Owners Association--to give it their support.

Prevent Needs of Tomorrow

This program should not only seek to provide for the needs of today by helping the adult. It should also seek to prevent greater needs tomorrow by providing every educational need for the child.

If this job is to be done adequately, it also requires support on another front. All those who rightly want to abolish poverty and racial discrimination should also fight to end fiscal discrimination against the City of Milwaukee.

At a time when the great cities are again the havens of the poor, they are segregated from the economic and social resources of the metropolitan area. A terrible burden is placed on the central city. It is well known that 98 percent of the Negroes in the Milwaukee metropolitan area are segregated from our suburbs, the largest percentage in any large metropolitan area in America.

Milwaukee will work to increase its own resources, yes. But we cannot bear the burden alone. We must take advantage of every federal aid. We must work for a better system of state aids and shared taxes, merely to meet the great problems of change that face us today.

And what of future generations? What about the Negro in tomorrow's Milwaukee or the children of poor whites? Shall we say that they shall remain trapped in a cycle of poverty and ignorance and prejudice because we failed to provide the educational needs they require?

Shall we say to them, yes, we can afford luxury schools in Fox Point, for example, but for the children of the poor we cannot afford what they need to get a decent break in life?

Slum School Should be Model

I do not say that the quality of education should be lowered for the few; rather, it should be raised for the many. If metropolitan resources were spent where the need is greatest, the slum school would be the model school. Here would be found the best teachers, the best facilities and the best methods of teaching. As an example, and I cite this without malice, but as a fact: Our wealthier North Shore suburbs spend about twice the amount the city School Board spends for each public school pupil. At the same time, the property tax rate in these suburbs is lower than that of the City of Milwaukee. Why? Simply because of the fiscal unfairness of our state system of shared taxes which collects on the basis of the ability to pay, but does not distribute on the basis of need.

XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY XERO COPY

Metropolitan School District

Doesn't it seem only fair to try to find a better way of distributing our metropolitan resources--perhaps with a single metropolitan school district with its own school board? Why not a district in which all schools could be financed, at least partially, by state funds shared with municipalities, or by a better distribution of state aids. And, of course, the first cannot be accomplished without the second.

What better way is there to bring the resources of the entire community to bear on one of the important problems of the central city? The responsibility for a crucial metropolitan problem located in the central city should rightly be shared by all those who depend upon the central city even though they sleep in another municipality.

Endorses "We-Milwaukeeans" Proposal

As for the current Milwaukee school problem, it seems to me an important first step towards clearing up the picture lies in the proposal of We-Milwaukeeans for a thorough evaluation of the Milwaukee schools.

Extremism on any side, stubborn attitudes, frozen minds, and heated words--none of these can solve Milwaukee's school problems. The only answer is in reason and in truth, and a calm attitude that seeks only what is just. And what is just is what each of us seeks--opportunity, respect, equality as a human being, and a chance for a better life for our children.

That is why I strongly endorse the We-Milwaukeeans proposal. It is an important step towards giving the truth to the public--and I have confidence in the people of Milwaukee. Once the facts are known, they will be fair-minded enough to back reasonable proposals for action.

And let's face it, more knowledge is needed about many national aspects of race and poverty and their impact on the cities of the nation. What are the best ways for the nation to prevent slum ghettos, which are simply prisons of poverty?

What is the best way to keep the central cities themselves from becoming ghettos surrounded by suburbia?

How can the nation cut the cycle of poverty that finds second and third generations of the same family living on relief?

The answers are not clear, but the questions certainly deserve intensive and comparative research. Such research I think could well be provided by the national network of "urban observatories"--an idea first sponsored in a national conference here in Milwaukee.

Public Policy Against Discrimination

Over the years, we have seen the growth of public policy in America which says, over and over again, that discrimination is wrong.

The public policy of the United States says that to deny a man his voting rights because of discrimination is un-American.

The public policy of the United States says that discrimination in education is un-American.

The public policy of the United States, our state and our city says that discrimination in the use of public accommodations is un-American.

The public policy of the United States, of our state and our city says that discrimination in employment is un-American.

The public policy of the United States says that discrimination in federally supported housing is un-American. The public policy of the State of Wisconsin says that discrimination in other types of housing is wrong.

I fully support the public policy of the United States, the State of Wisconsin, and the City of Milwaukee.

At the same time, I believe that a voluntary willingness to carry out the law, and even go beyond it, is more effective than the law itself.

Proposes War on Prejudice

That is why I propose that the entire Milwaukee community should join an all-out war on prejudice in Milwaukee.

The Time is Now.

Our radio and television stations, our newspapers, are already enlisted in this war. They have given hours of time and uncounted columns of space to the cause of human understanding. I know they will continue to be strong allies. And I'm sure we can count on our educators, our clergy, our clubs, our PTA's--everyone who has a voice in the community--to intensify their combat against prejudice.

Another unit in the vanguard of this campaign is the group of employers who mobilized two years ago as the Milwaukee Voluntary Equal Employment Opportunity Council. This now numbers 185 firms employing 220,000 persons. They have greatly improved the general attitude toward employment of minorities. Only this week in Washington, the federal director of equal employment opportunities said of their efforts: "Milwaukee is very close to what we hope will be a model program for cities throughout the country."

Now I propose to you--the fairminded people of Milwaukee, as I proposed to the Milwaukee Commission on Community Relations--that we all get behind an intensive, year-round program to root out prejudice, to help each of us to know members of minority groups as individuals rather than as some sort of distorted picture in the mind.

This will not be easy. Old attitudes do not change overnight, perhaps not over a year. But at least we can try; we can see what we can do. We can attack on all fronts.

The challenge is here for all who are interested in human relations in Milwaukee. If there are those who critize this program, I welcome your criticism; I invite you to join this campaign and to strengthen it with your suggestions.

The aim of this program is to show that prejudice and discrimination are as un-American as communism and as superstitious as witchcraft.

While I have asked the Milwaukee Commission on Community Relations to head this campaign, I know that it will need the help of all the publications and radio and television media in the metropolitan area--and even that is not enough. It will also need the help of every agency, public or private, which can help bring about better contacts between all of the minorities that make up this Milwaukee.

I have recommended that the Commission choose a special advisory council. This council should include such people as top--and I say top--representatives of the communications field, producers, writers, directors, educators, clergymen, psychologists, and whatever professional talent is needed.

Plea for Reason over Emotion

This campaign cannot succeed without the help of the churches, service agencies, public and parochial schools, the real estate industry, veterans organizations, labor unions, professional associations, civil rights organizations, organizations of groups in poverty areas, and all others who are interested in American democracy.

This campaign is a challenge to all of those who believe in the future of Milwaukee as a progressive and prosperous and human city. For, in this modern age, prejudice--like poverty--is a luxury no city can afford. It is a brake on the wheels of progress. More than that, as every fair-minded citizen knows in his conscience, it is wrong.

My plea tonight is for reason over emotion; results over controversy.

President Johnson has said: "We want to make sure that every family in America lives in a home of dignity, in a neighborhood of pride, a community of opportunity and a city of promise and hope."

Let us work together, then, to make sure that Milwaukee is a community of opportunity, a city of promise and hope for all citizens without discrimination and for our children and our children's children.

Curbs on Discrimination In Housing Prove Easy To Evade in Most Areas

Enforcement Moves Slowly, Loopholes Are Numerous; Some Brokers Use Ruses

But Some Integration Occurs

A WALL STREET JOURNAL News Roundup

"Fair housing" legislation may be a dead issue in Congress now, but it's a red-hot one at the state and local level. There, advocates of laws to end discrimination in the sale and rental of housing are slowly making headway against bitter resistance—only to find their victories are hollow ones in some important respects.

For many people, such laws represent an undue attempt by government to force them to sell homes to Negroes. They regard them as an infringement on their freedom. When fair housing laws have been subjected to referendums, they have almost universally been defeated. But many citizens take a totally different view.

Those who champion such laws see them not only as still another legal guarantee of racial equality but also as a tool to help break up the ghetto and ease some of the crushing urban problems bred there. For this purpose, however, the laws have proved about as useful as a sieve would be for bailing out a sinking rowboat.

Open-housing adherents say that by no means all the blame can be laid on the laws themselves or on their enforcement. A great many Negroes simply are reluctant to leave their "own people" and assume the hard and often lonely role of a black man in a predominantly or entirely white neighborhood. Also, many Negroes don't know the laws exist or are unfamiliar with their provisions. And, finally, many of those who do know the law and want to escape segregated lives can't afford to move to higher-priced places in mostly white areas; the fair housing laws don't touch what may be the biggest obstacle of all—the economic barrier.

Delay and Frustration

Beyond all this, however, lies a basic ineffectiveness in the laws now in force in 21 states and some three dozen cities. Talks with real estate brokers, home owners, prospective Negro buyers, and city and state officials reveal a general pattern—downright flouting of the laws, ingenious evasions and deceptions, lax enforcement, long delays in processing cases. All add up to bitter frustration for potential buyers who all too often find that having the law on your side doesn't mean you can get the house you want.

Often, too, the law isn't even on your side if you happen to be looking for a particular type of housing, because the legislation adopted by many states and cities is full of gaping loopholes. Maine, for example, ignores sales, covers only part of the rental housing market and doesn't have enforcement machinery. A number of states and cities exempt the crucial category of owner-occupied single-family housing from their laws, thus, in effect, helping to keep suburbia white.

It might be expected that President Kennedy's 1962 Executive Order barring discrimination in the sale of housing with Federally insured mortgages would constitute an effective weapon for open-housing advocates. Apparently, however, the order has had almost no effect on the private housing market.

Even the added weight of state and local legislation, when it does cover all or nearly all housing in the area, is not enough to discourage many discrimination practices. Builders, brokers and others have developed a wondrously varied assortment of ploys to slip around the laws.

Checking Addresses

To begin with, a prospective buyer may be unable even to talk to a real estate agent. In Pittsburgh (which now has one of the strongest housing laws in the nation), a call to the broker often elicits the reply—particularly if the caller "sounds" like a Negro—that he is out. The caller leaves his number, which the real estate agency traces to an address. If the address is in a predominantly Negro neighborhood, there often isn't any call back.

If a Negro shows up at a real estate office in person, he may find that the housing market in the area has suddenly, miraculously dried up. "The brokers smile, they're very friendly, they get the Negro a chair, and they say: 'We'd love to serve you but we don't have any houses,' " says William Moyer, director of housing opportunities programs for the American Friends Service Committee, in describing what he says is a common practice in the Chicago area.

Lee Wagner, who worked for a realty firm in Philadelphia for some eight months, recalls: "Although you knew the law, you were not expected to tell Negroes about vacant properties you had listed" in white neighborhoods. He says he knew of houses vacant for six months that a number of Negroes would have been happy to buy.

A subtler maneuver is the earnest money ploy. Some brokers in Portland, Ore., use this despite a law that forbids discriminatory practices by brokers, says Shelton Hill, executive director of the Urban League there. He says the broker welcomes his Negro prospects warmly and shows them houses. If they show real interest in one, he regretfully informs them he has taken earnest money on it from another prospect—but, he adds, if that prospect's loan application doesn't go through, he'll call the Negro couple.

After three or four weeks, the Negro couple notices the house is still listed and calls the agent. He is full of apologies; their number was lost, or perhaps he was out of town. At any rate, he regretfully reports that he has taken more earnest money from still another customer. Can he call them back if things don't pan out? Few Negro buyers will choose to play the game past this point.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL,
Wednesday, June 21, 1967

In many places covered by fair housing laws, Negroes pay more than whites for comparable homes. In Colorado, which has a very strong state law, this is fairly common in the Denver area, says Robinson G. Lapp, executive director of the Metro Denver Fair Housing Center Inc. The center, a private nonprofit corporation financed by private sources and the city, county and state, tries to line up apartments and homes for Negroes who want to move into "closed" white neighborhoods.

He says it is common for an owner to refuse to sell to a Negro if the latter's offer is less than the full asking price—even though asking prices usually are no more than a starting point for bargaining, and most Denver homes sell for less than the initial price requested.

Prospective Negro buyers are hindered by any number of other obstacles, too. In Cleveland, where apartment rentals are covered by Ohio's fair housing law, real estate firms sometimes back out of deals with Negroes by telling them that the person who showed the apartment wasn't a licensed agent; one real estate dealer told a Negro prospect that the salesman who had shown the apartment actually was the janitor, reports the Rev. Richard Rangoon, who heads a fair housing organization in Cleveland.

Another Cleveland broker told a Negro prospect he couldn't show an apartment because it had no light bulbs. And a Negro girl said she spent more than a month trying to get her first apartment. "When they couldn't find anything else that would classify me as undesirable, the apartment manager would tell me I was too young," says the girl, who had just been graduated from Akron University. Some, she says, told her they would have to take a poll of the other tenants.

To counter such practices, a growing number of Negroes, allied with white supporters of fair housing, are adopting the "straw man" tactic, also known as "third-party" or "proxy" buying. Using this technique, a white "fronts" for a Negro by buying a house and then immediately reselling it to the Negro. Mrs. Paula Reems of Bloomfield, Conn. (another state whose law is rated a strong one), says she has personally bought about 20 homes this way. She is a member of the Connecticut Council on Human Relations.

Though real estate groups in some cities and states have been sympathetic toward fair housing legislation and even have championed it, it remains true that in most places the bitterest organized opposition to such laws still comes from real estate brokers. Many complain that they are being squeezed between the law and the home owner who wants to discriminate and that as middlemen they shouldn't bear the blame for what the seller does.

"Economic Suicide"?

Their objections to the laws are both ideological and financial. Many brokers say that no law should be passed that infringes on a seller's right to dispose of his property to whomever he pleases. Others echo the sentiments of George Salapa, executive director of the Cleveland Real Estate Board, who says: "Brokers dealing in all-white areas should not be asked to commit economic suicide if they think that's what it would be to sell to a Negro. The broker may be wrong, or he may not. But one shouldn't legislate the matter for him"

There seems to be real fear among brokers that if they deal fairly with Negroes, white families with homes to sell will go elsewhere, and fellow brokers will throw less business their way. One Akron broker, for example, did all the necessary preparatory work involved in the sale of a home to a Negro by a willing white and then dropped out without taking his commission.

"All he had left to do was shuffle papers for half an hour, and he could have made $1,200," marvels an attorney working on the transaction. He says the broker told him that he was afraid that if he was the agent of record in the deal, he would never get another listing in the area, a previously all-white neighborhood with many homes in the $40,000 to $50,000 range.

Consider another story told by Kenneth Hawthorne, a Negro salesman for Gulf Oil Corp., about what happened when he tried to buy a home in the posh white suburb of Mt. Lebanon, near Pittsburgh, a few years ago.

He and his wife went to six agents in all. At the first, he recalls, the woman broker they had made an appointment with took one look at them and said, "Oh my God — you're the Hawthornes?" Then she became hysterical and walked out. The manager of the agency talked to them a while and promised to call back. He never did.

An Agent Is Fired

At the second agency, they met a young woman who seemed genuinely eager to help, but the manager of the office came out and made some excuses. The Hawthornes were promised they would be called back. They were—by the young woman, who told them she had been fired.

After various other runarounds, the big blowup came at the sixth agency. The broker they talked to, says Mr. Hawthorne, tried to persuade them not to buy in Mt. Lebanon, failed and finally agreed to call the owner of a home they were interested in. According to Mr. Hawthorne, the broker told the seller: "I've got a Negro here who wants to buy your house." To the broker's utter shock, the seller said fine, bring him down for a look.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL,
Wednesday, June 21, 1967

It snowed the day of the scheduled showing, and the broker postponed the appointment. In the meantime, he called Gulf, Mr. Hawthorne's employer, suggested that the company was abetting a "blockbusting" effort and declared that if Gulf didn't call off Mr. Hawthorne all of Mt. Lebanon's motorists would turn in their Gulf credit cards. He also called Westinghouse Electric Corp., employer of a white witness Mr. Hawthorne had taken with him on his visit to the agency. Another broker called the accounting firm of Price, Waterhouse & Co., employer of the seller, to try to bring pressure to bear, and contacted neighbors of the seller, too. All the firms rebuffed the broker, but Mr. Hawthorne, weary of the whole mess, moved elsewhere.

In another case, a Lansing, Mich., broker advertised an apartment for rent, got a telephone inquiry from a student at Michigan State University and invited the caller to meet him at the apartment. When the prospect showed up and the broker found he was a Negro, the state's Civil Rights Commission charges, the broker refused to show the place—even though the apartment owner later said he had wanted an "open" listing.

The student filed a complaint with the state rights group, setting in motion a lengthy process that isn't finished yet. The rights agency investigated the complaint, found probable cause, failed at an effort to conciliate, issued a public complaint against the broker, held a formal hearing, and ordered the broker to "cease and desist" from allegedly discriminatory practices. The broker has appealed to the courts. The complaint originally was filed in 1964, and the student, who never did get his apartment, has long since left MSU.

The case points up an ironic feature of fair housing legislation generally — enforcement procedures so lengthy that, in effect, all that many complainants get out of a ruling favorable to them is satisfaction that they were in the right. Many a home seeker can't wait until the whole affair has dragged through hearings and other steps; he needs a place to live right away, and he often just gives up and buys or rents elsewhere.

In Yonkers, N.Y., such delays distress Mrs. Sidonia Trommer, an official of the Yonkers Fair Housing Committee. Under New York law, considered one of the broadest and strictest, she says it took the state Commission on Human Rights, the enforcement agency, an average of 4½ months just to make a preliminary finding of probable cause for complaint in 122 complaints her group has made. Of these, 55 took between six and nineteen months to process.

A finding of probable cause is often only the beginning of a whole chain of procedures that can take many months more or even years. Mrs. Trommer says that of the 122 cases where the commission found probable cause, only 18 complainants "actually obtained the housing they wanted, or comparable housing" as a result of commission action. Most of the rest had to move elsewhere. The same thing happens in many other states, too.

Besides slowness, the enforcement commissions also are charged by fair housing advocates with not making full use of the powers they do have. In other cases, they blame the laws for sharply curbing the role of the enforcement groups.

Some states, like Colorado and Massachusetts, give their enforcement agencies the right to initiate complaints on their own and to seek injunctions against offenders. Most states, though, don't grant both these powers, and in some the enforcement agency can neither initiate complaints nor seek injunctions.

It would be wrong to conclude, however, that all these grave faults in the laws and in their enforcement, and all the deception used to slip around them, have rendered fair housing legislation completely ineffective. Individual Negroes with money, patience and the stomach for fencing with brokers, builders and owners have been helped by the laws to get the homes they wanted in white neighborhoods.

Though only a comparative few owe their success to direct action by a state or local agency, more have benefited from an intangible result of such legislation—a slowly growing climate of acceptance now apparent in such places as Bloomfield, Conn., Boston, Denver and Portland. Plenty of abuses still exist, say fair housing's champions, but they are gradually waning. Sadelle Sacks, director of a fair housing group in Massachusetts, says: "Every time a Negro family moves into an area and the world doesn't end, we make some progress."

And so they continue to press for more and stronger laws—with mixed results lately. Fair housing measures went into effect in Iowa, Vermont, Washington and Maryland this year. A California constitutional amendment that nullified the state's fair housing laws was struck down by the courts. Massachusetts strengthened an existing law, and several cities enacted ordinances.

However, fair housing measures failed in some states, including West Virginia and Kansas, and some proposals still alive in other legislatures appear doomed. In Illinois, for example, the legislature has been unable to pass even a watered-down compromise measure, despite the threat of losing a $375 million Federal atom-smashing facility planned for the town of Weston.

At least two city ordinances, those of Springfield and Toledo, Ohio, will be challenged in public referendums this fall and could very well lose. A Jackson, Mich., ordinance has already been defeated in a referendum this year.

Housing Discrimination + Atlanta

41.

The following survey appearing in Final Report, City of Atlanta, Georgia, Equal Opportunity in Housing, December, 1966, Amended June, 1967, elucidates the subject of the extent to which the pattern of residence of Black people is the result of discrimination.

SUMMARY OF INTERVIEWS RELATIVE TO THE ROLE OF DISCRIMINATION IN PATTERNS OF RESIDENTIAL SEGREGATION

denying that summary of interviews are accurately reported - denying assumption

INTRODUCTION

Federal regulations require that this study include "an appraisal of the extent to which the pattern (of residence of Negroes) is the result of discrimination"*. In order to provide an appraisal which would be as objective as possible, the Community Improvement Subcommittee of the Citizens Advisory Committee on Urban Renewal was requested to provide a list of informed sources in the Negro community and in various appropriate professional associations who might be interviewed in this regard.

This memorandum is a summary of comments pertaining to factors which have contributed to residential patterns of Negroes as reported in the interviews.

Interviewees were asked (1) to comment on the role of discrimination in causing segregated housing patterns and (2) to comment on the extent to which the discrepancies between availability and need for housing and community facilities are a result of discrimination. They cited discrimination in education, employment (hence, income) and land selling practices as being so intricately involved as to render futile any attempt to measure any of these factors independent of discrimination.

Accordingly, this section addresses itself to an appraisal of the extent to which the pattern of residence of Negroes is the result of discrimination and uses as its base the subjective opinion of informed sources designated by the CIP subcommittee.

* Local Public Agency Letter #276 August 19, 1963, subject: Revised Policies for Community Renewal Programs, HHFA, URA, Washington, D. C. 20410

The report is divided into three parts each of which deals with comments regarding alleged discriminatory actions. Part One reports comments in regard to the city government; Part Two, in regard to private business; Part Three, in regard to the general public..

PART ONE: CITY GOVERNMENT

Interviewees repeatedly cited Expressway route location and urban renewal project location selections as being dictated by a desire to create and maintain segregated patterns of residences in the city in the past.

One interviewee stated, "the original five urban renewal areas and the expressways were so planned as to accomplish several objectives, one of which was ... to provide buffers to protect white areas".

Zoning practices were often cited by those interviewed. In one interview, zoning was given as the reason Negro residential expansion took place in a westward direction rather than eastward. This interviewee said the zoning districts on the east side allowed Negro neighborhoods to become "infested with commercial and industrial sites", therefore, they were not attractive "so pressure was placed" to open the Westside for development. Another said, "there has been an abuse of the zoning laws in the city. There have been too many variances and too much spot zoning allowed in the Negro communities".

Another underlying cause of segregated housing patterns was reported to be public transportation routes. One interviewee said that the role public transportation played in Negro location is illustrated by the fact that every currently Negro neighborhood in which the old street-car tracks pass through was formerly white. This interviewee and the others who commented on transportation implied that since Negroes are dependent on public transportation, areas of residence could be and have been dictated by provision of or lack of these facilities.

Another interviewee stated, "the transportation system is no longer consciously dedicated to discrimination, but discrimination is already built into the system".

In many interviews policies and facilities of the Atlanta School System were pointed out as playing a major role in existing patterns of residential segregation. One interviewee reported as follows:

> The school system still perpetuates segregation. It is just as hard to get into a white school as it was ten years ago. Two techniques used to keep Negroes out of white schools are: (1) persuasion (parents are told the child won't be happy, will get into fights, etc.) and (2) testing - tests are still administered though there is no official policy to that effect.

The Atlanta Housing Authority's central relocation service indicated that they had a major problem in finding adequate housing for many relocatees because they do not want to move into a different neighborhood where schools are thought to be overcrowded.

One interviewee said that he knew for a fact that "desks were moved out of the East Lake School building during the transition of Kirkwood in order for school officials to be able to say that the school was full and refuse admission to Negroes." Another stated flatly that it is still difficult for a Negro to get into a white school and "the school situation dictates the whole thing (segregated housing patterns)".

Interviewees reported that public housing had been and is being used to force segregated housing patterns. Several mentioned resentment in their communities because of the existence of two tenants selection offices, one located in a Negro neighborhood and one in a white neighborhood. According to those interviewed, Negro applicants felt compelled by these circumstances to list projects known to them to be all-Negro occupied as first choices. They felt that the use of two offices was done deliberately to accomplish this and that a single office would eliminate said pressure.

Some interviewees cited code enforcement procedures as causing patterns of segregated housing. These interviewees contended that code enforcement was deliberately not carried out in some areas in order to speed deterioration so that Negro families could be removed through urban renewal. One interviewee said that the general housing ordinances of the city are very weak in comparison to the housing ordinances in the northern cities with which Atlanta likes to compare itself, and that the housing inspection staff is under-manned, compared with other cities of the same size.

PART TWO: PRIVATE BUSINESS

One interviewee stated that the city leaders are "making decisions with their heads in the sand; they appear very much to appear prejudiced. Negro real estate leaders have not fought this pattern, so the problem does not rest entirely with the white power structure or the white community leaders". Other interviewees also indicated that Negro real estate leaders have some degree of responsibility for patterns of housing segregation. One expressed the opinion that real estate brokers, both Negro and white, maintain and accelerate total transition of areas once integration has begun. He stated that in a transition area with which he is personally acquainted, houses that are empty are not shown to prospective Negro buyers because sale of them would not speed total transition, as quickly as sale of houses occupied by whites.

Lack of available financing for Negroes was repeatedly cited as an early cause of patterns of residential segregation. Many interviewees talked at length about financing formerly being denied to Negroes if prospective purchase was not within prescribed boundaries in the city. However, with only few exceptions knowledgeable interviewees reported that financing was no longer used by private businessmen to maintain patterns of residential segregation.

It was stated in more than one interview that raw land in certain areas within and around the city simply could not be bought for Negro residential development.

One interviewee stated that "the Northside area businessmen have made a concerted effort of controlling the North Avenue - Ponce de Leon corridor to act as a buffer zone for the northside".

PART THREE: THE GENERAL PUBLIC

Psychological intimidation and general harassment were most often cited as reasons preventing Negro residential movement out of prescribed boundaries. One interviewee said that psychological intimidation filters down from the national level as well as being produced locally. He said that reading in the newspapers of housing problems in the north, of violence, and of problems of areas of open occupancy attempts, intimidates local Negroes. This interviewee went on to state that Negroes in Atlanta are very often given the "silent treatment" at places of public accommodation.

One interviewee stated a belief that general harassment is preventing integration in housing in the city. The Baker's Ferry Road area in the western section just beyond the city limits was mentioned as being in transition to Negro occupancy. Reportedly, general harrassment in this neighborhood takes the form of toilet paper being wrapped around shrubery in yards, rocks being thrown through windows, etc.

Among other things which were mentioned, interviewees reported that many white people on public busses prefer to stand up rather than sit beside a Negro. Another was that foreign students from many countries who attend Atlanta University have difficulty finding sponsors in the white community. One interviewee stated that, generally, foreigners are not accepted in the city regardless of country of origin and that this was indicative of a lack of cross cultural communication which perpetuated discrimination.

Not expressed specifically during the interviews, but implied a number of times, was the opinion that the white community, though no longer taking drastic or obviously illegal steps to discriminate or segregate, were permitting the pattern of segregation to increase and solidify through inaction or lack of positive action in other directions.

SUMMARY OF INTERVIEWS ON HOUSING CONDITIONS AND MARKETS

Early in the course of the interviews, it become quite apparent that there are, in effect, two different Negro housing markets. One is the middle-income homeowner market, as exemplified by the Kirkwood area, and the other is the low-income market which includes such areas as Vine City and Lightning.

Because of the sharp dissimilarities between the two markets, this report treats each separately.

Middle Income Market

Middle income housing is largely concentrated on the west side, though a significant portion of the housing stock is located on Atlanta's east side in the vicinity of the Fulton-DeKalb county line and beyond. The expansion of middle income housing for Negroes has occurred by pushing into areas contiguous to existing Negro neighborhoods.

In recent years, the middle-income Negro housing market appears to have become more and more a homeowner's market. Factors operative in the middle-income market for housing for Negroes are discussed below.

Financing. It was generally agreed by those interviewed that financing, once a sore point in Negro housing, has loosened up in recent years. The only hint of possible discrimination in mortgage financing is the suspicion (but not certainty) that conventional mortgage rates may be higher for Negroes. At the other end of the spectrum, one interviewee suggested that mortgage standards were too lax. He alleged that bank FHA inspections of Negro properties were very lax and did not adhere to FHA standards.

A reported sore point within the Negro communities is the easy availability of home improvement mortgages. Home improvement firms allegedly prey on the first-time Negro homeowner, often just out of the slums, who is anxious to exert his new-found pride of ownership by making all sorts of improvements. By taking on additional obligations, the Negro homeowner impairs his ability to carry the house; default and foreclosure results. One of the reported problems is the apparent laxity of the banks in issuing such mortgages. This practice apparently results from the FHA policy of automatically approving loans on bank certification. An FHA representative reported that after foreclosure, it is often discovered that the foreclosed property also carried an FHA improvement mortgage, the existence of which was not known to FHA.

On construction loans, it was indicated that if a builder wanted to build for Negroes in some of the white areas he would not be able to get a loan. White institutions, it was alleged, under pressure from local groups, would not make such loans. The Negro institutions are also very conservative. This was frankly admitted by a member of the Negro financial community who defended this conservatism on the grounds that the Negro-owned institutions are too weak to take the financial risk involved in pioneering efforts. He did say however, that if a substantial builder such as (he named a firm)would come forth with a proposition to build for Negroes away from the traditional areas, he could probably get financing. The builder mentioned was queried, and he said he has found the lending institutions "skeptical" about financing Negro subdivisions away from existing Negro areas.

It should be pointed out that the availability of financing for Negro housing roughly coincides with the 1961-1965 "easy money" period. It is too early to determine whether the recent tightening of money will be felt more by the Negro homebuyer than the white.

A reported weakness in federal loan insurance programs, which could work to frustrate any public equal opportunity policy, is that the federal insuring agencies usually do not get involved in a loan application until a lending institution submits it. This leaves open the possibility that the lender could turn down an applicant for non-financial reasons without the knowledge of the government agencies.

Housing Availability. Interviewees indicate that the average middle-income Negro has found housing easier to obtain in recent years. This is in large measure a consequence of the easy market for white-owned housing. The white-occupant in transition areas who is anxious to sell fast and at the best price turns to the Negro market for disposal. In fact, it was reported that white builders with slow-moving subdivisions have initiated block-busting situations to create a market for their houses. In some instances, builders who had difficulty in selling to whites, turned entire subdivisions over to Negro occupancy.

The so-called Peyton Road affair reportedly marked a milestone in the easing of the housing market for Negroes in Atlanta. As a result of that incident, a group of white and Negro realtors met and adopted a code of ethics which made the following points:

1. all listings would be accepted regardless of color,
2. the brokers would cooperate and meet when tensions came to the fore,
3. there would be no physical barriers erected to further segregation, and
4. there would be no deliberate blockbusting

This code apparently has been adhered to according to interviewees, and, as a result, Negro brokers take listings from whites and white brokers have become more active in the Negro market. This has contributed to the improved housing situation for Negroes.

Home Prices. Interviewees reported that prices of homes for Negroes have become more favorable, particularly over the past year or two. On actual building costs, apart from the cost of the site, the average Negro home buyer now gets as good a price as the white (according to the interviewees), a situation which did not exist previously. This is a reflection of the generally easier market and the fact that white builders are now competing more actively in the areas of Negro residence.

One interviewee pointed out that the easier prices were also a reflection of the fact that the market for owner-occupied properties among Negroes was nearing saturation, and whites in areas of transition cannot sell their houses as effortlessly as in earlier years.

Block-busting. Apparently the real-estate brokers have adhered to their code provision against block-busting. It was indicated that brokers do not engage in block-busting in the formal sense, that is, initiating the transition.

However, it was reported by neighborhood sources that once a Negro family does purchase in a white neighborhood, the brokers, both white and Negro, are out in full force soliciting listings and opening offices in the transitional areas, thus encouraging and speeding a complete transition.

One interviewee, a leader in a community now in transition, alleged that brokers take homes in trade to encourage whites to move. To cover these dealings, he said brokers use fictitious ownership on purchases.

Suburban Movement. It was agreed by all who were queried on the subject that outside of suburban Fulton County "there is little chance of new Negro suburban residential development." Quotes from two Negro realtors who have recently explored the suburban situations were - "the climate is not right for Negroes", and the suburban counties are "very belligerent toward Negroes".

Middle-Income Rental Units. A variety of reasons were given for the fact that the average middle-class Negro renter makes a smaller housing effort than does his white counterpart in the same income range. Two opinions were that "the apartment has no status in Negroes' eyes so why go all out" and, that the middle-income Negro renter is probably saving toward a house so he skimps on rent. However, during the course of interviews with realtors, it was strongly indicated that there is a shortage of better apartments for Negroes. They concluded that it is quite likely that the average middle-income Negro makes a smaller rental effort because he has no alternative.

It was mentioned that financing is difficult to obtain for construction of high-rise apartments in areas of Negro residence and for more elaborate garden-type apartments similar to those being built in middle-income white neighborhoods. One developer mentioned the difficulty he had in obtaining financing for a luxury-type apartment development in a Negro residential area, although he ultimately did obtain financing. The development is proving so successful, he is contemplating another of the same type.

It was also indicated that when apartment buildings make the transition to Negro occupancy, the level of services and maintenance is cut back by the owners. One instance cited was that when an area recently went into transition, the landlord evicted all his white tenants, thereby speeding the transition. It was reported that the new Negro tenants do not get the same service as the former occupants. For example, annual painting of apartments has been eliminated.

Low-Income Housing Market.

It was consistently indicated that the financial status of the low-income Negro makes for built-in segregation. Negroes accounted for 55 percent of householders with under $3,000 income in 1960, although only 33 percent of all households were Negro. Furthermore, a larger proportion of whites with low-incomes were older, presumably retired persons and single persons with no families to support.

According to interviewees, because of the greater concentration of poor among the Negroes, the economics of the situation makes for segregation. Negroes are limited to the older housing near the city's core and convenient to public transportation.

One interviewee pointed out that in his contacts with the low-income community, he found great reluctance to ask the landlord for repairs or even to permit a social worker or other intermediary to ask. He said this results from a feeling on the part of many slum-dwellers that the landlord is almost "doing them a favor" in renting to them.

Public Housing. The Atlanta Housing Authority reported, and this was verified by others, that several Negro families have been integrated into white public housing projects. Indications are that integration in public housing is still a sore point among Negroes. They pointed out, as was verified by Atlanta Housing Authority officials, that one application office is located in a former all-white public housing development and the other in a former all-Negro development. When a Negro goes to the office today, it was said, he feels almost compelled to list an all-Negro project as first choice.

It was stated by one interviewee, who cited an actual case, that when a Negro is placed in a formerly white development he is made as inconspicuous as possible by giving him a rear apartment. In the case he cited, a Negro family was refused inspection of two vacant apartments in a formerly all-white project and told they could only see one apartment in the rear of the development.

FHA Section 221 (d) (3) Housing. Little reason was found for the lack of FHA Section 221(d)(3) as a vehicle for improving the Negro housing situation. However, growing interest in 221(d)(3) was evidenced and there is an indication that several additional projects would be undertaken soon.

Interviewees reported that proposed rents for 221(d)(3) projects appear to be too high to reach much of the low income group, unless rent subsidy is furnished.

PUBLIC ATTITUDES TOWARD CITY FACILITIES AND SERVICES IN AREAS IN WHICH NEGROES LIVE

Schools. In every interview in which public attitudes towards school facilities were discussed, the interviewee stated that schools in areas in which Negroes live are overcrowded. It is also the opinion of the Negro public that schools in these areas are more overcrowded than schools in the city as a whole.

Statistical analyses previously prepared by the consultant were not discussed with (or even mentioned to) interviewees; however, almost without exception interviewees stated the opinion that statistics prepared by the School Board were unreliable and untrue.

It can only be concluded that the general public's attitude in these areas is that facilities are unequal. The attitude towards the School Board in general is also negative.

One interviewee stated that the "technical schools for Negroes are very poor" and the high school programs are deficient. "The city needs to provide an opportunity for its Negro citizens to catch up."

In an interview with one neighborhood leader, several problems concerning lack of school facilities were brought out, but the interviewee stated that in this particular neighborhood, "the public attitude towards schools is pretty good". This is the only neighborhood from which such an opinion was evidenced. A citizens education program is being conducted in this neighborhood by two church associations and a human relations council.

Libraries. The public attitude toward libraries as indicated in the interviews is that service is adequate.

Sanitation. Garbage collection and trash removal consistently received negative responses. Several times garbage collection service was cited as being deficient. Most of the Negro neighborhood sources interviewed recounted personal experiences of receiving regular service only after much complaining; however, all of these sources also talked about and showed some sympathy for the "city's problem" in employing a sufficient number of collectors.

All of the interviewees stated that trash and rubbish curbside pickup was inadequate in their neighborhoods. One cited a personal experience wherein he had called the city repeatedly without results. When the trash was finally picked up at the curb in front of his house, his was the only trash removed on the street.

Police Protection. Responses in regard to police protection varied widely. In the poorer neighborhoods interviewees reported that the attitude is one of distrust. The people believe policemen are there to control them or to spy on them, rather than to protect them. Several of the interviewees themselves, however, indicated that this attitude is softening. One stated "the police department is seeking to identify with the needs of the people rather than forcing people to bend to a certain will".

In the more affluent neighborhoods interviewees reported that police are regarded with mild suspicion. One interviewee who is representative of one of the most affluent Negro neighborhoods stated: "there are far too many complaints of maltreatment for there not to be a basis in fact". Another from a neighborhood of equal status reported, "there is a frequent complaint in the general neighborhood that when patrolmen come to the homes they are abusive" (discourteous).

On all levels, interviewees complained that police are slow in answering calls. Three interviewees said that sometimes they do not show up at all. Two interviewees said that the people in their communities had mixed attitudes as to what the job of a policeman is. A social worker who had conducted a survey in the Vine City area reported that responses from individuals in regard to police was so mixed that it was obvious that the community as a whole had no comprehension of the purpose of the police.

Streets. Without exception, when questioned about condition of streets, interviewees reported that local streets are poorly maintained. Lack of street cleaning was a frequent complaint. One interviewee flatly stated, "there is no single well-kept artery through the Negro community, and local streets are awful".

Attitudes were softer in the more affluent neighborhoods, but interviewees indicated that the people thought street repair was very slow and that repair was slower than in communities which were all white.

Parks and Recreation. Most of those interviewed held the opinion that park and recreation facilities and services had rapidly improved in the last few years; however, all but one stated that existing facilities were inadequate. The exception stated that there was no park in his neighborhood, but that he didn't think his neighbors minded since they all had large yards and there was very little traffic on their streets.

One interviewee covered the entire range of responses relative to parks received in all interviews in this brief statement:

> "Park services are woefully inadequate. Fifteen years ago there was only one (Negro) park for the whole city. The parks we have now are poorly maintained. The programs that are given are pretty good, but there's a need for more programmed recreation. The city promised to build about seven parks in the last bond issue; none were built".

These remarks were all repeated in one or more other interviews. All indicated that Negroes thought conditions were better in all-white neighborhoods.

APPENDIX:

Section IV: Interviews

INTRODUCTION

The material contained in this section is the result of a series of interviews under taken as part of the equal opportunity in housing study. These interviews were of three types:

- Interviews relative to the role of discrimination in patterns of residential segregation.
- Interviews on housing conditions and markets.
- Public attitudes toward city facilities and services in areas in which Negroes live.

Information and opinions gained through these interviews were used to help appraise factors, both positive and negative, considered to be the most dominant in encouraging or inhibiting equal opportunity in housing and to determine public attitudes toward housing and community facilities.

It should be emphasized that the material summarized herein is opinion rather than fact. The body of facts presented in other sections of this report substantiates some of these opinions; in other cases, the body of facts contradicts some of these opinions.

In many cases the opinions held by people interviewed are contrary to the facts, only partially true, or no longer true. However, the opinions expressed represent those held by some people and should be aired. The interviews do not comprise a public opinion survey or a statistical sample and the scope of the equal opportunity study did not contemplate that they would serve this purpose. Rather, they serve to complement the body of facts and helped to shape the direction of some of the research as the study progressed. They are presented here to provide as broad a background as possible to the research and program presented herein.

TITLE VI—
NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERALLY ASSISTED PROGRAMS

Sec. 601. No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. (Sec. 601, Civil Rights Act of 1964; 78 Stat. 252 (1964); 42 U.S.C. 2000d (1965))

EXECUTIVE ORDER 11246, AS AMENDED— NONDISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS AND SUBCONTRACTORS

Sec. 202. . . . (1) The contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. The contractor will take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that employees are treated during employment without regard to their race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. Such action shall include, but not be limited to the following: employment, upgrading, demotion, or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship.
(42 U.S.C.A. sec. 2000e (1970))

HEW AND CIVIL RIGHTS

TITLE VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 says that no person shall be discriminated against because of his or her race, color, or national origin in any program or activity that receives Federal financial assistance.

This anti-discrimination provision applies with equal force to all sections of the nation, North and South, East and West. The intent of Title VI is to assure all individuals equal access to Federal benefits.

Each Federal department and agency is responsible for making sure that discrimination does not exist in the programs and activities it assists. Federal financial assistance includes grants, loans, or contracts and other arrangements by which Federal benefits are provided. For example, Federal assistance extends to donations of equipment, the sale and lease of Federal property and the permission to use Federal property or personnel.

Office for Civil Rights

In the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Title VI is administered by the Office for Civil Rights, which is located in the Office of the Secretary. The Director of this Office also serves as the Secretary's Special Assistant for Civil Rights, responsible for overall coordination of HEW's civil rights activities.

In terms of the amount of financial assistance under Federal grant and loan programs, HEW is the major agency affected by Title VI. It administers three of the largest Federal grant programs—public assistance (welfare), aid to education, and public health research and services.

HEW now operates more than 250 types of programs to help people. The Office for Civil Rights has the goal of preventing discrimination in these programs, which range from prenatal care and early childhood development activities to varied assistance and services for older Americans. These programs cannot achieve their objectives unless they are available equally to all citizens.

Also, there may be no discrimination where people receive benefits directly from HEW, like Social Security offices and Public Health Service hospitals and clinics.

Requirements of Recipients

Agencies receiving assistance must submit written assurances that they will comply with the law and the regulations the Department has issued. Included as HEW recipients are those with great importance in our lives—schools, colleges and universities, vocational centers, libraries, educational broadcasting facilities, hospitals, nursing homes and extended care facilities, medical laboratories, day care centers and various State and local agencies.

If a recipient reneges on its commitment of compliance or refuses to make a commitment, Federal assistance may be discontinued. The purpose of civil rights law, however, is to establish equal opportunity, not to withhold Federal assistance. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare seeks the cooperation of recipients and helps them to comply voluntarily with the law whenever possible.

Practices of discrimination which are prohibited, when based on race, color, or national origin, include:

- ☐ applying different standards in determining eligibility for services
- ☐ denying services
- ☐ locating facilities so as to exclude certain persons
- ☐ providing services in a different manner
- ☐ segregation in the provision of services
- ☐ administering services in ways which impair human dignity
- ☐ restricting an individual in the enjoyment of any privilege shared by others
- ☐ refusing to grant equal staff privileges in a facility
- ☐ failing to account for skills in a language other than English.

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS

SCHOOL districts and private schools receiving Federal assistance must assure that their programs are free of discrimination. The law forbids segregating pupils or denying them equal educational opportunities on the ground of race, color, or national origin.

The responsibility for eliminating discrimination extends to the way a school system's entire educational programs and activities are organized and carried out.

Local school officials are responsible for:

- eliminating and preventing discrimination in all services, facilities, activities, and programs (including transportation, athletics, and extra-curricular activities)

- eliminating student assignment procedures, school attendance zones, and school feeder patterns which segregate pupils

- locating new schools or renovating existing schools in a way that does not segregate pupils

- hiring and assigning teachers and other professional staff on a nondiscriminatory basis

- developing English language skills without demeaning the language of a pupil's home environment

- eliminating English language proficiency as a criterion in assigning national origin pupils to classes for the mentally retarded or in denying them access to college preparatory courses

- assuring that a grouping system to meet language needs of national origin minority children does not operate as an educational dead-end

- notifying non-English-speaking parents about school activities that are called to the attention of other parents.

School systems also must assure that no minority pupil is denied an opportunity to obtain the education that other pupils get because of:

- overcrowded classes and activities in schools attended by minority children

- less qualified teachers being assigned to such schools

- poorer facilities and instructional equipment and supplies at such schools along with higher pupil-teacher ratios or lower per pupil expenditures

- less adequate student services (guidance and counseling, job placement, vocational training, medical services, remedial work)

- gerrymandered school attendance boundaries designed to perpetuate racial segregation

- inability to speak and understand the English language.

Federal Funds for Eliminating Discrimination in Schools

HEW makes special efforts to help parents, pupils, educational authorities and the community meet problems that may accompany school desegregation.

The Office of Education administers a program of financial and technical assistance for these purposes. The Office for Civil Rights cooperates closely with this program.

Grants are made to local school boards to help them prepare and carry out desegregation plans, to give school personnel special inservice training and to employ specialists in school desegregation problems.

Training institutes are authorized to improve the ability of school personnel to deal with special educational problems. Funds have also been used to establish school desegregation consultative centers at colleges and universities to make available trained professionals to help school districts with problems stemming from desegregation.

COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

COLLEGES and UNIVERSITIES must be in full compliance with Title VI.

The Office for Civil Rights makes visits to colleges and universities looking into such activities as: recruitment and admission practices, scholarships and financial aid, student enrollment, services, and facilities.

State college systems that previously maintained segregated institutions must take steps to eliminate the racial identity of these institutions. These steps may include a plan of cooperation among colleges and universities involving faculty and student exchanges, joint registration, academic specialization or general sharing of resources.

Indirect services that a college or university offers, such as employment placement and referrals to off-campus housing, must also be available without regard to race, color, or national origin. An institution is required to provide a procedure for investigating any complaints of discrimination filed by students in relation to these services.

HEALTH AND SOCIAL REHABILITATION FACILITIES

HOSPITALS, NURSING HOMES, and other health facilities must operate without discrimination in order to participate in federally assisted programs.

Title VI applies to health facilities and institutions receiving direct Federal assistance such as Medicare. The law also applies to institutions, such as nursing homes and vocational rehabilitation centers, which receive indirect Federal funds through State welfare and vocational rehabilitation programs.

Many changes have been brought about in the Nation's hospitals because of the anti-discrimination provisions in this Federal law. Segregated entrances, waiting rooms, rest rooms and wards have been largely eliminated and patients are no longer assigned to rooms, wards, and floors on the basis of race, color, or national origin. Medical staff and volunteers are also assigned on a nondiscriminatory basis.

Today, almost all hospitals in this country are in compliance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and eligible to receive Federal assistance.

STATE AGENCIES

THE NONDISCRIMINATION provisions of Title VI apply to State agencies receiving Federal financial aid, such as those concerned with education, health, welfare, vocational rehabilitation, mental health, and aging. Such agencies must submit to the Office for Civil Rights an approved State plan for compliance with Title VI covering operations of the State agency and local agencies under its supervision.

This plan must assure that the services or care purchased from hospitals, nursing homes, physicians' clinics, child care institutions, workshops, and rehabilitation facilities will not discriminate against program beneficiaries because of their race, color, or national origin.

Each State agency is responsible for developing and implementing the procedures in its assurance of compliance. Provision must be made for review of the agency's internal practices as well as those of vendors from which it purchases services. All facilities receiving Federal aid through State agencies must meet Federal standards for nondiscrimination in accordance with Title VI.

In some localities, nursing home care for minority groups has been limited or unavailable. Consequently, the State agency primarily responsible for purchasing nursing home care for public assistance patients is also responsible for seeing that such facilities are available and are operated without regard to race, color, or national origin. This requires the State agency to make certain that patients are referred to nursing homes on a nondiscriminatory basis.

Affirmative steps to overcome the effects of past discrimination are a key to compliance. For example, unless a nursing home's nondiscriminatory policy is well advertised, practices based on custom and tradition are likely to continue. For this reason, a nursing home is required to make its nondiscriminatory policy known to patients, staff, community and referral sources. Facilities are encouraged to broaden their referral sources so that admission of minority group members becomes more probable. And State agencies are also encouraged to grant licenses only to facilities with nondiscriminatory policies.

National Origin Minority Groups

In communities with large numbers of national origin minority persons, such as Spanish-surnamed Americans, Orientals or American Indians, special measures to deal with language problems must be undertaken. This may require a State agency to make sure that it has personnel with skills to assist members of national origin minorities. It also may be necessary for an agency to provide special information and education programs. And nursing homes and other facilities may have to advertise their services in ways that will reach national origin minorities.

FEDERAL CONTRACTORS

THE OFFICE for Civil Rights has been delegated certain responsibilities from the Department of Labor for enforcing an Executive Order that bans discrimination in employment by Federal contractors and subcontractors and on federally assisted construction projects.

Executive Order 11246 (as amended by Executive Order 11375) applies to discrimination on the basis of religion and sex, in addition to the grounds of race, color, or national origin.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is the compliance agency for all colleges, universities, hospitals, social service facilities, certain nonprofit organizations, as well as State and local public agencies holding government contracts or subcontracts. Whenever these institutions receive Federal funds for construction, the Executive Order applies to the employment practices of contractors and subcontractors engaged in that construction work. With the Office for Civil Rights, the Social Security Administration is responsible for assuring compliance by insurance companies participating in the Medicare program and those holding contracts with the Civil Service Commission.

Affirmative Action Required

Affirmative action is required of Federal contractors and subcontractors to make sure that persons are treated without regard to race, color, religion, sex or national origin in all conditions of employment. This includes recruitment, promotions, transfers, lay-offs or terminations, rates of pay, and selection for training, including apprenticeship. A contractor's affirmative action plan must include numerical goals and timetables for the employment and upgrading of minorities. Pre-award reviews help in bringing potential contractors into compliance before actual contract awards.

Compliance reviews assess employment policies and practices, including patterns or traditions which may exclude members of minority groups. If deficiencies are found, a contractor is required to take corrective action.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY WITHIN HEW

THE DEPARTMENT'S own employment practices also must be free of discrimination.

A Presidential order was issued in August 1969 (Executive Order 11478) banning discrimination in employment by Federal agencies and directing agencies to formulate affirmative programs of equal employment opportunity.

The Department's Equal Employment Opportunity Program is carried out within each of HEW's operating agencies: the Office of Education; the Social Security Administration; the Social and Rehabilitation Service; the National Institutes of Health; the Health Services and Mental Health Administration; and the Food and Drug Administration.

Also, in the selection of sites for HEW facilities and leasing of space, it is the Department's policy to consider the socio-economic conditions of low wage earners and minority employees.

NEGOTIATION AND ENFORCEMENT

IF A SCHOOL, hospital, State agency, or other facility subject to Title VI fails to eliminate discrimination on a voluntary basis, staff members of the Office for Civil Rights will meet with officials to see what can be done to eliminate discriminatory practices.

If efforts to achieve voluntary compliance fail, the Office for Civil Rights can initiate administrative enforcement proceedings to terminate Federal assistance. Or the Office can request the U.S. Department of Justice to take legal action. The law requires that attempts to achieve voluntary compliance must be exhausted before formal enforcement actions are invoked.

The Department has developed procedures to give recipients and complainants every opportunity for a full hearing before an independent Federal examiner. Each side is given an opportunity to present its case. During the hearing process, a recipient continues to receive Federal money for on-going programs previously approved and funded. However, Federal funds for new programs cannot be approved. After the hearing examiner makes his decision, it may be appealed to a five-member reviewing authority. If the institution is finally ruled out of compliance, the Secretary transmits the decision to the committees of the House and Senate with legislative jurisdiction. The termination of funds takes place 30 days later. Of course, a later appeal through the Federal courts may be made.

Any institution that has its funds terminated may participate once again in Federal programs by eliminating discriminatory practices.

Similar procedures are used under the Executive Order covering Federal contracts. If a hearing supports a finding of noncompliance, existing contracts are terminated and the contractor is barred from future contracts awards.

HANDLING OF COMPLAINTS

ANY PERSON who has a complaint that discrimination because of race, color, or national origin exists in any program aided by HEW should notify the Office for Civil Rights.

Also, this Office should be notified of employment discrimination, based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin, by Federal contractors and subcontractors and on federally assisted construction projects.

A complaint may be filed by letter, by telephone or in person at the Office for Civil Rights in Washington, D.C. or at its regional offices. These offices are located in the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare regional offices in the following cities: Boston; New York City; Philadelphia; Atlanta;

Chicago; Dallas; Kansas City (Missouri); Denver; San Francisco; and Seattle. The addresses and telephone numbers are listed on the back cover of this pamphlet.

Personnel in some regional offices are bilingual and can give special help to members of national origin minorities.

An investigation of the complaint will be made.

If discrimination is found, the Office for Civil Rights will try to eliminate it through negotiation or persuasion.

If these efforts fail and there is a pattern of discrimination, Federal funds may be cut off or legal remedies provided through court action.

The Office for Civil Rights has succeeded in eliminating many instances of discrimination. A complaint filed with the Office, regardless of its immediate outcome, is important in the total effort to enforce the law.

Requests for additional information regarding the HEW civil rights compliance program may be directed to the Office for Civil Rights in Washington, D. C. or to the Regional Office serving your State.

Complaint Procedures
Nondiscrimination in Low-Rent Public Housing

(as published in the Federal Register on January 7, 1965, 30 FR 132-133, 24 CFR 1500.7)

Effective January 3, 1965, Chapter III, Public Housing Administration, is amended by adding a new § 1500.7 Complaint procedure—nondiscrimination in low-rent public housing, as follows:

§ 1500.7 Complaint procedure; nondiscrimination in low-rent public housing.

(a) Introduction. This section is issued under the authority of title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, P.L. 88-352, 78 Stat. 252, 42 U.S.C. 2000d-1; the regulations of the Housing and Home Finance Agency effectuating title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 24 CFR, Subtitle A, Part 1, § 1.1 et seq. of this title (herein referred to as "the HHFA regulations"); and section 502(b) of the Housing Act of 1948, 42 U.S.C. section 1404a. Notwithstanding the provisions of § 1500.6, Complaint procedures—equal opportunity in housing, the procedure prescribed in the HHFA regulations, as implemented by the Public Housing Administration in this § 1500.7, shall apply with respect to any complaint of discrimination on the ground of race, color or national origin in the low-rent housing program under the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, 42 U.S.C. 1401 et seq. The procedure prescribed in § 1500.6 shall apply only to complaints of discrimination on the basis of creed.

(b) Definitions. As used in this section:

(1) "Local Authority" means a "public housing agency" as defined in section 2(11) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, 42 U.S.C. 1402(11), which is a "recipient" of or an "applicant" for Federal financial assistance under that Act as defined in section 1.2 of this title (HHFA regulations). With respect to any federally owned or operated low-rent housing project, the housing project manager shall be deemed to be a "Local Authority" for purposes of this section.

(2) "Discrimination" means any action or practice of a local Authority of the kind prohibited by section 601 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 or by § 1.4 (a) and (b) of this title (HHFA regulations), and, in the case of a project covered by a contract clause for equal opportunity in housing pursuant to section 101 of Executive Order 11063 (see § 1500.6(b)(2)), any action or practice prohibited by such clause relative to race, color, or national origin.

(3) "Project" means a low-rent housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, including any low-rent housing project owned or operated by the Federal Government pursuant to said Act.

(4) "Commissioner" means the Public Housing Commissioner.

(c) Complaints—(1) Filing. Complaints of discrimination on the part of a Local Authority shall be filed with the appropriate Regional Director of the Public Housing Administration. A list of PHA Regional Offices with their addresses and areas of jurisdiction appears as Appendix A to this section. Regional Directors are authorized to extend the time for filing a complaint beyond the period specified in § 1.7(b) of this title (HHFA regulations).

(2) Content. A complaint shall be signed by the complainant or his representative and shall, insofar as known to complainant, name the Local Authority and the project involved, state the time, place, and nature of the alleged discrimination, set forth factual information known to the complainant supporting the allegation of discrimination, and state the complainant's interest in or relationship to the alleged discrimination.

(3) Acknowledgment. Upon receipt of a complaint, the Regional Director shall promptly and in writing acknowledge its receipt.

(Cont'd)

(4) Further notice to complainant. The complainant will be advised in writing when investigation of the complaint indicates discrimination and the matter is resolved by informal means. In all other respects, the procedure prescribed in the HHFA regulations will apply.

(d) Effective date. This section shall be effective January 3, 1965.

Approved: December 30, 1964.

MARIE C. MCGUIRE,
Commissioner.

THE EXECUTIVE ORDER ON HOUSING AND CONVENTIONAL FINANCING

Martin E. Sloane*

Limitations of the Executive Order

From the time of its issuance, it has been quite apparent that President Kennedy's Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing [1/] is a limited one. This is true in at least two senses. First of all, the principal thrust of the Order, as set forth in Section 101, relates almost entirely to housing and related facilities provided through Federal aid agreements executed after the Order's effective date of November 20, 1962.[2/] Thus, existing housing that previously received Federal assistance and housing that is still receiving such assistance is unaffected by Section 101 if the assistance agreement was entered into before November 20, 1962. Moreover, housing that has not yet even been built is, in many cases, unaffected by Section 101 for the same reason. This is of particular significance in connection with the urban renewal and public housing programs because of the long time lag between execution of the agreement for Federal financial assistance and the ultimate construction and occupancy of the housing so aided.[3] The critical cut-off date for purposes of Section 101 of the Executive Order, it must be remembered, is the date on which the financial assistance is agreed to be made, not the date on which the housing is constructed or occupied, nor even the date on which money changes hands.

This paper is a revision of an article which Professor Monroe H. Freedman and I wrote for the Howard Law Journal shortly after Executive Order 11063 was issued. See Sloane and Freedman, The Executive Order on Housing: The Constitutional Basis for What It Fails to Do, 9 How. L.J. 1 (1963). The views expressed in this paper are, of course, those of the author and do not purport to express the position of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Housing provided under pre-Executive Order Federal aid agreements is covered by Section 102 of the Order, known popularly as the "good offices" section.[4] Experience after two years under the Executive Order indicates that the use of "good offices" alone is inadequate to secure compliance.[5]

To some extent, of course, the problems of enforcement under Section 102 are transitory. The principal lack of success has occurred in connection with FHA-aided single-family housing. Here, however, the time lag between the Federal aid agreement (FHA commitment) and the construction and occupancy of the housing is the shortest,[6] and, in fact, all FHA-aided single-family housing now being sold by builders and developers, or to be sold in the future, is covered by Section 101 and is, therefore, subject to the mandatory requirement of nondiscrimination. In this program, at least, Section 102 is a dead letter.[7]

In addition, Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964[8] has virtually eliminated the 102 problems in connection with the urban renewal and public housing programs. Pursuant to the HHFA regulations effectuating Title VI,[9] and the URA requirements implementing that regulation,[10] all urban renewal projects that had not yet reached the land disposition stage[11] by January 4, 1965 are subject to the nondiscrimination requirements of Title VI, regardless of the date on which the loan and grant contract was executed. In view of the fact that the time lag between execution of the loan and grant contract and disposition of the project land is often five years or more, and that the urban renewal program has only begun to have a significant impact in terms of project completion, it can be seen that Title VI has the effect of subjecting the great bulk of urban renewal activity to the requirement of nondiscrimination.[11a]

In public housing, all low-rent projects still receiving annual constributions from the Public Housing Administration on January 4, 1965 are subject to the requirements of Title VI, regardless of the date on which the annual contributions contract was executed.[12] This means that virtually every public housing project authorized since 1937, when the program was initiated, is subject to the mandatory requirements of Title VI. Here too, then, Section 102 is a dead letter.

The principal programs for which Section 102 is still a live issue are the FHA multi-family programs, in that all FHA programs are exempt from coverage under Title VI.[12a] In the single-family program, it will be recalled, the problems of Section 102 are at an end in that all homes coming on the market through builders aided by FHA are now subject to Section 101. In the multi-family programs, on the other hand, landlords managing apartment houses built with the aid of pre-Executive Order FHA commitments are under no FHA requirement of nondiscrimination. Here, it is quite apparent that some means more forceful than the use of "good offices" will have to be used to open up the hundreds of thousands of pre-Executive Order FHA-aided multi-family units on the market.[13]

The second shortcoming of the Executive Order relates to the limited kinds of Federal assistance made subject to its provisions. While the Order is addressed to generally "all departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Federal Government," its command of nondiscrimination affects only a fraction of the home financing in which Federal agencies play a part. The major inadequacy is that mortgage lending institutions are affected only to the extent that they engage in FHA and VA loans.[14] Housing provided through conventional financing by Federally supervised mortgage lenders is excluded from coverage entirely. The institutions omitted are commercial banks, mutual savings banks, and savings and loan associations. As of the end of 1963 they commanded, in the aggregate, resources of $470 billion.[15] They also represent the major source of conventional mortgages, and it is, in fact, through them that most of the Nation's home financing is done.

For example, in 1963, the dollar amount of home loans made was $36.9 billion.[16] Of this amount, only $8.6 billion (23 percent) were loans insured by FHA or guaranteed by VA.[17] Of the remaining $28.3 billion--representing conventional lonas -- $22.1 billion were loans made by commercial and mutual savings banks and savings and loan associations.[18] Moreover, the combination of Government-underwitten loans and conventional loans made by the above institutions totalled $30.7 billion--83 percent of all home loans made in 1963. Almost all of these institutions receive substantial Federal benefit and are subject to close Federal regulation and supervision by one or more Federal agencies. Thus, if the Executive Order had covered conventional financing by Federally-supervised mortgage lenders as well as FHA and VA loans, 83 percent of the home mortgage market would have been subject to the requirement of nondiscrimination in 1963. Instead, under the Order as it now exists, only 23 percent of this market was so affected in that year.

It is the purpose of this paper to determine the validity of an amendment to the Executive Order requiring nondiscrimination with respect to housing provided through conventional financing by Federally supervised lending institutions.

The Nature and Scope of Federal Supervision

Just as the banks and savings and loan associations are separate in nature and organization,[19] so their supervision and regulation are conducted separately. The supervisory pattern in each case can be likened to a three-block pyramid.

With respect to banks, the upper block represents national banks, chartered and supervised by the Comptroller of the Currency.[20] The middle block represents member banks of the Federal Reserve System, supervised by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. These are the 4,615 national banks, which are required by law to be Federal Reserve members,[21] and 1,497 of the 8,944 State-chartered banks, which have voluntarily joined.[22]

The broad base of the pyramid represents banks whose deposits are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC). These consist of all 6,112 member banks of the Federal Reserve System (both national and State-chartered), which are required by law to be FDIC-insured, [23] plus 7,173 State-chartered non-Federal reserve member commercial banks and 330 mutual savings banks, which have voluntarily applied for and been granted the benefits of FDIC deposit insurance.[24]

In all, 98 percent of the nation's commercial banks are FDIC-insured. They hold 99 percent ($310.7 billion) of all commercial bank resources. In addition, of the 509 mutual savings banks in the country, 330 are FDIC-insured. They hold 87 percent ($43 billion) of all mutual savings banks resources.[25]

Federal supervision over the banking community is thus carried on by three agencies -- Comptroller of the Currency: national banks; Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System: State-chartered member banks; FDIC: State-chartered non-member insured commercial and mutual savings banks. FDIC, however, has jurisdiction over institutions in the first two categories (national banks and State-chartered member banks) as well as those in the third (State-chartered non-member insured banks).[26] In fact, if FDIC should terminate the insurance of a bank that is also a member of the Federal Reserve System, the Board of Governors is required, in turn, to terminate that institutions's membership in the Federal Reserve.[27] If the institution is also a national bank, the Comptroller of the Currency is required to appoint a receiver.[28] The crucial agency, therefore, for purposes of amending the Executive Order so as to cover banks, is FDIC, for it includes within its jurisdiction all banks that are supervised by the other two banking agencies.

With respect to savings and loan associations, the upper block represents Federal savings and loan associations, chartered and supervised by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (FHLBB).[29/] The middle block represents savings and loan associations whose accounts are insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC), which is operated under the direction of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.[30/] These consist of all 1,968 Federal savings and loan associations, which are required by law to be FSLIC-insured,[31/] and 2,451 of the 4,357 State-chartered savings and loan associations, which have voluntarily applied for and been granted the benefits of FSLIC insurance of accounts.

The broad base of the savings and loan pyramid represents associations that are members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System (FHLBS). These consist of all 4,419 FSLIC-insured associations (Federal savings and loan associations are required by law to be members of the FHLBS;[32/] State-chartered FSLIC-insured associations are not required to be FHLBS members, but all are nontheless members) plus 541 non-insured associations. In all, 70 percent of the nation's savings and loan associations are FHLBS members. They hold 98 percent ($105.6 billion) of all savings and loan resources.

Unlike Federal supervision of the banking community, there is a concentration of Federal authority over savings and loan associations. The three functions carried out by three separate banking agencies is carried out by a single agency -- the FHLBB -- with respect to savings and loan associations. Also unlike the supervisory pattern in the banking community, the broadest category of savings and loan associations subject to Federal supervision consists not of insured associations, but of members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System (analagous to the Federal Reserve System). Another distinction is that State-chartered, FSLIC-insured associations are not required to be members of the FHLBS. Nonetheless, all FSLIC-insured associations are, in fact, FHLBS members.

Thus, the two crucial categories of lending institutions for purposes of amending the Executive Order so as to obtain full coverage are FDIC-insured banks and FHLBS-member associations.[33/]

The Issue to be Resolved

The basic issue to be resolved in determining the validity of an amended Executive Order is whether the FDIC and the FHLBB can be said to have exceeded their powers by complying with a Presidential directive to prevent discrimination with respect to conventional financing by FDIC and FHLBB-aided institutions.[34/] Even assuming, however, that these two agencies have sufficient authority to require nondiscrimination in the mortgage lending practices of the institutions they supervise, the further question arises concerning their authority to affect the practices of builders who borrow from these institutions. For maximum effectiveness, an amended Executive Order must reach not only the lending practices of Federally supervised lending institutions, but also the sales and rental policies of the builders and developers with whom these institutions deal. This paper will consider, first, the overall question of the authority of the FDIC and FHLBB to comply with a Presidential directive concerning nondiscrimination in conventional financing, and secondly, the question of their authority to reach the practices of builders and developers who borrow from the institutions they supervise.

The Basis of Authority

It is well established that when Federal benefits are granted, the administering agency may impose reasonable conditions upon the granting or continuation of such benefits, provided that these conditions are consistent with national policy, that they are consistent with the purpose of the program, and that the agency possesses sufficient discretionary authority to impose such conditions.[35]

National Policy

There is a clear national public policy against housing discrimination and in favor of equal housing opportunity. Housing discrimination has been held by the Supreme Court to be "contrary to the public policy of the United States" -- a public policy of such forces that in one case -- Hurd v. Hodge[36] -- the Court prohibited lower Federal courts from enforcing private housing discrimination agreements on the ground, inter alia, that such enforcement "would be violative of that policy".[37]

In addition, in a statute first enacted almost 100 years ago, Congress has provided:

> All citizens of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real . . . property. 38/

Congress has also established (in 1949) as a national housing objective: "A decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family." 39/

Congress has further provided in the same statute:

> The Housing and Home Finance Agency and its constitutent agencies, and any other departments or agencies of the Federal Government having powers, functions, or duties with respect to housing, shall exercise their powers, functions, and duties under this or any other law, consistently with the national housing policy declared by this Act and in such manner as will facilitate sustained progress in attaining the national housing objective hereby established. . . . 40/

This command of Congress, particularly when read in conjunction with its century-old declaration guaranteeing equality in property rights, would appear to authorize, if not require by implication, that appropriate measures be taken to assure equal access to the benefits of all Federal programs relating to housing, "for all Americans." The national housing objective can hardly be achieved in any other way. As President Kennedy observed shortly before issuing the Executive Order:

> It is clear now, as it was then [in 1949], that this objective cannot be fulfilled as long as some Americans are denied equal access to the housing market because of their race or religion. 41/

It is to be noted that in establishing the national housing objective, Congress did not limit responsibility for its effectuation to the housing agencies alone, but extended responsibility to "any other departments or agencies of the Federal Government having powers, functions, or duties with respect to housing."

The agencies concerned with the supervision of home finance institutions would clearly be within the scope of this congressional directive, for an essential prerequisite to achieving the national housing objective is the availability of mortgage credit. Another prerequisite to achieving this objective "for all Americans" is that there be equal access to mortgage credit. Yet, as the United States Commission on Civil Rights has found:

> The financial community in which ....[Federal] agencies play so large and so vital a role is a major factor in the denial of equal housing opportunity to minority groups. 42/

Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 43/ is also relevant to this discussion of national policy. Section 601 provides:

> No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. 44/

This language is all-inclusive in its scope. Section 602, wherein Federal departments and agencies are directed to effectuate the provisions of Section 601, expressly excludes "a contract of insurance or guaranty." The United

Attorney General, in explaining the meaning of this exclusion, stated:

> Section 602 would not apply to any contracts of insurance or guaranty. Among the kinds of insurance or guaranty which are excluded from Section 602 by the quoted language are insurance of bank deposits by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. 45/

The significance of this exclusion for our purposes is that Section 601, which contains no such exclusionary language, applies with undiluted force to FDIC and FLSIC insurance. Moreover, Section 605 makes it clear that Congress, in providing for the exclusion of contracts of insurance or guaranty in Section 602, had no intention of interfering with any existing executive authority. 46/ The fact that Title VI does not add to the existing authority of the FDIC or the FHLBB is of little moment. As demonstrated below, these two agencies already possess abundant authority, sufficient for any purpose consistent with national policy. Whatever else Section 601 may represent in terms of the force of law, it is at the least an expression of Congressional policy and national purpose.

In light of the above declarations of law and policy relating to equal housing opportunity, uttered by both the judicial and legislative branches of government, it is clear that action by the FDIC and the FHLBB to assure nondiscriminatory access to home financing by the institutions they benefit and supervise would be consistent with our national policy.

The remaining questions are:

1. Would such action be consistent with the purpose for which the FDIC and FHLBB were created?

2. Do the FDIC and FHLBB possess sufficient discretionary authority to take such action?

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

The system of Federal Deposit Insurance provides security for depositors in commercial and mutual savings banks. This is the literal function of the System, but is is clear that Congress had another, and perhaps, more basic purpose in creating Federal Deposit Insurance. That purpose was to preserve and stimulate the free flow of credit so as to serve the credit needs of communities throughout the country. 47/ Rep. Steagall, the guiding spirit of the FDIC legislation, explained the purpose of the legislation in this way:

> This bill will preserve independent, dual banking in the United States to supply community credit, community service, and for the upbuilding of community life. That is what this bill is intended to do. That is the purpose of this bill; that is what the measure will accomplish. 48/

In view of this emphasis on community credit, of which housing credit is such an important aspect, and in view of the important role that commercial and mutual savings banks play in supplying such credit, 49/ it would appear beyond question that the adoption by FDIC of measures to assure nondiscriminatory access to housing credit would be consistent with this purpose of FDIC. In fact, it might well be argued that to the extent that people are denied equal access to such credit on the arbitrary grounds of race, color, creed, or national origin, this purpose is thereby frustrated.

As to the discretionary authority delegated by Congress to the FDIC, there appears to be little question that it is of sufficient breadth for this purpose. For example, Section 6 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act [50] sets forth as a statutory criterion which the FDIC Board must consider in determining whether to accept an applicant bank for insurance, "the convenience and needs of the community to be served by the bank." As the Civil Rights Commission commented regarding this statutory factor:

> Where the FDIC dispenses its benefits, the banking "needs" (if not the "convenience") of the entire community, including minority groups, would seem to be entitled to consideration. [51]

It is to be noted in this connection that there is no express statutory requirement that FDIC must consider the "convenience and needs" factor once the deposit insurance has been granted. The governing statute, however, authorizes the FDIC Board to exercise "all powers specifically granted . . . and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted." [52] The FDIC Board is further empowered to "prescribe . . . such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act." [53] In addition, FDIC is authorized to terminate its insurance of any bank for violation of FDIC regulations. [54] It is difficult to argue, in the face of these broad grants of discretionary and regulatory authority, that FDIC is powerless to assure that banks receiving the benefits of its insurance will serve the "convenience and needs" of the community while such insurance is in effect. Thus, FDIC appears to have ample discretionary and regulatory authority to take action pursuant to a directive from the President to assure equal access to mortgage credit from FDIC-insured banks for all qualified persons in the community, regardless of their race, religion, or national origin.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

In the area of Federal supervision over savings and loan associations, the power to adopt such measures appears, if anything, more manifest. The legislative history regarding the creation of both the Federal Home Loan Bank System and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation clearly demonstrates that a major purpose of both is to facilitate home mortgage credit so as to serve the Nation's home buyers. 55/ Again, the FHLBB has ample discretionary and regulatory authority to assure that this purpose is carried out -- that institutions receiving the benefits of membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank System or of FSLIC insurance will not deny home loans on the arbitrary ground of race, religion, or national origin. The Federal Home Loan Bank Act states:

> No institution shall be eligible to become a member of, or a non-member borrower of, a Federal home loan bank, if, in the judgment of the [Federal Home Loan Bank] Board, . . . the character of its management or its home-financing policy is inconsistent with sound and economical home financing or with the purposes of this act. 56/

The Act further states:

> The [Federal Home Loan Bank] board . . . shall have power to adopt, amend, and require the observance of such rules, regulations, and orders as shall be necessary from time to time for carrying out the purposes of the provisions of this act. 57/

Finally, the Act provides:

> . . . the [Federal Home Loan Bank] Board may, after hearing, remove any member from membership . . . if, in the opinion of the board, such member . . . (i) has failed to comply with any provision of this Act, or regulation of the board made pursuant thereto; . . . or (iii) has a management or home-financing policy of a character inconsistent with sound and economical home financing or with the purposes of this Act. 58/

With respect of the FSLIC, which was created as part of the National Housing Act, 59/ the Act provides:

> [The FSLIC] shall be under the direction of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and operated by it under such by-laws, rules and regulations as it may prescribe for carrying out the purposes of this title. 60/

Further, the Act authorizes the termination of FSLIC insurance if the FHLBB finds that the institution in question "has violated its duty . . . or negligently permitted any of its officers or agents to violate any provision of any law or regulation to which the insured institution is subject." 61/

Thus, both the FDIC and the FHLBB possess broad authority to regulate the institutions they supervise -- authority of sufficient breadth, it is submitted, to comply with a Presidential directive to assure nondiscriminatory access to home financing by these institutions.

Scope of Proposed Amended Order

If the FDIC and the FHLBB possess sufficient authority to require nondiscrimination in the lending practices of the institutions they benefit and supervise, the question remains whether these agencies may validly adopt measures to assure that when these lending institutions supply funds to builders or developers, the housing provided with such funds will be available on a nondiscriminatory basis.

On one hand, it may be argued that while the FDIC and the FHLBB may validly control the policies and practices of the lending institutions they supervise, it is beyond the scope of their authority to control the policies and practices of those who borrow from these Federally-supervised mortgage lenders. This argument would further contend that since such borrowers are not subject to the supervision of the FDIC or the FHLBB, neither of these agencies may prohibit them from discriminating if they so choose.

Such an argument, however, reduces itself to a matter of administrative technique, rather than one of substantive legal authority. To be sure, neither the FDIC nor the FHLBB is empowered to issue regulations addressed to parties other than the institutions they supervise. By the same token, however, it cannot be doubted that they are empowered to regulate the lending practices of these institutions, including such matters as the manner in which loan activities are carried on and the terms and conditions of particular loans.[62] These regulatory measures necessarily affect the activities of borrowers, but they do so only through regulation of the institutions from which the funds are borrowed. The interest of the Federal agencies lies in the fact that the institutions under their supervision are the source of the funds. To complain that these measures ultimately affect the activities of those who wish to borrow the funds misses the point. Virtually every exercise of supervisory control over lending practices necessarily affects the activities of borrowers or potential borrowers. Very often, that is the principal purpose of the measure. The question is not who is ultimately affected by the measure, but whether the measure is consistent with the relationship between the supervisory agency and the institutions supervised, in terms of statutory authority and national policy. Thus the validity of the measure is determined by examining its purpose and effect, not by identifying the parties ultimately affected.

In the area of housing, the fact that the builder may ultimately be prohibited from discriminating with respect to the housing provided with funds borrowed from a Federally supervised mortgage lender does not render invalid the requirement imposed on the lender, so long as the imposition of such a requirement on the lender is consistent with national policy and within the purpose and scope of the authority of the FDIC and the FHLBB.

The basic justification for amending the Executive Order to cover Federally supervised mortgage lenders is that they constitute the major source of credit necessary for the provision of housing. As noted earlier, a principal purpose in the creation of the FDIC and the FHLBB was to facilitate, on one hand, community credit in general, and on the other, housing credit in particular. Morever, this purpose must be read in conjunction with the national policy of furthering equal housing opportunity and the national housing objective of "a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family." Congress has further directed that all Federal departments and agencies having powers, functions, or duties with respect to housing, shall exercise them "in such manner as will facilitate sustained progress in attaining the national housing objective hereby established."

To the extent that mortgage funds from these institutions are used by builders to provide housing available only on a discriminatory basis, the fulfillment of these related purposes is necessarily frustrated. In order for these purposes to be fulfilled, it must be assured that the housing credit offered by these institutions results in housing available without regard to the arbitrary factors of race, color, creed, or national origin. To the extent that action by the FDIC and the FHLBB furthers this end, such action would be in accord with national policy. In view of the purpose for which these agencies were created and the broad regulatory power conferred on them by statute, such action would also be within the specific purpose and scope of their authority.

Summary

The legal basis for amending Executive Order 11063 to include housing provided through conventional financing by Federally supervised mortgage lenders can be summarized as follows:

1. Both Congress and the Supreme Court have enunciated a clear policy in favor of equal housing opportunity.
2. This policy cannot be realized unless there is equal access to home finance.
3. Federally supervised lending institutions are the Nation's major source of funds used to provide housing.
4. The relevant Federal agencies that supervise these institutions (FDIC and FHLBB) and the programs they administer were created with a principal purpose of facilitating community credit, of which housing credit is a major aspect. In the case of the FDIC, the system which it governs was created with a prime purpose of serving community credit needs in general. In the case of the FHLBB, the system which it governs was created with a prime purpose of serving housing credit needs in particular. Thus, a directive from the President to these agencies to assure nondiscrimination in housing provided through funds borrowed from the lending institutions they benefit and supervise would further the overall national policy of equal housing opportunity and the purposes of the programs they administer.

5. Both the FDIC and the FHLBB possess ample regulatory and discretionary authority to put such measures into effect so as to further this national policy.

6. The fact that these measures would affect not only the practices of the lending institutions but ultimately the practices of builders who borrow from these institutions does not invalidate the measures in that they would be imposed on the lending institutions as requirements in their home financing activities. As such, these measures would be within the regulatory authority of the Federal agencies and would serve to further national policy.

1/ Exec. Order No. 11063, 27 Fed. Reg. 11527 (1962).

2/ Section 101 directs that "all action necessary and appropriate" be taken to prevent discrimination with respect to housing and related facilities that are "owned or operated by the Federal Government" (Section 101(a)(i)) or are assisted by the Federal Government in any of the following ways:

> (ii) provided in whole or in part with the aid of loans, advances, grants, or contributions hereafter agreed to be made by the Federal Government, or (iii) provided in whole or in part by loans hereafter insured, guaranteed, or otherwise secured by the credit of the Federal Government, or (iv) provided by the development or the redevelopment of real property purchased, leased, or otherwise obtained from a State or local public agency receiving Federal financial assistance for slum clearance or urban renewal with respect to such real property under a loan or grant contract hereafter entered into . . . ." (Emphasis added.)

3/ For example, in the urban renewal program the lapse of time between the execution of the loan and grant contract and the ultimate completion of the project may be as long as eight years, or more.

4/ Section 102 directs federal department and agencies "to use their good offices and to take other appropriate action permitted by law, including the institution of appropriate litigation, if required, to promote the abandonment of discriminatory practices with respect to residential property and related facilities heretofore provided with Federal financial assistance...." (Emphasis added.)

6/ FHA commitments in this program expire after one year and none have been renewed without a nondiscrimination agreement.

7/ Once a house is sold to an owner-occupant, it is exempt from coverage under FHA regulations. See 24 CFR §200.315(b) (Supp. 1963).

10/ See Local Public Agency Letter No. 318, from Urban Renewal Commissioner William L. Slayton, December 28, 1964.

11/ In the urban renewal program land is typically acquired by a local public agency, cleared, and then disposed of to private redevelopers for a fair market price.

11a/ For example, by the end of 1962, only 86 projects had been completed, while over 1,000 projects, which had already been approved, were in various stages of planning and execution. 16 HHFA Annual Report 358 (1962). In addition, it has become apparent that discrimination by private developers under the urban renewal program violates the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution. See Smith v. Holiday Inns of America, Inc., 336 F.2d 630 (6th Cir. 1964).

14/ Section 101(b) of the Executive Order directs that action be taken to prevent discrimination:

> in the lending practices with respect to residential property and related facilities (including land to be developed for residential use) of lending institutions insofar as such practices relate to loans hereafter insured or guaranteed by the Federal Government.

19/ For example, as the Civil Rights Commission has noted, savings and loan associations, unlike banks, "accept no deposits, pay no interest, and possess no independent capital structure. Their entire capital... consists of funds from individuals in the form of 'share accounts.'

'Share owners' receive dividends on their shares, not interest on deposits, and constitute, in effect, the associations' stockholders, not depositors." 1961 U.S. Comm'n on Civil Rights Rep., Housing 32, hereinafter cited as 1961 Comm'n Report.

20/ As of the end of 1963, national banks constitute only 34 percent of the Nation's 13,570 commercial banks, but they held more than 54 percent of all commercial bank resources ($170.2 billion of a total of $312.8 billion). See Fed. Res. Bull. supra note 15, at 1554, 1556.

21/ Fed. Res. Act §2, 38 Stat. 251 (1913), 12 USC 282 (1958).

22/ Member banks, while constituting 45 percent of the total number of commercial banks as of the end of 1961, held 84 percent ($261.4 billion) of the total resources. See Fed. Res. Bull. supra note 15, at 1554.

23/ Federal Deposit Insurance Act §4(b), 64 Stat. 875 (1950), 12 USC 1814(b) (1958).

24/ Figures are as of the end of 1963. See Fed. Res. Bull. supra note 15, at 1556.

26/ This is because all national banks and state-chartered member banks are required by law to have their deposits insured by FDIC.

28/ Ibid.

29/ As of the end of 1963, they constituted only 31 percent of the Nation's 6,325 savings and loan associations, but they held 53 percent of all savings and loan resources ($56.4 billion of a total of $107.4 billion). See Savings and Home Financing Source Book, supra note 15, at 8.

30/ 48 Stat. 1256 (1934), 12 USC 1725(a) (1958).

31/ 48 Stat. 1257 (1934), 12 USC 1726(a) (1958).

32/ 48 Stat. 133 (1933), 12 USC 1464(f) (1958).

33/ These two categories include all Federally supervised lending institutions. With respect to savings and loan associations, however, it should be remembered that although all FSLIC-insured associations are, in fact, FHLBS members, they are not required to be. Therefore, in terms of broadening the Executive Order to cover all Federally supervised savings and loan associations, legal authority must theoretically be found regarding FHLBS-member associations and FSLIC-insured associations.

34/ With respect to the President's power to direct the FDIC and FHLBB to impose a nondiscrimination requirement (in the unlikely event that either agency should refuse to comply with a Presidential request to take such action), both agencies are within the executive branch of government and are necessarily subject to the authority of the President, in whom the Constitution vests "the executive Power." (U.S. Const. Art. II, §1). Regarding the FHLBB, the act expressly provides: "The Home Loan Bank Board . . . shall be an independent agency (including the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation) in the executive branch of the Government." 69 Stat. 640-641 (1955), 12 USC 1437. (Emphasis added.) The FDIC Act is silent concerning the Corporation's status. In view of the function of FDIC, however, -- administering the law concerning the insurance of deposits -- it seems apparent that it, too, is a part of the executive branch. See Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52 (1926). Furthermore, the FDIC does not grant licenses, nor is it involved in adjudication. There is, in short, no reason for ascribing to FDIC a status that is independent of the executive branch. Compare Humphrey's Ex'r v. United States, 295 U.S. 602, 628 (1935); Wiener v. United States, 357 U.S. 349 (1957). In Morgan v. TVA, 115 F.2d 990, 994 (6th Cir. 1940), the Court, in deciding that the TVA is a part of the executive branch, said:

> Whatever their character, [TVA's quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions] they are but incidental to the carrying out of a great administrative project. The Board does not sit in judgment upon private citizens and the government, and there is no judicial review of its decisions, except as it may sue or be sued as may other corporations. It is not to be aligned with the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or other administrative bodies mainly exercising clearly quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial functions -- it is predominantly an arm of the executive department.

HOUSING DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT

WHAT DOES THE FEDERAL FAIR HOUSING LAW PROVIDE?

The new law (Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968) declares that it is a national policy to provide fair housing throughout the United States and prohibits seven kinds of discriminatory acts regarding housing if the discrimination is based on race, religion, color or national origin.

1. Refusal to sell or rent or otherwise deal with any person.
2. Discriminating in the conditions or terms of sale, rental or occupancy.
3. Falsely denying housing is available.
4. Discriminatory advertising.
5. Blockbusting—causing someone to sell or rent by telling him that members of a minority group are moving into the area.
6. Discrimination in financing housing by a bank, savings and loan association or other business.
7. Denial of membership or participation in brokerage, multiple listing or other real estate services.

WHAT DOES THE NEW LAW DO NOW?

The first three acts listed above are prohibited now, except that:

1. These three prohibitions do not apply to units in houses for two to four families if the owner lives in one of the units;
2. Single family houses owned by private individual homeowners of three or fewer such houses will not generally become subject to these three prohibitions until 1970.

The last four acts listed above are prohibited now as applied to all kinds of housing, without exception.

NOTE: Coercion, threats or other interference with an individual's rights under the law, including the right to file a complaint, are also prohibited now.

WHAT DOES THE LAW DO IN 1970?

In 1970, the first three prohibitions will become applicable to any single family house where the owner seeks to rent or sell it through the use of a broker or through discriminatory advertising.

WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT VIOLATIONS OF THE NEW LAW?

Remember, the new law applies to discrimination based on race, religion, color or national origin. If you believe you have been, or are about to be, discriminated against or otherwise harmed by the kinds of discriminatory acts which are prohibited by the law now, you have a right, within 180 days after the discrimination occurred, to:

1. Complain to the Secretary by filing this form by mail or in person. HUD will investigate and if it finds the complaint is covered by the law and is justified, it will try to end the discrimination by conciliation. In cases where State or local laws give the same rights as Federal law, HUD must first ask the State or local agency to try to resolve the problems.
2. Go directly to Court even if you have not filed a complaint with the Secretary. The Court may sometimes be able to give quicker, more effective relief than conciliation can provide and may also appoint an attorney for you (without cost) in certain cases.

You Should Also Report All Information about violations to HUD or the Attorney General of the United States even though you don't intend to complain or go to court yourself.

WHAT OTHER FEDERAL LAWS APPLY TO FAIR HOUSING?

Both a Presidential Order and Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as well as the 1968 law, apply to discrimination in federally assisted housing. Your complaint under the new law may also be processed by HUD under Title VI or the Presidential Order when the facts indicate a violation of those laws. Additionally, the U.S. Supreme Court has determined that a prior law (the Civil Rights Act of 1866) prohibits any racial discrimination which interferes with the right to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold or convey any kind of housing, regardless of whether the housing is covered under any other law. This right is enforceable by private court action.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS

If you wish to explain in detail on a separate sheet what happened, you should consider the following:

1. If you feel that others were treated differently than you, please explain.
2. If there were witnesses or others who know what happened, give their names and addresses.
3. If you have made this complaint to other government agencies or to the courts, state when and where and explain what happened.

This form may be mailed by simply folding it, sealing it, and dropping it in a mailbox. You can obtain assistance in learning about the law or in filing a complaint at any HUD regional or field office (including FHA field offices), or by writing to the address below.

HOUSING DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT

WHAT DOES THE FEDERAL FAIR HOUSING LAW PROVIDE?

The new law (Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968) declares that it is a national policy to provide fair housing throughout the United States and prohibits seven kinds of discriminatory acts regarding housing if the discrimination is based on race, religion, color or national origin.

1. Refusal to sell or rent or otherwise deal with any person.
2. Discriminating in the conditions or terms of sale, rental or occupancy.
3. Falsely denying housing is available.
4. Discriminatory advertising.
5. Blockbusting—causing someone to sell or rent by telling him that members of a minority group are moving into the area.
6. Discrimination in financing housing by a bank, savings and loan association or other business.
7. Denial of membership or participation in brokerage, multiple listing or other real estate services.

WHAT DOES THE NEW LAW DO NOW?

The first three acts listed above are prohibited now, except that:

1. These three prohibitions do not apply to units in houses for two to four families if the owner lives in one of the units;
2. Single family houses owned by private individual homeowners of three or fewer such houses will not generally become subject to these three prohibitions until 1970.

The last four acts listed above are prohibited now as applied to all kinds of housing, without exception.

NOTE: Coercion, threats or other interference with an individual's rights under the law, including the right to file a complaint, are also prohibited now.

WHAT DOES THE LAW DO IN 1970?

In 1970, the first three prohibitions will become applicable to any single family house where the owner seeks to rent or sell it through the use of a broker or through discriminatory advertising.

WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT VIOLATIONS OF THE NEW LAW?

Remember, the new law applies to discrimination based on race, religion, color or national origin. UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO
EASTERN DIVISION

REGINALD BUSH, JR. RITA MAE BUSH ADRIENNE INGRID BUSH, Plaintiffs v. FRANK A. KAIM CAROLYN KAIM, Defendants	)	NO. C 69-32 MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Lambros, District Judge:

This is a civil action arising under the Civil Rights Act of 1866, Title 42, U.S.C.A., §1982. The Court has heretofore granted a temporary restraining order against the defendants and has conducted an evidentiary hearing on the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Upon the evidence adduced at that hearing, the Court makes the following determination:

The plaintiffs, Reginald Bush, Jr., and Rita Mae Bush, are husband and wife; they are negroes; they have a four-month old daughter, Adrienne Bush.

Mr. Bush has recently been employed by the Mead-Johnson Laboratories as a medical sales representative. In connection with this employment, he was required to relocate in or near Cleveland, Ohio.

In order to secure suitable housing for himself and his family, he came to Cleveland on or about October 21, 1968. A friend suggested to him that if he were looking for a place to live, he should contact "Operation Equality."

"Operation Equality" is a non-profit corporation which attempts to help minority groups find adequate housing. It is staffed largely by volunteer workers. It is financed by foundation grants and other charitable contributions and operates in the areas of both sales and rentals.

Mr. Bush contacted Operation Equality. He was interested primarily in renting a house, and the organization could not provide him with a suitable rental at that time.

On or about November 5, 1968, Mr. Bush returned to Cleveland, again seeking housing. He contacted Operation Equality, but secured no good leads.

He then began looking in the newspapers for rental housing. In the Cleveland Plain Dealer edition of Saturday, November 9, 1968, Mr. Bush noticed the following advertisement: "Eastlake ranch, 2-bedrm, carpeted living rm, attached garage; spotless, $150. Reference 261-2820."

A similar advertisement appeared in the Sunday edition of the Plain Dealer. In the Plain Dealer edition for Monday, November 11, 1968, an advertisement appeared, which was identical with the others, except that the price asked had been reduced to $140.00.

The defendants, Frank A. Kaim and Carolyn Kaim, are the owners of the property which was advertised as indicated above in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. This property is a single-family house located at 813 Stevens Blvd. in Eastlake, Ohio. This is the only rental property owned by these defendants. Mr. Kaim is a real estate agent and is experienced in the rental and sale of real property.

Mr. Bush called the number indicated in the advertisement at about 6:00 p.m. on the evening of Saturday, November 9th. He spoke with Carolyn Kaim. He asked to come out and view the property. Arrangements were made for him to come out that evening. Mrs. Kaim gave him directions to reach the property.

Bush arrived at about 8:30 that evening. Mr. Kaim met him at the door and showed him through the house. During the course of this tour and after they had been through a few rooms, Mr. Kaim told Bush that he had been showing the house to a number of other people and had received part of a rental deposit from a man to whom he had shown the house that day. Kaim also stated that he had not yet had time to tell his wife about this deposit, but that he was fairly certain the people who gave him the deposit would rent the house. Bush asked Kaim to call him the next day and let him know if the house had been taken. Although Mr. Kaim agreed to call the plaintiff, he never did so.

During the course of the meeting between Kaim and Bush, Kaim asked Mr. Bush whom he worked for, and Bush told him. Mr. Kaim did not ask the size of Mr. Bush's family; he did not ask him his age; he did not ask for credit references; and he did not request Mr. Bush to fill out a rental application.

Mr. Bush became suspicious as a result of his meeting with Mr. Kaim. He called a Mrs. Talbot, who works for Operation Equality and told her what had occurred. He asked her to verify whether the house was in fact rented. She referred him to Mrs. Catherine Worley, a part-time employee of Operation Equality. Arrangements were made whereby Bush and Mrs. Worley would go out to the house on Monday to see if Bush could rent it. If they were unsuccessful, another Operation Equality volunteer would then appear at the house and attempt to rent it.

Although Mr. Bush testified that he made these arrangements "through" Mrs. Worley and that he directed the operation, it appears that these arrangements were worked out jointly by him and Mrs. Worley, and that Mrs. Worley actually contacted the other Operation Equality volunteer and organized the subsequent proceedings.

Mrs. Worley called Mrs. Joan M. Maguire, another Operation Equality volunteer. Mrs. Worley then went to the motel at which Mr. Bush was staying and picked up $50.00 in cash to be used as a deposit on the house. She kept the cash and dropped a $50.00 check drawn on Operation Equality at Mrs. Maguire's home.

She had previously, in a phone conversation, instructed Mrs. Maguire to make an appointment to rent the house the following day. Mrs. Worley, Mrs. Maguire, and Mrs. Maguire's husband are white.

On Monday morning, Mrs. Worley called Mrs. Kaim sometime between 11:00 and 12:00 a.m. Mrs. Worley asked if the house was still available for rent. Mrs. Kaim said it was. She made an appointment to come out and view the house.

Mrs. Maguire also called up and asked if the house was for rent. The woman who answered the phone stated that it was. She then made an appointment to come out and view the house.

Mrs. Worley and Mr. Bush drove out to the house on Monday afternoon. They arrived at about 1:30. Mrs. Roland, who was at that time a tenant in the house, opened the door and allowed them to enter. Soon after, Mrs. Kaim arrived.

There is a dispute over the content of the conversation that took place at the house. The Court concludes that the conversation was essentially as follows:

Mr. Bush introduced himself and Mrs. Worley. He stated that he had come to rent the house. Mrs. Kaim told him that a number of other applications were pending for the property and that the Kaims weren't sure whether there was a deal or not. Mrs. Worley stated that Mrs. Kaim had told her over the phone that the property was still available. Mrs. Kaim answered that she was still taking all applications from persons interested in the property. Mrs. Worley asked why she had not taken an application from Mr. Bush. Mrs. Kaim said that no application from Mr. Bush was necessary, since she already had his name and phone number and could contact him.

To summarize this conversation, Mrs. Kaim declined to rent the property to Mr. Bush at that time. Mrs. Worley and Mr. Bush, unsuccessful in their attempt to rent the house, then left. They drove to the corner of the block, parked the car, and waited.

A few minutes later, Mrs. Maguire drove around the corner and proceeded to the Kaim house. She waved to Mrs. Worley and Mr. Bush as she drove by.

Mrs. Maguire was in the house for ten to fifteen minutes. Mrs. Kaim showed Mrs. Maguire around the house. Mrs. Kaim asked where Mrs. Maguire's husband worked. Mrs. Maguire told her that he worked at the Special Electric Company. Mrs. Kaim wrote this information down together with Mrs. Maguire's name. In the course of this conversation, Mrs. Maguire also told Mrs. Kaim that she had one child. Actually, she has five children.

According to Mrs. Kaim, she asked Mrs. Maguire where her checking and savings accounts were and also asked about her credit. According to Mrs. Maguire's testimony, she was not asked any questions on these subjects.

Mrs. Maguire asked if the house had been rented, and Mrs. Kaim replied that it had not. Mrs. Kaim asked Mrs. Maguire if she wanted to rent the house. Mrs. Maguire said yes. Mrs. Maguire asked Mrs. Kaim if she would accept $50.00 as deposit, and Mrs. Kaim said yes. Mrs. Maguire gave Mrs. Kaim her personal check for $50.00, which Mrs. Kaim accepted.

Mrs. Maguire then left the house, met Mrs. Worley and Mr. Bush and proceeded to the Shoregate Shopping Center, where they discussed what had happened.

The next night, Tuesday, November 12, 1968, Mrs. Maguire and her husband, Kevin Maguire, went out to the property at 813 Stevens. They met with Mr. & Mrs. Kaim. Mr. Kaim showed Mr. Maguire through the house. The Kaims and the Maguires then went into the kitchen and filled out a "Rental Application and Agreement." This was plaintiffs' exhibit 2 at the hearing. Mr. Kaim asked Mr. Maguire for a $140.00 security deposit in connection with the lease. Maguire gave Kaim $90.00 in the form of a personal check. Mr. Maguire had previously received money ($90.00) from Operation Equality to reimburse him for this payment. The $90.00, together with the $50.00 deposit which Mrs. Maguire had previously given, constituted the $140.00 security deposit, which was accepted by the Kaims.

The Kaims and the Maguires both executed the so-called "Rental Application and Agreement," which is actually a lease for the premises. Two provisions of this agreement are relevant here. Paragraph 5 provides:

> "The within premises are hereby rented for a period of 12 months, commencing December 1, 1968, and this agreement shall automatically renew itself thereafter, running continuously for like periods, unless tenants shall give to the landlord not less than 30 days' written notice, prior to the expiration of the term then running, of tenants' intention to terminate said tenancy at the expiration of the then existing term, or unless the landlord shall legally notify tenant to vacate the within premises, or unless the landlord notified the tenant, by registered mail, of any change in the monthly rental or any other terms of the within agreement."

Paragraph 6 provides:

> "Said premises shall be used only as a dwelling and for no other purpose; nor shall said premises or any part thereof be sublet or assigned, nor shall the number of occupants be increased, without the written consent of the landlord first had."

During the course of the conversation between the Kaims and the Maguires, Mrs. Roland, who was then the tenant, entered the kitchen. According to Mr. Maguire's testimony, Mrs. Roland asked Mr. Kaim if it was "necessary to rent to colored." Mr. Kaim answered that he could rent to whomever he wished, but if he was selling, it would be necessary to raise the price.

According to Mr. Kaim's version of this conversation, Kaim asked Maguire why he was selling the house that he then lived in. Maguire said that colored were moving into the neighborhood. Mrs. Roland then asked Mr. Kaim what a person could do when a colored person asked to buy his home. Mr. Kaim testified that he said a person could do nothing, if the negroes would pay the asking price.

On Saturday, November 30, Mr. Bush's appliances were moved into the house at 813 Stevens Blvd. The utilities had been turned on and placed in his name. On Sunday, December 1, Mr. Bush moved in.

The Maguires both testified that they were acting as "agent" for Mr. Bush in seeking to rent the premises and in signing the lease. Mrs. Maguire testified that she entered into the lease on Mr. Bush's behalf and not on her own behalf.

Mr. Maguire testified that he never represented to the Kaims that he was renting the property for himself. He also testified, however, that he never told the Kaims that he was acting for Mr. Bush or anyone other than himself.

Both Mr. & Mrs. Maguire testified that as far as they are concerned the lease belongs to Mr. Bush and that they rented it for Mr. Bush and not for themselves. Nevertheless, as they themselves stated, they behaved at all times as though they were renting the property for themselves.[1]

1) Mrs. Worley testified that she had never met Mr. Bush prior to Sunday, November 10. Mrs. Maguire stated that she had never met Mr. Bush until after her first visit to the house on Stevens Blvd. Mr. Maguire testified that he did not meet Mr. Bush until early in December, 1968.

Mr. Maguire has tendered to Mr. & Mrs. Kaim two checks, each for $140.00. One is dated November 30, 1968, and one is dated December 30, 1968. These were intended by Mr. Maguire to constitute the rent, paid in advance, for the months of December and January. Mr. Kaim has not cashed these checks and has returned them to Mr. Maguire. Mr. Bush has sent checks for $140.00 to the Maguires for rent for each of these months. Mr. Bush testified that the Maguires are holding this money for payment to Mr. Kaim.

At certain times Mr. Bush has stated that he is a "guest" of the Maguires in the house at 813 Stevens Blvd. It appears, however, that he is not a guest, but rather pays rent to the Maguires, who in turn have attempted to make rental payments under their lease to the Kaims.

Mr. Kaim, on January 10, 1969, sent a certified letter to the Maguires stating that they were in violation of their lease agreement in that they had sublet or assigned the premises without Mr. Kaim's written consent. Kaim also notified Mr. Bush that he had no right to be on the premises. He then filed suit against Bush in the Municipal Court of Willoughby, Ohio for forcible entry onto the premises.

Mr. Bush is aware of the non-assignability provision in the lease between the Maguires and the Kaims. He has never asked either of the Kaims for permission to live in the house.

The Kaims in their testimony sought to rebut any inference that they refused to rent to Mr. Bush solely on the basis of his race. Mrs. Kaim stated that she had been attempting to rent the property for a number of days before she spoke with Mr. Bush. She stated that she had no formal application forms, but that she took down certain information on a sheet of paper for each prospective tenant. She stated that she would ask people for their age, their place of employment, the number of persons in their family, how long they had been in the city, and how long they planned to stay.

She testified that she asked Mr. Bush what his employment was, and that he stated he was a sales representative. He also stated that he was moving to Cleveland from Washington with his wife and daughter.

Prior to speaking with Bush, Mrs. Kaim had taken six or seven "applications" to rent the property. She had mentally rejected two of the applicants as not being potentially good tenants. The other four of the six applications she took were from people who were not very interested in the property. Mr. Bush was the only negro applicant.

On November 9, at the time she first made arrangements with Mr. Bush to come and view the premises, she had not spoken with her husband all day.

Mr. Kaim arrived home at 7:30 p.m. He testified that he had shown the property to another man on Saturday afternoon and had accepted a deposit from this man to hold the property. The Kaims both testified that he told Mrs. Kaim about this when he arrived home. According to the Kaims' testimony, Mr. Kaim then tried to reach Bush, but he had already left his motel. Mr. Kaim testified that he does not remember the name of the man who gave him the deposit, and he could furnish no other information on this man's identity.

When Mr. Bush came out to the house on Saturday night, Mr. Kaim told him that he had received a deposit on the property. He told Mr. Bush that he would let him know whether the property was rented, but he did not, in fact, ever call him.

Mrs. Kaim stated that she told persons who called about the apartment on Sunday that the Kaims had accepted a deposit for the property and that there was an application pending.

No one came out after being told that. On Sunday night, the person who gave the deposit called and said he did not want the property, because it was too small. Mr. Kaim returned his deposit to him on Monday.

When Mrs. Worley and Mr. Bush came out to the house, there were no applications pending to rent the property other than the ones Mrs. Kaim had received the previous week. Mrs. Kaim testified that after she talked with Mrs. Worley and Mr. Bush and before she talked with Mrs. Maguire, another woman came out to view the premises. This woman was a divorcee who had two small children, and Mrs. Kaim said that she did not think the woman could afford to pay the rent. Nevertheless she said she took a rental application.

Mrs. Kaim said that when Mrs. Maguire came out to the house, she looked like the kind of tenant that Mrs. Kaim wanted. Mrs. Maguire said that she and her husband would do their own painting and that they would keep up the yard. Mrs. Kaim said she looked like an ideal tenant. Mrs. Kaim asked Mrs. Maguire where her husband worked, where they lived, where their checking and savings accounts were, and about their credit.

After Mrs. Maguire put down a deposit, Mr. Kaim, according to his own testimony, checked to see whether they owned the house in which they were living and to see whether they had an account at the Union Commerce Bank.

The Kaims gave three reasons why they preferred the Maguires over the Bushes. (1) They preferred an older couple, (2) they preferred a couple with no children, and (3) they preferred a tenant with good credit. Nevertheless, although the Maguires physically appear to be older than Mr. Bush, neither of the Kaims asked the Maguires or Mr. Bush what their respective ages were. In addition, Mr. Bush was not asked about his income. The Kaims made no attempt to check on his credit. Mr. Bush had one child; the Maguires represented that they had one child.

Mrs. Kaim testified that she would be "a little reluctant" to rent to a negro because of the probable feelings of the people in the neighborhood. Mr. Kaim testified that he was "somewhat apprehensive" about renting to a negro. He stated that he would consider renting to Mr. Bush even today, but that he would turn him down if he had someone who was a better qualified tenant.

Mr. Kaim stated that Mr. Bush is a presentable man and that the house is presently in good condition, although not in as good a condition as when the Rolands lived there.

The Court has studied the significant portions of the testimony of all the witnesses. The Court has concluded that the Kaims declined to rent to Mr. Bush solely for the reason that he was a negro and for no other reason. The Court has further concluded that the asserted reasons for the Kaims' refusal to rent to Mr. Bush are afterthoughts and were not considered by the Kaims at the time they rented the premises.

Mr. Kaim testified that on Saturday, November 9, when he spoke with Mr. Bush, a man had made a deposit to rent the property. Nevertheless, he was unable to produce the name of this individual or any other information with respect to his identity. In addition, although the Kaims stated that they attempted to reach Mr. Bush on Saturday evening to tell him about the deposit Kaim had received, Mr. Kaim did not mention any alleged deposit until midway through Bush's tour of the house.

The Kaims contended that they were primarily interested in an older couple with good credit. Nevertheless, they did not ask Mr. Bush for his age, he did not ask the Maguires their age. They did not inquire into Mr. Bush's credit. Furthermore, the Court has concluded that they made no inquiry into the Maguires' credit.

Although Mr. Bush expressed a willingness to lease the house at a rental of $150.00 per month, and although Mr. Kaim told Bush that he would call him if the property became available, the Kaims then advertised the property at a reduced rental and did not even call Bush before doing so.

For the above reasons among others, the Court discounts the assertions by the Kaims that they declined to rent the property to Mr. Bush for reasons other than his race. The Court has concluded that the Kaims never actually considered renting the property to Mr. Bush. The Court has further concluded that the sole basis for the refusal of the Kaims to rent the property to Bush was his color. The reasons now put forth by the Kaims to justify their refusal are afterthoughts and did not enter into their consideration at the time.

The Court finds that the Kaims were willing to lease this property at a monthly rental of $150.00, later reduced to $140.00. The plaintiff, Mr. Bush, was willing to rent the property on these terms and communicated this willingness to the defendants, both on Saturday, November 9 and on Monday, November 11. The defendants were aware of the willingness of the plaintiffs to rent the property on these terms. Nevertheless, the defendants refused to rent the property to the plaintiffs. This refusal was based solely on the plaintiffs' race and for no other reason.

This action arises under the provisions of Title 42, U.S.CA., §1982, the so-called Civil Rights Act of 1866.

That Act provides:

> "All citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, that is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property."

Plaintiffs' allege that they have been denied the "same right" to lease property guaranteed them by Section 1982 solely on the basis of their race.

Court's ruling of no agency and subletting question

The parties, in their presentation and arguments before the Court, have emphasized the legal issues relating to the rights of the parties under the lease. Plaintiffs assert that the Maguires, when they leased the house, were acting as agents for Mr. Bush, who was their undisclosed principal; that they rented the property for Mr. Bush; that Mr. Bush is the real lessee. Thus, the plaintiffs claim there has been no assignment of the lease in breach of paragraph six, and the plaintiff Bush is entitled to remain on the property under the provisions of the lease executed on his behalf by his agents.

The defendants assert that there has been a prohibited sublet or assignment of the lease, and that this represents a breach of the lease provisions. The defendants also assert that the lease was procured by misrepresentations made to the defendants by the Maguires--specifically, that they were renting the property for themselves, that they only had one child, and that they themselves intended to live in the house. For these reasons the defendants assert that the plaintiffs are wrongfully on the premises, have no rights under the lease, that the lease itself was procured by fraud, and that the defendants are justified in evicting the plaintiffs.

The Court does not credit the issue of the rights of the parties under the lease with the importance the parties have attributed to it. The Court has concluded that this issue is not of critical significance in this case and, indeed, may not even be relevant.

Plaintiff must show has been deprived of protected right.

This case arises under Title 42, U.S.C.A., §1982. The plaintiff, to sustain a cause of action under this section, must prove that he has been deprived of the "same right. . . to. . . lease. . . real. . . property" as is enjoyed by white citizens. He must show that he has been denied the opportunity to rent the property solely on the basis of his race. If there has been such a denial, then a cause of action under Section 1982 arises. The plaintiff acquires a right derived from Section 1982. This right is conferred by the federal law. It is not dependent on the state law of contract.

State law may become applicable.

The plaintiffs' cause of action, if any, is derived from the discrimination and arose at the time of the discrimination. The Court must determine the rights of the parties as of the time of the discrimination, and restore to the plaintiff that of which he has been deprived. State law issues may become applicable here, particularly as the result of intervening events, but the Court essentially must determine whether a federal right has been denied.

Important at we estab. h discrimin-on.

If the plaintiffs were denied their "right" to rent this property solely on the grounds of their race, then a cause of action exists by reason of Section 1982, and the Court must seek to restore this right to the plaintiffs. On the other hand, if no discrimination occurred, then no cause of action exists under Section 1982 and the plaintiffs' rights, if any, can be derived only from the state law contracts. Since the Court has determined that a discrimination was practiced, it does not reach the issues of the state law of contracts.

The landmark case interpreting Section 1982 is Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co., 392 U.S. 409 (1968). The Jones decision resurrected this section, which had long been regarded as insignificant and duplicative. Indeed, in seeking to interpret and apply Section 1982, the Court is without guidance from other authorities. The Court has been unable to discover any reported decisions subsequent to Jones v. Mayer which apply Section 1982.[2] A discussion of the Jones v. Mayer case is, therefore, particularly important.

The precise issue before the Supreme Court in Jones v. Mayer was whether Section 1982 barred all racial discrimination, or merely discrimination which was the product of state action. The Court stated: "We hold that Section 1982 bars all racial discrimination, private as well as public, in the sale or rental of property, and that the statute, thus construed, is a valid exercise of the power of Congress to enforce the 13th Amendment."

The issue of whether Section 1982 bars private discriminations in the sale or rental of houses can no longer be debated. This issue is conclusively settled by Jones v. Mayer.

The Court also considered the relationship between Section 1982, which was the Civil Rights Act of 1866, and Title 42, U.S.C.A., §3601 et seq., which is the so-called Fair Housing Act of 1968. The Court held that these two statutes have an independent and concurrent existence. As the Court stated in referring to the 1968 Act; "Its enactment had no effect on Section 1982. . . ." Indeed, in both the Jones case and the present case, the discrimination involved would not come under the provisions of the 1968 Act. In the present case, the defendants and other persons similarly situated are specifically exempt from the provisions of the 1968 Act, Title 42, U.S.C.A., §3603(b)(1) and (c)(1). As the Supreme Court determined, however, these acts have independent significance and the exemptions in the 1968 Act have no effect on litigation under the 1866 Act.

2) Dobbins v. Local 212, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 292 F.Supp. 413 (S.D. Ohio 1968), the only case involving Section 1982, is not relevant here.

The Court also set forth the standard to be utilized in determining whether an individual had been deprived of rights guaranteed him under Section 1982: "So long as a Negro citizen who wants to buy or rent a home can be turned away simply because he is not white, he cannot be said to enjoy 'the same right. . . as is enjoyed by white citizens. . to. . . purchase [and] lease. . . real and personal property.' 42 U.S.C., §1982." (Emphasis is Court's.) As the Court went on to state, Section 1982 "must encompass every racially motivated refusal to sell or rent." The Court noted with approval the statement from the earlier case of Hurd v. Hodge, 334 U.S. 24 (1948) that a discrimination would exist where a negro is denied the opportunity to purchase a home "solely because of his race and color."

The standard set forth by the Supreme Court in Jones v. Mayer is identical to the one applied for most other statutes relating to civil rights. Other courts, in seeking to determine whether a petitioner had been denied rights guaranteed him under these statutes, have looked to determine whether there was a discrimination made "on the basis of race," Cypress v. Newport News General and Non-Sectarian Hospital Assoc., 375 F.2d 648 (4th Cir. 1967); or which was the "product of racial bias," Lewis v. City of Grand Rapids, Mich., 356 F.2d 276 (6th Cir. 1966); or was "motivated by racial considerations," Brooks v. School Dist. of the City of Moberly, Mo., 267 F.2d 733 (8th Cir. 1959); or was "based solely on account of race," Brooks v. School Dist., supra; or was made "because [plaintiff] was a negro," Lewis v. City of Grand Rapids, supra. See also Rolfe v. Cty Bd of Ed. of Lincoln Cty, Tenn., 391 F.2d 77 (6th Cir. 1968).

From the above authorities, it is apparent that this Court is required to apply the following standard in the present case: An individual is denied the "same right. . . as is enjoyed by white citizens. . . to. . . lease. . . real. . . property" if he is prevented from renting the property solely because of his race. The Court must determine in each case whether the refusal or failure on the part of the landlord or owner to rent to the plaintiff was motivated by racial considerations, was based solely on account of race, or was made because the plaintiff is a negro.

In sustaining his burden for proving that there has been a prohibited discrimination under the Act, the plaintiff must show each of the following elements: (1) that the owner (or responsible party) placed the property on the open market for sale or rental, (2) that the plaintiff was willing to rent or purchase the property on the terms specified by the owner, (3) the plaintiff communicated this willingness to the owner at a time when the property was available for sale or rent, (4) that the owner refused to rent or sale the property to the plaintiff on the terms which the owner indicated would otherwise be satisfactory, and (5) that there is no apparent reason for the refusal of the defendant to rent the property to the plaintiff other than the plaintiff's race.

The defendant may then come forward and rebut the evidence establishing any of these elements, or he may show that there were reasons other than the plaintiff's race underlying his refusal to rent to the plaintiff. Cypress v. Newport News General and Non-Sectarian Hospital Assoc., 375 F.2d 648 (4th Cir. 1967), Lewis v. City of Grand Rapids, Mich., 356 F.2d 276 (6th Cir. 1966), Rolfe v. County Bd of Ed. of Lincoln Cty, Tenn., 391 F.2d 77 (6th Cir. 1968), Brooks v. School Dist. of the City of Moberly, Mo., 267 F.2d 733 (8th Cir. 1959).

Section 1982 does not prohibit an owner from considering factors other than race in determining whether to sell or rent his property to a negro, or to any other person for that matter. An owner can refuse to rent or sell to anyone, negro or white, for any reason he chooses so long as the motivating reason for this decision is not the individuals race or color.

The statute guarantees to negroes only the "same right" as is enjoyed by white citizens. It does not purport to grant to negroes rights which exceed those of white or other citizens. It provides merely that an owner may not refuse to rent to a negro solely on the basis of his race. Thus, an owner may refuse to rent to a negro for any reason he would refuse to rent to a white man. The statute merely prohibits him from refusing the negro solely because he is a negro.

The Act does not prohibit an owner from considering any factors other than race which he feels are relevant in determining whether to rent to one individual or another. Such factors, which an owner might consider, include the credit standing of the applicant, his assets, his financial stability, his reputation in the community, his age, the size of his family, the ages of his children, his past experience as a lessee or tenant, the length of time he plans to occupy the premises, and whether he is or is not a transient.

The owner may also consider more subjective factors in determining whether he will rent to one individual or another. Thus, he may consider the applicant's appearance, his demeanor, the owner's estimate of his trustworthiness or truthfulness or other subjective factors. Indeed, businessmen utilize such conclusions and opinions in their daily affairs.

Although such factors are subjective, they may be considered. Nonetheless, the owner may later be called upon to demonstrate in court that these and not racial motivations were responsible for his decision in refusing to rent or sell to a negro. Subjective factors are by their nature difficult to prove and often have little more than the credibility of the individual witness behind them.

An owner may even refuse to rent to an individual simply because he does not like him. No one is required to rent or sell to an individual he doesn't like. As in other cases, however, the owner may later be called upon to demonstrate in court that his personal dislike of an individual, rather than the individual's race, was responsible for his decision to refuse him as a tenant.

The owner may consider such factors as those set out above in determining whether to rent or sell to any individual. He is not precluded by Section 1982 or by any other federal statute from considering such factors. Indeed, any factor, other than race, which is relevant to a decision whether to rent or sell to an individual may be considered, and the list of factors set forth above is not intended to be, and could not constitute, an exclusive list.

In many cases of this nature, and in the present case, some or many of the above factors may be relevant. There will likely be individual differences between the negro plaintiff and the other applicants for the property. In the present case, for example, there is a difference in the ages of the Maguires and the Bushes. There is a possible difference in their credit and financial standing.

Once the plaintiff has made out a prima facia case of discrimination, the owner must come forward and show that there were other factors responsible for his decision not to rent to the plaintiff. It is not sufficient that differences between the plaintiff and other applicants exist. The owner must also show that he actually considered these other factors and used them, rather than race, as the basis for making his decision.

This presents primarily an evidentiary question and often an issue of credibility. The Court may consider a number of things in determining whether the owner actually utilized relevant non-racial elements in deciding whether to rent to the plaintiff as opposed to another individual: (1) Did the owner request information relevant to these subjects from the plaintiff, (2) did the owner request such information from other applicants, (3) did he secure such information from other sources, (4) did he request this information from the plaintiff and/or from the other applicants during the period in which he was selecting a tenant, (5) did the owner make any attempt to follow up on this information or to check its accuracy, (6) did he perform this follow-up or checking process during the time in which he was deciding to whom to rent, (7) were there other applicants with better or more desirable ratings in these areas than the plaintiff.

The above are some of the elements which the Court may consider in determining whether the defendant's decision not to rent to the plaintiff was racially motivated or not. There may, of course, be other factors, and the above is not an exclusive list.

In the present case, certain differences other than race did exist between the Bushes and the Maquires. Nevertheless, although these differences did exist, the evidence establishes that the defendants did not consider them in refusing the plaintiffs. Rather, they based their decision not to rent to the plaintiffs solely upon considerations of race.

The Court has concluded that the defendants' refusal to rent this property to the plaintiffs on Saturday, November 9 and Monday, November 11 was motivated solely by factors of race and for no other reason. The plaintiffs have been deprived of the rights guaranteed them under Title 42, U.S.C.A., §1982. The Court is, therefore, called upon to fashion a preliminary order to preserve the status quo between these parties pending the outcome of this litigation and to prevent further deprivations of plaintiffs' Federally-guaranteed rights during the pendency of this litigation.

This is an action seeking injunctive relief. Such an action calls upon the Court to exercise its extraordinary powers. Such powers should be, and are, invoked only under extraordinary circumstances. Nonetheless, the present case is an extraordinary case. The unlawful conduct of the defendants can only be remedied by the issuance of injunctive relief. No adequate remedy at law exists; equity must respond.

The defendants urge that injunctive relief should be denied because of the methods used by the plaintiffs in obtaining a lease. Such tactics are, indeed, not to be favored. Nevertheless, had the plaintiffs not utilized such tactics to acquire possession of the premises, they would have found themselves without a remedy once the home had become occupied by another tenant who was without knowledge of the prior discrimination.

The Court, having determined that injunctive relief is required, must fashion a fair and just order. In tailoring this order, the Court seeks to prevent any further deprivations of the plaintiffs' rights under Section 1982. The Court also seeks to restore to the plaintiffs that of which they have been deprived.

The Court is also cognizant of the complexities of the landlord-tenant relationship. The Court seeks to preserve and foster, rather than to disrupt, a normal landlord-tenant relationship between the plaintiffs and the defendants. ..

The Court seeks to restore to the plaintiffs that of which they have been deprived. The defendants held their property out for rental under certain terms and conditions. These terms and conditions are embodied in the Rental Application and Agreement entered into between the Kaims and the Maguires. The defendants, in refusing to rent to the plaintiffs, have deprived them of the right to enter into a lease for these premises under these terms and conditions. It was a rental of the property under these terms that the Kaims held forth to the white applicants; and it is a rental of the property under these terms that they have deprived the plaintiffs.

The Court, in seeking to restore to the plaintiffs that of which they have been deprived, and to preserve the status quo pending the outcome of this litigation, will secure to plaintiffs, insofar as possible, the position which would have been enjoyed by white citizens under the same circumstances. The plaintiffs are not entitled to greater rights; neither are they entitled to lesser rights.

It is, therefore, ordered as follows:

I

It is ordered that the defendants are restrained and enjoined from each of the following acts and activities:

1. From proceeding with Case No. 15705 in the Willoughby Municipal Court, Willoughby, Ohio.

2. From commencing any other proceedings or litigation directed toward evicting or disturbing the tenancy or peaceful possession of the plaintiffs at the property at 813 Stevens Blvd., Eastlake, Ohio.

3. From attempting in any other way to disturb the possession of the plaintiffs in the property located at 813 Stevens Blvd., Eastlake, Ohio.

It is further ordered that the defendants permit the plaintiffs to occupy the above-mentioned premises under like terms and conditions as those embodied in the Rental Application and Agreement entered into between the Kaims and Mr. & Mrs. Maguire, including paragraph five of said Agreement, which states that the premises are rented for a period of twelve months commencing December 1, 1968.

II

The injunctions and commands contained in part I of this order are specifically conditioned upon the performance by the plaintiffs of each of the following acts:

1. The plaintiffs shall tender to the defendants on or before February 3, 1969, all rent presently in arrears for the property at 813 Stevens Blvd., Rastl 'e, Ohio.

2. Plaintiffs shall comply with all the terms and conditions of the Rental Application and Agreement entered into between the Kaims and the Maguires.

III

In the event that the plaintiffs or the defendants do not live up to and comply with the terms and conditions of the Rental Application and Agreement entered into between the Kaims and the Maguires, or in the event that the plaintiffs become undesirable tenants for reasons other than their race, or in the event that either party desires to terminate the tenancy by reason of the expiration of the term specified in paragraph five of the Rental Application and Agreement, either party may apply to this Court for a modification of the order entered this date.

IV

It is ordered that the bond required of the plaintiffs in connection with their motion for a temporary restraining order be continued and constitute a sufficient bond under the terms of this preliminary injunction.

V

This order shall become effective at 12:00 noon, February 5, 1969. Pursuant to the provisions of Rule 65(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, it is ordered that the plaintiffs' application for a preliminary injunction be and is hereby consolidated with the trial of this action upon the merits. This consolidation shall be subject to the request by any of the parties to this action to introduce further evidence upon the merits of this litigation. Said request is to be made within thirty days of this date. If no such request is made within thirty days, then the Court's determination and Order of this date shall become the final order terminating this action; and this Court's preliminary injunction entered this date shall con[illegible] a permanent injunction.

This Memorandum Opinion and Order constitutes the Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law.

RECOMMENDATIONS

I. Public Education Regarding Housing Discrimination

Those of us directly involved in programs to improve relations between the races in Atlanta anticipate acute difficulties in the immediate future. These difficulties are rooted in the condition of living of a significant number of our citizens. This condition is largely a product of artificial restraints on the free access of minority group citizens to employment opportunities and to the housing market. These restraints have a reciprocal effect. They create an environment that greatly reduces the potential of many of these citizens to participate productively in the local economy; this lack of opportunity, in turn, blocks the efforts of these citizens to improve their environmental conditions. We offer the following facts as evidence of the continuing environmental deterioration that adversely affects a substantial portion of Atlanta's residents. These are the facts:

1. The ratio of Negroes to whites in Atlanta is rising sharply -- up from 38 to 43 per cent of total population in the past five years;

2. But, while the Negro population is rising, its share of available housing has dropped. We offer the following evidence that this is the case:

. . . Negro housing is overcrowded -- a Welfare Department report shows a 90 per cent increase in density of residents in one Negro sector during the past five years (Merritts Avenue, N. E.);

. . . Negro housing is expensive -- Negroes who can afford to buy their own homes find lot prices start at $3,000 and that building costs average 10 per cent higher than for equivalent housing in white neighborhoods;

. . . Negro rents are disproportionately high -- rental prices have more than doubled between 1950 and 1960 (from $23.72 to $52.00) -- which means that the average Negro family pays only 22 per cent less per unit of housing than the white family, though family income is 43 per cent less than the average for white families;

3. Not only are supplies of Negro housing limited, their quality is sub-standard; the 1960 census reported that 46 out of 100 Negro homes in Atlanta were "deteriorating, dilapidated, or lacked essential amenities."

4. Public housing alone is not the answer -- about 15,500 Negro families have been displaced by public clearance projects in the past nine-and-one-half years. Of these, some 9,000 to 12,000 families qualified for public housing, but only 4,000 public housing units have been provided to meet their needs, leaving a minimum net deficit among public assistance eligibles only of at least 5,000 housing units.

5. As the map entitled, "Atlanta Residential Patterns" shows, most of the Negro residential areas in Atlanta either coincide with or border on areas of the city that are transitional, areas where over 50 per cent of the houses need minor repair, or where over 50 per cent of the houses need major repair. The map further shows that the city's public housing, as located, clearly reinforces Atlanta's pattern of racial segregation in housing.

II. Policy Statement for Equal Housing Opportunity

Our proposal consists of two elements -- a second Mayor's Conference on Housing, and an Action Program on Housing Opportunity. The Mayor's Conference can serve to outline the Action Program on housing and set the city's effort in motion. Once the Conference has stated and given full recognition to the problems of discrimination in housing in Atlanta, it becomes imperative that the city make a public policy of its desire to promote equal housing opportunity by every means it has available. Without such a public statement, the city's efforts can only be fragmented, its intent circumscribed, and its image as a progressive leader confused or denied. When, however, the Mayor affirms that the City of Atlanta means to provide equal housing opportunities for all its citizens, then public and private groups and individuals can give the Mayor their support and join in the equal housing program with trust and enthusiasm.

III. Role of Governing Body -- the "Beacon of Equal Opportunity"

The policy statement in the Mayor's Conference should be followed by an official resolution of the governing body. Study and preparation should follow to provide an anti-blockbusting ordinance and a fair housing ordinance to open the housing market on an equal basis for all seeking housing. The implementation of these ordinances should not be directed toward alleviating grievances alone. Rather, the city should launch the effort with a "Good Neighbor" campaign. In addition, the city should provide the equivalent of a Fair Housing Center to assist homeseekers and to handle complaints of housing discrimination and blockbusting. The Center could be a staff addition within the Commission on Human Relations.

For public agencies in the housing area, we visualize an expansion of the efforts of government in addition to the activities undertaken by private interests. In this connection, we urge that there be a full and careful investigation of some imaginative new approaches to the housing dilemma that have recently been proposed -- for example:

. . . dispersing housing for low income residents in various compatible neighborhoods;

. . . using FHA and VA repossession housing;

. . . providing "homestead" financing through a development foundation.

IV. Role of Commission on Human Relations - Resource and Clearing House

The Commission on Human Relations can assist the Mayor in providing information to the public on housing discrimination and can prepare the documents for adoption by the governing body. The Commission can also carry out the "Good Neighbor" campaign and coordinate community groups in the effort. And, as mentioned above, the Commission can supervise the Fair Housing Center's function. The Commission can oversee an active Metropolitan Development Foundation, to be discussed subsequently. And the Commission can call upon business, real estate, financial groups, as well as church and civic groups, for their cooperation and sponsorship of equal housing programs.

A basic element in any program for expanding housing availabilities must be the broadest possible exposure of the general public -- and of certain specific "publics" -- to the economic and social implications of any program to expand housing opportunities. The content of such an education program by the Commission could include several elements, among them:

. . . The dimensions of the housing crisis affecting Atlanta's Negro citizens;

. . . The root causes of this crisis and projections of their probable future impact on the community;

. . . The myths that have built up around the housing issue;

. . . Alternative solutions to eliminating housing discrimination, citing specific strengths and weaknesses of the various approaches;

. . . The experience of other communities faced with similar housing discrimination problems;

. . . The economic benefits that could be realized through a program to relieve housing shortages.

We recognize that developing and analyzing information relating to Negro housing problems and possible solutions is a major undertaking. The selection of priority points of attack and of appropriate media and of techniques for presentation of findings also requires talent and energy. Fortunately, Atlanta has among its resources well-developed sources of sound information and several public and private agencies fully capable of dealing with each element of the task.

Atlanta's organization resources are significant and diverse. Among them are church and church-affiliated organizations, civic associations, the special service units of business and industry, educational institutions, and various other agencies that deal more directly with the various problems of racial minorities. Typical organizations falling into these categories include the United Church Women, the American Friends Service Committee, the Anti-Defamation League, the Chamber of Commerce, the Real Estate Board, the Community Development Department of the Georgia Power Company, and the Office of Economic Opportunity.

V. The Role of Southern Regional Council - the Ready Assist

While we would expect all interested parties to assist in developing means of increasing the supply of housing available to Negroes, we consider that the Southern Regional Council has special credentials in this area. The Council has for years been a knowledgeable and energetic force in the field of inter-race relations. It is familiar with programs in other cities, and is close to the leadership in both the Negro and the white communities. Its Urban Planning Project, actively at work across the South, is ably staffed and has available to it the consulting services of Adley Associates, Atlanta city planning firm. Not only can the Council assist in articulating program elements requiring further elaboration and analysis, it can also help develop content and plan strategies for dissemination of information. In brief, the Coucil can effectively carry out the support role required for an effective city-wide approach to problems of minority housing.

VI. The Role of the Private Sector - the Entrepreneur in a New Market

It seems clear that much of the relief for Negro residents from the crisis in housing must come from the private sector, as emphasized in the Mayor's first Conference on Housing. The Council recognizes that this alternative poses problems of public policy, yet granting the Negro the freedom of market place seems to us to be the choice most consistent with Atlanta's nationwide reputation for developing sound, pragmatic solutions to problems relating to its growth and development. We consider a thoughtful exploration of possible private sources of Negro housing to be an area of urgent priority for four reasons:

1. Use of private resources will permit greater flexibility in the development, construction, and use of land and buildings;

2. With the incentive of the profit motive, we could expect to generate considerable in-puts of imagination and energy and to substantially broaden our attack on problems of housing Negro citizens;

3. Stress on the private housing sector can help to relieve the present recession in the building trades and also will have a generally beneficial effect on the local economy (each new home consumes an average of $4,000 in supplementary equipment, supplies, and services);

4. Finally, the public considers the private developer to be rational and soundly motivated and, for this reason, is likely to look favorably upon his involvement in the quasi-social field of housing.

Under the city's sponsorship and with continuing assistance from the Commission on Human Relations, there should be established a Metropolitan Development Foundation. This would be a corporation of banking, real estate, minority and civic group members who would provide both the expertise and the money to launch needed housing projects, with or without federal aid.

Also under city sponsorship and Commission supervision should be the gathering of commitments for equal housing opportunity. Realtors should be called upon to pledge the sale and rental of all housing on an open occupancy basis. Religious groups should be called upon to educate their members on the moral necessity and on the economic benefit of open housing. As many civic groups as possible should be called upon to make their commitment and pledge their cooperation.

In summary, the Second Mayor's Conference on Housing would follow this suggested outline:

I. Public Education on Housing Discrimination

A. The housing crisis affecting Atlanta's Negro citizens;

B. The myths that have built up around the housing issue;

C. The economic benefits that could be realized through a program to relieve housing shortages.

II. Policy Statement for Equal Housing Opportunity

III. The Role of the Governing Body - the "Beacon of Equal Opportunity"

A. Fair housing legislation.

B. "Good Neighbor" campaign.

C. Fair Housing Center

D. City housing programs.

IV. The Role of Commission on Human Relations - the Resource and Clearing House

A. Public information.

B. Preparation of fair housing documents.

C. Supervision of "Good Neighbor" campaign and Fair Housing Center Function.

D. Supervision of Metropolitan Development Foundation.

E. Gathering of Commitments for Equal Housing Opportunity

V. The Role of the Private Sector - the Entrepreneur in a New Market

"HOUSING COOPERATIVES: A MANDATE FOR PROGRESS"

Address by Robert C. Weaver, Secretary
Department of Housing and Urban Development
National Cooperative Month Celebration
Rochdale Village
Jamaica, New York
October 26, 1968

SUMMARY

THE COOPERATIVE HOUSING MOVEMENT IN THIS COUNTRY CAN BE EXPANDED GREATLY BY THE NEW FEDERAL HOUSING LEGISLATION OF 1968. Co-ops come under both the homeownership section, which subsidizes interest rates down to one percent, or under the rental housing section, with the same subsidy. The most important aspect of the cooperative movement, however, is that it is a strong force for integrated housing. In Rochdale Village, which is integrated, some 25,000 people of different cultural and religious backgrounds, and of different skin colors, live in harmony and mutual respect. It is only by this kind of effort that we can stop the present polarization of the races and the escalation of fear and mistrust for one another in this Nation.

I am pleased to be with you today for personal as well as official reasons.

I am a New Yorker by choice, and it is always a pleasure to be invited to the neighborhood. It also happens that after eight years in Washington, I will be moving back soon to face the challenge of establishing a new urban college in New York City. I hope and expect that young people from Rochdale will attend that college. We must enlist the best of our youth in those fields that have to do with cities and the problems of the people who live in cities. The next time you see me here, I may be recruiting students.

It is also a pleasure -- and this is both personal and official -- to help celebrate Co-op month, and particularly, that aspect of it that has to do with housing.

I have followed the cooperative housing movement for many years, and have supported its principles and its projects.

I have a special interest in the New York program because this is where I had my early exposure to some of the State efforts which were later converted into Federal law.

I was in Governor Harriman's Cabinet in 1955 as State Rent Administrator and it was at that time that this great Governor and his administration moved to initiate and implement the new Mitchell-Lama Housing Law.

This State led the Nation in founding the cooperative housing movement after the first World War. Today there are thousands of moderate-income families enjoying the cooperative way of life in New York, and here in Rochdale Village we find almost 6,000 of those families. Furthermore, the United Housing Foundation, sponsor of Rochdale, is now involved in a Bronx project, Co-op City, which will be the largest ever undertaken. There will be over 15,000 families in that project when it is completed.

These efforts are being repeated in many other states. The cooperative movement, which has an old and proud tradition in this Nation, is proving that age and experience is not sapping its vitality. The United Housing Foundation, the National Association of Housing Cooperatives and the other housing cooperatives are vigorous and youthful organizations.

The pioneering work in housing in New York has had nationwide repercussions. The Mitchell-Lama Act is not only the legislative foundation for Rochdale Village, but is also the precursor of Federal Government backing for the improvement of housing for low-income families. It became a Federal program under President Kennedy. It was expanded under President Johnson and this year the Johnson Administration brought in Federal legislation that can expand it beyond anything we dreamed of a few years ago.

There are two major points I should like to make today.

First, there is the impact on the cooperative movement of this new housing legislation, which is part of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968.

The other point is the impact by the cooperative movement -- as embodied in Rochdale Village -- on old patterns of segregated housing in this Nation.

As most of you know, the Federal Government's entry into the cooperative field began in the early 1950s. That effort has reached well over $1.5 billion in mortgage insurance today -- and that means housing in some 2,000 projects for well over 100,000 families in most of our states.

But since 1961 the Federal effort in cooperative housing has taken a new turn, primarily in serving lower income families. That new effort led to below-market-interest-rates and has now reached more than $200 million in mortgage insurance for more than 15,000 families in 18 states.

This, however, was not enough.

We could point with pride to the principle -- in effect giving lower-income families the kind of Federal mortgage support that had been in effect for those of higher income for many years.

But the volume was not great enough to make the kind of impact we knew must be made if we were to help some 20 million Americans get into decent housing.

So this year the President called for a 10-year program calling for the building and rehabilitation of 26 million units of housing, by far the most ambitious housing program in our history. Six million of these units would receive Federal aid of one kind or another. And the Congress passed this Act.

The two most important new programs as far as the cooperative housing movement is concerned are Sections 235 and 236 of the 1968 Act.

Section 235 begins as follows:

"For the purpose of assisting lower income families in acquiring homeownership or in acquiring membership in a cooperative association operating a housing project..."

This is the program whereby the Government will subsidize interest rates far more deeply than ever before -- down to 1 percent if necessary. It will for the first time bring the possibility of homeownership to low income families.

Section 236 permits the same subsidy for rental units owned by a nonprofit organization, a limited dividend entity -- or a cooperative. Rent supplement payments may also be authorized for tenants in projects financed under this new program.

This now gives the cooperative housing effort a far more comprehensive set of tools for urban development. And it has special advantages.

It can replace unusable housing with good housing. It can serve the entire spectrum of our population, from luxury dwellings for the most self-sufficient, to the lower income families which need governmental assistance.

It serves the deeply human need for pride of ownership, that intangible thing we have difficulty in describing, but which we know is there.

Our forefathers knew this hunger for property, for something they could call their own -- and they migrated from the old societies of Europe to find it here.

Today, if we do well with our new authority, we can help the most recent urban migrants -- the poor and the dispossessed from rural America -- fill the same need.

This is not the only legislative achievement of this year, however.

-- There is a far larger public housing program, using something called the Turnkey concept for greater speed and economy.

-- There is a large acceleration in the rent supplement program.

-- There is expanded assistance for other community facilities and services to help match the increased housing supply.

-- There is the National Housing Partnership concept, with tax incentives to help make the low and moderate income market more attractive to private investors.

-- There is added emphasis on the need to divert more urban renewal efforts into projects that will provide more new and rehabilitated lower-income housing.

-- There is a decent commitment to the Model Cities program, so we can get on with the job of rebuilding and rehabilitating not only the physical plant, but the lives of people in whole large rundown residential neighborhoods.

We have hammered away at our 1949 goal of "a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family" for too long without achieving that goal. With this Act, the Congress again affirms that goal, but with the invaluable added increment of new legislation to meet it for the Nation's lower income families.

Cooperative housing is part of this vast and essential program. It is a vital part. You have management and business experience. You have trained people. You have commitment and heart for the job.

Perhaps those last are the most important assets.

An especially vital role of cooperative housing is its long devotion to the concept of dwellings open to the people of all races. St. Francis Square in San Francisco is a notable Western example.

But here, in the heart of our Nation's most heavily populated urban area is a magnificant example -- Rochdale Village.

We know -- all of us here -- that the long battle to give a strong legal foundation to open housing has been essentially won with the Civil Rights Act of 1968, and its provisions that make fair housing the law of the land.

It constitutes an affirmative statement of national policy that is clear and unmistakable when it says: "It is the policy of the United States to provide, within constitutional limitations, for fair housing throughout the United States."

But the law goes beyond that. It spells out whose rights are protected and who is charged with responsibility for enforcement. It specifies what housing is covered, and when.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development is charged with the responsibility of putting policy into practice, and we intend to pursue that responsibility as vigorously as we can.

But the real test always will be how people of different background, of different interests, of different religious and racial backgrounds, and of different skin colors live and work together. It will depend on how teenagers of different skin color get along in school together. It will depend on how children play -- and fight -- together.

That is where Rochdale Village has been particularly effective.

Here is a place where people with white skins have moved into an integrated housing complex in the middle of a segregated black neighborhood.

The United Housing Foundation is understandably proud of Rochdale Village because it is good housing. But it is most proud of the fact that this is very likely one of the largest and best examples of integrated housing in the country.

This is an important matter indeed when the violent events of the last several years have led to an increasing polarization of the races.

It is important when there are politicians on the national level inciting to race hatred and increasing the fear one American feels for another, only because his skin is of another color.

But in Rochdale Village the schools are integrated, and integrated education works.

In Rochdale Village there are more than 140 social, cultural and recreational organizations. And they are integrated, and they work.

There is reason for pride here, but not for complacency.

I think all of us realize that people have moved to Rochdale because the housing and facilities are good, and the price is right.

This is the way it should be.

But the fact that Americans of different skin colors and religious background have found they can live together in harmony is just as important, and is essential in the long and arduous pathway ahead.

It is never easy to end old myths, and there are myths that have grown among blacks about whites as well as among whites about blacks.

It is no simple matter to ignore the blatant calls for supremacy by either blacks or whites, when leaders of both sides with national followings appear on television and call for such supremacy.

There is no more important issue in this Nation today than that of ending this escalation of fear and violence.

There is no more important action we can take than that of denying the racists in the voting booths just a little over a week from now.

We are all after the same things as Americans: to live in decency and pride in neighborhoods where we can raise our children in peace.

It seems to me that Rochdale Village has a unique opportunity to bring about such a situation. It will not be easy. But our history teaches us that Americans have met and surmounted every great test made upon them as a people.

This, the simple one of living together in mutual respect, may be the greatest of all.

But as I said earlier, Rochdale Village has already made its own contribution to this thesis. The cooperative movement by its very nature calls for people to work together toward a possible goal. That has been its importance and its unique contribution to America. I do not believe it will fail in this test anymore than it has failed in the past.

Ever listen to an egg give a speech?

Of course not. Eggs can't talk. But if they could they'd tell you the freshest eggs in town can be found at your local CO-OP SUPERMARKET.

Along with the freshest, qualitiest, bestest everything else.

That's what CO-OP SUPERMARKETS are noted for. High standards for the consumer. Quality assurance through controls that reach all the way to the wholesale and manufacturing levels.

Our own CO-OP label promises such quality. We tell food processors how to process. Canners how to can. Growers how to grow. Then we make tests to be sure our standards are being maintained.

After all, as a CO-OP member you own the store.

Fair prices, too. Competitive with the giant chains. And there's the cash patronage rebate you get as a CO-OP member (from store's earnings). That's something you won't find at the giant chains or anywhere else.

Most important, you know the CO-OP assures you of top quality meats, produce, delicatessen and other foods.

We take it all so seriously we're part owners, along with other consumer cooperatives, of our own wholesale warehouse — Mid-Eastern Cooperatives, Inc. It provides us with our groceries, milk and other products.

It's what makes the CO-OP the smartest place to shop for hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers. People who want to shop with confidence.

Ask any egg. If you still listen to eggs, that is.

To dream the cooperative dream

Decent housing for families with low and moderate incomes is one of the most pressing problems confronting New Yorkers, as well as families in similar circumstances in every large city of the nation. The United Housing Foundation is pleased to present this supplement in The New York Times to acquaint people with the possibilities housing cooperatives offer to acquire a decent home at a moderate cost, and to create better communities within our city.

The United Housing Foundation is a federation of organizations including housing cooperatives, trade unions, neighborhood associations and other non-profit groups dedicated to helping people to help themselves through cooperation.

The United Housing Foundation and its members have initiated and sponsored cooperatives which are providing nearly 50,000 families with good moderate cost homes. In the process of creating some of these developments, acres of deplorable slums have been replaced by decent, racially and economically integrated, stable communities.

These cooperative communities demonstrate how it is possible for people, non-profit organizations and government at all levels to work together to make our cities better places for all to live.

We are proud that these cooperatives have contributed to improving the living standards of tens of thousands of people as well as physically improving neighborhoods in our city. However, with millions of New Yorkers still living in substandard housing, with slums still blighting large areas of our city, with tens of thousands of families on our waiting lists for non-existent apartments and with the cost of housing constantly increasing, we cannot be satisfied.

On the contrary, what has been accomplished in the past only illustrates in a minor way what could be done on a massive scale if there were real commitment to rebuild our city and to create decent housing for all.

The Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders has graphically depicted the perils which beset our cities. The report called for the building of six million homes in the next five years. This certainly is a minimum goal. The time for meaningless platitudes is past. The red tape which has strangled housing for so long must be slashed. United Housing Foundation is committed to work and cooperate with all who are interested in helping to meet this challenge.

It can be done through proper cooperation and coordination on the part of government — federal, state and local — and non-profit groups working together to achieve the desired results.

JACOB S. POTOFSKY
President, United Housing Foundation

A salute to the cooperative movement

The influence of cooperatives extends into every important segment of the economy. Housing cooperatives are gaining in popularity and other cooperatives concerned with retailing and wholesale buying, recreation, banking and credit, nursery schools, day camps and a host of other areas directly affect the lives of millions of our residents.

In fact, a prime reason for the success of America's free enterprise system is the freedom of people with common goals to form cooperative organizations to improve their positions in the marketplace and in life.

NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER
Governor, State of New York

Since its inception, the United Housing Foundation has been totally committed and dedicated to providing decent housing for those New Yorkers who otherwise could not have afforded it. The Foundation's humane endeavors have resulted in tens of thousands of families being given the promise of hope for a brighter future.

JOHN V. LINDSAY
Mayor, City of New York

The State of New York has created many programs designed to aid non-profit organizations fulfill the need for adequate housing. The United Housing Foundation has demonstrated how these programs can be applied and brought to fruition. It has done so with great skill and is deserving of the State's commendation and its wish for the Foundation's continued success.

The Foundation's dedication to the cause of good housing, its devoted leadership, and its ability to perform, has formed the core of our mutual efforts to expand opportunities for Empire State citizens to live in attractive, modern housing where the price is right.

JAMES WM. GAYNOR
Commissioner, New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal

Low and moderate cost housing is one of organized labor's primary concerns. The New York City Central Labor Council and many of the trade unions in the city have been actively supporting the development of housing cooperatives and the program of the United Housing Foundation for many years.

We commend this partnership of organized labor and the United Housing Foundation. The cooperative method of providing good moderate cost homes and building decent communities in our city benefits every man and woman seeking to make New York City a better place in which to live and work.

President, New York Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO

Boon to moderate- and low-income families

The phenomenon of non-profit cooperative housing

The cooperative idea that has flowered into the United Housing Foundation and its fellow non-profit consumer cooperatives throughout the world can be traced back to Biblical times, when members of a community banded together to help one another save money, build something for their common benefit or pool their craftsmanship.

The cooperative movement that exists today originated in the tiny English community of Rochdale 124 years ago. There, a group of 28 poor artisans opened the first consumers' cooperative, a little store on Toad Lane that sold flour, butter, sugar and meal. Within a short time the Co-op was providing its members with many additional services at substantial savings.

From this inauspicious beginning developed a cooperative movement that encircles the world with more than 230 million members.

Here in America, farmers' cooperatives took hold in the 19th century, but it was not until four decades ago — in 1927 — that housing was built cooperatively on a large scale. That was when the Amalgamated Housing, forerunner of the United Housing Foundation, came into being in New York.

The first major non-profit housing cooperative was built only a few miles from the site of the foundation's newest, Co-op City in the Bronx. It was Amalgamated Houses in the west Bronx, where today 1,500 families live cooperatively.

From that pioneering effort, conceived by the late Sidney Hillman, leader of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, there quickly grew a succession of cooperative ventures sponsored by the union and later by other labor groups, neighborhood organizations, fraternal societies and other non-profit associations.

Under the guidance and direction of Abraham E. Kazan, who was in charge of the Amalgamated Housing effort from its inception, popular interest in co-operative apartment living began to broaden. By 1951, the movement had gained such momentum that the labor unions and other non-profit organizations involved decided to establish a permanent organization to sponsor cooperative developments. Thus was born United Housing Foundation — now carrying on the cooperative tradition under Harold Ostroff, its executive vice president.

In the 17 years since the foundation came into being, cooperative communities have been built that range in size from 125 apartments to the more than 15,000 that will make up Co-op City.

Housing sponsored by the foundation and its members is situated in the Bronx, Brooklyn, Manhattan and Queens — including such well-known communities as the 2,585-family Amalgamated-Warbasse in Brooklyn, the 2,820-family ILGWU Houses (Penn Station South) in Manhattan and Rochdale Village with 5,860 families in Queens.

The new Co-op City, like the other cooperatives under the umbrella of United Housing Foundation, will be governed by the historic "Rochdale Principles" — basis of the cooperative movement for more than a century.

As applied to housing and related endeavors, these principles advocate:

1. No discrimination for any reason — religion, race, nationality or sex. Women voted in cooperatives before they won the right to vote in elections or had the right to own property.

2. Voting equality — one member, one vote.

3. Strict neutrality in the matter of politics and religion.

4. All savings are distributed to members. No speculation is permitted in cooperative shares.

5. Continuing education of members in principles and in practical operation of cooperatives. Encouragement of parallel cooperative ventures to broaden benefits to members.

In non-profit housing cooperatives, the relationship between the owner-resident and the building management is completely different from the traditional landlord-tenant relationship in housing that is built and run for profit.

The cooperative elects its board of directors, which is responsible for the successful operation of the community. The directors hire professional management, which carries out the wishes of cooperators, as expressed through their directors. The members, the directors and the management share the common aim of achieving a sound operation with minimum cost.

For this reason, cooperatives seldom experience the friction frequently found in housing where the profit motive exists. This is not to say that differences of opinion among members are discouraged.

As in all truly democratic organizations, there are bound to be some differences. When these occur, they may be resolved by the house committee or the board of directors. The directors are elected at annual meetings.

Members of the cooperative are encouraged to accept responsibility for its success, not only by voting in elections and on questions submitted to them, but by taking an active part in cooperative affairs. The greatest benefit accrues to the cooperative when all members become involved in governing their community and participate in its activities.

An important goal of cooperative housing is to provide more than mere shelter for members. Self-help, inherent in the cooperative idea, fosters self-respect and pride in the community. The highest degree of community esteem is possible when residents share in ownership of a residential cooperative. It provides a setting for a stimulating and rewarding way of life.

A place to live . . . to relax.

Abraham E. Kazan, UHF president 1959-66.

Co-op City has made it a little easier to love thy neighbor.

When over 15,000 families get together in one development, you can expect some noise.

And if all that separates those families is a fraction of an inch of wallboard, you can expect pandemonium.

That's why Co-op City has put up real plaster walls. The kind that keep noise down to a minimum.

And even if they don't make you love thy neighbor.

At least they won't make you hate him.

Co-op City/the nation's largest apartment community

A new town within a city

The first buildings.

Selecting an apartment.

Co-op City from the air. Thomas Airviews.

An exciting "new town" is coming into being along the Hutchinson River in the northeast Bronx. When completed, Co-op City will be the largest single apartment development in the United States.

It will be home to 15,382 New York families — and a milestone in the present revitalization of the Bronx, which is being spearheaded under the leadership of Borough President Herman Badillo.

The impressive population of Co-op City will by no means make the community a crowded one. On the contrary, because the apartments and the wide range of community facilities to be provided at Co-op City will be spread over a spacious 300-acre site, the density will be considerably lower than that of most earlier housing developments.

As a pioneering effort in the emerging "new town" concept, Co-op City will be a self-contained community. It will have its own schools, supermarkets, shops and other services, garages and a host of recreational facilities.

And there will be ample open space. Only 15 per cent of the land in Co-op City will be taken up by buildings.

An unusual variety of design and style will characterize the community. Far from the stereotyped monotony that has marked many large housing developments built for profit and many of those built by government, Co-op City will be an attractive environment for those who reside there or visit.

The tall towers, 24 to 33 stories high, will be interspersed with small town-houses. Together with the schools, shopping malls and other community facilities, the effect will be a variety of colors, shapes and scales — all arranged to preserve the sense of open space produced by the many parks and other landscaped areas in the community.

Within the Co-op City apartments, the theme of spaciousness will be echoed. Thoughtfully-planned living quarters will include large rooms, with a maximum of natural light and panoramic views. The centrally air-conditioned apartments will afford comfort for family living, while balconies and terraces will preserve a link with the outdoors. Apartments will be available in 31 different layouts.

As in all cooperative ventures, the cost has been kept at the lowest possible level. Inherent in the nature of cooperative organization is the principle that all savings revert to the members. At Co-op City this will bring equity payments and monthly maintenance charges well within the reach of middle- and many lower-income families.

Equity payments — the initial amount that entitles a family to membership in the cooperative and ownership of an apartment — start as low as $1,350 for a one-bedroom apartment, and range to a maximum of $3,150 for a three-bedroom apartment. Monthly maintenance charges are estimated at an average of $25 per room. Part of the equity payment may be financed.

The location of Co-op City at the intersection of major motor routes will make travel in all directions convenient for residents. The New England Thruway runs to the west and north of Co-op City, offering the most rapid access to Westchester County and the New England states, and it leads directly to the Throgs Neck Bridge for Queens and Long Island.

Three bus lines serving Co-op City will bring residents to IRT and IND subway lines.

Co-op City received the assistance of many government agencies and professionals. The Foundation acknowledges the assistance of the following:

This equipment brings electricity to Co-op City's 15,382 apartments

...and insures continuous light and power

Two sources of electric power are brought into each of the 35 high-rise apartments at 13,800 volts.

Lexington double-ended unit substations reduce this to 480 volts, which is distributed to various locations in each building and there again reduced to the usual safe 208V/110V found in each apartment.

Should one source of electric power fail, the building load is automatically transferred to the other source.

This assures that a continuous supply of electric light and power will be maintained.

Anatomy of the cooperative life

The teen-agers.

People. Families. Held together by the bond of cooperative home ownership. Planning and working together for the common good. Achieving together. Enjoying together. Improving their lives together.

This is what makes living in a cooperative community so much like living in a small town.

It fosters a neighborliness seldom found in major urban centers like New York. It inspires neighborhood involvement for social, cultural, educational and economic benefit. It is an enriching experience.

You have only to walk through some of the co-ops to see it. To feel it. Places like Amalgamated-Warbasse Houses in Brooklyn or Rochdale Village in Queens, the ILGWU Houses in mid-Manhattan or the Cooperative Village on the lower East Side. Now there's Co-op City in the Bronx, United Housing Foundation's most recent project. And soon there'll be its new Twin Pines Village in Brooklyn.

Nearly 40,000 families are represented by these four non-profit cooperative communities. More than 100,000 people. All sharing in the benefits of the cooperative life.

Shopping in co-op supermarkets and drug stores which they own themselves. Where they have a voice in controlling product quality. Even improving it, through participation in consumer panels.

And more. For eyeglasses, cooperative families go to their own optical departments. They select furniture from their own co-op. Pay the lowest possible prices. Get quality merchandise. It's the power of group buying.

In some cooperatives, the residents operate their own nursery schools and day camps. They have group health plans. Get low-cost loans from their own credit unions. And starting this year their own insurance company provides them with low-cost auto insurance as well as general liability insurance for the member housing cooperatives.

Ample community facilities are provided by the cooperatives. Social, recreational and cultural activities of all kinds, for all age groups, are organized and participated in by people with similar interests.

Two co-ops even generate their own electric power. Power plants at the Amalgamated-Warbasse Houses and at Rochdale Village generate all the electricity used by these two communities. In addition, they provide the developments with central air conditioning. These essential services are being provided at a lower cost than they could be obtained from a private utility company.

The two plants serve as a valuable yardstick for consumers to measure the cost of electricity. The power plants at Rochdale and Warbasse cooperatives had a direct influence in lowering the cost of electricity at Co-op City.

But these are only some of the advantages of living in a cooperative. There are important economic benefits also. For example, even as interest rates and construction costs spiral, monthly carrying charges in cooperatives sponsored by the United Housing Foundation are the lowest in the city.

The cost of new middle income housing today generally means about $40 a room a month. In UHF co-ops the costs are at least 30 per cent less. In a period of ever rising costs, the moderate charges for housing in these co-ops are of tremendous help to families with modest means.

The economic benefits of cooperative home ownership, and the ownership of other kinds of cooperative facilities is only part of the story. Ownership means responsibilities. Within the bigness of the city, and the bigness of society generally, cooperative ownership is giving people a stake in the life of their communities.

It all adds up to a better way of life.

Building a community the cooperative way

The challenge of housing 50,000 New York families

The challenge of creating more and better housing for New Yorkers is being met head-on by the United Housing Foundation, which is the largest non-profit organization engaged in residential building in the United States.

The need for new and improved living quarters in New York is acute. Two million of the city's people live in substandard housing. Entire neighborhoods are deteriorating into slums. Neither government nor private industry has found a feasible way to upgrade the city's housing supply in a meaningful way.

But there is an answer—one which has proved successful during the past 40 years. It is the cooperative way.

The foundation is a non-profit organization which has created sound, modern, comfortable living quarters for nearly 50,000 families. And because the foundation builds only cooperatives, whose members own and govern the communities in which they live, housing is provided at the lowest possible cost.

The nearly 40 labor unions and other non-profit organizations which banded together to form the United Housing Foundation have for many years worked together with the state and city governments and with community groups to perfect the techniques for developing cooperative housing that have culminated in the building of Co-op City.

The foundation's moderate-cost housing program is made possible by low-interest mortgage loans and tax abatement.

When New York State introduced the limited dividend concept of housing more than 40 years ago, it was Amalgamated Housing, predecessor of the foundation, which pioneered in the use of this program.

In 1957, when the State of New York, through the Limited Profit Housing Companies Law, provided low-interest mortgage financing for moderate-cost housing, it was the United Housing Foundation which first took advantage of this program.

Today, about half of the state's low-interest mortgage financing goes into projects sponsored and built by United Housing Foundation and its members—a half billion dollars in more than a score of cooperative communities built to date.

Tax abatement, the second factor responsible for the success of non-profit cooperative housing, is the city's way of encouraging the creation of new housing for middle- and low-income families. Contrary to widespread belief, tax abatement does not reduce the income derived by the city from property that is improved with new housing.

Instead, it increases the eventual tax revenue gained by the city. In forgoing for a specified number of years the taxes on the added value of the housing improvement, the city makes it economically feasible to build moderate-cost housing on land that otherwise would remain less productive of tax revenue. When the abatement period ends, the housing becomes fully taxed, at a value far higher than the site had held before it was cleared to permit construction of new apartments.

In one of the most sensitive areas involved in the creation of new housing in a crowded city—relocation of those presently on a proposed site—the foundation has consistently won praise for its outstanding efforts.

A relocation program was not required for Co-op City. The huge tract was one of the few of its size suitable for new housing that did not contain numbers of old dwellings. However, in relocating on-site tenants for earlier cooperative developments, United Housing Foundation has always approached this often difficult problem with understanding and a cognizance of human needs.

In addition, in all the planning as well as the building of a new community, United Housing Foundation strives for a careful balance between amenities and costs. As Jacob S. Potofsky, the foundation's president, has repeatedly emphasized, the goal of non-profit cooperative housing is to provide comfortable living quarters and sound community facilities while at the same time affording the greatest economy of cost to the tenant-owners.

United Housing Foundation was the first sponsor of moderate-cost housing to provide central air-conditioning in its apartments. And it has insisted on such features as wood flooring that are absent in much comparable housing today.

Apartments in the foundation's cooperative developments are designed with a view toward living comfort and convenience for residents, and are equipped with appliances and materials that offer the best value as determined by impartial testing among consumers.

But design innovation is not permitted to drive up the cost of apartments or maintenance. The lavishly decorated lobbies frequently found in new apartment buildings are notably missing from the foundation's developments. Instead, the buildings have lobbies and corridors that are functional and attractive, but not "showplace" public areas.

Why put good consumer money into lobbies, when people don't live in lobbies?

To save on the cost of electricity, the foundation has built power plants at several of its cooperatives where the cost of purchasing utilities would otherwise be higher. Many other efforts are made to save money for residents, and prominent among these are resident ownership of supermarkets, pharmacies, optical centers and other services. Co-op members also can buy insurance cooperatively at the lowest possible cost and can obtain loans from their own credit union.

United Housing Foundation fosters cooperative effort from the very beginning.

Specialists in all phases of housing operation and maintenance guide the cooperators in establishing and operating their new community. Finally, United Housing Foundation seeks through educational efforts to encourage maximum participation of residents in the activities of their cooperative.

The foundation conducts an extensive and continuing program. A monthly tabloid-size newspaper, THE COOPERATOR, is distributed to 64,000 families. Four times a year it contains a special insert, CO-OP CONTACT, which concentrates on the theory and practice of the cooperative movement.

The foundation's publications program also includes a staff publication as well as annual reports and other informational materials.

In addition, periodic information-exchange conferences are held for local cooperative leaders by the foundation and its Coordinating Council of Cooperatives.

It's the co-op way of life...

at CO-OP CITY in the Bronx...TWIN PINES VILLAGE in Brooklyn.

Both communities are taking their places as milestones in low and moderate cost cooperative housing . . . beside such other United Housing Foundation achievements as Rochdale Village, the 5,860-unit community in Queens, and Amalgamated-Warbasse Houses, the 2,585-unit community in Brooklyn.

Motivated by service rather than profit in these and other projects through the years, United Housing Foundation and its members have made a unique contribution in meeting the housing needs of low and moderate-income wage earners in the City of New York.

Both Co-op City and Twin Pines Village are perfect communities for the family with children . . .

Co-op City, where the first occupancy of this 15,382-apartment community has now begun, offers the wide-open spaces of a 300-acre residential park (equivalent to 200 city blocks).

Twin Pines Village, where construction of 6,000 apartments will begin shortly, will be a 150-acre ocean-view community with every facility the young family needs.

Designed for bringing up your youngsters in safety . . . They'll play in modern fully-equipped playgrounds with special areas for toddlers, intermediate-age children and teen-agers.

For teen-agers, there'll be special lounges for recreation and socializing. And cooperative nursery schools are planned for tots.

The school environment will be excellent. At Co-op City, a bold new concept has been born . . . an on-site Educational Park, a campus setting that includes 2 elementary schools, 2 intermediate schools and a high school . . . with its own museum, theater, planetarium, swimming pools and craft shops. At Twin Pines Village, a new elementary school is being erected . . . with junior and senior high schools nearby in the neighborhood.

These will be communities for the entire family . . . designed to create their own park-like environments within the city . . . with large community and shopping centers located conveniently for all residents.

Co-op City will have 3 of these centers as well as a library, a post office and a fire station, with swimming, fishing and boating nearby .

Twin Pines Village will have a shopping center and a community center. Adjacent, Spring Creek Park is being developed.

More than three-quarters of each community is being devoted to open space . . . with plenty of landscaped gardens, sitting areas and playgrounds. Indoor parking is planned for 5,100 cars at Twin Pines Village, for 10,850 cars at Co-op City (available at nominal cost).

Apartments will be centrally air conditioned . . . 1-, 2- and 3-bedroom units with or without terraces in a wide variety of practical layouts in widely spaced tower buildings (also 3-bedroom town house garden apartments at Co-op City).

Each apartment will have maximum light and privacy. Perfect for the young family. And, as non-profit housing cooperatives planned for families of low and moderate income, priced perfectly too.

At Twin Pines Village, it is estimated that carrying charges will be about $25 a room per month. Required equity investment is $450 per room, partly financeable.

At Co-op City, a typical 3-bedroom apartment with terrace on the 12th floor can cost $169.25 a month (including utilities — after equity investment of $2,925, partly financeable) while a typical 2-bedroom unit on the 21st floor can cost $116.25 a month (including utilities — after equity investment of $2,025).

Some cost more, some less (depending on location, height and exposure). Many have terraces. Most have separate dining areas. All have foyers.

Light, cheerful kitchens with large refrigerators, ranges, wood-grained plastic-finish cabinets. 2 bathrooms in all 3-bedroom units.

Co-op City is located in the northeast Bronx on Bartow Avenue at the intersection of the Hutchinson River Parkway and the New England Thruway. Access to all major highways, 2 bus lines serving IRT and Independent subways, with lines to East and West Side midtown areas.

Twin Pines Village will be located on Shore Parkway extending along Pennsylvania Avenue to Flatlands Avenue in Brooklyn.

The sponsor, United Housing Foundation, represents more than 26,000 families living in homes built by the cooperative method. It is a federation of housing cooperatives, civic groups, labor unions and other non-profit organizations established to promote better housing at lower cost through cooperatives.

Act now. Apartments will be selected in the order in which applications are received. A $500 deposit is required with applications. (Refundable.)

Housing Coops

7-70

Let's Consider Cooperatives

Department of Housing and Urban Development

This bulletin describes the cooperative housing program of the Federal Housing Administration—a program that has helped many American families improve their housing conditions.

FHA insures mortgages on cooperative housing projects of five or more dwelling units.

- As a rule, the cooperative is formed by a sponsoring group that has done the groundwork required to develop the cooperative and its proposed housing project.

- The cooperative either buys the land and contracts for the construction of the housing or buys a complete project from an existing owner or from an investor-sponsor who has constructed it for sale to a cooperative. The money for this comes from the FHA-insured mortgage loan and the downpayments made by cooperative members.

- Cooperative projects usually contain recreational and community facilities for use of all members.

- The cooperative remains owner of the project.

- Each member of the cooperative has the right to live in one of the units and has an equal voice with other members in the operation of the project.

- The units may be in detached, semidetached, rowhouse, or multifamily structures.

- The FHA-insured mortgage may be used to build new housing or to acquire and rehabilitate (if necessary) existing structures for conversion to cooperative ownership.

- FHA is authorized to give technical advice and help to cooperatives in organizing the cooperative corporation and in planning, building, and operating the housing project.

CONSUMER BENEFITS

What are the homeownership advantages available to cooperative owners?

1. Protection against rising cost:

The housing project is operated on a non-profit basis. The owners pay monthly only their share of the project's actual operating costs. Thus, increases in the monthly housing cost are limited to actual increases in operating costs. In rental housing, the rent is often affected by supply and demand. Thus, during times of housing shortage and rising costs, rents may be increased in uncontrolled rental projects even though the landlord's operating costs may not have been significantly increased.

2. Tax advantages:

A cooperative owner has basically the same income tax advantages as a conventional home owner. Thus, a cooperative owner may deduct from his income for Federal income tax purposes (and often also for State income purposes) his share of the real estate taxes and mortgage interest paid during the year by the cooperative. This, in effect, is a reduction in the owner's housing cost.

3. Absence of landlord's profit:

Inasmuch as the owners are, in effect their own landlord, and since they operate on a non-profit basis, their monthly housing cost does not include an allocation for landlord's profit which is, of course, included in the rent of a tenant of an ordinary rental project. This, in itself, may amount to a reduction of 10 percent or more in monthly housing cost.

4. Reduced maintenance expense:

Experience has shown that owners take better care of the over-all property than tenants. Moreover, the owners frequently handle the redecoration of their unit interiors on a "do-it-yourself" basis. Maintenance costs are, therefore, usually less in a cooperative than in a rental development.

5. Equity accrual:

If a cooperative is successfully operated, equity accrual can be anticipated upon resale, as in the case of other forms of homeownership.

COOPERATIVE PROCEDURES

The board of directors of the cooperative decides matters that concern management and maintenance of the project; but the management must meet standards of the lender and of FHA. The success of a cooperative depends on experienced and stable management.

Downpayments of members are based on the difference between the total cost of the project and the FHA-insured mortgage, plus working capital. The amount of the downpayment varies with the cost of the project and the sizes and types of living units chosen.

Each member signs an occupancy agreement similar to a lease. In signing, a member agrees to pay the cooperative a monthly carrying charge equal to his share of the sum required by the cooperative to meet its expenses. The agreement states which repairs and maintenance the cooperative will handle and which are the member's responsibility.

The operating costs may vary from time to time. When this happens, the monthly carrying charges paid by members may be adjusted up or down to reflect such changes.

The cooperative has a 30-day option to purchase the membership of any member who wishes to withdraw. If the cooperative does not act on the option, the outgoing member [illegible] sell his membership on the open market. The new member must, in any event, [illegible] by the cooperative. Subleasing or [illegible] term basis is allowed in [illegible]. The right of long-term occupancy [illegible] is restricted to members [illegible].

MORTGAGE LIM[illegible]

The mortgage amount cannot [illegible] of the following:

- A total amount of $20 million ([illegible] for a public mortgagor).

- An amount equal to [illegible] the FHA estimated replacement [illegible]. If project is to be rehabilitated, [illegible] limits apply.

- An amount representing a family-unit limit of $9,900 for units with no bedroom; $13,750 with one bedroom; $16,500 with two bedrooms; $20,350 with three bedrooms; and $23,100 with four or more bedrooms. In elevator-type structures, the respective limits are $11,550, $15,000, $19,800, $24,750, and $28,050. All dollar limits may be increased up to 45 percent in places where cost levels require an increase.

The term of the mortgage cannot exceed 40 years. The maximum interest rate is 8½ percent*. Interest is paid monthly on the principal outstanding. The FHA mortgage insurance premium is ½ of 1 percent.

PROCEDURES FOR SPONSORS

The sponsor of a proposed cooperative housing project should discuss the proposal with the local FHA insuring office. If the FHA feasibility findings are favorable, the sponsor will submit an application, along with the required fee and exhibits, through an approved lender. The application is for insurance of a blanket mortgage to cover the entire project.

FHA CONTROLS

The FHA has certain controls over the cooperative for the protection of the cooperative members and the governmental interest.

No solicitation of cooperative members can be made before FHA approves the following documents:

- The basic organizational papers, including the by-laws and occupancy agreement.

- The subscription agreements used to obtain members.

- A bulletin that contains basic information that must be given to prospective members.

In the operational stage, FHA requires certain reserves to be maintained, periodic financial reports to be filed and requires the project to be managed in a business-like manner.

*FHA interest rates are subject to change. Information on current interest rates may be obtained at local FHA insuring offices or approved lending institutions.

ADDITIONAL TYPES OF INSURED LOANS

The foregoing describes the procedures applicable to ordinary loans to cooperatives, sometimes referred to as "Management Type". In addition, the following type loans are insurable under Section 213:

1. Mortgage on Investor-Sponsor Project:

The mortgagor, a profit-motivated corporation, certifies its intent to construct the project and sell it within two years after it has been completed. The buyer must be an approved cooperative. If such a sale is not made within two years, the investor-sponsor agrees to run the project on a rental basis subject to FHA rules.

The loan ratio for an investor-sponsor cannot exceed 90 percent of the FHA-estimated replacement cost of the project. The cooperative that buys the project can get up to a 97 percent mortgage.

2. Mortgage on Existing Project:

The mortgagor is a cooperative that acquires an existing project which was built before the Section 213 mortgage insurance application was filed.

The mortgage amount cannot exceed [illegible] percent of the FHA estimate of value for continued use as a cooperative. Further limitations apply if existing mortgages are to be refinanced or if rehabilitation is involved.

3. Supplementary Cooperative Loans:

Supplementary loans may [illegible] cooperatives that already have [illegible] insured mortgages. Co[illegible] from the Federal Co[illegible] mortgages are also eligi[illegible] loans. A supplementary [illegible] finance improvements, [illegible] community facilities, or [illegible] tive's purchase and [illegible]

Unless the supplementary loan is [illegible] improvements or community [illegible] amount can be no more than [illegible] between the original project mortgage [illegible] and the balance outstanding [illegible] If the supplementary loan is for improvements or community facilities, the loan may be somewhat higher.

4. Sales-Type Projects:

The mortgagor is a nonprofit housing corporation formed to contract for purchase of land and construction of individual homes for its members. The blanket mortgage may not exceed the sum of the insurable mortgages allowed on the individual homes. Each home is released from the blanket mortgage when the project has been completed. Each member can then take title to one of the homes and finance it with a mortgage that has terms like those under FHA's basic program for home buyers.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING: Racial discrimination in housing of any size is a violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1866. In addition, the Civil Rights Act of 1968 contains a Federal Fair Housing Law (Title VIII) which established fair housing as the policy of the United States. This law prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, and national origin.

Persons complaining of discrimination in housing have a choice of remedies including filing a civil action in Federal court (or in some cases State courts), or complaining to HUD.

The program described in this bulletin is provided under Section 213 of the National Housing Act. Families and individuals who cannot afford to buy a cooperative membership without some form of assistance may be eligible for assistance under other HUD programs (see Bulletins HUD-55-F and HUD-36-F). Mortgages to finance the purchase of condominium units may be insured under Section 234 (see Bulletin HUD-77-F). Further information concerning these programs may be obtained at local FHA insuring offices.

Housing Cooperatives

FACTS ON HOUSING COOPERATIVES

1. WHAT THEY ARE

A housing cooperative is a group of residences owned and operated by the people who live in them. The entire property is owned by a nonprofit, cooperative corporation established to provide housing and related services to its members. The occupants are their own landlords.

The cooperative corporation holds title to the property and executes a blanket mortgage. The individual's liability is limited to his initial investment (approximately 2% of the value of the home the family will occupy). He signs no note or mortgage. All members participate in establishing overall policy and electing a board of directors which employs professional management and retains legal counsel.

2. THEY ARE EXTENSIVE

More than a quarter million families in the United States live in over 700 cooperatives. President Nixon and Senator Humphrey have lived in housing cooperatives. Housing cooperatives vary from Co-op City in New York with a population of 65,000 to an Indian cooperative in South Dakota with 100 families, and one cooperative being developed to serve 200 families with its housing units located in a number of small rural Minnesota towns.

Some public housing projects have been converted to cooperatives because responsibility, pride of ownership, participation, and self-determination solves many problems and lowers operating costs. Housing cooperatives successfully serve families of all income levels.

3. THEY ARE A PROVEN SUCCESS AND REDUCE HOUSING COSTS

Housing cooperatives enjoy the best repayment and success record of the Federal Housing Administration's various housing programs. They qualify for government supplements and many states have agencies to provide financing also.

Housing cooperatives are lower in cost because they enjoy the advantage of lower large scale construction and purchasing cost, savings in one-mortgage financing, lower operating costs, and lower vacancy rates. In some states they also qualify for homestead tax exemption.

4. THEY BUILD SAVINGS AND BETTER COMMUNITIES

Members in the cooperative build equity ownership through their monthly payments. Should they move, the cooperative usually exercises the option to purchase and arranges for a family on the waiting list to buy them out. The charge for this is nominal so the outgoing member gets the full benefit.

In housing cooperatives it has been demonstrated that people can live better for less money and have a say over and take an active interest in their living environment. They develop responsibility, participation, and better communities. Housing cooperatives constitute new democratic social units that contribute a multiple beneficial community influence through their elected directors and committees. In some countries over 50% of the housing is cooperative housing.

5. THEY ARE ONE SOLUTION TO THE RURAL HOUSING CRISIS

A number of small towns can share in one cooperative which supplies 25 or more houses in each town. This gives them the economy of large scale construction and purchasing--the saving resulting from one-mortgage financing, lower operating cost, and group buying. The total number of houses in the cooperative should ultimately be near 200 within a radius of about 40 miles to achieve maximum economies of housing and operations.

6. THEY CAN BE SPONSORED BY COMMUNITY ORGANIZATIONS

Housing cooperatives can be initiated by nonprofit community organizations, who want to see good housing built for families in their area and who have or can acquire a suitable site. A properly oriented and experienced builder-developer helps insure success. When completed, the residents assume ownership through the cooperative, establish overall policy, elect their directors, who employ management to operate it.

A competent builder-developer can help select a suitable site to match a particular need, assist in selecting suitable architects and engineers, price out proposed construction costs and help get zoning permits. He will have suggestions on design and materials to keep costs down. He will also be familiar with FHA requirements and allowable cost limits and will sign a lump-sum construction contract to build for a stated price when all plans are completed and financing is assured.

7. STATE AND NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AVAILABLE

There are state associations of housing cooperatives and a National Association of Housing Cooperatives. The nonprofit Foundation for Cooperative Housing in Washington, D.C. was established to assist in the development of housing cooperatives. Its wholly-owned subsidiary, FCH Services, has nine regional offices available to assist in site planning, finding suitable builders and architects, financing, FHA processing, organization, and management.

FCH Services can be consulted on your plans. Their address in Washington, D.C. is 1012 Fourteenth Street Northwest, 20005--Telephone: 202/737-3411. The regional office for the Great Lakes Region is 1900 Book Building, Detroit, Michigan, 48226--Telephone: 313/961-2755. A Minneapolis office is planned.

Housing Discrimination / New Orleans

from: Jack Sisson, Coordinator FAIRE
861-9521, ext. 228

→ Art, for your information

A new, metropolitan-wide organization has been proposed to promote fair housing opportunities for minorities and to prevent the use of blockbusting tactics "which cause disruptive and costly panic-selling of homes in white neighborhoods."

In a statement released Thursday (May 18), Jack Sisson, coordinator for the new organization, said the group will be known as FAIRE -- Fair-housing and Anti-blockbusting Implementation in Real Estate.

The organization, he said, was formed by representatives of several religious, governmental and civic organizations and has the support of those groups.

Among those who have endorsed FAIRE are the New Orleans Coalition, Broadmoor Improvement Association, New Orleans Chapter of the National Council of Jewish Women, Independent Women's Organization, Community Services Council of Jefferson, Council for Housing and Community Development, Sisters' Council of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, Community Relations Council of New Orleans, Urban League of Greater New Orleans, New Orleans Legal Assistance Corporation, Rabbinical Council of New Orleans, Community of St. John the Evangelist, League of Women Voters of New Orleans, Desire Community Housing Corporation, Human Relations Commission of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, Louisiana League of Good Government, THE CENTER, Southern Organization for Unified Leadership, Lower Ninth Ward Housing Development Corporation, Human Relations Committee of New Orleans, Mayor Landrieu's Committee on Housing, New Orleans Central Committee, Knights and Ladies of Peter Claver, DeSales Housing Corporation, and Central City Housing Development Corporation.

This organization is in accord with the Housing Program recommendations of the Regional Planning Commission (RPC) for Jefferson, Orleans, St. Bernard and St. Tammany Parishes. Last October the RPC adopted a resolution calling for the establishment of a metropolitan anti-blockbusting/open housing mechanism as one of the key community actions needed to improve regional housing conditions. Additional sponsors are still being sought.

"The goal of fair housing for all cannot be met by the various efforts now operating in the metropolitan area," Sisson said. "Most of the present efforts are doomed because they do not take in enough of the community, are not sufficiently staffed and financed, and do not contain comprehensive and long term goals."

The authors of FAIRE said they have put the program together following an extensive series of meetings since last summer and in consultation with varied civic, professional, economic and religious groups.

"In the sale and rental of apartments and homes," Sisson said, "we feel there is widespread discrimination against minority persons by some real estate brokers and by some individuals handling their own property.

"FAIRE will act against blockbusting activities which are illegal under the 1968 Housing Act," he said.

"The movement of a minority person or family into an all-white area is not blockbusting. In fact, to hinder an individual or family with the money and desire to move into such a neighborhood is a violation of the discrimination clause of the federal law.

"Blockbusting is a coordinated series of activities which intimidate, frighten, confuse and mislead white residents into belief that they should move out of their neighborhoods or suffer adversities including loss of money.

"The tactics used," he said, "include widespread use of For Sale signs and the contracting of owners to persuade them that it is better to sell now than to suffer later."

Sisson added the purpose of the organization is not to create integration or to maintain segregation on any percentage basis.

"We seek to guarantee every individual in search of housing protection of the law against those who wish to use racism as a force to manipulate the housing market for their own financial gain."

He said the organization would use five methods of achieving its goals including:

(MORE)

-- An educational campaign sponsored through churches and civic organizations to create a better understanding of the Fair Housing Act, and the encouragement of community organizations to study the home rental and sales practices in their individual neighborhoods;

-- The establishment of referral centers where complaints of unfair housing practices would be sent;

-- Documentation of abuses in housing practices and attempts by FAIRE to remedy individual abuses in consultation with real estate brokers;

-- Direct legal action, where necessary, to stop housing discrimination and/or blockbusting;

-- Promotion of interest among real estate agents and builders in developing policies which guarantee fairness in selling or renting of property.

Sisson said at the present time the FAIRE organizing committee is in the process of approaching various community leaders to serve on the board of directors of FAIRE and to guide the final development and incorporation of the body.

A minimum budget of $50,000 has been estimated for the first year's operations and proposals have already been made to the federal government to assist in financing the organization. A portion of the funds will be raised locally.

"The establishment of a metropolitan fair housing organization is a positive and bold step that leaders of this area can take to further the quality of life and stability of human relations in the metropolitan area," Sisson said. "This action is only part of the solution to the housing dilemma facing the metropolitan four-parish area, but it is a significant part."

THE DIMENSIONS OF U.S. METROPOLITAN CHANGE

MAJOR INDICATORS FOR UNITED STATES, REGIONS, AND 224 METROPOLITAN AREAS

NPA AND OTHER ECONOMIC PROJECTIONS FOR THE 1970s

Projections to 1975 for 224 Areas

The Dimensions of U.S. Metropolitan Change

The following article by Joe Won Lee is based on Economic and Demographic Projections for 224 Metropolitan Areas, a three-volume, 979-page report published last month by the NPA Center for Economic Projections as a part of its Regional Economic Projections Series. This is the fourth of a continuing research series on metropolitan areas. The information in this series is designed to be of use in marketing and location decisions of business, in public planning, and in university research and classrooms.

MOST OF THE NATION'S economic activity takes place in metropolitan areas. This is where most production occurs, where most of the labor force lives, and where most markets are found. Metropolitan areas are also the location of the nation's major domestic problems. Poverty exists there simultaneously with rising aspirations, the need for public service is greater than local fiscal capabilities, and expenditures are heavy on most Federal programs.

Information about potential changes in metropolitan areas is of increasing importance in today's world as it plans for the future. It is vital to business in deciding plant locations and marketing possibilities and in the program planning of public bodies, among others. This kind of information is only recently becoming available as government agencies increasingly provide basic data about metropolitan areas and as research organizations and business enterprises analyze these data.

The National Planning Association, in its just published three-volume report, presents projections for the coming decade of population, income, and employment in each of the nation's 224 metropolitan areas. In recent years, there have been important economic studies of all urban or all metropolitan areas combined, as well as valuable reports on specific selected metropolitan areas. The NPA study, however, is the first which examines separately each of the metropolitan areas and presents the results within a consistent body of data, allowing comparison among the separate areas, among regions and states in the country, and with the nation as a whole.

The results of the NPA study are summarized in the statistical table on pages 5 to 8, which indicates the projected 1975 estimates for population, employment, income, and income per capita in each metropolitan area, and the 1962-75 projected annual growth rate for these indicators.

The United States in 1975

- In 1975, 164 million people, or 73 percent of the nation's population, will be living in metropolitan areas.
- 60 percent of the nation's population will be concentrated in the 25 largest metropolitan areas.
- The share of employment and personal income for these 25 metropolitan areas will be greater than their 60 percent share of the population.
- Nonmetropolitan areas will continue to lose their population to metropolitan areas, and by 1975 they will contain less than 30 percent of the total U.S. population.

SWEEPING ANTI-BIAS LENDING REGULATIONS SOUGHT BY DISTINGUISHED ECONOMISTS; LEADING CIVIL RIGHTS AND PUBLIC INTEREST GROUPS

A group of 170 distinguished economists including a Nobel Laureate and the last five chairmen of the Council of Economic Advisers have joined with a coalition of 32 civil rights and public interest organizations to press for comprehensive non-discrimination regulations covering the lending policies of banks and savings and loan associations.

The two groups today called on the federal agencies that regulate the nation's financial institutions to adopt sweeping prohibitions against discriminatory mortgage loan practices along with effective programs to encourage lending opportunities.

The recommendations were submitted in the form of comments invited by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Comptroller of the Currency on the basis of notices published in the Federal Register. A fourth agency, the Federal Reserve Board did not invite comments, but the recommendations are meant to apply to it as well.

N.B. Included as enclosures are the statement of the economists, along with a list of the endorsers; and the comments of the civil rights and public interest groups, along with the names of the supporting organizations.

Included among the nation's leading economists who supported their comments are Paul W. McCracken, Arthur M. Okun, Gardner Ackley, Walter W. Heller, Raymond J. Saulnier and Leon H. Keyserling, all former chairmen of the CEA; and Merton J. Peck, Warren L. Smith, James S. Duesenberry, James Tobin and Henry C. Wallich, former CEA members.

Also listed as signatories are Paul A. Samuelson, a Nobel prize winner in economics; Irwin Friend, who directed a four-volume study of the savings and loan industry for the Bank Board, and Anthony Downs, senior vice president of the Real Estate Research Corporation.

Other sets of comments were filed by lawyers for the Center for National Policy Review of the Catholic University School of Law on behalf of 13 civil rights and public interest groups, including the NAACP, the National Urban Coalition, the National Urban League, the League of Women Voters of the United States and the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing.

Included among the 19 other organizations supporting this action are the United Augomobile Workers of America, the National Tenants Organization, the National Organization for Women, and Ralph Nader's Public Interest Research Group.

Overall, the comments of the economists and the civil rights and public interest groups focused on the need for prohibitions against obsolete business practices that have a discriminatory effect on racial minorities and women; affirmative advertising and employment programs; expanded data collection and analysis projects, and strict compliance and enforcement procedures.

Highlights of the comments submitted by the two groups today on proposed Bank Board regulations will be discussed here, but they can be read as applying as well to the three other federal banking agencies. Here are some highlights:

 proposed regulations barring racial, religious and ethnic discrimination should be expanded to encompass sex discrimination and to prohibit practices that are discriminatory in effect, such as (1) the arbitrary refusal of lending institutions to count overtime, bonuses and all or part of working wives income in computing family income for loan purposes, and (2) red-lining, or the arbitrary writing off of certain neighborhoods as undesirable for mortgage loans because of their racial and economic compositions.

On the subject of red-lining, the comments cited a section in the proposed regulations in which the phrase "site economics" is listed by the Bank Board as one of the factors to be weighed when a loan application is considered. Its deletion was urged to forestall any interpretation by lending institutions that the Bank Board is condoning a form of "red-lining."

"Arbitrary exclusion of persons who have the economic capacity to participate in the market place," the comments of the economists said, "is a distortion of our economic system and cannot be considered 'sound and economical home financing (legislative language from the Federal Home Loan Bank Act).' In addition," the economists noted, "discrimination for non-economic reasons is a bad business practice-- it results in an economic cost not only to those discriminated against but also to those who do the discriminating."

To this, the comments of the civil rights and public interest groups added: "But just as the Bank Board would take action against underwriting practices which are unsound because they are excessively risky, so it should also take action against underwriting practices which are unsound because they needlessly restrict the access of minority groups to housing credit."

 affirmative advertising programs recommended in the regulations should require the use of media and other channels of communication that reach minority communities to make known the availability of mortgage loans and savings plans to minority families. According to the comments of the civil rights and public interest groups, the section "on advertising is woefully inadequate in prompting institutions to make known to minority citizens that they are welcome customers."

 in addition to the proposed requirements that racial and ethnic records be kept on all loan applications, the regulations should require the development of a national data collection system covering mortgage lending practices at the individual association, regional and national levels.

The civil rights and public interest groups noted that "data collection and analysis must be comprehensive enough to be able to measure the extent of discrimination in its many forms." And, both sets of comments emphasized that information on neighborhood characteristics must be fed into the data analysis system.

This represents critical information needed to measure such forms of neighborhood discrimination as red-lining or the refusal to make loans to minorities in white areas, the comments said.

And, in order to determine whether different terms or conditions are imposed on minorities seeking loans, the comments also called for expanding the racial and income data-keeping to include such information as sex, education, occupational classification and percent of family income not earned by husbands.

 the regulatory agencies should conduct, in the words of the economists, "a vigorous search for discriminatory lending practices" as an integral part of the regular agency examination of lending institutions,with a willingness to "impose sanctions for violations of the regulations."

The civil rights and public interest groups also questioned the proposal that all complaints be referred to the Department of Housing and Urban Development. "...we urge that it be made clear that complaints can also be filed with your agency. To do otherwise is to suggest that you have no authority or even interest in providing relief to a party aggrieved by an institution under your supervision."

 affirmative action program to eliminate the effects of past employment discrimination by lending institutions should be included in the regulations. "In addition to the direct benefit of increasing employment opportunities for traditionally disadvantaged groups," the economists said, "a likely indirect benefit would be less discrimination in lending practices, particularly if loan officers were from traditionally discriminated against groups."

The invitation of the Bank Board, the FDIC and the Comptroller for public and industry comment came in response to a petition filed March 8, 1971 with them by 13 civil rights and public interest groups. The petition asked for a "fair and effective system of preventing racial discrimination in home mortgage financing" under the requirements of the fair housing provisions (Title VIII) of the 1968 Civil Rights Act.

William L. Taylor, director of the Center for National Policy Review and one of the petitioners' counsel, characterized the Bank Board proposals "as a step in the right direction, although limited in scope." However, Mr. Taylor said he was highly critical of the FDIC, the Comptroller and the Federal Reserve Board (also named in the petition) "for failing to address the issues raised in the petition.

"The Bank Board alone," Mr. Taylor noted, "developed independent proposals and published them for comment. The FDIC and the Comptroller merely republished edited and bowdlerized versions of the petition and asked for comment prior to the preparation of their own sets of regulations. The Federal Reserve Board simply published a statement of policy relating to an equal housing logotype and lobby displays of equal housing posters."

Once approved, the regulations will be binding on the federal and state chartered member savings and loans regulated by the Bank Board; the national banks supervised by the Comptroller; the banks insured by the FDIC, and the state chartered banks (member banks of the Federal Reserve System) supervised by the Federal Reserve Board.

Although the economists filed their comments only with the Bank Board, their statement said its basic principles also should be adopted by the other federal financial regulatory agencies.

In addition to filing their comments with the Bank Board, the 13 petitioners also submitted another set of comments to the FDIC and the Comptroller on February 28, 1972.

Speaking for the 13 petitioners, Mr. Taylor and his co-counsel, Daniel Searing, called the FDIC and the Comptroller to task for their unreasonable delay in responding to the March 8, 1971 petition, and for the lack of substantial response when they did. "In our view," the attorneys said, "the rights of petitioners asserted here have been delayed for an unconscionable period." The petitioners renewed their request for a hearing and asked that it be scheduled no later than April 13.

Mr. Taylor noted that "if ever there was any doubt about the need for effective non-discrimination regulations it was dispelled by the comments filed with the FDIC and the Comptroller by the American Bankers Association. In its objection even to an equal opportunity notice for posting in bank lobbies on the ground that such a requirement might lead to 'a loss of freedom to plan lobby displays in the best interests of shareholders and depositors,' the Association demonstrated a complete lack of sensitivity to the rights of minorities."

In its comments submitted to the Bank Board, the 13 petitioners explained that the March 8, 1971 petition was "prompted in part by a history of inaction by the Board and the other financial regulatory agencies in the face of findings of discrimination in home financing by various Presidential commissions and the United States Commission on Civil Rights.

The comments also noted that discrimination in the field of mortgage lending is evident from statements of the Bank Board itself; from testimony by former Attorney General John Mitchell; from a government-funded study of lending practices in Oakland, California; from information developed in Senate subcommittee hearings in Boston, and in the operation of the Bank Board's federally subsidized Housing Opportunity Allowance Program (HOAP) where only 2 percent of the loans made went to blacks.

Affiliated with Catholic University's Law School, the Center for National Policy Review is engaged in the review and analysis of national policies with racial and urban implications. One of its principal missions is to provide legal research, social science resources and technical assistance to civil rights and public interest groups in their efforts to obtain improved enforcement and implementation of civil rights and urban-oriented laws.

Some of the other economists who have endorsed the statement on non-discrimination regulations are:

George Sternlieb, of Rutgers University and author of "The Urban Housing Dilemma;" Alice Rivlin, former Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation, Department of Health, Education and Welfare; William J. Baumol, of Princeton University; Bernard Freidan, director of the MIT-Harvard Joint Center for Urban Studies; Lester Thurow, of MIT; Robert Nathan, an economic consultant; Barbara Bergmann, director of the Project on the Economics of Discrimination at the University of Maryland; Emmett J. Rice, senior vice president of The National Bank of Washington, and Frank deLeeuw, of the Urban Institute.

In addition to Irwin Friend, nine contributors to the study on the savings and loan industry commissioned by the Bank Board have endorsed the statement. They are: Jack Guttentag; George Benston; Austin Hoggatt; David Fand; Paul Taubman; Edward S. Herman, James Walter, Stephen Goldfeld and Ernest Bloch.

Background

On March 8, 1971, the Center for National Policy Review filed a petition with the Federal Home Loan Bank Board; the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Reserve Board seeking the adoption of "a fair and effective system of preventing racial discrimination in home mortgage financing." The petition, submitted on behalf of 13 civil rights and public interest organizations, also asked for agency hearings on the issue.

The petition cited constitutional and statutory requirements obligating the four federal financial regulatory agencies to prohibit discrimination in lending practices and to issue and enforce equal opportunity lending regulations. The obligations, according to the petition, flow out of the intent of the Thirteenth Amendment; the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment; the Civil Rights Act of 1866; the Housing Act of 1949, and the Civil Rights Act of 1968.

The responsibilities of the four agencies are wide-ranging and involve the operations of a large proportion of the nation's financial institutions. Included are the federal- and state-chartered member savings and loan associations regulated by the Bank Board; the national banks supervised by the Comptroller; the banks insured by the FDIC, and the state-chartered banks (member banks of the Federal Reserve System) supervised by the Federal Reserve Board.

On December 29, 1971 following a long and unexplained delay, the four agencies published in the Federal Register statements of policy relating only to the use of an equal housing logo in advertising and the posting of a lobby notice on equal lending opportunities. On the same date, the FDIC and the Comptroller simply re-published an edited and bowdlerized version of the petition, and invited public comment.

On January 19, 1972, the Bank Board alone published in the Register a set of proposed non-discrimination regulations, including requirements for racial data collection, and invited public comment.

On February 28, 1972, the petitioners, along with a number of other civil rights and public interest organizations, filed comments with the FDIC and the Comptroller, including a renewal of the initial request for a public hearing on petitioners' request for rule making.

On March 22, 1972, the petitioners and supporting organizations, including a group of more than 180 distinguished economists, filed comments seeking to expand and enlarge the Bank Board's January 19 proposals. The economists said that the basic principles of their comments also apply to policies that should be adopted by the other three regulatory agencies.

On April 27, 1972, the Board published in the Federal Register its approved regulations, substantially similar to its January 19 proposals except for the deletion of all reference to racial data keeping. There has been no response from the FDIC, the Comptroller or the Federal Reserve Board.

On the basis of our analysis, it is clear that the Bank Board has weakened its stand on equal opportunity. It undermined its commitments on racial data collection. It was largely unresponsive to the comments of the civil rights and public interest groups. It dismissed the principal suggestions of a coalition of economists. It failed to address itself to a number of proposals that would substantially improve the scope and impact of its nondiscrimination regulations.

Retreat on Racial & Ethnic Data Collection

Beyond what it failed to include, the Bank Board even retreated from what it had proposed originally by deleting all the requirements for racial and ethnic record keeping on loan applications. Without such requirements, our position is that the Bank Board simply is unable to develop a viable civil rights policy.

Record keeping is absolutely essential to provide a foundation for uncovering and measuring discriminatory practices. Promulgating nondiscrimination regulations without provisions for the collection and analysis of racial and ethnic data is like promulgating regulations for the purpose of financial soundness without provisions for the collection and analysis of data on assets, liabilities and other financial indicators.

The Bank Board had committed itself to racial data collection, but by withdrawing the section on record keeping it has damaged the credibility of that commitment.

Item: on April 14, 1971, in its official response to a questionnaire from the United States Commission on Civil Rights, the Board said that a regulation requiring racial and ethnic data on all loans applications was being drafted for its review;

Item: on October 20, 1971, in its response to a follow-up questionnaire from the Civil Rights Commission, the Board stated unequivocally that it would issue nondiscrimination regulations "which will contain provisions relating to maintenance of records of racial data of applicants for loans."

At the same time, the Bank Board also said that savings and loans would have to note down the characteristics of any neighborhood where loans on housing were disapproved. The Bank Board did include a section on racial data in its January 19 proposals, but it did not address the issue of data on neighborhoods where properties are located.

It appears that the Bank Board's decision to reconsider its racial data requirement is the result of pressure from the savings and loan industry and perhaps from the other banking agencies as well -- agencies which have long resisted their own duty to enforce and implement civil rights legislation.

The Bank Board did note that the section on record keeping was withdrawn from the regulations it adopted "pending further staff study of comments received and consultation with the other financial regulatory agencies." Unless the Board is prepared now to say that it will take action to require record keeping within a reasonable period of time-- 60 days at most - it must be concluded that it has reneged under industry pressure on its previous commitments and undermined a potentially effective civil rights policy.

Failure of Other Agencies to Act

It is shameful that the other agencies -- the FDIC, the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Reserve continue to flout their fair housing responsibilities. Once more we call on these agencies to issue regulations embodying the full range of recommendations made by the civil rights and public interest groups and the economists.

But the fact that these agencies have been unwilling to act, or even to reply to petitioners' requests for hearings, is no excuse for the Bank Board to retreat from its own obligations and commitments. It is, after all, the public interest, not the industry or agency interest, that the Bank Board is supposed to serve.

Demands

-Restore Record Keeping-

The signatories to this statement therefore demand that the Bank Board take immediate steps to restore the racial and ethnic record keeping requirements to the regulations. In so doing, the Bank Board also must take action to build data on neighborhood characteristics into the analysis system in order to detect discrimination that occurs in the form of "redlining" or in the refusal to make loans to minorities in predominantly white areas.

We also demand that the Bank Board strengthen its regulations by incorporating the additional improvements called for by the coalition of civil rights and public interest groups and the economists.

- Apply The Effects Test -

Among the most critical of the suggested improvements is a prohibition against obsolete lending practices which have a discriminatory effect, not only those which are intended invidiously. For example: mortgage lenders should be barred from arbitrarily discounting all or part of a working wife's income in computing family income; refusing to count income from overtime, production bonuses and part-time jobs; disqualifying an applicant because of isolated past credit difficulties, or using a prior arrest record as an absolute disqualification.

We contend that the failure to prohibit such unjustified discriminatory practices is contrary to provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act disqualifying a savings and loan association from membership in a Federal Home Loan Bank if "the character of its management or its home financing policy is inconsistent with sound and economical home financing."

On this subject, a bipartisan group of the nation's leading economists, including the last five chairmen of the Council of Economic Advisers, flatly declared: "Arbitrary exclusion of persons who have the economic capacity to participate in the market place is a distortion of our economic system and can not be considered 'sound and economical home financing.'"

Yet the widespread existence of many of these arbitrary pratices has been documented by the Bank Board's own recently completed survey of savings and loan lending policies.

The Bank Board is not unaware of what constitutes sound and nondiscriminatory credit underwriting principles. Its own Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation has promulgated a set of clearly established nondiscriminatory standards which are consistent with "sound and economical home financing." We call upon the Bank Board to employ these criteria as a basic guide for examiners in determining whether lending institutions are engaging in discriminatory underwriting practices.

-Additional Items-

The Bank Board has ignored a number of other important comments by the economists and the civil rights and public interest groups.

We again call upon the Bank Board to:

1) Prohibit sex discrimination in lending.

2) Remove the exemption on advertising designed to attract savings from the requirement that lenders use an equal opportunity logo.

3) Require that lenders advertise their services in media which reach the minority community, and develop working ties with brokers and other agents who serve the minority community.

4) Expand the employment regulations to require the full range of lending institutions to implement affirmative action programs to eliminate the effects of past employment discrimination.

Changes in the Right Direction

It should be noted that the new regulations do contain several improvements made in response to our comments. For example, the Bank Board has now prohibited discrimination based on the race of the occupants of dwellings in the "vicinity" of the property for which a loan is requested.

This seems to be an attempt to get at the problem of redlining areas based on the racial composition of the neighborhood. However, the Bank Board still has refused to prohibit redlining based on the average income of residents in a neighborhood, in spite of the fact that the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation has stated clearly that the average income level of a neighborhood is an "inappropriate" consideration in underwriting by mortgage lenders.

Another improvement in the new regulations is the inclusion of a prohibition against discrimination in the collection and enforcement procedures in the servicing of loans.

Enforcement

Even the minimal regulations as adopted, including the improvements, will constitute only paper policy unless the regulations are enforced vigorously by the Bank Board. This means that the issue of nondiscrimination must be made an integral part of the routine examinations of member institutions, and there must be willingness to impose sanctions where violations are disclosed and persist. The importance of strong enforcement serves to underscore the absolute necessity of a meaningful record keeping system. Without access to records, how can an examiner undertake an effective search for discrimination?

STATEMENT OF

STEVEN M. ROHDE

CENTER FOR NATIONAL POLICY REVIEW

SCHOOL OF LAW, CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY

BEFORE THE

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON CONSUMER FINANCE

MAY 22, 1972

Mr. Chairman and members of the Commission. My name is Steven Rohde and I am a member of the staff of the Center for National Policy Review, a privately funded organization based at Catholic University Law School. We are concerned with national policy relating to civil rights and urban problems. My own special area of interest and responsibility is in housing and home finance.

I am delighted to be here today to testify before the Commission concerning discriminatory credit treatment of women. My testimony will concentrate on discriminatory treatment of women in home mortgage financing. The main points of my testimony can be capsulized as follows:

(1) There is every reason to believe that discriminatory treatment of women in mortgage financing is very widespread, both in terms of how a wife's income is treated when she applies with her husband for a mortgage, and also how women are treated when they apply alone for a mortgage.

(2) Neither type of discrimination can be justified on economic grounds.

(3) Such discrimination is a serious barrier to the achievement of social and economic justice in the United States.

(4) The development of federally controlled secondary market programs for conventional mortgages has provided the opportunity for important progress in reducing mortgage discrimination against women, but some important issues remain and these programs can not be expected by themselves to really solve the problem.

(5) Finally, there already exists a Federal regulatory structure with the potential for effectively eliminating the problem. However these agencies, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Reserve have thus far been unwilling to exercise the authority they have to deal with the problem; despite the weight of opinion from public interest groups and the economics profession.

Mr. Chairman, the forces of history have been working in recent years to cause rapid change in the role of women in our society. This is a powerful movement that will continue to expand until it weeds out the deeply rooted sexism which still exists throughout American society. While obviously any transitional period will cause a certain amount of dislocation and discomfiture, and in fact, may be seen by many as a threat, the promise of women taking their place as equals with men and realizing their full potentials as human beings is one of the truly exciting developments of our time.

Obviously a critical facet of this movement is the area of employment. Perhaps more than anything else, it is a person's job that defines his or her relationship to the society. However another side of the coin is the woman as a consumer -- what she does with the money earned through employment. And because of the nature of our economy, if we get into this area, we must inevitably take on the issue of credit. I therefore commend the Commission for holding these hearings and I trust that the Commission will make a comprehensive set of recommendations to eliminate sexism by our nation's credit grantors.

For most American families, the largest credit transaction they are ever likely to be involved in is for the purchase of a home. The ability to obtain mortgage credit to purchase a home can mean much more to a family than merely the adequacy of its shelter. It can mean living in a decent neighborhood, having access to good educational, health and recreational facilities, or even access to a decent job. This magnifies the importance of fair mortgage lending practices. It means that the mortgage lending institutions of this country bear a heavy social responsibility to be reasonable in their lending practices.

Unfortunately, with regard to women borrowers and co-borrowers, the evidence suggests that mortgage lenders have not borne this responsibility with much distinction. Credit underwriting policies by mortgage lenders have too often been based on the antiquated notion that "the woman's place is in the home." This notion has caused lenders to believe that a woman's income can not be relied upon.

As I have indicated, the types of discriminatory treatment against women in mortgage lending arising from these attitudes can generally be classified into several broad categories. One type occurs when a husband and wife apply together for a mortgage, but where the wife's income is arbitrarily discounted of even totally ignored in computing family income. A second type concerns policies that discriminate against women when they apply for a mortgage only in their own name.

The first type of discrimination, arbitrarily discounting or ignoring a working wife's income in computing total family income, has been quite well documented. It is the rule rather than the exception. Yet it can not be justified from an economic viewpoint. It ignores changing social trends and the sharp trend toward increased employment of women. It is clearly based on antideluvian attitudes, rather than on evidence of increased loan risk due to counting a wife's income. Failure to deal with this discrimination is a continued threat to some 17 million American families where the husband and wife are together and where the wife works. It also is a serious barrier to the homeownership aspirations of America's minority families, since in these families the wife's income is quite often a significant and crucial factor to the family's income and standard of living. In fact, it was this latter point that first caused the Center for National Policy Review to become seriously involved in the issue, because of our basic civil rights for racial minorities orientation.

When we first seriously began to investigate this problem, we talked and exchanged correspondence with a number of officers of lending institutions and with other people in the home finance field. All the evidence confirmed the fact that conventional mortgage underwriting practices with regard to a wife's income are extremely diverse, but that only a relatively small minority of lenders are normally willing to give full credit to a wife's income. However, those lenders who did give full credit to a wife's income reported that such a policy worked out well.

In spite of all these indications, until quite recently we were aware of no hard data that quantified the extent of such unreasonable discrimination. However, unknown to us at the time, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board last summer conducted a survey of lending policies of savings and loan associations which included several questions directed at this very subject. The Bank Board, however, chose not to release the results of the survey. After the United States Commission on Civil Rights made public the existence of the survey, the Center demanded that the Board release the results, and the Board did so on March 23 of this year.

As one question in the survey, savings and loan associations were asked what credit they would allow for working wife's income if she was age 25, had two school age children, and worked full-time as a secretary. Fully 25% of the savings and loan institutions responded by saying they would count none of her income. Well over half reported percentages of 50% or less. Only 22% indicated they would give full credit to her income.

When combined with the fact that lending institutions are known to employ rigid upper limits on allowable mortgage payment to income ratios, it is clear that this widespread arbitrary discounting a wife's income results in numerous rejections of loan applications.

The fact that these answers were obtained from the specific question asked is particularly horrifying in that the question was weighted, it seems to me, in a way that might be expected to solicit a more favorable response. The woman in this hypothetical case had two school age children and no preschool children (thus there had clearly been a number of years since she had her last child), and she had a full-time job which obviously had required some degree of training. There is nothing in the question that suggests she would be likely to permanently leave the labor force. Yet as indicated, only 22% of the lenders in the sample would give full credit to her income, and most would count it 50% or less.

On releasing the results of the survey, the Board attempted to minimize the significance of its results, pointing out that the results were based on a sample of only 74 associations. Notwithstanding this disclaimer, the fact is that the results are quite important. In fact, in all likelihood, the results considerably understate the extent of discriminatory lending practices. The Board's methodology was to send out the questionnaire to 100 savings and loan associations considered most likely to be cooperative. It got responses from 74 of these.

Other data in the questionnaire indicate that those 74 associations have, compared to the rest of the industry, relatively liberal lending policies as measured by their willingness to participate in federal subsidy and insurance programs. When combined with the fact that these associations were selected by the Bank Board on the basis of their presumed willingness to cooperate, and with the fact that the selection process was further affected by the fact that only 74 of the original 100 were willing to cooperate, the signs are unmistakable that the associations in the final sample were those least likely to have discriminatory policies. Yet, as I have indicated, the results of the survey showed that the vast majority of these associations would arbitrarily discriminate in counting the income of a working wife.

To show the possible offshoots that can result from such twisted policies, I would like to recount a case involving Mrs. Cherie Maxine Johnson of Hialeah, Florida. Mrs. Johnson is 29 years old, and works full time for the Dade County Department of Housing and Urban Development as a Family Relocation Advisor at a salary of $475 a month. She has worked steadily since she was 16 years old, and has been employed full-time since she graduated from high school. During this entire period, the longest period she has not been working was for two months when she gave birth to her only child 8 years ago in a previous marriage.

When she and her husband applied for a VA mortgage loan last fall, it was determined that in order to be able to qualify for the loan, it would be necessary that her income be counted. She was informed by the mortgage company, however, that VA would not count her income because she was "a woman of childbearing age." On the other hand, the mortgage company informed Mrs. Johnson that she could have her income counted if she either obtained a doctor's certificate stating that she could no longer have children or if she signed an affidavit stating that she is practicing birth control under the supervision of her physician and planned to continue to practice birth control and have no more children. The mortgage company even typed out and handed her its recommended version of the affidavit. When Mrs. Johnson rebelled at what she considered a blatant invasion of her rights, the official of the mortgage company stated this was a common practice and even showed her from the files, while blotting out the names, several other affidavits from women in a similar position as Mrs. Johnson.

Mrs. Johnson refused to sign such an affidavit and was denied the loan. This refusal to count Mrs. Johnson's income was particularly unconscionable because of the clear facts of her own work history and motivation. Not only had she been consistently employed for 13 years, but she has found the time and energy to take enough night courses to total two years of college credit. As she continues to work for her degree, the opportunities for further job advancement will continue to increase.

Before moving to Florida, Mrs. Johnson had owned a home herself in South Carolina and had a good payment record. Finally it should be noted that the apartment Mr. and Mrs. Johnson currently reside in requires a monthly rent which is almost $50 more than the monthly payment that the mortgage would have required. The Johnsons have never had any difficulty in paying their rent.

As Mrs. Johnson pointed out to me, she and her husband can't qualify for a Section 235 loan because her income is counted as part of family income, thus making their total family income too high. Yet at the same time they can't qualify for a VA loan because, for these purposes, her income is not counted.

Actually, the policy which denied Mrs. Johnson the loan would probably not ever show up in a statistical survey of lending practices. Many women might have yielded to this form of harassment and signed such an affidavit in order to be able to obtain the mortgage. Thus, as discriminatory as this practice is, it is probably better than the way most women are treated when they attempt to get their income counted.

What should the basic standard be? A working wife's income should be treated like any other part of the family income--it should be counted fully if it has been stable and circumstances indicate it can normally be expected to continue during the early years of the mortgage. In underwriting mortgage risk, the first few years of the mortgage term are the critical ones because experience has indicated that if foreclosure occurs, it will occur in those first few years. In fact, even if foreclosure should occur after the early years of the mortgage, the risk to the lending institution will be substantially reduced, since the ratio of the remaining balance of the loan to the value of the house will be low.

These principles have been basically recognized by the Federal Housing Administration, which, in the middle 60's changed its policy with regard to counting a wife's income. Compared to the widespread discriminatory practices still prevalent in both the conventional mortgage market and in VA loans, FHA's policy stands as a beacon in the night.

FHA's underwriting manual particularly takes pains not to discriminate against younger couples, where discrimination against women has generally been most severe because of the increased likelihood that the wife might get pregnant. The FHA manual discusses the substantial increase in wife employment as a characteristic of family life. With regard to younger couples, it adds the following: "This steadily increasing trend in wife employment as a characteristic of the family life of the younger couples seems attributable to the willingness of both husband and wife to work for a better standard of living during their early married life than would otherwise be possible." The FHA manual sets as basic standards such measures as "circumstances indicating that such income may normally be expected to continue through the early period of the mortgage risk" and "confirmation of employment indicating good possibilities for continued employment." With regard to the possibility of pregnancy, the FHA manual states: "The principal element of mortgage risk in allowing the income of working wives as effective income is the possibility of its interruption by maternity leave. Most employers recognize this possibility and provide for maternity leave, with job retention, as an inducement of employment. With strong motives for returning to work any failure to do so after maternity leave would probably be due to causes which would be unpredictable and would represent such a very small percentage of volume that it could be accepted as a calculated risk."

To the purist it may seem that such an extensive discussion of changing social trends, maternity leave and motivation is unnecessary and even has elements of sexism. The simpler approach would be to simply state that a wife's income should be counted in the same way as a husband's income. However, obviously the writers of the FHA manual thought it was necessary to include such extensive language in order to overcome preconceptions that FHA underwriters might have. What really matters, of course, is how the policy is actually translated into practice. And here the evidence is generally encouraging. For example, in 1970, for new single family homes in the Section 203 program, all of the wife's income was counted in 91% of the cases where the wife worked. (FHA's policy is to either count all of a wife's income or none of it). This percentage has been rising steadily. However, even back in 1964, the figure was 73%. For existing homes in the 203 program, the 1970 figure is 84%.

One of the problems with these statistics is that they are all for applicants who eventually got the mortgage. Unfortunately, FHA does not keep statistics on characteristics of borrowers on rejected applications. Nor does FHA keep records analyzing the reasons for loan rejections. So one might hypothesize that FHA rejects the wife's income in a much greater percentage of cases but that this is not reflected in FHA's statistics because rejection of the wife's income led to rejection of the loan application. While there is no way to verify this one way or the other until FHA begins to keep such data, the experience of officials in FHA's mortgage credit section has been that this is not the case--they say that the wife's income is counted at 100% in the overwhelming majority of loan applications.

Finally, although, again, specific data is not available, the experience of FHA officials with the new policy has been quite satisfactory. While the FHA foreclosure rate has increased in the last few years, I have been told by FHA officials that they have no reason to believe that the new policy for counting a wife's income has been a factor in this increase.

In terms of empirical evidence, there is a substantial lack of evidence relating wife's income to the risk of mortgage delinquency and foreclosure. A study by Leon Kendall for the U.S. Savings and Loan League (Anatomy of the Residential Mortgage Market, 1964) indicated that as the percentage of family income earned by the husband decreased, the likelihood of a loan being delinquent decreased slightly. However, the failure to control for a number of other variables that might predict delinquency means that no firm conclusions can be drawn from this result.

The most comprehensive study relating borrower characteristics to delinquencies and/or foreclosures is the study Home Mortgage Delinquency and Foreclosure, John Herzog and James Earley, National Bureau of Economic Research, New York, 1970. Although 10 independent variables were used in the multiple regression analysis, none of them related to the income of a working wife. The variables that were used included, among others: loan to value ratio, loan purpose, the presence or absence of junior financing, borrower occupation, number of dependents, and payment to income ratio. One of the surprising findings of the study was that when all of the other variables were controlled for, there was a statistically significant difference in risk between FHA-VA loans and conventional loans, with FHA-VA loans being less risky. The conclusion was that this difference was probably due to underwriting practices not controlled for in the study--that whatever these factors were, FHA-VA practices on these unidentified variables were less risky. Of course, one of these unidentified variables is policy with regard to counting a wife's income, where FHA, at least, leans heavily toward counting a wife's income. I do not mean to suggest by this discussion that making loans to families where the husband is the sole source of income is necessarily more risky than making loans to families where the wife works. However, I do think it is fair to conclude that there is no evidence to suggest that there is any reason to question the financial soundness of a policy that almost always gives full credit to a working wife's income.

In the final analysis we must rely on the common sense of the American people. If a wife needs to continue working in order for the family to meet its mortgage payments, there is every reason to believe that she will continue working even after a maternity leave. The key to this entire process, of course, is proper budget planning. This points up the desirability for mortgage lenders, while interviewing loan applicants, to inform such applicants of the rights and responsibilities associated with home ownership, and to provide budget counseling assistance when needed.

Discrimination Against Women Applying Alone for a Mortgage

What about the situations where the woman applies for a mortgage as the sole borrower? Considering the widespread problems women have in obtaining the broad range of credit services, it would indeed be surprising to find no serious problem in home mortgages, where the credit being sought runs into the many thousands of dollars. And while there can be little doubt of the prevalence of sex discrimination in mortgages when women apply as the sole borrower, unfortunately there is a lack of hard data that would quantify the full extent of the problem. The principal reason for this is that the only agencies that are in a good position to collect this data - the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the three banking agencies- have failed to collect and analyze data on the sex of loan applicants. These are, of course the very same agencies that have refused to prohibit sex discrimination by lending institutions these agencies supervise and examine (I might add that a similar problem exists with regard to racial discrimination -the four agencies have refused to require racial data collection to detect racial discrimination by banks and savings and loan associations.)

However, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's survey of lending practices, released in March, does provide strong evidence of the problem women are likely to run into when they apply for a mortgage without a husband in the household. While the questionnaire did not ask directly whether or not the sex of the applicant was used as a factor in evaluating a loan application, it did ask whether or not marital status was a factor. 64% of the savings and loans responded by indicating that marital status was a factor in deciding on loan applications, and 18% said that an unsatisfactory answer by the applicant to the question about marital status would disqualify the applicant. The questionnaire also inquired, in a followup question, as to what marital status, if any,would disqualify the applicant. Unfortunately, in releasing the study, the Bank Board chose not to release the results from this folloup question. So in discussing the implications of the survey, some degree of speculation is required.

It is obvious, however, that the disqualifying marital status would not be a situation where a husband and wife are married and not separated. Thus we must assume that the disqualifying marital status would be in one or more of the following categories - single,divorced, widowed or separated. When one ponders this question, it soon becomes clear that, in mortgage financing, discrimination on account of marital status undoubtedly has a discriminatory impact on women. If one looks particularly at the categories separated,divorced and widowed, one finds that, according to the 1970 Census, fourteen and a half million American women are in these categories as contrasted with only 5 million men. And even these men are not likely to want to purchase a home, because under today's social conditions, these men are not likely to have children living in the household. Indeed, to the extent that men in these categories do not seek mortgage loans, then discrimination on account of marital status becomes equivalent to discrimination on account of sex.

Thus we have seen that if a woman applies for a mortgage without a husband present in the household, she has a good chance of running into a considerable roadblock. And, of course, as I have discussed at some length, if she applies for a mortgage loan with her husband she may be denied the loan because her income is not considered.

As I have discussed earlier, there are no sound business reasons behind the latter type of discrimination. Nor is there any economic rationale behind discrimination against women applying by themselves. For example, take the case of a woman who is single, widowed, divorced, or separated, and who continues in that status over the years of the mortgage. If she currently has a job, there is every likelihood that she will continue to work for many years. In the event that she should change her marital status by getting married or reconciled with her husband at some point in the future, if anything, there is a likelihood thet the income of her household would actually increase. Thus, whatever happens in the future, if she currently has a stable source of income, the possibility of her household's financial situation deteriorating over the life of the mortgage is quite remote. And even this determination is really not necessary in mortgage underwriting since , as I have indicated, it is only important to examine the likelihood of stable income during the early years of the mortgage. Given the facts as they are, it should not be surprising to anyone to learn that the National Bureau of Economics Research study by Herzog and Earley on mortgage risk found no relationship between marital status and the risk of mortgage delinquency and foreclosure.

The Impact of Secondary Market Programs for Conventionals

Although the existence of arbitrary discounting of a working wife's income undoubtedly remains widespread, there have been several hopeful developments in recent months which promise to reduce such discrimination in the conventional mortgage market. The developments referred to revolve around the establishment of national secondary market operations by the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA, commonly called Fannie Mae) and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (FHLMC, commonly called Freddy Mac).

The Emergency Home Finance Act of 1970 authorized FNMA to purchase and sell conventional mortgages in order to facilitate the flow of credit for residential mortgage financing. The same Act also created a new Federal corporation, FHLMC, which comes under the direction of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. FHLMC was also authorized to buy and sell conventional mortgages. Basically the two agencies are performing parallel functions, the principle difference being that FNMA does business primarily with mortgage bankers and commercial banks, while FHLMC's operations have been confined to savings and loan associations.

While there has been a substantial secondary market in FHA and VA loans for a long time, historically the same could not be said for the conventional market. The basic obstacle had traditionally been the very wide diversity in mortgage instruments, procedures and underwriting criteria that has existed in the conventional market. Obviously this wide diversity from mortgage to mortgage made significant purchases and sales of mortgages in packages fairly unworkable.

Thus when FHMA and FHLMC were given authority to begin secondary market operations for conventionals, it was recognized that substantial efforts at standardization would have to be made before the programs could begin. Much of this effort was devoted to the establishment of standard note and mortgage forms. In addition both FNMA and FHLMC undertook to establish credit and property underwriting criteria for use by mortgage lenders wishing to sell their mortgages to these agencies.

FNMA published its criteria first, in December of 1970, and circulated the document to a limited number of mortgage bankers. Fortunately, problems in developing the standard mortgage form had delayed the beginning of the program so that FNMA's initial underwriting criteria never became operational. When we at the Center first had occasion to examine FNMA's criteria, in the Spring of 1971, we were horrified by a number of its provisions which we regarded as unfair to minorities, women, blue collar workers and the elderly. Perhaps the one that gave us the most concern was an arbitrary rule that the income of a working wife should be counted at 50%. As the National Organization for Women later described it: "The concept implicit in this rule is that working women are only half-persons when it comes to dealing in the mortgage market." What concerned us was that mortgage lenders, and particularly mortgage bankers, would be sure to follow this rule in order to be able to sell their mortgages to FNMA. We feared that this rule would apply to much more than just the mortgages eventually sold to FNMA since lenders would be looking to follow FNMA's criteria in order to retain the option of selling their mortgages to FNMA. In addition, for technical reasons, many lenders would certainly not desire to maintain two sets of conventional mortgage underwriting standards, one for mortgages to be sold to FNMA and another for mortgages not to be sold to FNMA. Finally we were quite concerned about the psychological impact on lending institutions of a quazi-governmental agency putting its stamp of approval on such a discriminatory policy.

When we realized the significance of FNMA's guidelines, we contacted a number of other public interests groups, including Ralph Nader's Public Interest Research Group and the National Organization for Women. In July of 1971 a meeting was held between a number of FNMA officers and representatives of the Center for National Policy Review, the Public Interest Research Group, and the National Organization for Women. Interestly enough, at this meeting the FNMA officials claimed that their 50% guideline was actually quite generous when compared to the typical policy of mortgage lenders. In light of the results of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's recently released survey, this claim appears, in retrospect, to have had considerable merit.

In any case it was our position that there was a wide diversity of practices in the conventional market, and as long as FNMA was attempting to standardize these practices, they should utilize the opportunity to standardize the best practices instead of some of the worst.

We submitted to FNMA a detailed document containing an alternative draft and comments to FNMA's guidelines. Our alternative draft borrowed heavily from FHA's policies. The FNMA officers pointed out that while they accepted FHA's underwriting standards as sufficient safeguard when purchasing an FHA mortgage, they did not want to do the same for conventional mortgages, since in these cases, FNMA--and not FHA--would end up holding the bag in case of foreclosure. We pointed out that FNMA would have a considerable advantage over FHA in such an event, because unlike FHA, the conventional mortgages purchased by FNMA would have a low loan to value ratio. (To the extent the ratio exceeded 75%, the excess would be privately insured.)

Because of the failure to satisfactorily resolve these differences, the Center's course of action was to organize a broad based 30 organization coalition of the nation's leading groups concerned with protecting the rights and interests of racial and ethnic minorities, working people, consumers, women and senior citizens.

On October 4, 1971 the coalition issued a public statement opposing FNMA's criteria and calling on FNMA to recall and redraft them. The coalition also called upon Secretary Romney of HUD to withhold permission to FNMA to purchase conventionals until the discriminatory features of the guidelines were removed.

In addition, the coalition also called upon FNMA to require each seller of mortgage loans to provide a warranty to FNMA that it does not discriminate in its lending and servicing policies on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

It so happened that at the time of the July meeting with FNMA, FHLMC was still at an early stage in the development of its own criteria. Late last summer and fall, FHLMC provided us with the opportunity to make our ideas known during this drafting process, and a series of productive meetings were held. From the point of view of the coalition of public interest groups, the results arrived at were on the whole, quite satisfactory. The guideline relating to a working wife's income, as it was issued last December, stated: "If there are two borrowers both of whom have full time employment, a determination should be made as to whether both will probably work for several years (normally at least 20% of the mortgage term)." It is also made clear that in making this determination, the possibility of temporary leave, such as maternity leave, is not a basis for discounting any portion of the borrower's income. Incidentally, if either spouse has part time work, such income is to be counted if it is likely to be stable for three years.

When FNMA issued its revised guidelines on December 15, 1971, the discriminatory features of the earlier guidelines were almost totally removed. (In addition FNMA included, in its warranties section, a prohibition on discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, age, or national origin in the fixing of terms of loans and in servicing loans.) However while eliminating the 50% rule, FNMA's revised criteria left quite vague what was expected to go in its place. The operative language relating to the combined income of the husband and wife states: "The key determination to be made is whether the circumstances reasonably indicate that the income, jointly or severally, will continue in a manner sufficient to liquidate the debt under the terms of the note and mortgage." While there is nothing specifically discriminatory about this new language, we were concerned that because it was so vague, and in light of the previous 50% rule, there was a definite likelihood that many mortgage lenders would interpret and apply it in a discriminatory fashion. Thus, the Center recommended, and I reiterate that recommendation, that FNMA's guideline be revised still further to conform closely with and be as explicit as FHLMC's policy.

In the final analysis, of course, it is not what the guideline says but how it is interpreted by mortgage lenders that is so crucial. Thus when FNMA announced that it was holding a series of 24 public meetings throughout the country to explain the new secondary market program to mortgage lenders, we expressed our concern to FNMA that their officials make a positive presentation and interpretation of the new guidelines at these meetings.

I wish to commend FNMA for its cooperation with public interest groups in running these meetings. We were able to notify public interest organizations throughout the country about these meetings and at almost every meeting, at least one or two public interest representatives participated. In most instances, FNMA officials presented a positive tone in discussing the new guidelines. For the most part, this was specifically true for the wife's income issue. For example, in response to a question, an official at one of the meetings stated that FNMA's intent was essentially the same as FHLMC's. In another meeting the response was that in the case of a husband-wife team, their combined income would be considered as a unit and that in the case of temporary absence from work, such as from illness or maternity leave, FNMA would rely on the family to adjust its finances to meet the temporary problem. Still another answer was "times are changing...a lot of women are working now, the statistic is very high...use your nose, is it stable, can it be relied upon?

Because of these generally positive interpretations, and because these meetings were extremely well attended by mortgage lenders, I am optimistic that there will be a positive impact on the policies of many mortgage lenders, particularly mortgage bankers. In other words, the mortgage banker should be able to feel reasonably confident that FNMA will not refuse to purchase the mortgage in the event a liberal underwriting policy is followed in counting a wife's income. Obviously, this should encourage lenders to alter their current policies. This should be particularly true with regard to mortgage bankers, since these institutions make loans with the idea of selling them. Thus, if they know they have a ready outlet for a mortgage, they have no significant reason not to originate the loan.

FHLMC's policy should also have some impact in liberalizing savings and loan practices. On the other hand the secondary market is not as significant a portion of the operation of savings and loans as compared with mortgage bankers. Since savings and loans mostly originate mortgages with the idea of holding them as an investment rather than to sell them, the impact of FHLMC's policy on savings and loans may not be as far ranging in the near future. However, over time, the potential is clearly there for changing savings and loan policy.

Of course all of this assumes that FNMA and FHLMC actually implement in practice the policies they have adopted on paper and in their public statements. If these agencies refuse to purchase mortgages that have been made on the basis of these revised criteria, then mortgage lenders will not continue to originate such loans. Thus it will be critical to monitor closely how these new policies actually work out in practice. This will require a data analysis system sophisticated enough to indicate the characteristics of the borrowers for mortgages purchased by FNMA and FHLMC as well as the underwriting practices utilized.

Finally, it must be concluded that it is not reasonable to expect that these advances will cause an overnight revolution in mortgage underwriting practices. For one thing, FNMA and FHLMC have not stated that they will refuse to purchase loans from mortgage lenders who arbitrarily discount all or part of a working wife's income. The agencies have only indicated that they would not refuse to purchase loans that are made under a nondiscriminatory policy.

But even more fundamentally, the force of inertia is operating against us. We should not expect mortgage lenders with entrenched discriminatory policies to suddenly reverse these policies simply because a Federal agency might be willing to continue to purchase mortgages from them if they change their policy.

FNMA and FHLMC are not regulatory bodies in the sense of being able to prohibit discriminatory behavior by a given set of institutions. Even the ultimate weapon of these agencies would merely be to refuse to do business with a given institution. While we have obviously averted a step backward, and have made some tangible advances, if we are really serious about ridding the mortgage lending industry of sexism in all of its forms, strong regulations will be needed.

Promulgating Regulations to Prohibit Discriminatory Treatment of Women and the Income of Women in Home Financing

The Commission has been charged by the Congress with investigating consumer credit transactions and reporting to Congress on "the adequacy of existing supervisory and regulatory mechanisms to protect the public from unfair practices." As far as protecting women against discriminatory treatment in home mortgage financing is concerned, I must report my conclusion that although a potentially effective supervisory and regulatory mechanism exists, it it not being utilized.

The banking and savings and loan industries are among the most heavily regulated industries in the United States. Not only are these industries protected from economic calamity by Federal insurance on deposits, but many aspects of the activities of lending institutions have historically been regulated and supervised in an effort to promote various economic and social objectives. In fact, the Federal Home Loan Bank System and the Federal Savings and Loan System were created by the Congress specifically for the purpose of promoting thrift and home ownership.

In addition, a vast network of Federal examiners has been created to closely monitor the activities of banks and savings and loan associations to make sure that they are in compliance with laws and regulations and that their lending practices and other activities are in accordance with sound practice. The Federal Home Loan Bank Board supervises and examines the nation's savings and loan associations; the Comptroller of the Currency supervises and examines national banks; the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System supervises and examines state chartered banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System; and the Federal Deposit Inusrance Corporation performs the same function with respect to state chartered banks that are FDIC insured but are not members of the Federal Reserve System. The nation's mortgage bankers are the only major class of mortgage originators that do not come under this Federal regulatory umbrella. And while the regulatory mechanism for these institutions needs to be improved, even here the Federal Housing Administration has taken on the responsibility of regulating these institutions as "FHA approved mortgages", and the FHA has a network of auditors that theorectically, at least, could monitor the lending practices of almost all mortgage bankers in the country.

Thus, it is clear that by promulgating regulations and guidelines prohibiting discriminatory treatment of women and their income in mortgage lending, by requiring the keeping of appropriate records, and by sending in teams of examiners to monitor whether or not lending institutions are in compliance with the regulations and guidelines, the financial regulatory agencies could take decisive action to end the types of discriminatory practices that I have discussed here today. In fact, guidelines already in use by FHLMC and FHA provide a good start towards developing nondiscriminatory guidelines for use by examiners to determine whether lenders are arbitrarily discounting a wife's income.

Yet these agencies have thus far failed to take this decisive action. One excuse that has been made by some is that sex discrimination is not prohibited by the Fair Housing Act (and indeed I certainly support efforts to bring various forms of sex discrimination under this Act). However, it is clear that by failing to take action to eliminate discriminatory treatment of women in lending, the regulatory agencies have ignored their responsibilities under other Acts of Congress.

First, in addition to responsibilities that may arise under the Constitution, the agencies have ignored their general responsibility, under section 2 of the Housing Act of 1949, to exercise their functions in a manner designed to facilitate achievement of our national goal "of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family." More specifically, each of the agencies could utilize specific statutory language in their enabling legislation as a basis for taking decisive action. For example, no savings and loan association is eligible to become a member of or retain membership in a Federal Home Loan Bank if "the character of its management or its home financing policy is inconsistent with sound and economical home financing." (See 12 USC 1424 (a) and 1426 (i)). Further, in prescribing rules and regulations governing the operation of Federal savings and loan associations, the Bank Board has an obligation to give "primary consideration to the best practices of local mutual thrift and home financing institutions in the United States." (12 USC 1464 (a)). Surely in America in 1972, the best practices of local mutual thrift and home financing institutions include non-discriminatory treatment of women.

With regard to the question of what constitutes "sound and economical home financing", a bipartisan coalition of 180 economists, in a statement issued in March of this year, stated flatly: "Arbitrary exclusion of persons who have the economic capacity to participate in the market place is a distortion of our economic system and can not be considered 'sound and economical home financing.'" Among other things, the economists called on the four financial regulatory agencies to issue a general ban on sex discrimination and to prohibit the practice of "mechanically discounting all or part of a working wife's income." I might add that this Statement of Economists was endorsed by, among others, the last five chairmen of the President's Council of Economic Advisers - Paul McCracken, Arthur Okun, Gardner Ackley, Walter Heller and Raymond Saulnier.

In addition to the provisions of law already cited, each of the four agencies is charged with preventing institutions they examine from engaging in unsafe or unsound business practices. Unfortunately, until now the agencies, in practice, have only concentrated on interpreting this mandate to prevent the origination of certain loans, rather than to prevent unnecessarily stringent practices that have the effect of arbitrarily limiting an institution's market. In a March 1965 article in the Journal of Finance, Horvitz noted that bank examiners "criticize unsound or risky loans and investments but rarely criticize a bank for not rigorously competing for business or for not adequately serving local needs." Yet one of the basic principles set forth in Professor Gary Becker's classic work, The Economics of Discrimination, is that discrimination for non-financial reasons results in an economic cost not only to those discriminated against but also to those who do the discriminating. For these reasons, the March 1972 Statement of Economists stated flatly that discrimination for non-economic reasons is a bad business practice.

An additional argument that can be made as to why discriminatory treatment of women is a bad business practice is that a lending institution that discriminates in this fashion runs the risk of damaging its own reputation. The Federal Home Loan Bank Board has made this argument in the past with regard to discrimination against racial minorities and the poor. (Attachment C to the letter of April 14, 1971 from Chairman Preston Martin to Father Theodore Hesburgh, Chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights). Considering the current momentum of the women's liberation movement, I think it is fair to conclude that the same argument could be made with regard to sex discrimination.

These basic points were all made in several sets of comments prepared by the Center for National Policy Review on behalf of over 30 civil rights and public interest groups, and filed with the regulatory agencies last February and March. Together with the Statement of Economists, we have been hopeful that these comments would cause the agencies to reconsider their unwillingness to do anything about these problems. As yet, however, there has been no substantive response to our proposals, not even by way of private communication. In fact, the comments by the public interest groups and the economists to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board were in response to the publication in January of proposed nondiscrimination in lending regulations dealing with racial discrimination. Yet when the regulations were adopted late last month, not only did they fail to include the new provisions suggested by the public interest groups and the economists, but the provisions on racial discrimination were seriously weakened by the deletion of all requirements for racial data keeping.

To my knowledge, the Fderal Home Loan Bank Board has never made the argument that it is without power to prohibit discriminatory treatment of women by institutions it supervises and examines. In fact, I would wager heavily that if the General Counsel to the Board were asked for a formal opinion as to whether or not the Board had this authority, the answer would be a definite "yes". I also think it is obvious that the elimination of discriminatory treatment of women is in the public interest. And it is clear from the Board's own survey that discriminatory treatment of women is widespread in the savings and loan industry. Thus if the Board continues to avoid taking action to eliminate these discriminatory practices, I must be forced into the conclusion that what we have is a clear example of a Federal agency ignoring the public interest and caving in to pressures from the industry it is supposed to regulate. Unfortunately, considering its recent cave-in to the industry on racial data collection and analysis, this would not be a surprising result.

Mr. Chairman, the financial regulatory agencies must be called upon to take action necessary to eliminate all forms of discriminatory treatment of women by mortgage lenders. If the agencies continue to refuse to exercise their authority, then action by Congress may be necessary to direct these agencies to act. It is now over 50 years since women in this country were guaranteed the right to vote. Yet sexism in this country is still widespread, and our mortgage lenders are no exception. The time for action is now.

Discrimination in Mortgage Financing

Congressional Black Caucus Hearings

On Government Lawlessness

June 26, 1972

Mr. Chairman and members of the Caucus. I am William L. Taylor, Director of the Center for National Policy Review, a legal research and resource group affiliated with Catholic University Law School. The Center's principal mission is to assist civil rights and public interest groups in securing better enforcement of Federal laws which affect the rights and interests of minority groups.

One of our major concerns has been with Federal policies which discriminate against minority groups and low income families in their efforts to secure financing to become homeowners. Three cases we have been involved in over the past 18 months illustrate graphically the problem of government lawlessness in an area of vital concern to our minority citizens. In two of the cases, by dint of great effort by citizens groups, the government responded to initiatives to bring federal agencies in line with their legal responsibilities. In the third situation we are faced with continued unresponsiveness by Federal agencies in the face of clear obligation and authority.

The first illustration concerns the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's Housing Opportunity Allowance Program - and the Board's reluctance to extend benefits to low income people in the face of a Congressional mandate. The second focuses on the Federal National Mortgage Association's attempts to standardize the secondary conventional mortgage market with restrictive and discriminatory underwriting and property standards. The third demonstrates continued financial agency resistance against issuing rules designed to prevent discrimination in the home mortgage lending process.

Housing Opportunity Allowance Program

Perhaps the most obvious and blatant type of government lawlessness occurs when Congress clearly instructs a federal agency to do one thing, and the agency turns around and does something completely different. Experience has indicated that it may be feasible to deal with the situation with a law suit, although even here there may be considerable obstacles and the resolutions may be uncertain.

To illustrate, let us examine the case of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's Housing Opportunity Allowance Program (HOAP). This program was developed pursuant to Title I of the Emergency Home Finance Act in 1970, which authorized the appropriation of 250 million dollars for a subsidy program to be administered through the Federal Home Loan Banks. The purpose of the subsidy as set forth by Congress, was "to assist in the provision of housing for low and middle income families." The Bank Board was given considerable discretion in formulating the specific details of the program, although Congress clearly instructed the Board to "assure" that low and middle income families share fully in the benefits.

The Board's response, on March 11, 1971, was to promulgate regulations for a homeownership program designed entirely for middle income families, generally those within the $7-12,000 income range. These regulations were issued without any prior consultation with consumer organizations or other public interest groups. Low income families were specifically excluded not only in the Board's own description of those who the program was designed for, but also by virtue of the fact that the $20 a month subsidy provided under the Board's regulations was totally inadequate to enable low income families to participate.

Initially, the approach of our Center in this situation was to meet with Bank Board officials in an attempt to persuade the Board to revise the program so as to include low income families. However, as the months dragged on and no plans for including low income families were proposed, it became clear that legal action was necessary. The Center subsequently assisted in the development of a class action suit against the Board, filed last December in Federal District Court in Washington on behalf of three low income families and two public interest groups.

In March of this year, the Court ruled that the Bank Board had violated Title I by failing to include low income families as beneficiaries under its program. Although the Court declined to issue a mandatory order to the Board to develop and implement a low income program, it did cut off all disbursements under the existing program until a low income program was implemented. When it became clear that the judge's order meant that if no low income program were implemented, the Board's subsidy commitment under loans already closed would have to be met by the reserves of its regional banks, the Board moved quickly to implement a low income program. The new HOAP program, which will become operational shortly, will assist low income families with subsidies up to $70 a month. The Board has allocated $10 million under the current fiscal year's budget, approximately the same amount previously spent under the old middle income HOAP program.

Fortunately, this effort to get the Bank Board to revise the program in accordance with the Congressional mandate has met with some success. However, when one considers the clear cut nature of the Board's violation of the statute, the delays involved in effecting change demonstrate some of the difficulties involved in relying solely on litigation to deal with the problem of government lawlessness. Perhaps with greater public participation in agency decision making and stronger legislative oversight exercised by Congress, the problems of the Board's faulty implementation of Title I could have been avoided.

FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Where government is not blatantly lawless, it may be guilty of gross insensitivity to the interests of citizens. This often occurs when a federal agency which has broad discretion in carrying out a law in a manner which has serious adverse consequences for minorities. The legal issues here may not be clear cut. If rapid resolution is needed to reverse all the negative consequences of the agency's action, protracted litigation may not be the best way to proceed. In such a situation, one possible course of action is to attempt, by the use of public pressure, to create a climate in which change can be affected.

The efforts of a coalition of public interest groups to get an obscure agency - the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) - to reverse policies that would have had a severe impact on minorities illustrate this process. FNMA is a government sponsored corporation, subject to regulation by the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The Emergency Home Finance Act of 1970 authorized FNMA to buy and sell conventional home mortgages. The purpose of course was to facilitate the flow of credit for home mortgage financing. Because banks and savings and loan associations have very diverse standards for making loans, it was necessary for FNMA to spell out the standards it would use in purchasing loans. As lenders will normally follow FNMA's criteria in order to retain the option of selling their mortgages to FNMA, FNMA's criteria would have a standardizing impact on a large segment of the conventional mortgage market, not just on mortgages that are actually sold to FNMA. (It is estimated that in the first year of its program FNMA will purchase $500 million in conventional mortgages).

The statute did not tell FNMA how to do this particular job. What FNMA proposed to do, instead of attempting to standardize the best and least discriminatory kind of practices, was to sanction the most restrictive practices--those which would have excluded many black people, chicanos, women, blue collar workers, and elderly people from the opportunity for home ownership.

For example, lenders were instructed not to count income for overtime, production bonuses, or part-time jobs as effective income in determining a family's ability to meet mortgage payments; they were instructed to credit a wife's income at only 50%; they were to avoid upper limits on mortgage payments to income ratios; and, any prior credit difficulty even if isolated, was to be grounds for disqualification. In addition, FNMA's property guidelines authorized a "redlining" policy.

The possible impact on minority and moderate income families made it imperative to head off the guidelines before the FNMA purchase program began.

Initially, our approach to FNMA was similar to HOAP--an attempt at private discussions. In late July of 1971 representatives of the Center for National Policy Review, Ralph Nader's Public Interest Research Group, and the National Organization for Women met with FNMA officers in an effort to persuade them to substantially revise the guidelines. However, when it appeared that FNMA would initiate only cosmetic changes, and because the operational phase of the program was imminent the Center organized a 30 organization coalition which, on October 4, 1971, publicly challenged FNMA's guidelines. The joint statement called on FNMA to withdraw and redraft the guidelines, and called on Secretary Romney to refuse permission to FNMA to purchase conventional mortgages until revised guidelines were issued. The coalition represented the varied constituencies that would be affected by the guidelines: racial and ethnic minorities, labor, women, consumers and the elderly.

On December 15, 1971, FNMA made public substantially revised guidelines which, although vague in spots generally eliminated the negative features of the previous guidelines. What caused the reversal of policy? It is clear that the public pressure brought by the diverse coalition had a significant role in creating a climate in which the substantial changes could be made.

Many elements contributed to our success in reversing FNMA's guidelines, not the least of which was the active interest several members of Congress expressed in eliminating the discriminatory effect of the guidelines.

But the job is not yet done. We found that even after changing its standards, some representatives of FNMA were interpreting the new standards in a very restrictive way to lending institutions. We then secured the agreement of FNMA to allow participation of community groups in these meetings. Once these groups were allowed to participate, the interpretation of the standards became much more liberal. But continued monitoring and surveillance by community organizations will be necessary for the new policy to be of tangible benefit to minorities. It hardly needs to be said that the ingrained practices of saving and loan associations and other lending institutions are not likely to change overnight.

The Federal Banking Agencies and Discrimination

In a third situation, our effort to secure from the Federal agencies that regulate lending institutions effective rules against discrimination, we have been met not only with a refusal to adopt the substantive proposals but with a failure to accord civil rights groups a fair hearing on their request for action.

The Comptroller of ~~the Currency~~, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board have supervisory authority over the institutions that provide the vast majority of home financing in this country. Yet, except for the FHLBB, they have been totally unresponsive to the problem of lending discrimination, to the clear command of Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, and to formal petitions for rule making presently before each agency.

For more than a decade Federal Commissions and civil rights groups have pointed to the many forms of discrimination in lending as a problem that must be solved if equal opportunity in housing is to be a reality. Section 805 of the Civil Rights Act expressly prohibits lending discrimination, and, in addition, directs all departments and agencies with programs relating to housing to further the purposes of the Act by cooperating with HUD. Both HUD and the Civil Rights Commission have for years proposed steps to curtail such discrimination that are within the power of the four agencies. No substantive agency action resulted, although each agency, by letter, informed its supervised institutions of the requirements of Section 805. The agencies also agreed to send out a questionnaire designed to determine "current policies in making loans available to minorities and gauging whether discrimination was a serious problem." (After a two year delay, preliminary results of that questionnaire are now available, finally removing another excuse for delay).

In the face of this total inaction, the Center, in March of 1971, filed with the four agencies petitions for rule making regarding lending discrimination. The petition, copies of which are submitted for the record, called for among other things a general regulation prohibiting discrimination in mortgage lending; for racial data collection to measure whether such a policy is effective, for affirmative action programs designed to make minorities aware of their opportunities, and for assurances from builders and developers receiving financing that they would not discriminate.

We took the route of a petition for administrative rulemaking because other efforts had failed. By invoking the agencies' own formal procedures, we hoped for an orderly consideration of our requests.

Yet for the remainder of 1971, although a meeting was held with representatives of the general counsel of each agency, and correspondence was exchanged with the Home Loan Bank Board no action was taken on the petitions--which had included a request for a hearing. This inaction was in the face of expressed White House and Congressional interest in these agencies policies regarding non-discrimination.

Finally, in late December the Comptroller of the Currency and the FDIC published a portion of the petition, indicating that they were considering publication of proposed regulations--and inviting comment. They got it--and we have not heard from them since, except for a requirement that a lobby notice be posted, and "An Equal Housing Lender" logo be used in selected ads.

During the same period, the Federal Reserve Board published a similar policy statement requiring the lobby notice and slogan. The FRB announced other steps, such as a special education course for examiners (for which there was no lesson plan) and the use of a questionnaire for examiners (closely resembling the HUD questionnaire, which has many limitations). They have also recently encouraged bank holding companies to take an active role in helping promote community welfare. But they have never responded to the petition; never held a hearing on the issues; and never invited public comment on their civil rights efforts.

By contrast, the Home Loan Bank Board did, in January, propose regulations, including a provision for racial data collection. These proposals ignored redlining, and contained no references prohibiting practices which had the effect of discriminating. After comment by public interest groups, 180 distinguished economists and the industry, the FHLBB issued final regulations--the racial data collection procedures, which were withdrawn for "additional study." In effect this reduces the Board's action to a paper policy--rules and regulations without the means of determining compliance.

The need for racial data to evaluate the practices of lending institutions is critical, because lending discrimination now is usually subtle rather than overt. Since mortgage financing is often secured through brokers, many people may never meet with the officers of lending institutions. And if homeseekers are turned down for a loan, they may not know whether they have been discriminated against. Thus, reliance upon complaints is a thoroughly inadequate means for federal agencies to detect discrimination.

What racial data that does exist indicates that there is a serious and persistent problem of discrimination in home finance.

Preliminary analysis of the Private Lending Institution Questionnaire disseminated by HUD has revealed widespread evidence of discriminatory practices. For instance, in summarizing data from 582 savings and loan associations in the 50 cities with the largest minority population, 39% did not give notice to customers that loan applications are considered without regard to race. Eighteen percent refused to make residential loans in one or more areas with high concentrations of minority citizens. Seventeen percent admitted to considering the racial or ethnic characteristics of neighborhoods, and 15% considered the proximity of low-rent or public housing projects.

Disparities also exist in terms of general population and homeownership. Minorities constitute 36% of the population in the 50 cities. However, 60% of the savings and loans estimated their loans to minorities at less than 15%. In Detroit, where blacks are 33% of all homeowners, no savings and loan estimated making more than 15% of its loans to minorities.

In the face of this evidence and a clear statutory policy against lending discrimination, the continued refusal of the banking agencies to fulfill their responsibilities stands as an aggravated example of bureaucratic arrogance as well as lawlessness.

Conclusion

In sum, Mr. Chairman, the response of Federal banking agencies to demands for equal justice is not very different from the response of government in other areas.

In some part the problem is outright government lawlessness and racial hostility. In part, the problem is that these agencies view as their constituents the very institutions they regulate rather than consumers, minorities, or the public in general. The agencies expose themselves only to the views of special interests and act accordingly. And in some part the problem is that sometimes even those federal officials who are sensitive to demands for equal justice have not mastered the techniques for converting laws and regulations into tangible social change.

From the standpoint of civil rights groups, the problem is largely one of resources. We simply do not have the funds to combat the special interests and to secure fair implementation of federal laws in all the areas where law is now being bent, broken or perverted.

The problem in Congress is comparable. As you well know, laws that are enacted with mixed business and social purposes often serve only the interests of business. One of the reasons is that a few Congressmen, usually those with the greatest seniority and influence, apply their influence with federal agencies only on behalf of special interests. There is a great need to develop mechanisms within Congress to exert countervailing influence on behalf of the public interest.

Your hearings this week are a notable start in that direction.

THE DEMAND FOR HOUSING IN RACIALLY MIXED AREAS: A Study of the Nature of Neighborhood Change. (3)

G Ewert

By Chester Rapkin and William G. Grigsby, Institute for Urban Studies, University of Pennsylvania.

Special Research Report to the Commission on Race and Housing and the Philadelphia Redevelopment Authority.

University of California Press, Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1960. pp. xx + 177.

bkgd: In essence this study is primarily an analysis of some of the major forces at work in racially mixed neighborhoods, but it also attempts to probe into the nature and ultimate outcome of the transition process. p. vix bkgd: The analysis of racial change is approached from the point of view of the housing market - the mechanism through which transition occurs. p. vix integ. neigh., self-help: But perhaps more important (implications of racial segregation) is the fact that segregated peoples do not have the opportunity to experience neighborly contacts, share community facilities, and participate in the solution of common problems. It is these types of interactions that develop mutual understanding and provide the true path to an integrated community. p. vix trans. neigh.: Yet the mechanism of transition is the real estate market. Attitudes and beliefs about Negroes expressed here exert considerable control over rates of Negro in-migration, the entry and exodus of white families, and price fluctuations. At the same time, the nature and state of the market itself - the quality of housing, types of structures, tenure, and vacancy rates - have a considerable bearing on the ease with which Negroes enter a white market, and the response which their entry evokes. p. 3

N. eco. pot., bkgd: hsing - ownership: Nonwhites have not only grown in number (Philadelphia), they have also risen in economic status. One manifestation has been a steady rise in the rate of homeownership among nonwites from 4 percent in 1900 to 29 percent in 1950 to an estimated 44 percent in 1956. p.5

trans. neigh.: Only when the pressure of population growth and rising incomes caused Negroes to fan out in large numbers into many good residential sections did their movement receive widespread attention. p.6

bkgd: The social laboratory provided by the mixed areas enabled us to explore a number of significant questions. Investigations were made of the number of white and Negro families who purchased homes in the areas, the racial composition of the blocks in which the purchases were made, and the demographic composition of the purchasing families. In addition, we learned something about attitudes of white families and their motives for moving to the particular area or dwelling. The financial details of each transaction were also investigated to see if there were any radical departures in the prices paid by and in the mortgage terms available to Negro and white purchasers. p.9

hsing - tenant; hsing cond.: With the spread of Negro occupancy, these homes (Strawberry Mansion, Philadelphia) were purchased by slum landlords and subdivided into tiny dwelling units which, for the most part, contain neither private bath nor kitchen and are often over-occupied. But despite the substandard quality of these dwellings, the rental per square foot of space is quite high. p. 13

bkgd: Our field studies, however, revealed white purchasers in large numbers, and this in itself is one of the most significant findings of the entire investigation. p. 16

integ. neigh.: Thus, for one or another reason, the white family that purchases in a mixed area sees fit to do so despite the fact that alternatives are available. Moreover, virtually all of the purchasing families have the option of remaining where they are. p. 18

integ. neigh.: In short, then, the decision to purchase into a mixed area is a positive act taken in the face of alternatives and involving significant commitments. The decision to remain in a mixed area is a passive response the strength of which is contingent upon the ties to the area, the likelihood of their persistence, and the economic circumstances of the family. p. 19

rac. quotas: Thus, it appears that the greater the proximity of Negroes, the smaller will be the proportion of white purchases within any mixed area. The striking fact to emerge from this sea of statistics is not the sharp drop-off in the proportion of white purchasers, an observation that was anticipated, but the fact that 119 white families chose to purchase and reside on a mixed street, an observation that was-not anticipated. p. 27

prej.; integ. neigh.: The fact that whites show a reluctance to purchase a dwelling next to one occupied by a Negro has profound implications for the future racial composition of an area. For a mixed area to achieve some degree of stability in the racial composition of its population, it is necessary for the number of white (or Negro) families who come into the area to balance the number of white (or Negro) families who leave. If this does not occur, and the proportion of in-migrants in one racial group is greater than the proportion of that group among the out-migrants, the area must in due course become largely occupied by one or the other of the racial groups. ...Sooner or later, each of the houses occupied by whites will come on the market and virtually all of those adjacent to a resident occupied by Negroes will find only Negro purchasers. p. 30

bkgd, integ. neigh.: The home-purchasing (white) families appeared in most respects to be characteristic of the white resident and home-buying population at large and resembled in many ways the white residents in the areas into which they purchased. p. 33

bkgd: The occupation distribution of the heads of the white households showed no unusual concentration in professional or other groups that might be associated with special views on racial matters. p. 35

bkgd, integ. neigh.: Although she (housewife) may select the individuals with whom she wishes to maintain acquaintanceship or cultivate a friendship, her path must perforce cross that of others not of her choice, a condition that may lead to trivial but inescapable social exchange. p. 36

integ. neigh., schls: The national and religious backgrounds of the white purchasers may be associated with special motives for coming to the area, a subject that is discussed in the next section. The religious distribution of the purchasers may also explain why many families with school age children purchased into the mixed areas. Since the majority of these families were Catholic, they were likely to send their children to one of the numerous parochial schools which at that time were attended by only a handful of Negroes. p. 37

bkgd.: The lack of compelling reason (to move into the neighborhood) is less astonishing than the fact that at lease three-fourths of the respondents did not bother to look for a house in any other area and that an additional 5 percent, theough they did look elsewhere, considered the racially mixed area to be their first choice. p. 38

bkgd., integ. neigh.: House price and place of employment were considerations that strongly affected the residential choice of the buyers as they do in any other sector of the housing market. A desire to live in an area with a lower proportion of Negroes seems to have been a factor in the moving decision of some of the families. Most important, however, was the fact that many of the buyers were already either long-time residents of or intimately associated with the general area in which they located. The concentration of religious and cultural groups present in the mixed areas strengthened these ties and served as an important attractive force for many of the white purchasers. p. 42

trans. neigh.: Evidence from the questionnaire suggests that the more recent the racial change and the further removed from the center of change the respondents are, the less aware they seem to be of the transition process. p. 46

prej.: One of the most interesting facts to emerge from this study was that a large proportion of white families who purchased homes in mixed areas in 1955 had strong objections to the presence of Negroes in the immediate vicinity, and if any were motivated by a desire to foster harmonious race relations in mixed areas, they were indeed few in number. p. 47

integ. neigh.: More important, perhaps, is the fact that many families with positive or neutral views (toward Negroes) did not purchase homes in these (mixed) areas. It is within this group that the disparity between attitudes and behavior is crucial. This sector of the population has been growing at a steady pace in recent years, but the demand for homes in racially mixed areas on the part of white families has not expanded nearly so fast. Thus, there is an increasing potential demand that is not being realized because significant factors aside from prejudice lead potential home buyers to acquire homes in other than mixed neighborhoods. p. 51

rac. quotas: Two components of (white) demand that have received much less attention but which are critical in determining the number of both prejudiced and unprejudiced white buyers who will purchase in mixed areas are (1) the actual or expected number and proportion of Negroes in the mixed community and (2) the spatial distribution of nonwhite residences relative to the homes which white families contemplate acquiring. p. 53

prej.: If it is true that whites will not purchase a home next door to nonwhites, the occupancy by a nonwhite family of a single dwelling-unit on a block (one side of the street) must inevitably result in an all-Negro block, even though it may take resident white families many years to sell their homes and move elsewhere. It may be that this is at the core of the belief that a neighborhood entered by a single Negro family will eventually become entirely nonwhite. p. 54 trans. neigh.: There are three qualifications to the generalization that a block entered by Negroes will eventually become 100 percent nonwhite. First, if the initial Negro purchaser sold his home to a white family before additional Negroes moved into the block, the all-white status of the block would be restored...

Second, the presence of rental units in the area or the conversion of some units to a rental status during the transition process helps to forestall a complete change in the ethnic composition of an area...
The third and perhaps most important qualification related to Negro demand. If the greater market freedom for Negroes brings with it an increasing scatter of nonwhite purchasers, the day will soon come when Negroes will have bought into more blocks than the nonwhite population can fill. pp. 54,55 trans. neigh.: As a corollary, the scattering of even a small number of Negroes would be more likely to hasten transition than would a clustering of a similar or larger number. This is because in the latter instance a much smaller proportion of the market supply would be located adjacent to Negro families. p. 55 trans. neigh.; socioeco.: It is typical of the transition process that a large and expanding in-migrant population creates a situation in which existing institutions, formal and informal, are in danger of losing their support and face the real possibility of serious decline or disappearance. In this sense, therefore, a rising Negro population changes the actual or imagined neighborhood social setting to which white families have grown accustomed. p. 56

rac. quotas; eco. pot.: Whether stability can be achieved depends on a host of forces which can be subsumed under two categories: (a) the ratio of Negro demand to toal demand before allowance is made for the effect of discrimination on white demand and (b) the extent to which various proportions of Negroes will reduce white demand. p. 67

trans. neigh.; rac. quota: In contemplating home purchase in a transitional area, white families may attach more importance to the probable future composition of the neighborhood than to its current racial proportions....The question is raised, therefore, whether the expectation by whites of a predominately nonwhite neighborhodd may be the most crucial factor in establishing the racial composition of the area. p. 70

rac. quotas: To generate any demand by whites for houses in mixed sections under these circumstances would require positive guarantees that a given racial mix will not change in the future. p. 71

finan.: Illustrative of this possibility (of Negro applicant being turned down for financing) is the statement of an officer of one of the leading Philadelphia lending institutions, that, as a matter of principle and in the interests of good business, his firm never financed a sale which would break a block or place a Negro next door to one of the bank's depositors. p. 75

finan.: There is, however, no a priori reason to anticipate equal treatment for "block breakers." It is indeed surprising therefore to find that sales to first Negro families differed very little from sales to owner occupant families as a whole. P. 77

finan.: There were, to be sure, a few differences between transactions involving the first Negro entrants and those involving white buyers, and, to a somewhat lesser extent, other Negro buyers. For example, one-third of the first-entrants as against one-seventh of all white and nonwhite purchasers for owner-occupancy acquired their homes from absentee owners. p. 77

hsing - owners: In summary, the first families appeared to be remarkably similar to other nonwhites in the city. Although slightly higher on the socioeconomic scale than the average Philadelphia Negro family, they probably were not significantly different from the average Philadelphia Negro home buyer. If they had a more than normal desire to break a block, it probably stemmed from more than normal courage rather than a desire to make the area available to other Negro families. p. 79

finan.: Even if the latter conclusion (that West Philadelphia must inevitably become a mixed or predominantly nonwhite community) is accepted, however, there is much encouragement to be found in the equal treatment which nearly every Negro family apparently received in its quest for the ownership of satisfactory homes in virtually all-white sections. p. 80

finan.: eco. pot.: Only a negligible number of loans came from Negro financial sources. p. 85

finan.: The records indicate that Negro purchasers obtained mortgage terms that were somewhat more liberal than those advanced to whites. p. 86

finan., hsing - fed. gvt.: The superior terms received by Negroes are largely explained by the higher proportion of VA and FHA loans made to this group. In fact, mortgage lending throughout the study areas was characterized by an extensive use of government-insured or guaranteed loans. p. 86

financ: There can be little doubt that the ready availability of liberal loans was a key factor shaping the racial transition. Moreover, this situation, while not unique, certainly has not been the rule either in Philadelphia or in other cities. p. 89 finan.: First, it should be remembered that the loans were both safe and profitable. The vast majority of the loans were insured or guaranteed. p. 89 finan.: Second, the policies of lenders were influenced to a considerable extent by the easy money market during part of 1955, coupled with the virtual disappearance of white demand from some parts of the areas. p. 89 finan.: In any event, had mortgagees not catered to Negroes in West Philadelphia and in other areas, they very likely would have been burdened with excess reserves. p. 89,90

finan.: With a tightening of the mortgage market, there is no assurance that transitional areas will not again be shunned by many lenders repeating the expreince of previous home financing cycles. p. 90

finan.: But despite past fluctuations, mortgage-lending policies have, nevertheless, been accompanied by definite signs of a trend away from discrimination. The number of institutions that will not lend to Negroes has become very small indeed, and the tendency to require higher interest rates, shorter amortization periods, and larger down payments of Negro buyers has shown a marked decline. p. 90 prop. val.: The most frequent assertion that prices will slump is a major rallying point around which resistance to Negro entry is mobilized. Many a family that would otherwise have no objections to residing in a mixed area balks at the possibility of experiencing a substantial capital loss, particularly if the property is heavily encumbered with mortgage debt. p. 91

finan., real estate firms, prej.: Although the above findings show that Negro buyers did almost as well as white purchasers at the level of the financial transaction, it cannot be inferred that equality extended to all matters which affected the prices paid by the two groups. It was reported that attempts were made to prevent Negroes from acquiring homes in portions of Zones 4 and 5 where prices appear to have been the most attractive. In addition, it is known that many Negroes in West Philadelphia and in the rest of the city were victims of unconscionable charges at settlements. It is evident, therefore, that full equality for Negroes in the Philadelphia housing market still awaits the elimination of residual forms of price discrimination. p. 95 prop. val.: First, and most important, is that a price decline evidently began in the white section prior to any reasonable expectation of nonwhite occupancy in the area. It would seem that most of the downward shift in prices in these zones was due to factors other than the threat of Negro entry. Thus, the data lend some support to the "soft spot" theory which holds that the threat of Negro entry is seldom the cause of price declines; rather that Negroes tend to enter areas in which white demand has already been on the wane for other reasons and in which, therefore, sales began to weaken and prices have slackened. p. 100 prop. val.: Second, the apparent recovery of the market from 1953 to 1955 took place during a period in which Negro entry became imminent in some parts of the area and an accomplished fact in others. The recovery is even more notable since it coincides with a general easing of the housing shortage throughout the city. p. 101

rop. val.: Finally, the upward movement of prices in Zones 1 and 2 occurred in conjunction with a fairly high rate of white out-migration. p. 101

finan., prop. val.: (Finding) First, it is small comfort to an institutional lender protecting other people's money, or to an owner intent on safeguarding his investment, to know that prices sometimes rise and sometimes fall when Negroes enter a neighborhood, particularly since the question seldom arises on the occasion of a white purchase. Unless predictions can be made in specific situations, the attitudes and practices of mortagees, appraisers, brokers, and owners will not change materially, for these groups cannot be expected to take the very real risk of a possible decline. Lenders in particular are prone to take a cautious view of neighborhoods experiencing racial change until the likely long-term trend can be determined. p.102

rop. val.: (Finding) Second, almost without exception, Negro in-migration in the areas in which price studies have been made appeared to be associated with a visible reduction in white demand and, in many situation, an increase in the supply of houses for sale. The price reaction, therefore, was largely dependent on the extent to which Negro demand filled this partial vacuum. Prices could rise above the general level in comparable all-white neighborhoods only if Negroes had both the buying power (liquid assets and credit) to absorb all the market supply of the areas at a higher price level and the willingness to pay premiums to purchase the house offered for sale. But Negroes could be expected to pay premium prices only if they were experiencing a housing shortage as a result of having limited access to the market. Thus, the very argument (that prices actually rise when Negroes purchase into a neighborhood) used to reduce discrimination against nonwhite home buyers is valid only when precisely the same form of discrimination exists on a wide scale. p. 102.

rop. val.: An examination of the price studies reveals yet another curious twist. In the face of an attrition of white demand, prices in a mixed neighborhood can be maintained only if Negroes continue to buy into the neighborhood and at the original price level. Thus, at the present time white residents have the choice of declining prices or an increasing number of Negro neighbors, or both. p. 103

rop. val. studies); rej.: In summary, it appears that the studies of price movements in racially mixed areas have fallen short of their basic objectives because they have focused on the price shifts themselves rather than on the full array of underlying causes of these shifts...If discrimination was good business prior to these inquiries, it is equally good business today. It is unfortunate, too, that this type of analysis carries with it the implication that the justification for a social objective such as equality of access to the housing supply must be evaluated primarily in terms of the criteria of the market place. In all fairness, however, it must be stated that the principal and permanent value of these studies may be in erasing the primitive folk notion that Negroes have an inherent taint which inevitably causes house prices to decline in any area that they may enter. If this belief has fewer adherents as a result of these studies, then an important contribution has been made to the improvement of race relations and to the ultimate goal of equality for Negroes. p. 104

rans. eigh.: It was observed earlier that nonresident owners may expedite the process of racial transition in residential neighborhoods because they lack the type of community identification which would induce strong resistance to selling to Negroes. The West Philadelphia data lend some support to this view. p. 110

trans. neigh.: When this possibility was checked for West Philadelphia, it was found that three-fourths of the absentee sales to first Negro entrants were, indeed, by individuals who were identified by local real estate brokers as market professionals and that the remaining absentee sales to the Negro "first" families were by persons who did not live in or near the study area. p. 112 trans. neigh.: Gross profits on sales to Negroes were double those obtained from sales to whites... This would appear to indicate that absentees tended to purchase houses below the prevalent level and that the outgoing sellers rather than the incoming Negro families provided the source of capital gain for the absentee traders. This in itself may reflect an eagerness on the part of previous owners to sell, but we do not know whether this was due to inner compulsion or to outside pressures generated by the absentee purchasers. p. 112 trans. neigh.: (Conslusions) Racial transition was accompanied by only a moderate number of real estate transactions involving short-term investors and speculators. Although market professionals no doubt did expedite the process of change, it appears that owner-occupants were instrumental in effecting the vast majority of shifts from white to nonwhite residence. p. 113 trans. neigh.; prop. val.: (Conclusions) The amount of absentee activity is more notable because, while it was not exceptionally large, neither was it especially small. Although market experts evidently did not find the area unusually inviting, they were not fearful that the effect of Negro entry on house prices would preclude profitable transactions. This may be the most effective evidence to refute the notion that Negro entry always lowers prices. p. 113 trans. neigh.: The most logical areas to undergo racial change, prejudices considered, were on the periphery of established nonwhite sections where a point of contact had been established, and change, since it was expected, was usually not strongly resisted. Thus, in the study areas of transition was the natural extension of existing Negro neighborhoods. p. 114 trans. neigh.: In the study areas, sales that opened blocks or neighborhoods were frequently made by professional traders and other absentee owners who presumably were subject to less community pressure than were owner-occupants. Generally speaking, however, the initial sales were made by ordinary homeowners who did not explore the possibility of selling to Negroes until it became evident that white buyers willing to pay a satisfactory price could not be found. p. 114 trans. neigh.: As the border of the Negro community moved closer and closer to a given street front, white buyers were harder to find. Owners who had to move from the area may have preferred to sell to white families, but were unable to do so. p. 115

hsing. cond.: Initially, in fact, the age and quality of the houses may have been the most important factor limiting white demand, and, thus, promoting Negro entry. p. 115

vio.: Negro entry into white blocks was also encouraged by the absence of violence directed toward nonwhite purchasers, a response that has accompanied Negro residential expansion in most sections of the city. The vigerous action of the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations which has stopped many potential disturbances in their nascent stages may have been aprincipal deterrent to violence in some areas, but it is also true that exceedingly few Negroes entered neighborhoods in which the danger signs were clear. In the study areas, there were few reported instances of hostile action toward first Negro entrants who, by and large, reported a reasonably friendly attitude on the part of white residents. This is not to suggest that there was no opposition to Negro entry, but that were very few ugly incidents. p. 115

integr. neigh.: The white families who purchased homes were very much like other homeowners in the areas and similar to home purchasers in the rest of Philadelphia...These purchasers were not motivated by a drive to symbolize racial democracy, and in fact, many of them were not pleased by the presence of Negroes in their neighborhood. p. 115

finan.: As far as the structure of prices and home financing is concerned, Negroes and whites paid approximately the same prices for comparable houses; the usual institutional sources of mortgage funds were available to finance the purchases; and mortgage terms were extremely liberal by any standard. p. 115 prop. val.: Equally important, the entry of Negroes was not accompanied by price declines; on the contrary, there were substantial increases in home values. p. 116 trans. neigh.: But perhaps the most important reservation of all is the fact that the number of white purchasers was not sufficient to keep the population in these areas from becoming increasingly nonwhite. p. 116 trans. neigh. (rate): Rather differences in rates (of transition) are due to variations in all the factors analyzed in the previous chapters which affect the level of white demand, the level of Negro demand, the number and race of families who wish to sell their homes, and the interaction of these three variables. Indeed, the factors which control these variables not only fix the rate of transition, but also determine whether it will occur at all. p. 117 trans. neigh. (rate): Rapid transition in the study areas was the product of numerous influences: liberal mortgage terms, sustained Negro demand, a substantial supply of old houses of fair quality and moderate value, rising prices, considerable activity by professional real estate operators, and ready availability of high-quality housing for whites in other sections of the city and in the suburbs. p. 117 trans. neigh.: These sections (slow transition) contain a larger proportion of rental units, a greater amount of land in commercial use, higher-priced homes, and parochial schools where the percentage of nonwhite students was relatively low at the time of the study. p. 117

rac. quota: The predictions of white families concerning the eventual racial mix of a neighborhood and their apprehensions regarding the possibility of inundation may be more significant than any other factor in determining the level of white demand. Yet it is largely the level of white demand that determines the eventual racial mix. p. 118

rac. quota: Although the data are by no means conclusive, they suggest that the threshold is rather low, perhaps much lower than the proportion of Negroes in the population of the city. Thus, although a hard core of whites might remain and a few more move to the area for a variety of reasons, the prospect is that the proportion of Negroes in such areas will gradually increase. If this is the typical case, it implies a pattern of predominantly Negro communities interspersed throughout the city. p. 119

Hsing. pref.: As the housing shortage for Negroes eases, nonwhites may lack the incentive to pioneer their way into new areas. Thus, although segregation may disappear, congegation may not. p. 120 urban renewal; eco. pot.: Although rising incomes and increased market freedom may enable many nonwhite families to leave the ghettos, the racial composition of existing Negro communities will remain unchanged, for it is not likely that white families can be attracted to them. Such an occurance would be counter to virtually all past experience and cannot be expected until urban renewal programs materially alter existing nonwhite residential areas. p. 120

eco. pot.; hsing. owner.: Thus, Negro-white competition for housing will be concentrated to a large extent in price ranges below the minimum for new construction. Demand from these groups, therefore, will be limited to moderate-priced units in the existing stock. p.1 p. 120 integ. neigh.: Consequently, many whites in the lower-middle-income groups who might prefer to move from mixed areas will have a diminishing number of all-white neighborhoods available to them and, as a result, rapid change in neighborhood composition will be inhibited. Moreover, if pending legislation is enacted requiring home builders, and perhaps owners of existing housing and real estate brokers as well, to pursue a policy of nondiscrimination, the incentive for whites to move from existing mixed areas may be greatly reduced as alternative opportunities disappear. p. 120, 121

integ. neigh.; prej.: It has been noted that many whites did not think of themselves as living in mixed areas even though they knew there were Negroes only a block away. This may well be a precursor to a more pervasive change in attitude. p. 121 prop. val. (Mt. Airy): Available statistics, therefore, indicate that there may have been a moderate decline in prices in West Mount Airy subsequent to entry by Negro families. This is in marked contrast with the situation in various other sections of the city where average sale prices have tended to rise following the influx of Negroes. (from Appendix A on West Mt. Airy - figures all from 1955 or 1956 as latest reports). p. 131

finan.: In the other mixed neighborhoods which we studied, mortgage lenders pursued a policy of extending favorable terms to their new customers, evidently with the view of capturing as much as possible of the growing Negro market. In West Mount Airy, however, the evidence suggests that Negroes as a group received decidedly less favorable mortgage terms than did whites. p. 132

prej. (Mt. Airy): In West Mount Airy, however, the out-migration of whites seems to have been prompted mainly by considerations other than unwillingness to live in a racially mixed neighborhood. p. 134

integ. neigh. (Mr. Airy): In 1953, in response to an increase in the number of homes placed on the market, an active campaign was initiated by community leaders to discourage homeowners from making hasty and ill-considered sales and to urge them to reappraise their responses to their new Negro neighbors. These efforts together with the unattractive price offers made by would-be buyers seem to have encouraged many to withdraw their properties from the market. p. 135

integ. neigh.: The Pelham Council drew up a broad program directed toward allaying popular fears of the consequences of racial transition, encouraging residents to accept the presence of Negroes in the neighborhood and discouraging questionable practices among real estate agents. p. 136

integ. neigh.: factors tending to stabilize Mt. Airy:
1. The existing Negro population is a relatively small part of the total population in the area...
2. There is no established all-Negro neighborhood in the immediate vicinity and, therefore, out-migration may be expected to take place at a slow rate if at all...

3. The predominance of detached dwelling units tends to make contact among neighbors volitional rather than inevitable...
4. Relatively few Negroes in the Philadelphia area have incomes large enough to purchase dwellings in West Mount Airy at the prevailing level of prices...
5. The high social and occupational status of the Negro families makes them in every objective sense eminently desirable members of the community and facilitates their acceptance both by white residents and by potential white purchasers.
6. The attitudes of the white residents are moderately sympathetic and the neighborhood organizations promoting stability are strong and effective. pp. 137,138 integ. neigh.: Finally, nonwhite entry into the white zone (of West Mt. Airy) if it takes place at all may not occur for a number of years by which time white families will have grown accustomed to Negro neighborhoods, and increased market freedom will enable Negroes to choose houses in many sections of the city. p. 138

THE HIDDEN DIMENSION

By Edward T. Hall

Doubleday & Company, Inc., Garden City, New York, 1966. pp. xiv + 201

bkgd.: It is increasingly apparent that clashes between cultural systems are not restricted to international relations. Such clashes are assuming significant proportions within our own country and are exacerbated by the overcrowding in cities. For, contrary to common belief, the many diverse groups that make up our country have proved to be surprisingly persistent in maintaining their separate identities. p. x

bkgd.; commun.: Since two languages often program the same class of events quite differently, no belief or philosophical system should be considered apart from language. p. 2

commun.: They strike at the root of the doctrine of "free will," because they indicate that all men are captives of the language they speak as long as they take their language for granted. p. 2

commun.; hsing. cond.: Selective screening of sensory data admits some things while filtering out others, so that experience as it is perceived through one set of culturally patterned sensory screens is quite different from experience perceived through another. The architectural and urban environments that people create are expressions of this filtering-screening process. In fact, from these man-altered environments, it is possible to learn how different peoples use their senses. Experience, therefore, cannot be counted on as a stable point of reference, because it occurs in a setting that has been molded by man. p. 2 design/ fut.; commun.: Man is now in the position of actually creating the total world in which he lives, what the ethologists refer to as his biotope. In creating this world he is actually determining what kind of an organism he will be. This is a frightening thought in view of how very little is known about man. It also means that, in a very deep sense, our cities are creating different types of people in their slums, mental hospitals, prisons, and suburbs. These subtle interactions make the problems of urban renewal and the integration of minorities into the dominant culture more difficult than is often anticipated. Similarly, our lack of full understanding of the relation of peoples and their biotope is compounding the process of technical development of the so-called underdeveloped nations of the world. p. 4 hsing. cond.; vio.: Normally, aggression leads to proper spacing of animals, lest they become so numerous as to destroy their environment and themselves along with it. When crowding becomes too great after population buildups, interactions intensify, leading to greater and greater stress. As psychological and emotional stress builds up and tempers wear thin, subtle but powerful changes occur in the chemistry of the body. Births drop while deaths progressively increase until a state known as population collapse occurs. Such cycles of buildup and collapse are now generally recognized as normal for the warm-blooded vertebrates and possibly for all life. p. 5 hsing. cond.; design/ fut.; human res.: Each world has its own set of sensory inputs, so that what crowds people of one culture does not necessarily crowd another. Similarly, an act that releases aggression and would therefore be stressful to one poeple may be neutral to the next. Nevertheless, it is fairly obvious that the American Negroes and people of Spanish culture who are flocking to our cities are being very seriously stressed. Not only are they in a setting that does not fit them, but they have passed the limits of their own tolerance to stress. The United States is faced with the fact that two of its creative and sensitive peoples are in the process of being destroyed, and like Samson could bring down the structure that houses us all.

Thus, it must be impressed upon architects, city planners, and builders that if this country is to avoid catastrophy, we must begin seeing man as an interlocutor with his environment, an environment which these same planners, architects, and builders are now creating with little reference to man's proxemic needs. (proxemic: author's term for "interrelated observations and theories of man's use of space as a specialized elaboration of culture.") p. 5

design/ fut.; urb. ren.: To those of us who produce the income and pay the taxes which support government, I say that whatever the cost of rebuilding our cities, this cost will have to be met if America is to survive. p. 6

commun.; urb. ren.: Most important, the rebuilding of our cities must be based upon research which leads to an understanding of man's needs and a knowledge of the many sensory worlds of the different groups of people who inhabit American cities. p. 6

commun.: There is a great need to revise and broaden our view of the human situation, a need to be both more comprehensive and more realistic, not only about others, but about ourselves as well. It is essential that we learn to read the silent communications as easily as the printed and spoken ones. Only be doing so can we also reach other people, both inside and outside our national boundaries, as we are increasingly required to do. p. 6

bkgd.: Territoriality, a basic concept in the study of animal behavior, is usually defined as behavior by which an organism characteristically lays claim to an area and defends it against members of its own species. p. 7

hsing. cond.; bkgd.: As we have already seen, all animals have a minimum space requirement, without which survival is impossible. This is the "critical space" of the organism. When the population has built up so greatly that the critical space is no longer available, a "critical situation" develops. The simplest way of handling the situation is to remove some individuals. p. 15 commun.: One consequence of the loss of olfaction as an important medium of communication was an alteration in the relationship between humans. It may have endowed man with greater capacity to withstand crowding. If humans had noses like rats, they would be forever tied to the full array of emotional shifts occuring in persons around them. p. 36

hum. res.: Man's sense of space is closely related to his sense of self, which is in an intimate transaction with his environment. Man can be viewed as having visual, kinesthetic, tactile, and thermal aspects of his self which may be either inhibited or encouraged to develop by his environment. p. 60

commun.; design/ fut.: The problem facing us today in designing and rebuilding our cities is understanding the needs of large numbers of people. We are building huge apartment houses and mammoth office buildings with no understanding of the needs of the occupants. p. 100 hsing. cond.; design/ future: The important point about fixed-feature space is that it is the mold into which a great deal of behavior is cast. It was this feature of space that the late Sir Winston Churchill referred to when he said: "We shape our buildings and they shape us." p. 100

vio.: When stress increases, sensitivity to crowding rises - people get more on edge - so that more and more space is required as less and less is available. p. 122

design/ fut.; urb. ren.; commun.: American city planners and builders are now in the process of designing cities in other countries with very little idea of people's spatial needs and practically no inkling that these needs vary from culture to culture. The chances of forcing whole populations into molds that do not fit are very great indeed. Within the United States urban renewal and the many crimes against humanity that are committed in its name usually demonstrate total ignorance of how to create congenial environments for the diverse populations that are pouring into our cities. p. 122

hsing. cond.; commun.: In considering solutions to problems such as urban renewal and city sinks it is essential to know how the populations involved perceive space and how they use their senses. p. 138

commun.: Proxemic patterns play a role in man comparable to display behavior among lower life forms; that is, they simultaneously consolidate the group and isolate it from others by on the one hand reinforcing intragroup identity and on the other making intergroup communication more difficult. Even though man may be physiologically and genetically one species, the proxemic patterns of the Americans and the Japanese often strike one as being as disparate as the territorial display patterns of the American grouse and the Australian bowerbirds described in Chapter II. p. 139

hsing cond.; bkgd.: Studies of ethology and comparative proxemics should alert us to the dangers ahead as our rural populations pour into urban centers. The adjustment of these people is not just economic but involves an entire way of life. There are added complexities of dealing with strange communication systems, uncongenial spaces, and the pathology associated with an active, swelling behavioral sink. p. 155

socioeco.; commun.: The lower-class Negro in the United States poses very special problems in his adjustment to city living, which if they are not solved may well destroy us by making our cities uninhabitable. An often overlooked fact is that lower-class Negroes and middle-class whites are culturally distinct from each other...The differences between these minority groups and the dominant culture are basic and have to do with such core values as the use and structuring of space, time, and materials, all of which are learned early in life. p. 155

socioeco.; commun.; hsing cond: Now even if it were possible to abolish all prejudice and discrimination and erase a disgraceful past, the lower-class Negro in American cities would still be confronted with a syndrome that is currently extremely stressful: the sink (popularly referred to as "the jungle"), the existence of great cultural differences between himself and the dominant white middle class of America and a completely foreign biotope. p. 156

pub. hsing; socioeco.: Consider the public housing constructed for low income groups in Chicago which has tended to dress up and hide but not solve the basic problem. Bear in mind that the low income population which is pouring into Chicago and many other American cities is largely Negro and comes from rural areas or small towns in the South. Most of these people have had no tradition or experience in urban living. Like the Puerto Ricans and Appalachian whites, many of the Negroes also suffer from a totally inadequate education. Row after row of high-rise apartments is less distressing to look at than slums but more disturbing to live in than much of what it replaced. The Negroes have been particularly outspoken in their condemnation of high-rise housing. All they see in it is white domination, a monument to a failure in ethnic relations. p. 158, 159

socioeco.: The open market place with all its activity seems more suitable to the proxemic needs of the Negro than crowded American stores which are enclosed by walls and windows. p. 159

design/ future: In other words, I think that it will ultimately be proved that scale is a key factor in planning towns, neighborhoods, and housing developments. Most important, urban scale must be consistent with ethnic scale, since each ethnic group seems to have developed its own scale. p. 159

urb. ren.; socioeco.: The Boston West End was a device for turning immigrant villagers into city dwellers, a process which required about three generations. If it had to be "renewed" a more satisfactory solution would have been renovation rather than destruction of the entire neighborhood, which encompassed not only buildings but social systems as well. For when urban renewal forced removal to more modern but less integrated spaces, a significant number of Italians became depressed and apparently lost much of their interest in life. p. 160

hsing. cond.: In the last few years the sizes of dwelling spaces have had a way of slipping unnoticed from barely adequate to completely inadequate as economic and other pressures increase. p. 160

socioeco.; bkgd.; design/ future: The degree to which peoples are sensorially involved with each other, and how they use time, determine not only at what point they are crowded but the methods for relieving crowding as well. Puerto Ricans and Negroes have a much higher involvement ratio than New Englanders and Americans of German or Scandinavian stock. Highly involved people apparently require higher densities than less involved people, and they may also require more protection and screening from outsiders. It is absolutely essential that we learn more about how to compute the maximum, ninimum, and optimum density of the different cultural enclaves that make up our cities. p. 162

design/ future; vio; self-help: City planners should go even further in creating congenial spaces that will encourage and strengthen the cultural enclave. This will serve two purposes: first, it will assist the city and the enclave in the transformation process that takes place generation by generation as country folk are converted to city dwellers; and second, it will strengthen social controls that combat lawlessness. As it is now, we have built lawlessness into our enclaves by letting them turn into sinks. p. 163

vio.; design/ future: In the course of planning our new cities and revamping our old ones, we might consider positively reinforcing man's continuing need to belong to a social group akin to the old neighborhood where he is known, has a place, and where people have a sense of responsibility for each other. Apart from the ethnic enclave, virtually everything about American cities today is sociofugal and drives men apart, alienating them from each other. The recent and shocking instances in which people have been beaten and even murdered while their "neighbors" looked on without even picking up a phone indicates how far this trend toward alienation has progressed. p. 163 design/ future: Automobiles insulate man not only from the environment but from human contact as well. They permit only the most limited types of interaction, usually competitive, aggressive, and destructive. If people are to be brought together again, given a chance to get acquainted with each other and involved in nature, some fundamental solutions must be found to the problems posed by the automobile. p.166

hsing. cond.; hum. res.: As now constituted, the American city is extraordinarily wasteful, emptying itself each night and every weekend. One would think that efficiency-minded Americans could do better. The result of the suburbanization of our cities is that the remaining residents are now predominantly the overcrowded impoverished and the very rich, with a sprinkling of holdouts from the middle class. As a result, the city is very unstable. p. 167

commun.; hum. res.; design/ future: Making constructive use of the ethnic enclave. Somehow there is a close identification between the image that man has of himself and the space that he inhabits. Much of today's popular literature devoted to the search for identity reflects this relationship. A very real effort should be made to discover and satisfy the needs of the Spanish American, the Negro, and other ethnic groups so that the spaces which they inhabit are not only compatible with their needs but reinforce the positive elements of their culture that help to provide identity and strength. p. 167, 168

design/ future: The great danger in the United States today is the continuing destruction of the outdoors. p. 168

vio.: Solving the problem of the outdoors and man's need for contact with nature is complicated by the increasing incidence of crime and violence associated with our city sinks. Parks and beaches are daily becoming more dangerous. This only intensifies the sense of crowding which urban residents experience when they are cut off from recreational facilities. p. 168

urb. ren.; design/ future: 4. Preserving useful, satisfying old buildings and neighborhoods from "the bomb" of urban renewal. Not all new things are necessarily good nor are all old things bad. There are many places in our cities - sometimes only a few houses or a cluster of houses - which deserve to be preserved. They afford continuity with the past and they lend variety to our townscapes. p. 168

commun.: We learn from the study of culture that the patterning of perceptual worlds is a function not only of culture, but of relationship, activity and emotion. Therefore, people from different cultures, when interpreting each other's behavior, often misinterpret the relationship, the activity, or the emotions. This leads to alienation in encounters or distorted communications. p. 171

bkgd.: In fact, it is believed by many that American Negroes have not culture of their own simply because the visibly explicit content of their culture has been reduced. p. 172

commun.: For example, I have recently been conducting research on non-verbal communications between lower-class Negroes and lower middle-class whites. Differences in the handling of time represent a very common source of misunderstanding. In addition, the voice, the feet, hands, eyes, body, and space are all handled differently, which often causes even highly motivated Negroes to fail to get jobs for which they apply. These failures are not always because of prejudice, but can be traced to instances where both parties misread each other's behavior. In general, the Negro communications my students and I have been studying tend to be quite subtle so that even the signs of reflecting the strength of the Negro's desire for a particular job may go undetected by the white interviewers who are looking for strong motivation as an important indicator that the applicant would do well. At times like these one can demonstrate the danger of over-emphasizing content. The Negro is well aware of the fact that his white interlocutor is not "reading him." What he doesn't know is that while he may be more aware of the nuances of white-Negro interaction than the white man, there are many, many points at which he too is being miscued. p. 172

bkgd.; hsing. cond.; socioeco.: Because we Americans apparently direct our attention more toward content than structure or form, the importance of culture is often minimized. We tend to overlook the influence of the form of a building on the people in it, or the results of overcrowding on Negroes, or the consequences of having one's senses conditioned by Negro culture while trying to cope with "white" teachers and "white" educational materials. p. 173 commun.; socioeco.: Most important, we have consistently failed to accept the reality of different cultures within our national boundaries. Negroes, Indians, Spanish Americans, and Puerto Ricans are treated as though they were recalcitrant, undereducated, middle-class Americans of northern European heritage instead of what they really are: members of culturally differentiated enclaves with their own communication systems, institutions, and values. Because we Americans have an "a-cultural bias" we believe only in the superficial differences between the peoples of the world. p. 173

bkgd.: The animal studies also teach us that crowding per se is neither good nor bad, but rather that overstimulation and disruptions of social relationships as a consequence of overlapping personal distances lead to population collapse. p. 175

hsing. cond.: Proper screening can reduce both the disruption and the overstimulation, and permits much higher concentrations of populations. Screening is what we get from rooms, apartments, and buildings in cities. Such screening works until several individuals are crowded into one room; then a drastic change occurs. The walls no longer shield and protect, but instead press inward on the inhabitants. p. 175

hsing. cond.; commun.; vio.: Through a process of taming, most higher organisms, including man, can be squeezed into a given area provided that they feel safe and their aggressions are under control. However, if men are fearful of each other, fear resurrects the flight reaction, creating an explosive need for space. Fear, plus, crowding, then produces panic. p. 175

THE RESURGENT NEIGHBORHOOD

By James V. Cunningham

Fides Publishers, Inc., Notre Dame, Indiana, 1965. pp. 1 - 224.

design/ future: Out of this experience has come the conviction that the local neighborhood community, renewed and developed in some new form now about to emerge, has a substantial contribution to make in the lives of urban people. This conviction applies with equal force to inner-city neighborhoods affected by delinquency, poverty, and race tension, and to suburban neighborhoods burdened with monotonous housing and the tensions of status seeking. p. 5 self-help; pol.: The author believes that voluntary participation and creative citizen leadership, joined with competent official action, is the basic key to developing strong urban neighborhoods. The good will and leadership potential of neighborhood people is one of our most important urban assets. p. 7 self-help: Government alone does not have the time, money or know-how to do the whole job of urban development. Nor would it be good for the nation if government could do this job alone, for it is from participation, the citizen taking on responsibility, that some of the deepest psychological needs of men are served and sense of community developed. p. 38

urb. ren.; hum. res.: Deep-down renewal of a slum, beyond mere surface physical change, depends in large part on the kind of leadership that can rise up out of the slums themselves. p. 46

integ. neigh.: The most difficult part of the transformation of slums is going to be the thawing out of the ghetto glacier and the accomplishment of racial integration where today there is none. The will to do this does not yet seem to exist among political leaders or neighborhood people, white or Negro. The knowledge of how to plan and achieve it is only dimly perceived. p. 47

pol.; discr. in services: The Negro protest movement now growing in most slums is probably the force which will not only compel the metropolis to establish links with the slum and give it the services it needs, but also will build a sense of solidarity and community within the slum. p. 48

prej.: If somehow the ethnic neighborhood could lose its narrowness, particularly its racial hostility, and build on its great strengths, it could probably regain vitality and make a substantial contribution to the modern metropolis. p. 50

hsing. pref.; trans. neigh.: Neighborhoods of this kind (old ethnic) offer good living opportunities for families of modest income. Among their features are: small, economical remodelled houses; convenience to job and to the services and culture of the central core; familiar, fully developed institutions at hand. These are assets on which to build a neighborhood of considerable attraction. p. 53

integ. neigh.; eco. pot.: As the education, income, social expectations, and militancy of Negroes increase, and fair housing laws become more numerous and better enforced, the number of move-ins is going to increase. Planning is needed to ensure the dispersion of these move-ins so that no suburb will be turned into a new ghetto. p. 60

urb. ren.: There is no single formula of renewal that can be applied to any and every piece. The strengths, weaknesses, and peculiarities of each must guide the making of a unique plan for that area. Different kinds of neighborhoods need different kinds of strategy to achieve the services, links and sense of community and integration essential to a successful modern neighborhood. p. 67

hsing. cond.; socioeco.; integ. neigh.? — The upgrading of the neighborhood's housing in condition and price undoubtedly has aided the building of an interracial character since Negroes of middle- and upper-income are limited, and integration is more easily achieved under high social and economic circumstances. The expensive new apartments and town-houses built on land cleared by urban renewal have been integrated with particular succes. (Hyde-Park-Kenwood, Chicago). p. 81

integ. neigh. (Hyde Park Kenwood): — The changes and improvements that have occurred, however, are so great that morale is up. A sense of well-being has settled over many citizens. At the same time, paradoxically, community organizations like the (Hyde Park-Kenwood) Conference find citizen participation down, and much of the old fire of civic leadership waning, as the sense of urgency declines. This weakening of civic fervor affects the sense of community. p. 82

hsing. - pri. fin.: — The average suburb is a residential place where younger adults with economic stability are attempting to find a pleasant way of life. They have chosen to find it here because of the American dream that equates newness, space, grass, trees, absence of factories, with the good life. p. 106

urb. ren.: — Several new, serious attempts are being made by tough-minded, imaginative urban strategists to find such an approach (i.e., to making sound neighborhood communities out of troubled living areas)...In all approaches the key pieces are citizens, resources, and professional staff. p. 116

urb. ren.: — The neighborhood conservation approach comes directly out of city hal, the social invention approach out of a private, nonprofit civic organization closely allied to city hall.
The "self-determination" and "neighborhood urban extension" approaches put emphasis on citizens becoming alert, organized, and able themselves to locate and draw on the resources needed to build their neighborhoods.

discr./ services; urb. ren.: — City government moved in (NYC) to help these neighborhoods by stepping up public and private services and making these readily available from a neighborhood city hall; by having a settlement house, church, hospital, or university in each neighborhood sponsor the local program as a partner with the city; and by obtaining, through the sponsor, widespread citizen participation. (neighborhood conservation) p. 118

discr./ services; urb. ren.: — The director of the neighborhood staff (NYC) became an unofficial neighborhood "mayor" whose job was to put to work and coordinate all the services of the city and private agencies. (neighborhood conservation) p. 119

pub. hsing.; integ. neigh.; discr./ services: — Economic and racial integration was strengthened by modernizing some deteriorating buildings for use as public housing. This made it possible for low-income families to live under decent standards in nonproject buildings. Improved sanitation services, including daily garbage pickup and street flushings, were provided in all neighborhoods. Among some of the experimental services were a neighborhood narcotics rehabilitation center, and a diagnostic and referral service for elderly residents. (neighborhood conservation - NYC) p. 119

urb. ren.: — "Slow in developing the projects were inhibited by personnel shortages, population mobility, lags in code enforcement, and the failure of staff and volunteers to bridge cultural and economic barriers." (quote from Harry C. Harris, director, NYC Neighborhood Conservation effort). p. 120

urb. ren.: In addition to slowness in developing citizen participation, other difficulties were encountered in the seven neighborhoods. Relocation cut strong cultural and emotional ties for some families and brought social problems to the surface which could not always be remedied. Low-cost financing for modernization of buildings was not forthcoming. New construction of middle-income housing was not achieved. Success was incomplete in the sanitation program. Crime was cut, but gambling, prostitution, and, surprisingly, bootlegging, continued. Relations between the races improved, but housing segregation continued rigid. Techniques tried were inadequate for helping families in deep poverty. (NY neighborhood conservation) p. 121

urb. ren.; discr./ services: This neighborhood conservation approach appears to have in it some promise for helping create strong neighborhood communities out of gray areas...and it demonstrates the need and wisdom of localizing municipal services. Its principal strength comes from the direct commitment of city government. Citizens play a limited role. p. 122

urb. ren.: The second approach, which also puts emphasis on services furnished to people, is the social invention approach; it has been given large-scale support by the Ford Foundation and local foundations in each city where the approach is being tested. p. 122

urb. ren.; schools; hsing - local govt.: "Our hunch is that this (central business dist. of city) is not necessarily the place to start, and is certainly not the place to stop. Crudely done, slum clearance and downtown redevelopment can actually harm rather than help the city's main business of producing first-class citizens. What the bulldozer in insensitive hands can mean to the residents of demolished neighborhoods is already painfully evident. in the growing record of school transiency and residential displacement. We have placed the Foundation's first bet not on the central business district of the city but on its school system, on their administration of justice, and on a growing list os similarly critical 'production processes' which are currently bottlenecks in the process of citizen-building." (Ford Foundation philosophy as expressed by Paul Ylvisaker.) p. 123

hsing - local, state govt; urb. ren.: Local and state governments have taken the initiative in beginning these new organizations, which are closely allied with city halls and state capitols. In working to modernize resources, they have the leverage of political power as well as Foundation millions. p. 124

hsing - local govt.: These new organizations often operate by setting up demonstration projects to meet needs in new ways, by involving old-line resources in carrying out the demonstrations, and then by leaving the successful new ways of operating to be adopted by the resorces as standard methods. p. 124

discr./ services; self-help: Under this approach experts move into a neighborhood and begin to furnish imaginative new services to help people develop and neighborhoods to improve. Some local people may be hired as staff assistants to help spread word of the new services to their neighbors. And citizen committees may be formed to help carry out the services. p. 125

urb. ren.: More than the other three methods described in this chapter, this approach (i.e., social invention) takes a metropolitan view of problems, but it too finds the neighborhood the effective action area for most of its programs. p. 126

urb. ren.; discr./ services: (See Ylvisaker's speech outlining possible tasks for social invention with Ford Foundation's money)
"...adapting techniques borrowed fromaagricultural extension work to the needs and circumstances of an urban clientele, in such areas as health, family budgeting and home management, legal aid, credit use, house repair and rehabilitation, and a variety of others;...finding constructive alternatives to present systems of high-density public housing and permanent-dependency welfare payments..." p. 126

pol.: Neighborhood citizens are encouraged and assisted to organize as part of the social invention approach, and their suggestions are listened to, but they seldom play a central decision-making role. Their role seems to be more one of communication and support. p. 127 pol.; self-help; urb. ren.: The third approach is the self-determination approach of the Industrial Areas Foundation (IAF) in Chicago. IAF's approach is marked by conflict, militant action, a stance of demanding from rather than working cooperatively with the resources of metropolis, and considerable citizen involvement. p. 127 self-help; pol.: Working with disdain toward other approaches to neighborhood development, IAF rejects many of the concepts and methods of city planning and urban renewal and insists that neighborhood people work out their own destiny by hiring their own planners. The Woodlawn Organization (Chicago) has attacked city government, credit merchants, slum landlords, and the expansion plans of its neighbor, the University of Chicago. p. 129 self-help; pol.: "In the development of an organization for democratic participation...resentments and dormant hostilities must be brought up to visible surface where they can become transformed into problems...

...A people do not break through their previous fatalism of submerged resentment and frustration into open problems which can be faced and dealt with, until they have a mechanism or a formula for effectively coping with these problems. Since their only resource lies in their numbers, organization becomes the instrument for implementation of change and resolution of these problems."
(quote from Saul Alinsky re: philosophy of IAF) p. 129, 130 pol.: "Mutual recognition of power is the necessary prelude to negotiation. In a meeting of negotiations the people enter with dignity of recognition as equals; they are not pleading inferiors, to be satisfied with less than their legitimate rights..." (Alinsky) p. 131

pol.: The (Woodlawn) organization not only pickets landlords' homes but also their churches or temples while they are inside attending service. p. 131

pol.; self-help: Dealing forthrightly with controversial issues, building neighborhood power and using it militantly, and generating conflicting viewpoints would seem to be essential in beginning a development effort when the negative forces of deprivation, injustice, and discrimination are so intense and complex; but one wonders whether permanent tension between neighborhood community and metropolitan community, with one neighborhood demanding consideration above others, would not in the long run only worsen and intensify the negative forces. (ref. to Alinsky's approach) p. 132

urb. ren.; self-help; hsing - local govt.: The fourth technique in this survey is Pittsburgh's neighborhood urban extension approach, built upon deep citizen involvement, and the modernization and utilization of metropolitan resources. (the author's approach) p. 133

hsing - pri. fin.; finan.: The principal tool used by ACTION-Housing to aid private builders is its Pittsburgh Development Fund, a revolving loan fund which provides seed money for the construction of private sales- and rental-housing for moderate-income families, as well as the stimulation of large-scale home modernization. p. 134 self-help: A staff man, the neighborhood extension worker, helps citizens begin to understand the complex problems, assists them in making plans, and helps them to get the vast resources of the metropolis extended into their neighborhood. p. 135 self-help; pol.: This approach (equal partnership in and responsibility for neighborhood redevelopment) is built on the principle that from participation in decision-making and organized action comes citizen responsibility. p. 135 self-help; pol.: Neighborhood urban extension seeks to create initiative in neighborhood people for revolutionary changes, and then to achieve these changes through self-help and cooperative links to the urban establishment. Needed services are planned for and sought with the neighborhood people working cooperatively but firmly with city government and other resources. When all else fails neighborhood urban extension uses militant action. p. 141 self-help: A key element in all approaches is this trained neighborhood professional. Probably no large urban effort can go far without his leadership. The tendency is to have more and more of such professionals recruited from the neighborhoods and trained on the job. (re: staff) p. 142 self-help; pol.; hum. res.: The new organization (ACTION-Housing, Pitts.) sought to do three things. First, find and develop a large number of neighborhood leaders; second, develop a strong, long-range plan; three, solve certain short-range problems right away. The philosophy of this program from the beginning was one of maximum self-help - people acquiring skills, acting for themselves and for their neighborhood, using their own efforts but also utilizing the governments, corporations, and organizations of the whole metropolis, and learning from the neighborhood extension worker. Through this broadened concept of self-help the organization has sought to build enlightened, responsible citizen-leaders able to work effectively with the private and public power of all Pittsburgh. p. 149

hum. res.; trans. neigh.: Three dozen people (Homewood-Brushton, Pitts.) serving on planning committees came to see that a neighborhood in decline for more than forty years, suffering from out-of-date houses and streets, from mixtures of stores, factories, and homes in the same blocks, from the tensions of racial panic and segregation, from all the urban pressures of our time, is not revived and made tranquil and handsome in a day - or a year. To find new life, they realized, a neighborhood must plan ahead for ten, twenty, or even thirty years. p. 153

rac. quotas: There would be revealed, also, a lack of decision on the question of restoring racial balance. There are many views on this: some feel a racial balance is desirable but first full attention must be given to renewal; some say it makes no difference, the important thing is an orderly, attractive neighborhood; and others oppose a balance since it would reduce housing available to Negroes. (Pitts.) p. 156

pol.: Neighborhood leaders have strong, direct contact with the school superintendent, city councilmen, the mayor, and other decision makers. They freely make criticism of the urban establishment. But the neighborhood probably also needs an independent political arm of the kind that elected Abner Mikva (Hyde Park-Kenwood repre.). (Homewood-Brushton, Pitts.) p. 156

urb. ren.: The stage is ready for drastic physical and social change. This change is made inevitable by the force now generated by the leadership mobilized, the relationships built between white and Negro neighborhood leaders, the sound long-range plan, the links with downtown agencies, the vigorous professional staff, and the aggressive renewal council organization. Emerging slowly out of the gray is a modern new Homewood-Brushton. p. 156

urb. ren.: The payment of full compensation - to cover intangible as well as tangible losses and to make possible no increased expense to the relocatee - seems only basic justice. p. 161

urb. ren.: The important matter is that the relocated family end up in good housing in a good neighborhood, and that it do so as a matter of right for hardship suffered on behalf of society, and not as a matter of charity. p. 161

urb. ren.; integ. neigh.: As urban development has gone forward since 1949, segregation by race has intensified within the city's neighborhoods and Negroes have not yet been able to move into the suburbs in any numbers. The relocation that has been part of urban development has definitely contributed to this apartheid pattern. A great opportunity has been missed here - and a greater one is still before us - to use relocation as a tool for promoting neighborhood integration. p. 163

pub. hsing; socioeco.: The twin tragedies of intensified segregation and urban ugliness merge in a monstrous mistake like Chicago's massive wall of Negro public housing which runs unbroken for five miles along the city's new Dan Ryan Expressway. Such ghettos are rigid class islands which break the metropolis apart, destroy its sense of community.

pub. hsing; design/ future: Public housing should be woven into existing neighborhoods, with one promising method being the purchase and modernizing of existing housing as is being done in Philadelphia. p. 164

urb. ren.: Expressways of magnificent size have crisscrossed through every metropolis but they do not always turn out to be in the right place. They often cut living areas apart, flood cars into small streets, block vistas, and produce new ugliness. p. 167

pol.; viol: The festering seriousness of these social problems has been forced into the open by the marches and picketing of the Negro war of protest, by rent strikes, and by the violence of the young who are out of work and out of patience with society. p. 167

integ. neigh.; Amer. princi.: Probably the greatest contribution the Church has to make to the renewal of metropolis and the development of virile neighborhoods is in helping to create and strengthen a sense of community - that fragile, intangible something that binds people of all races, incomes, and religions in an area together in respect, dedication, love, mutual aid, responsibility. p. 172

integ. neigh.; urb. ren.: Revitalization projects with the best long-range chance for success are proving to be those which unite all neighborhood forces - ...Some neighborhood development efforts have been weakened and drained of effectiveness by exclusiveness, prejudice, and antagonism. Church leadership can help prevent this. No matter who originally initiates a neighborhood renewal effort, the program becomes strong as it becomes a community effort shared in by all interests, open to all institutions and individuals, and cominated by none. p. 174

Amer. princi.; urb. ren.: It is the Church's responsibility, not to perform the work of development, but to arouse persons and institutions to do it. The place for the Church today is out in the streets, making its message relevant for urban man by knowing and understanding and dealing with the real problems of city and suburb. The Church has little meaning to man, and is little help to him, unless it understands the contemporary age and the human environment and needs that go with that age. It can only really do this by emersing itself completely in contemporary life, becoming part of it, living it. p. 174

urb. ren.: For the American university to help solve the special problems of this era of exploding urbanism is fully within the university tradition. p. 184

design/ future: Centers are being set up in the populous places around the state (Wisconsin) to provide instruction, research, and extension for the surrounding community, these centers being called "urban experiment stations," in the tradition of the agricultural experiment stations which in past times did so much to develop productive fertilizers, stronger breeds of cattle, and other improved farming methods. Working out of the new urban centers will be multidiscipline research-action teams for dealing with urban problems on a regional basis. p. 186 self-help: One of the most direct ways universities already have been helping urban neighborhoods is through assignment of students to do field work with neighborhood organizations. p. 186

hum. res.; urb. ren.: Wester Psychiatric Institute, affiliated with the University of Pittsburgh, has set up a permanent experimental clinic in Hazelwood-Glenwood. Through this clinic, studies are being made in community psychiatry, focusing on school dropouts and the effects of automation and race tension on urban citizens. In the process, Hazelwood-Glenwood has a powerful resource available for the clinic staff is furnishing some direct mental health services to neighborhood people. p. 187

urb. ren.: Ways universities can aid urban areas:
1....furnish well-educated graduates...sense of dedication, who can take on the multiplying planning and action jobs...
2....can loan specialized personnel and furnish consulting services for urban development efforts...
3....provide special education for action people...
4....do research to discover needed new techniques for solving many urban problems and taking advantage of many urban opportunities.
5....publications...include training manuals, how-to-do-it booklets on home improvement financing, reports on various kinds of urban research.
6....enter the direct-action arena with demonstration projects to show how a new technique can be used.

self-help; pol.: This (citizen) participation not only helps theddemocratic spirit grow, but strengthens the urban development effort. The citizen's knowledge of his own neighborhood, his interest in it, and his imagination can often produce useful information and ideas for the professional planners. Participation helps public projects to meet the real needs of people. It motivates citizens to spend time, money, and effort helping carry out projects, as when they modernize their own homes in a conservation project. And it builds political support for well-conceived projects. p. 194 pol.: Decision-makers, public and private, are often reluctant about sharing their powers. Citizens can force open opportunities for participation and the excitement of such conflict is often useful to arouse the general population to participate. p. 194

pol.: In the long run, however, more is probably accomplished when the top decision-makers in government, business, and private organizations are sympathetic to participation, understand it, and welcome it from the beginning. p. 194, 195

pol.; self-help; urb. ren.: Plans made without participation run two unnecessary risks: 1) they may not meet the real needs of people they are supposed to serve; and 2) even if they do meet real needs, they may generate political opposition and be delayed or destroyed. p. 195

pol.: Participation is being informed, being able to ask questions and get answers, being able to debate and discuss face-to-face with officials (whose technical competence must always be respected). It is careful examination of alternatives and even the formulation of new ones. It is also the ability to accommodate and reach agreement, to give as well as take, to be positive as well as negative, to arrive at a consensus for the common good. p. 199

pol.; self-help: For citizens of a neighborhood to participate in urban development requires an organization and committees. It could not be otherwise in a complex society. But such groups must be free, independent, and constantly striking at real issues. They must have in them representatives of all legitimate neighborhood interests. They must not be afraid of controversy, or of applying strong pressure in support of their views. At the same time that they are fir, they must also be reasonable and fair in dealing with other groups, including public bodies. The aim should always be improvement of the urban community. p. 199, 200

self-help: One of his (neighborhood organizer) major goals is to help neighborhood leaders become wise, articulate operators, independent of himself. p. 201

pol.; hsing-fed. govt.; urb. ren.: The need for men to belong, to be engaged in decisions, to be masters of their own fate is reflected in the development operations of the federal government, now the most important partner of the metropolis. Before a city can receive federal urban renewal funds it must meet a workable program requirement that it have citizen participation in its urban renewal projects. p. 202 self-help: "In theory, the needs being filled are ones which will enable the recipient to become self-reliant, permitting the vicious cycle of dependency and helplessness to be broken. Yet, men with merchantable skills will not necessarily be able to or inclined to cope with the complex society in which they live, let alone participate effectively in the decision-making processes of that society. The mentality of despair, apathy, passivity, and the vulnerability to exploitation, harassment and manipulation will not automatically disappear because a vocational skill has been acquired. Indeed, reinforcement of those patterns may be the price which the customary donor-donee relationship exacts for the service or goods imparted. And this is perhaps the most serious cost of a service orientation: it neglects the poverty of the spirit in ministering to the needs of the flesh." (from Yale Law Journal, edgar and Jean Cahn) p. 203 self-help; pol.: Citizen participation accomplishes two things. First, it is a process through which people can develop many of their talents and become responsible members of their neighborhood community. Second, it is an action tool for the social, physical, and economic revitalization of the neighborhood and the metropolis. p. 203, 204

urb. ren.: In nearly every metropolis, urban renewal and the war on poverty are being put to work neighborhood by neighborhood because this is the way the metropolis is put together. It is at the neighborhood level that people themselves join in such programs and give them vitality. p. 207

design/ future: Residents of suburban neighborhoods are coming to realize that the tiny municipality of which they are a part has inadequate resources to respond well to the needs of people; that there must be associations of local governments, to meet some needs like water supply, refuse disposal, and public transit. Some of these larger needs of suburban neighborhoods are so complicated that perhaps only some form of metropolitan organization can provide the resources to meet them. p. 208

integ. neigh.; prej.: A sense of community is an ingredient which only truly exists when it extends among and between all people - Negro and white, slow and brilliant, poor and wealthy. Racial apartheid is the strongest force acting against a sense of community. It is a divisive force based on emotion and therefore powerful and difficult to counter.

It will be with us a long time; persistent and dedicated resistance, imaginative planning and action, sacrifice and courage are needed to eradicate it. p. 209

design/ future: The neighborhood has a strong role to play for man and metropolis. But it does not serve them if its interest in home ownership and local services is introverted into a kind of isolationism. The good modern neighborhood is a secure springboard, not a hermitage. The neighborhood serves well when it freely opens itself to the world beyond. If it tries to close itself in - whether it is a suburban neighborhood closing out Negroes or an inner-city ghetto closing out planners - it will in time face agony. p. 209

Equality and Beyond: Housing Segregation in the Great Society

RIOTS, RACIAL protests, and rising waves of crime and violence in Los Angeles and other cities across the nation have focused attention upon a problem unique to America—and one which, if not dealt with decisively and soon, can wreak wholesale destruction upon the objectives of the "Great Society." The point at issue is the increasing dominance of Negro ghettos, with all their human problems, at the heart of the nation's metropolitan areas. While racial segregation is by no means new to this country, in recent years it has assumed new dimensions. And the long-smoldering difficulties and disillusionments of a suppressed Negro population have simultaneously taken on new and frightening forms of expression.

The newly emergent pattern of segregation is as simple to describe as it is ominous in its implications. Since the end of World War II, Negroes have rapidly been replacing whites as the dominant population of our greatest cities. Meanwhile, the vast new suburbs growing up around these same urban centers—sharing most of the same problems and feeding upon a common economic base, but separated from the cities politically—have become the residence of an almost exclusively white population. Too many of the suburbanites disavow any concern or responsibility for the cities they have left behind.[1]

Yet the ghettos will not be ignored. To the degree that human problems—economic, social, educational, health—are concentrated in the ghetto, they become self-reinforcing. Exploitation flourishes, since "captive" markets can be forced to pay exorbitant prices for inferior merchandise and services, and continuing Negro population growth presses inexorably upon an inadequate and overage supply of housing. Discouragement and bitterness are the natural expressions. As the Negro ghettos have grown in size, these symptoms of the deeper disease have sometimes reached epidemic proportions.

Unless drastic measures are taken, the ghettos and their problems will continue to grow. They contain within themselves the seeds of their own further expansion. The present urban nonwhite concentrations result only in part from the recent migration of Negroes out of Southern rural areas. They are also the product of natural increase (the excess of births over deaths) among populations already in residence. As a result, even if migration were to cease tomorrow, the ghettos would continue to grow. During the next few years, this trend will be rapid as the postwar "baby boom" reaches maturity and has its own offspring. With this expansion are likely to come greater pressures of people upon available space, and probably more damaging racial explosions.

Today there are very few major cities where Negroes do not constitute a significantly greater proportion than the roughly one-tenth they average across the nation as a whole. In virtually every city they are increasing rapidly. During the 1950's alone, Negro populations increased in New York City by 46 per cent; in Philadelphia by 41 per cent; in Washington, D. C., by 47 per cent; in Los Angeles by 96 per cent.[2]

One consequence of this growth pattern is that Washington has become the first important city to have a Negro majority. But it almost certainly is not the last. Baltimore and New Orleans are likely to join Washington by 1970 at the latest; Cleveland, Detroit, Philadelphia, and St. Louis before 1980.

Insight into both the nature and the causes of racial change in America's urban areas can be gained from the example of Washington, D. C. Since 1920, the metropolitan population of Washington (encompassing both the central city and its suburbs in neighboring Maryland and Virginia) has grown more than threefold, from less than 600,000 to over two million. Meanwhile, the proportion of Negroes in that population has remained essentially constant at roughly one-fourth of the total. In other words, Negroes have both migrated to and multiplied within metropolitan Washington at roughly the same over-all rate as whites.

Yet within the central city of Washington, D. C. (which now contains only about one-third of the total metropolitan population) Negroes have increased from one-fourth of the total to well over one-half, since virtually all the Negro increase has gone to the city.

At the same time, the proportion of Negroes in the suburbs has declined from 25 to only 6 per cent as an almost exclusively white outflux has overwhelmed long-existing suburban Negro enclaves.[3]

Rapid Negro increases have been almost universal in cities of large and medium population alike. But in proportional terms, the change has often been greater in the middle-sized cities. Syracuse, Rochester, New Haven, San Diego, and Fort Worth all saw their Negro populations approximately double during the 1950's. Thus these cities can no longer look with smug superiority upon a few urban giants marked by the blight and disorder of Negro ghettos. By the same token, Rochester, New York, and Springfield, Massachusetts recently achieved the headlines through racial disturbances.

Not all the predominantly Negro portions of today's cities are decaying, crime-ridden, potentially explosive slums, however. The movement of white families to the suburbs has recently opened up a number of highly desirable living areas for the small minority of Negroes who can afford them. Some of the finest residential sections of cities like Washington and Philadelphia—once predominantly white—now are interracial or heavily Negro. Their physical character and general flavor have changed little. Imposing stone and brick homes still stand on immaculately maintained lawns. Only the color of the occupants is different.

Yet these too are Negro neighborhoods, and—like the sprawling all-white subdivisions surrounding the cities or like the less desirable central districts where most Negroes are allowed to live—they betoken the growing segregation which is splitting our metropolitan areas into two huge enclaves, each the territory of a single race. Their continued social and physical stability, furthermore, is threatened by many of the same pressures of population increase and exploitation which beset the Negro slums. Segregation itself may not be new, but never before has it manifested itself on such a giant and destructive scale.

The Growth of Residential Segregation

How did this change occur so swiftly and so massively? Discrimination and prejudice are certainly among the causes, but they are not the only ones. America cannot escape responsibility for the many decades in which the rights of its Negro citizens were denied. Nonetheless, the present situation cannot be fully understood, nor can solutions to its perplexing aspects be found, without recognizing that it was produced and is maintained in significant part by forces that are both broader than and different from racial discrimination.

The background to all that has happened lies in certain facts concerning the rapid urbanization of America's people—facts racially neutral in themselves, but having profound racial effects. As the nation has grown more populous, its inhabitants have located increasingly within metropolitan centers. A century ago Americans numbered 31 million, about one-fifth of whom lived in urban areas. By 1920 the total population had risen to 106 million, and the urban proportion had grown to one-half—a ninefold jump in absolute numbers (from about 6 million to 54 million) in only sixty years.

After World War II, population growth accelerated sharply. The largest ten-year increase in the nation's history took place between 1950 and 1960. During that decade 28 million new citizens were added, a total nearly equal to the entire population of a century ago. About 85 per cent of this increase occurred within 212 metropolitan areas, making about two-thirds of the nation's people urban today.

In addition to increase through births and immigration during these fruitful years, the cities gained also from large-scale population movements from the center of the country toward its boundaries (especially to the seacoasts and Great Lakes region) and from the South to the North. These streams of people, most experts agree, were both "pulled" toward the cities by job opportunities and other urban attractions (especially in the coastal areas) and "pushed" out of the rural areas by shrinking labor needs, especially in the depressed portions of the agricultural South. Negroes and whites shared in the migration—Negroes to a somewhat, but not drastically, greater degree in proportion to their share of the total population.

Migration to the cities helps explain why, after World War II, the nation turned to its suburbs in order to satisfy housing needs which had been accumulating during almost two decades of economic depression and world conflict. The previous growth of the cities had used up most of the land suitable for development within their boundaries. Yet the people had to be housed somewhere, and swiftly. The easiest place, requiring no costly and time-consuming demolition of existing buildings, was the suburbs.

How should the suburbs be developed? In answering this question certain key public policy decisions—involving racial implications which were probably neither foreseen nor intended—joined with private actions to help produce the present situation. Primary among these was the critical decision to allow the private-enterprise system to meet the housing shortage on its own terms. Most of the government mechanisms mobilized to aid in the task, especially the mortgage guarantee provisions of the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration, served to support and encourage the efforts of private enterprise.[4]

Such a decision was completely in accord with America's social philosophy and economic structure. And, in light of the inherent dynamism of the private-enterprise system, it is not surprising that the home-building industry was able to provide usable physical shelter. Indeed, this success can be counted as one of the major achievements of a nation which has never been satisfied with small accomplishments. Almost every year following World War II more than one million dwelling units were constructed and occupied, a figure which is double the rate at which new families were formed. And, despite rapid population growth during the fifties, the 1960 Census showed that Americans were far better housed than ever before. Overcrowding and "doubling up" (two or more families in one dwelling) had been considerably reduced. So had dilapidated and otherwise substandard housing. To a greater or lesser degree, the entire population benefited from this widespread improvement—even Negroes, though they continued to be less adequately housed than whites.[5]

Nonetheless, the decision to let private enterprise satisfy the housing need carried with it unfortunate consequences for future residential patterns. It meant that the great majority of the new postwar suburban housing was built for those who could afford to pay the full economic price. Thus the basic mechanisms of the private enterprise system, successful as they were in meeting overall housing needs, selectively operated to reinforce existing trends which concentrated low-income families in the cities. At the same time, they encouraged the centrifugal movement of those who were more wealthy to the outskirts of the cities.

Most Negro families were among those with low incomes, the result of generations of discrimination in employment and education. Quite apart from direct racial discrimination, in which the private housing industry also indulged whenever it felt necessary, economics posed a giant barrier to the free dispersal of the growing

Negro populations. The findings of a market analysis conducted by Chester Rapkin and others at the University of Pennsylvania's Institute for Urban Studies at the peak of the postwar housing boom in the mid-1950's were quite typical. At that time, only 0.5 per cent of all dwellings costing $12,000 or more in Philadelphia had been purchased by Negroes—a fact which the authors laid mainly to economic incapacity. This was about the minimum cost of a modest new house in Philadelphia's suburbs.[6]

But this is only part of the story. Federal policies and practices in housing reinforced and increased the separation between the "Negro" cities and the white suburbs. In part, this was intentional. From 1935 to 1950—a period in which about 15 million new dwellings were constructed—the power of the national government was explicitly used to prevent integrated housing. Federal policies were based upon the premise that economic and social stability could best be achieved through keeping neighborhood populations as homogeneous as possible. Thus, the Underwriting Manual of the Federal Housing Administration (oldest and largest of the federal housing agencies, established by the Housing Act of 1934) warned that "if a neighborhood is to retain stability, it is necessary that properties shall continue to be occupied by the same social and racial group." It advised appraisers to lower their valuation of properties in mixed neighborhoods, "often to the point of rejection." FHA actually drove out of business some developers who insisted upon open policies.[7]

More recently, a number of studies by competent real-estate economists have thrown serious doubt upon the thesis that Negro entry lowers property values. Laurenti, in his thorough analysis entitled Property Values and Race, found that prices rose in 44 per cent of those areas which Negroes entered, were unchanged in another 41 per cent, and declined in only 15 per cent. These were long-term trends, and they were measured relative to trends in carefully-matched neighborhoods which remained all white—thus obviating any possibly misleading effects of generally rising prices.[8]

Surveying the literature, Laurenti noted similar results from other studies in various cities extending back as far as 1930. But erroneous though the allegation of nonwhite destruction of property values may have been, it nonetheless provided "justification" for widespread discriminatory practices, as well as active encouragement of private discrimination, by agencies of the federal government during a period of critical importance in determining present residential patterns.

However, discrimination per se was only a small factor in the impact of federal policies and practices upon racial patterns during this crucial period. Much more important were more basic aspects of the structure and functioning of federal housing programs. Three major programs have dominated the field. The largest and most significant has been the Federal Housing Administration's mortgage insurance program, with its post-World War II counterpart for veterans, the Veterans Administration's loan guarantee program. Both granted their benefits chiefly to the "modal" family recently embarked upon married life, with children already born or on the way, and willing to commit itself to the responsibilities of home ownership with a mortgage. For such families, down-payment requirements were minimal, repayment periods lengthy, and credit restrictions lenient. A certain minimum of present earnings and good prospects for future income were paramount, as well as some evidence of faithful repayment of past obligations. Households which did not fit these criteria—smaller families, older couples, single persons, people with low or precarious earnings, families who sought dwellings for rent rather than for sale, even families dependent upon the wife's employment for an adequate income—all were required to satisfy their needs chiefly through the older housing left vacant by people moving to new homes in the suburbs.

Prominent among those left behind, of course, were Negroes. The federal programs permitted them to "inherit" the cities, along with an assortment of whites who did not meet the conditions for access to the new suburbs: the old, the poor, the physically and mentally handicapped, the single and divorced, together with some persons of wealth and influence who preferred the convenience of living in the central city. The significance of the housing programs for residential patterns, however, lay also in their tendency to pull young and upwardly mobile white families away from the cities and out toward the suburbs.

It may be that a large number of these families, given free choice, would have preferred to remain within the cities, close to work and to older relatives. But the FHA and VA programs generally did not provide nearly so liberal terms on the mortgages of older homes in the cities. Down payments were usually larger; repayment periods shorter; monthly payments higher. For most young families, therefore, the suburbs were the only practical areas in which to solve their housing needs. In this way, the FHA and VA programs, essentially independent of any direct racial bias in their decisions on applications, enhanced the tendency toward white dominance in the suburbs.

The second of the federal government's major housing programs is subsidized low-income public housing, administered by the Public Housing Administration through local housing authorities. Its criteria for admission are based upon maximum rather than minimum income levels. Under these conditions relatively small numbers of whites can qualify because their earnings exceed the required standard. In many areas, even where conscious efforts are made to attract an interracial clientele, the great majority of residents are Negro. In further contrast to the FHA and VA programs, most public housing projects have been constructed in the central cities rather than in the suburbs—since one of their objectives is to reduce the incidence of blighted housing.

The differences between the two programs thus reinforce each other in their effects upon patterns of residence. While the FHA and VA have helped promote white dominance in the suburbs, public housing has helped enhance Negro dominance in the cities.

The third of the major federal housing programs is urban renewal. Established by the Housing Act of 1949, its chief goal is to combat physical decay in the central cities. In a sense, urban renewal has worked against FHA and VA programs, since, among other things, it attempts to draw back to the cities the more prosperous of the families who have left it. Until recently, the renewal program has usually cleared off blighted sections and replaced them with housing units priced in the middle- to upper-income brackets. Most often, as might be expected, the occupants of the site before renewal have been low-income members of a racial minority. They have been displaced by housing which, for economic reasons alone, was available mainly to whites and to very few Negroes. Some civil rights groups therefore have dubbed urban renewal "Negro removal."[9]

Renewal agencies are required by law to relocate displaced families into "decent, safe and sanitary" housing. Relocation procedures have recently received a great deal of criticism throughout the nation. Whether or not all of it is valid, it is an undeniable fact that most relocatees move only a short distance from their former homes. One study found, for example, that two-thirds of them relocated within a radius of twelve city blocks. As a result, displaced low-income minorities ring the renewal site.

Sometimes this movement appears to set off a chain reaction. Whites in the neighborhoods to which the displacees move take up residence elsewhere—as do some of the more secure Negroes. The ultimate effect too often is to touch off spreading waves of racial change, which in the end only produce a broader extension of segregated living patterns. Thus, if the FHA, VA, and public housing programs have helped produce metropolitan areas which increasingly resemble black bullseyes with white outer rings, urban renewal has too often created small white or largely white areas in the center of the bullseyes—simultaneously causing the black ghettos to expand outward even further.

Combined with rapid population growth in the metropolitan areas, the interacting effects of federal policies and practices in the postwar era did much to produce the present segregated patterns. But they were not the only factors. Clear discrimination by private individuals and groups—including the mortgage, real-estate, and home-building industries—has also played its part. The activities of the "blockbuster" provide a good focus for examining the way this works.

The modus operandi of the blockbuster is to turn over whole blocks of homes from white to Negro occupancy—the quicker the better for his own profits, if not for neighborhood stability. Once one Negro family has entered a block, the speculator preys on the racial fears and prejudices of the whites in order to purchase their homes at prices as low as possible—often considerably below fair market value. He then plays upon the pent-up housing needs of Negroes and resells the same houses at prices often well above their value in a free market situation. Often he makes a profit of several thousand dollars within a period of a few days. Studies have indicated that skillful blockbusters frequently double their investments in a brief interval. They can do this only because tight residential restrictions have "dammed up" the Negro need for housing to such a point that its sudden release can change the racial composition of a neighborhood within a matter of weeks or months. Apart from the damage done to both sellers and buyers and to the structure of the neighborhoods themselves, blockbusters have a far wider negative impact. By funneling Negro housing demand into limited sections of the city (usually around the edges of the Negro slums, since these neighborhoods are easier to throw into panic), the blockbusters relieve much of the pressure which might otherwise have encouraged the dispersion of Negroes throughout the metropolitan areas.[10]

Technically speaking, blockbusters represent an unscrupulous minority of the real estate industry—"outlaws" in a moral if not a legal sense. However, their activities would not prove profitable if racial restrictions on place of residence were not accepted and enforced by the large majority of builders, brokers, and lenders, backed by the supporting opinion of large segments of the white public.

By restraining the Negro market and permitting its housing needs to be satisfied only on a waiting-list basis, "reputable" members of the banking and housing industries have helped perpetuate the conditions under which their less-scrupulous colleagues can flourish. For reasons they consider entirely justifiable, they guard assiduously against the entry of Negroes into white areas. In recent testimony before the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the President of the Mortgage Bankers Association of Metropolitan Washington stated bluntly that "applications from minority groups are not generally considered in areas that are not recognized as being racially mixed." A study by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations found that such a policy was pursued by almost all lending sources in that city. Voluminous evidence from both social research surveys and testimony before legislative and executive bodies indicates that the same is true of most real-estate boards in cities throughout the country.

Supporting this activity is the subjective equivalent of the ostensibly objective economic argument that underlay federal housing policy for years: the belief in neighborhood homogeneity—that is, neighborhood exclusiveness. The general attitude of much of the public (or the most vocal) has been that neighborhoods were better off when the people within them all belonged to the same broad socioeconomic groups and had the same ethnic or racial origins. In practice, of course, this commitment to neighborhood homogeneity has tended to exclude individuals who fell below a certain status level, not those who were above it. The latter, however, usually have "excluded" themselves in neighborhoods restricted to occupants of their own status.

After 1948, when the Supreme Court ruled that racial and religious covenants were unenforceable in the courts, minority groups began to find it somewhat less difficult to obtain access to neighborhoods on the basis of financial status and preference. Still, neighborhood exclusiveness remained a commonly accepted value, widely enforced by the real-estate, home-building, and lending industries. It served as the final factor in the constellation which created the nation's new patterns of residential segregation.

The Shape of the Future

The future shape of metropolitan areas, in racial terms, is outlined clearly in population statistics. The growth of segregated patterns has attained a momentum that now tends to be self-sustaining. Most of the young white families who will provide the future increase in white population have moved outside the city limits. In Washington, D. C., for example, half of the remaining white population (children included) are over the age of forty. Even among the young adults, a disproportionate number are single.[11]

On the other hand, the central cities continue to be the place of residence of Negroes of all ages, including the young couples and teenagers approaching maturity who provide the potential for future population growth. Left to themselves, these population patterns can have no other effect than to swell the ghettos and further exacerbate the color dichotomy between cities and suburbs.

What steps would be necessary to halt or reverse these trends? The magnitude of the effort required is suggested by statistics computed by George Schermer for the Philadelphia metropolitan area. Schermer has estimated that merely to prevent the current areas of Negro concentration from expanding further would require an annual outflux of 6,000 Negro households. To reverse the trend and to disperse the Negro population evenly throughout the metropolis by the year 2000 would require the entry of 9,700 Negro households annually into currently white districts and the counter-movement of 3,700 white families into areas now Negro. No comparable shift of populations is presently occurring in Philadelphia or in any other metropolis. And, each year that the ghettos continue to expand, these figures grow progressively larger.[12]

The Costs of Segregation

Today's wide-scale patterns of segregation, and the prospect of their further expansion, have several extremely important consequences for the nation as a whole. One of the most dramatic of the current ramifications is the fact that the problems long associated with the Negro ghetto because of generations of discrimination —educational deficiencies, high rates of illness and social disorders, low employment rates, and predominantly low incomes even among those who are employed—all press with increasing force upon the cities as the ghettos continue to grow. At the same time, the financial and leadership resources of the cities have been severely depleted by the middle-class white movement to the suburbs. As a separate political entity, the city has, with growing force, been deprived by the expanding rings of suburbia of the resources it needs to set its house in order.

The newly emergent residential patterns have thus transformed segregation from a parochial concern largely confined to the South (though posing a moral dilemma for the entire nation) into the hardest kind of practical economic problem affecting all the urban centers of America.[13]

But the problem no longer stops at the city line. Today, segregation increasingly threatens the rational planning and development of entire metropolitan areas—a consequence of profound significance in light of continued population growth and the scarcity of urban land, which make it essential that future generations be housed in a less haphazard fashion.

In recent years choice land on the periphery of the larger cities has been devoured at a ferocious rate. In metropolitan Philadelphia, for example, while the population of the "urbanized" or heavily built up area grew by 24 per cent during the 1950's, its geographic spread doubled. This reckless consumption of land cannot continue much longer. Municipalities are already grappling in various ways with the challenge of making more efficient use of the land which is still within feasible commuting distance. The aim of their plans is to keep the metropolitan areas fit places in which to live, with a satisfactory balance of the various elements that together constitute an adequate human environment: homes, commercial and cultural centers, adequate transit facilities, industries, parks, and other necessities and amenities.

In metropolitan Washington, regional planning agencies recently devised a "Plan for the Year 2000." This plan is essentially a general set of principles for meeting the needs of a population that is expected to grow to more than twice its present size before the end of the century. The plan suggests that future growth be channeled along six radial "corridors" extending outward in star fashion from the central city. Highways and transit lines would run alongside the corridors; centers of commerce and various service areas would be located at appropriate intervals. To preserve as much as possible of the green countryside, parks and open recreation areas would be placed between the corridors.

The plan, however, fails to take into account one vital consideration: the effect of race. If the movement of the city's population continues in its present directions, three of the planned corridors will be heavily Negro. They will have their central origins in neighborhoods which currently are Negro and which already are expanding outward in the directions proposed by the plan. The other three corridors will be almost exclusively white, since they originate in the only white residential areas that remain within the city. Thus segregation will be extended for an indefinite period into the new suburbs. If, on the other hand, Negro expansion is cut off along the three corridors which are presently "open," the future population growth will be forced back into the city, thereby intensifying dangerous pressures which already exist.[14]

Still another instance of the way racial segregation thwarts planning can be found in the emerging new towns which, in some parts of the country, at least, may soon begin to offer an alternative to the previous norm of suburban sprawl. These new communities—of which Reston, Virginia, and Columbia, Maryland, both already underway, are two important examples—will be planned and built from the outset as complete urban complexes, with a full panoply of shopping, employment, and recreational facilities. The most comprehensive of the new towns will also contain a wide selection of housing, ranging from bachelor apartments to large single houses, so that the residents will be able to satisfy their changing needs without moving from the community. Over-all population densities in these new communities will be considerably higher than in the dormitory suburbs of the recent past. Yet, through imaginative planning, they can offer their residents an even greater sense of spaciousness and privacy.

Already popular in Europe and Great Britain, the new town concept offers important advantages over the formlessness that characterizes America's postwar suburban development—advantages that accrue not merely to the residents of the towns but to the entire nation. The new towns offer a way of comfortably accommodating population growth while conserving irreplaceable green space. The proliferation of multi-million dollar superhighways can be slowed down. Pollution of the air by exhaust fumes will be reduced. Speedy, economical mass transit systems, now virtually unfeasible in many areas because of the low density and wide geographic spread of suburban growth, will become practical once more. There will even be substantial savings in taxes for municipal services, as well as in utility and commuting costs.

But the new towns, despite the hopeful prospect they represent, also confront the ever-present specter of race. To be successful in realizing their diversified goals, the towns will require a large number of service workers—including manual laborers, domestics, custodians, and sales people, to mention only a few categories. Today, the only significant reservoir of labor available for many of these occupations is the Negro population. Furthermore, civil rights laws now require equal access by all citizens to employment opportunities. Yet, in most instances, the new towns will be located too far from the central cities for easy and economical commuting. Thus, in all likelihood, the workers will have to be housed in the towns themselves.

But on what basis? Will the new towns contain, from the outset, pre-planned ghettos? If not, how is integration to be accomplished, given the differential income levels of the people involved and the many problems connected with providing low-cost housing under private auspices? Even if this last obstacle is overcome—as might be possible if Congress implements new and imaginative forms of governmental aid and subsidy—will white Americans long conditioned with the encouragement of their own government to rigid spatial separation, not only of races but of economic groups, accept any other arrangement?

If, on the other hand, the new towns do not offer accommodations to families of low income, what will happen as they draw away more and more of the cities' remaining affluent residents, while providing no comparable outlet for their growing low-income populations? Will vast new towns then be planned especially for the low income populations, thus extending patterns of racial segregation upon a scale even now unknown? Or will the cities merely be expected to absorb the population increase indefinitely?

Within some cities, the low income housing needs are already reaching crisis proportions. In Washington, D. C., for example, public attention has recently been focused on the problem through widespread civic protests. With virtually no vacant land remaining, and with a population which has grown since 1960 both in total numbers and in the proportion of low-income Negroes, Washington now faces a perplexing dilemma indeed. Virtually every improvement of any magnitude in its physical structure, whether publicly or privately sponsored, further reduces an already inadequate low income housing supply.

Development of expressways to relieve traffic congestion has been threatened as a result. Even code enforcement aimed at improving housing conditions is endangered because it often results in evicting poor families with no place else to live. Yet private construction, stimulated by Washington's booming economy and unhampered by considerations that often affect public action, is proceeding apace. Almost all centrally located homes which are privately renewed for occupancy by middle-class families, and many of the sumptuous new apartment houses and office buildings as well, gain their valuable land by removing additional units from the low income housing supply. Some Washington observers are wondering how much longer this process can continue without triggering racial outbreaks similar to those which have already disfigured other major cities.

The complex issues which surround land development, both present and future, constitute only one of the concerns made increasingly problematical by the city-suburban racial split. Paradoxically, it presents obstacles also to current major attempts to aid minority groups in escaping from poverty and deprivation.

A good case in point is the multiple efforts to upgrade Northern public schools in a state of de facto segregation. For the most part, these schools are desegregated in principle, but because of surrounding residential patterns have become segregated in practice. A considerable amount of this segregation, it should be realized, occurred during the fifties as a direct result of population shifts. At the time of the Supreme Court decision barring school segregation, Washington, D. C., which is located among the border states, had a completely segregated educational system. Once the decision was announced, the city immediately desegregated. Yet only a decade later, because of intervening population shifts, the school system once again is almost entirely segregated. "Resegregation" is the term some concerned local citizens have coined for this disturbing phenomenon.

De facto segregation tends to create poor, inadequately serviced schools. The concentration of culturally disadvantaged Negro children makes it difficult to provide the intensive programs they need to reach an equal footing with their white contemporaries. In racially mixed schools, their deficiencies are leavened through contact with children more fortunate in background and home environment. One attempted solution has been to bus Negro children to better schools which are underutilized and for the most part are predominantly white. But this approach has met with strenuous resistance from many of the parents (including some Negroes) whose children attend the better schools. Some officials fear that continued busing in the face of such protests would cause even more middle-class whites to leave the cities and thus make the situation even worse in the long run.[15]

The whole problem is exacerbated by the fact that most heavily Negro schools are located in the older and more depressed neighborhoods of the city. Both the schools and their surroundings are often in physical and social decay. Thus, in addition to everything else, it becomes difficult to attract or keep good teachers.

But the nation quite rightly, although belatedly, has committed itself to providing equal educational opportunities for all its citizens. In the face of de facto segregation, it is now trying to meet that commitment by a huge complex of experimental programs costing millions of dollars. If the programs are successful, their extension to all those who need them will ultimately mean the spending of many more billions. But aside from the question of money, the nation currently confronts the much more difficult question of whether the programs can in fact work, given the complex of environmental obstacles which exist.

Most of the dilemmas and problems posed by residential segregation in the United States are brought into focus by the current war against poverty. Can poverty among Negroes ever be eliminated while rigid segregation increases within the metropolitan centers? On the other hand, can the metropolitan areas ever be desegregated as long as the majority of Negroes remain poor? As segregation continues to grow and Negroes reach numerical predominance in more and more urban centers, will not the cities which house the majority of the nation's industrial and commercial life find themselves less and less able to cope with their problems, financially and in every other way? What then will be the answer for the metropolitan complexes where two-thirds of America's population currently reside and where as much as 85 per cent of the nation may live by the year 2000?

Aside from these large and basic questions of public policy and social change, residential segregation causes havoc on a more personal and individual level. And the personal damage is not to Negroes alone. Many of the neighborhoods newly entered by Negroes since World War II have been occupied by middle-aged and retired white families who often look upon their current homes as being their last—and whose emotional attachment to both house and neighborhood is based upon ties of familiarity and friendship built up over many years. These occupants feel deeply threatened by the entrance of a Negro family. The result often is mental stress, misery, and loneliness, as well as a sense of overwhelming personal loss at being "forced" to leave a home and neighborhood one had grown to love.[16]

The effects of precipitate change are particularly sad in ethnic neighborhoods where much of the community's life has centered around a house of worship and where neighbors often include kinfolk as well as friends. In such cases, the change is harmful not only to individual families but to institutions and social organizations that can rarely survive transfer to another location. Constant change is normal, of course, and neighborhood institutions should adapt constructively to it and help their members to adjust. Nevertheless, many institutions are unprepared, and the rapidity of racial change often gives them little opportunity to catch up with their responsibilities.

In all these ways, then, residential segregation is or has become central to major domestic problems of the nation. There is no way to determine the ultimate sum of its costs. It ranges into so many areas that it may accurately be designated the key question of our national life in the 1960's.

The Upsurge of Civic Concern

Over the past decade and a half, as the situation has worsened, the significance of residential segregation has steadily been pushing itself into the forefront of the national consciousness. As public comprehension has grown, one response has been a groundswell of concern and action on both public and private levels. This development cannot be overvalued. It is a change of almost revolutionary proportions, a change that has been accomplished not through violence or political disorder but through the constitutional mechanisms of the government and through the exercise of individual freedoms that form the basis of American society. Yet, this counteraction, despite its importance, is in itself presently insufficient for the task at hand. The best way to indicate both the limitations of the current activity and the general direction in which the country must now move is to outline the various ways in which mounting public concern has expressed itself.

Between 1950 and today, the federal government has completely reversed its racial policy, moving from official sanction of segregation to a Presidential order that prohibits discrimination in any housing receiving federal assistance. The first official impetus for this change came in 1948, when the Supreme Court ruled that restrictive racial covenants were legally unenforceable. At first the Federal Housing Administration declared that the decision was inapplicable to its operation. Finally, late in 1949, it removed the model covenant and all references to neighborhood homogeneity from its manual and declared that after February 1950 it no longer would insure mortgages having restrictive covenants. The Veterans Administration and the Urban Renewal Administration both issued similar statements.

Further changes ensued. By 1960, they included the following: both the FHA and VA had ruled that the insured property they acquired (usually under foreclosure proceedings) would be made available to all buyers or renters, regardless of race, creed, or color; the administrative head of the FHA had instructed local offices to take "active steps to encourage the development of demonstrations in open occupancy projects in suitably located key areas"; both the FHA and VA had signed a series of formal agreements of cooperation with state and local agencies responsible for enforcing laws and ordinances against housing discrimination; the government had dropped a system of racial quotas in housing built for persons displaced by urban renewal; and it also had banned discrimination in a special loan program to assist the elderly in their housing needs.

These regulations and directives clearly represent a large stride forward from the directly discriminatory policies pursued before 1950. Yet their practical effect on the rigid patterns of segregation that had developed over the years was very small. In 1962, federal reports revealed that nearly 80 per cent of all public housing projects receiving a federal subsidy were occupied by only one race. Segregated projects were located as far North as Scranton, Pennsylvania, and Plattsburgh, New York—and, as might be expected, in practically every locality in the South. The vast majority of new suburban housing backed by FHA and VA mortgage guarantees was occupied exclusively by white families. A scattering of developments built on urban renewal sites were made available to both Negroes and whites; but they were limited mainly to the largest cities of the North and West and generally priced at or close to luxury levels. Where integration existed, it was largely the result of state and local laws rather than national directives. Only seldom, however, were these laws adequately enforced.[17]

Nonetheless, by 1962, partly because of the ineffectiveness of previous changes, it had become clear that the broad problems of discrimination and segregation were too interwoven to be solved with piecemeal changes in federal policy. The first step toward a more comprehensive approach came on November 20, 1962, when the late President Kennedy issued an Executive Order barring discrimination in all housing receiving federal aid after that date. At the end of April 1964, it was estimated that 932,000 units of housing had come under the directives of the Order. In June 1964, it was estimated that between 12 and 20 per cent of all new residential construction was covered.

But the segregation that had developed in previous years still remained. Charles Abrams summed up both the limitations and the value of the Executive Order shortly after it was issued in the following way:

> The Executive Order will . . . touch only a small fraction of the housing market. If any real gains are to be made, its coverage must be widened or more individual state laws laboriously sought. The President's Order is no more than a small first federal step toward breaking the bottleneck in housing discrimination.
> Nevertheless, its importance cannot be discounted. First steps in civil rights legislation have often led to second steps when the will to move ahead has been present.[18]

The federal government has also made special, though limited, efforts to mitigate the unintended racial effects of its housing programs. Housing legislation gave the FHA, in cooperation with the Federal National Mortgage Association, the right to issue insured loans from government funds at below-market interest rates for housing to be occupied by families with incomes too low to acquire new homes in the private market. This indirect form of subsidy was intended in part to reach a larger number of Negro families. Urban renewal programs have begun to pay more attention to relocation procedures and to stress rehabilitation of existing dwellings rather than total clearance. In some cities, Community Renewal Programs aided with federal funds are attempting to develop comprehensive plans for housing all groups in the population. In the public housing program, where Negroes predominate, federal action has paradoxically been least decisive. Still, many local authorities have tried to promote racial balance in their projects, and some have been experimenting with various types of nonproject housing scattered throughout the community.

But the fundamental orientations of the federal programs remain today—as do the deeply entrenched consequences of their operation throughout the peak years of the post-World War II housing boom. It will take more than piecemeal efforts to shatter such a solid foundation for the continued growth of segregated living patterns.

While the federal government was moving toward its policy of nondiscrimination in housing, many states and municipalities were moving in the same direction—and, in recent years, at a more rapid pace. Prior to 1954, only a few of the states in the North and Midwest had legislation which barred discrimination in any segment of their housing supply. The laws usually covered only low-rent public housing and, occasionally, units receiving such special forms of assistance as tax exemptions or write-downs on land costs.

As of mid-1965, however, sixteen states and the District of Columbia had barred discrimination in a substantial portion of their private housing supply. At the 1960 census these states together contained about eighty million people, or 44 per cent of the total population. Thus nearly half the citizens of the United States are now living in communities whose public policy is clearly opposed to deliberate segregation on the basis of race—even in housing built under private auspices. President Kennedy's Executive Order of 1962 therefore was basically an extension on the federal level of a principle already gaining widespread acceptance in states and localities across the nation.

However, mere nondiscrimination cannot by itself overcome the problem of segregation. It will take vigorous positive efforts on the part of government and private citizens to halt, let alone reverse, trends now so firmly entrenched.

Contributors to Change

Changes in public policy can usually be attributed to the determined efforts of a small minority of citizens who recognize a need and work tirelessly to bring it to public attention. In no case has this been more true than with residential segregation. Led by the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing—a small and meagerly financed organization which grew out of the first successful campaigns for housing laws in New York—religious, civic and labor groups in many parts of the country have spearheaded similar campaigns in their own states and cities. The resulting laws have provided a foundation upon which other types of private effort could build.

A second important variety of private effort toward housing desegregation is the intentional development of new housing on an open-occupancy basis. Beginning in 1937 with a small Quaker-sponsored project in southwestern Pennsylvania, the spontaneous development of nondiscriminatory housing by private groups got underway in earnest following World War II. Despite concerted opposition by the federal government, many local governments, and most segments of the real estate industry, a 1956 survey found that some fifty new interracial communities had been produced by private efforts up to that time. Some of them had been inspired by civic and social service organizations to foster racial equality, but a number had been constructed by businessmen for profit. Today, such developments are estimated to number in the high hundreds or even the thousands.[19]

In a third approach, "grass-roots" organizations in many cities across the country have sought to stabilize the occupancy of their own neighborhoods following the entry of Negroes. In numerous instances they have accomplished what many once thought impossible —quelling panic, avoiding possible violence, maintaining sound neighborhood conditicns, even bringing new white residents into areas where formerly the prognosis had been for complete transition to all-Negro occupancy.[20]

Finally, in the suburbs of a number of cities, concerned white residents have banded together to help open their own neighborhoods to Negro families able to pay the price. The first of these "fair housing committees," established in Syracuse, New York, in the mid-1950's, was sponsored by the local Quaker Meeting. Religious influence of various denominations remains strong in many of the later organizations, now estimated to number more than one thousand.[21]

These private efforts represent one of the most encouraging examples of the inherent strength of American democracy and its capacity for change. They have helped shatter many racial myths, have opened new housing opportunities for Negroes in areas not previously open to them, and have done much through practical demonstration to alter the attitudes of the white majority toward the prospect of Negro neighbors.

But in the face of population forces, they can have little effect in destroying racial segregation. The point was passed some years ago where either legal bars against discrimination or the best-intentioned of meagerly financed "grass roots" endeavors could accomplish the task. If Americans wish not only to create truly equal opportunity for all, but also to solve the many domestic problems which stem from inequality and the artificial separation of the races, they must now be prepared to move beyond mere nondiscrimination and good will—in a sense, beyond equality—into an area of positive and aggressive efforts to undo the damage already done. It will require a massive national effort, calling upon the full resources of both the public and private sectors.

The Task and the Methods

That the country possesses the fundamental resources it needs to solve the problem is fortunately clear. What is required is less the creation of new mechanisms than the effective harnessing and, where necessary, the reorientation, of those which already exist. Otherwise it will be impossible to meet the goal of rendering segregated housing patterns ineffective as an obstacle to the objectives of the "Great Society."

This aim, it must be stressed, need not be sought through methods which run counter to the basic tenets of American democracy. For example, it need not be attempted through forced redistribution of population. Force is not only intolerable, but unnecessary. The normal mobility of the American people is so great (about half of all households moved during the latter half of the 1950s alone) that redistribution can be achieved through the operation of free choice—if sufficient resources are applied to make socially desirable patterns of residence as attractive to the public as socially undesirable ones have been in the past.

Nor is it necessary to attempt a rigidly planned dispersal of Negro households. The aim, rather, should be to achieve complete freedom of choice in place of residence without respect to racial barriers. Within this framework of unconstrained choice, some substantial concentrations of Negro families would doubtless persist, just as Jews have remained in certain neighborhoods even after obstacles to their residing elsewhere have largely been eliminated. But the present monolithic character of the Negro ghettos, their inexorable growth, and the social evils they encourage would be broken.

The following are some specific measures which would help achieve the goal. The list is not all-inclusive; doubtless many readers will think of others which would be of value:

A central federal agency possessing the competence to plan comprehensively for all phases of urban development and the authority to translate plans into effective action. This agency must have the power to draw together federal operations in such diverse areas as housing, urban renewal, highways, transportation, and community facilities and to guide them toward a set of common objectives. The newly created Department of Housing and Urban Development can be such an instrument—if it can overcome the handicap of its origin in the Housing and Home Finance Agency, a loosely knit combination of essentially independent agencies, and achieve better coordination of individually powerful organizations than has the similarly amalgamated Department of Health, Education and Welfare. This will not be easy.

A total strategy for desegregation. The segregation problem is too complex to be solved without a total approach which recognized all the manifold forces which brought it to its present magnitude and threaten to enlarge it further. This approach must take maximum strategic advantage of all available resources and knowledge. It must be adaptable to varying local conditions and flexible enough to permit changes as "feedback" from early applications dictates. But it must be directed always to a clear and unwavering set of goals.

Broadened federal incentives for effective action by local governments and private entrepreneurs. Incentive programs have proved one of the most acceptable means of applying governmental leverage in a democratic system, for they do not involve compulsion and do not infringe upon freedom of choice. In housing, for example, incentives have promoted urban renewal (through grants to local authorities to clear slum land for redevelopment) and the construction of specific types of housing (through liberal mortgage insurance). Incentives must now be used to encourage comprehensive planning and action toward social goals. For example, suitable incentives can encourage private builders to construct balanced communities serving all population groups, can attract and assist low-income minority families to move to such communities, can stimulate existing neighborhoods to self-renewal and racial stabilization, can encourage local governments to attack segregation in the comprehensive manner it requires by cooperation throughout the metropolitan areas.

Imaginative new forms of subsidy for low-income families. Traditionally, housing subsidies have been available almost exclusively for units built by local nonprofit authorities—chiefly in the form of multi-unit public "projects," which stood apart from their surroundings and amassed the social ills associated with poverty in much the same fashion as did older and less solidly constructed ghettos. More recently, various localties have experimented with methods for widening the range of choice and location in subsidized housing. The Housing Act of 1965 contains provisions which can make subsidies a much more valuable tool in combatting segregation. But their operation toward this end cannot be left to chance; it will require vigorous and imaginative guidance.

Comprehensive measures to increase minority incomes. Any measure which increases the purchasing power of racial minorities will bring a corresponding reduction in the critically important economic barriers to desegregation. Minimum wage floors must be raised; present ones are actually below the level defined by the federal government as "poverty." Federal resources must be directed toward expanding the number of jobs available, particularly for those of limited education. The most important need of the minority poor is for decent jobs at decent pay. Economic measures can and should be tied to housing. For example, low-income minority persons should be trained for the specific kinds of jobs which will be made available in the new, comprehensively planned communities on the outskirts of metropolitan areas. Housing should be planned for them close to these new job opportunities. Similarly, relocation from urban renewal areas should be coupled with a range of services, including training and assistance in finding employment, to help assure that displaced families improve not only their housing conditions but their economic situation as well.

Intensive efforts to improve the attractiveness of central cities. To date, urban renewal, in its efforts to draw middle- and upper-income families back to the urban cores, has focused mainly upon the physical aspects of decay. It is increasingly obvious that social renewal is required also—that many of the economically more capable families, Negro as well as white and especially those with children, will not be persuaded to return to the central areas until they are assured of protection from the social pathology of the ghetto. City schools, for example, must be drastically improved; yet there is growing evidence that this will require not merely replacement of individual buildings and teaching staffs but also comprehensive restructuring of entire school systems. Crime and violence are among the greatest deterrents to affluent families who prefer to live in central areas, and the cities will be at a disadvantage until they prove that they can control both the chronically lawless and those driven to crime by frustration and economic need.

Vigorous enforcement of anti-discrimination laws and affirmative measures to promote equal opportunity. As noted earlier, anti-discrimination laws in themselves are unable to solve a problem which stems from much broader causes. But, if vigorously enforced, they can prove a most important weapon in the arsenal of measures against segregation. Further, as many of the more effective law-enforcement agencies already recognize, it is not sufficient merely to remain passive and wait for a minority conditioned by generations of segregation to recognize and claim its newly guaranteed rights. Affirmative measures are necessary to promote awareness of the law both among those it protects and those who offend against it.

Expanded support for "grass-roots" citizen efforts. While the efforts of spontaneous, citizen-led groups have had impressive success in helping change attitudes, practices, and laws across the nation, these groups have been severely handicapped by their meager resources. A few have been fortunate enough to receive substantial support, usually from local foundations. Where funds have permitted hiring full-time staff, the increase in effectiveness has often been dramatic. Compared to the many millions spent annually by philanthropic organizations on problems of comparable or even lesser importance, the few thousands devoted to housing segregation have been infinitesimal. This is still another way in which available resources must be redirected if the problem is to be solved.

A national educational campaign. For the first time in American history, the majority of the white public appears aware that discrimination and segregation defeat the goals of democracy. But it is a long step forward from this recognition to a vigorous and affirmative effort equal to the need. This will require a type and degree of comprehension and commitment, by majority and minority peoples alike, which are still far from achievement.

National consensus is most readily achieved through full information about the problem and stimulation of public debate on the means of solution. A full-scale campaign to arouse and inform the American people must begin immediately if public understanding and support are to reach the necessary levels before segregation grows so much larger that it appears insoluble to many. The turning point may well come with the 1970 Census. If some tangible progress has not been made—or at least a plan of action proposed—before its statistics appear, discouragement may rule.

The core of organized citizen support necessary to mount such a campaign already exists—in such national organizations as the American Friends Service Committee, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing and in the hundreds of citizen fair housing groups across the country. But their efforts must be focused, coordinated, and, above all, adequately financed. And they must be brought into the context of related activities such as urban planning and the war on poverty.

The task of eliminating segregation rests ultimately with the American people as a whole—led, as in every major struggle in their history, by a small group of devoted citizens. If they do not succeed, the result will almost certainly be the continued spread of Negro ghettos; large-scale physical blight generated by population pressures and exploitation; economic loss to many citizens of both races; persistent social disorder; and spreading racial tensions which strike at the very foundations of a free and democratic society. The choice is not merely between segregation and desegregation, but between wholesale destruction of property and human values and the continued growth and security of American society itself.

Probably the most thorough and telling analysis of the economics involved in racial turnover mediated by real-estate speculators was published by the Chicago Commission on Human Relations, a municipal agency, in 1962. In a single block which had changed from all-white to virtually all-Negro, with heavy involvement by speculators, the differential between the price paid by the speculator and that paid by the Negro buyer upon purchase under an installment contract ranged from 35 to 115 per cent, with an average of 73 per cent. The installment contract itself is a financing device which yields higher-than-average returns to the entrepreneur, so the profiteering only began with the sale. For an overview of local governmental action vis-à-vis race as of the early 1960's, accompanied by a good bibliography, see "The City Government and Minority Groups," Management Information Service, International City Managers Association, Report No. 229, February 1963.

This report can be obtained from the Potomac Institute of Washington, D. C., which participated in its preparation. See also many of the publications of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights dealing with local practices in housing, employment, and so forth. But the extent to which racial considerations now affect local decisions in many subject areas is only scantily documented.

14. The relationship of racial factors to the Washington metropolitan plan is discussed in George B. Nesbitt and Marian P. Yankauer, "The Potential for Equal Housing Opportunity in the Nation's Capital," Journal of Intergroup Relations, Vol. IV, No. 1 (Winter 1962-1963), pp. 73-97.

15. The problem of de facto educational segregation and the civic conflict it often creates has been widely discussed in the public print. The New York Times Index is an especially useful source. For more scholarly treatments, see Max Wolff (ed.), "Toward Integration of Northern Schools," special issue of the Journal of Educational Sociology, February 1963. Also, "Public School Segregation and Integration in the North," special issue of the Journal of Intergroup Relations, November 1963. A provocative view on the feasibility of desegregation will be found in James B. Conant, Slums and Suburbs (New York, 1961).

16. The pain caused to long-time residents of ethnic neighborhoods by forced relocation in connection with urban renewal has been documented in Marc Fried, "Grieving for a Lost Home," in Leonard J. Duhl (ed.), The Urban Condition (New York, 1963). No doubt much the same kind of agony is caused when long-established white residents feel "forced" to give up their homes in changing neighborhoods.

17. The most complete and reliable source of up-to-date information on the status of housing anti-discrimination laws and ordinances throughout the nation is Trends in Housing, published bi-monthly by the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, 323 Lexington Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10016. A comprehensive analysis of action at all governmental levels up to the period just before the Federal Executive Order of 1962 will be found in Margaret Fisher and Frances Levenson, Federal, State and Local Action Affecting Race and Housing, National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, September 1962. The texts of state and local laws as of the end of 1961 are summarized in State Statutes and Local Ordinances Prohibiting Discrimination in Housing and Urban Renewal Operations, published by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Washington, D. C., December 1961.

For another discussion of some of the limitations of the Order, as well as a legal rationale for its extension, see Martin E. Sloane and Monroe H. Freedman, "The Executive Order on Housing: The Constitutional Basis for What it Fails to Do," 9 Howard Law Journal (Winter 1963).

19. A nationwide study which examined the experiences of some fifty private housing developments open from the outset to interracial occupancy is reported in Eunice and George Grier, Privately Developed Interracial Housing, op. cit. A more recent but less comprehensive compilation of experience, which leads nonetheless to many of the same conclusions, is found in Equal Opportunity in Housing—A Series of Case Studies (Washington, D. C., Housing and Home Finance Agency, June 1964).

20. The experiences of various neighborhoods with efforts to achieve racial stabilization have been discussed in the public print, oftentimes in local newspapers. Among the more valuable studies on this topic is Eleanor Leacock, Martin Deutsch, and Joshua A. Fishman, Toward Integration in Suburban Housing: The Bridgeview Study (New York, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 1964).

21. An excellent presentation of techniques which have been found useful in efforts to promote open housing opportunities in neighborhoods formerly closed to Negroes is contained in Margaret Fisher and Charlotte Meacham, Fair Housing Handbook, published jointly by the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing and the American Friends Service Committee, 1964. See also various issues of Trends in Housing.

HOWARD M. SQUADRON, CHAIRMAN — JOSEPH B. ROBISON, DIRECTOR

October 9, 1967

Mr. Robert E. Anderson, Jr.
Managing Editor, SRC Publications
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Anderson:

Thank you for the kind comments in your letter of October 2 about my article on Proposition 14-B for the New South.

With respect to the two changes, I agree with the first but not the second. I am sure that your assessment of the status of fair housing in the South is more reliable than mine. On the other point, I think I am at least prepared to say that there is a nation-wide consensus on the moral issues even though there is wide difference of opinion as to what to do about discrimination in housing. Very few will openly defend the ghetto system.

I look forward to seeing the Fall issue.

Yours sincerely,

Joseph B. Robison

FAIR HOUSING RESTORED IN CALIFORNIA

by Joseph B. Robison*

On May 29 of this year, the United States Supreme Court handed down its five-to-four decision in the "Proposition 14" case, Reitman v. Mulkey. The immediate effect of this decision in California, where the case arose, cannot be doubted. Its long-range effect on the development of the law of race relations remains to be seen.

"Proposition 14", it will be recalled, was a proposal on the California ballot in the 1964 election. California had enacted a series of statutes designed to curb discrimination in housing. Among these were the Unruh Act of 1959 and the Rumford Act of 1963. These laws prohibited discrimination in a large part, but not all, of the housing market.

When the Rumford Act was passed in 1963, opponents of fair housing legislation, particularly the California Real Estate Association, considered invoking the provisions of the state constitution permitting nullification of legislation by referendum. Ultimately, however, they decided to shoot for larger game. Instead of attempting merely to nullify this one law, they proposed an amendment to the state constitution nullifying all such laws, statewide and local, and barring their enactment in the future. With the resources of the organized housing industry to draw on, and with the support of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, they had little difficulty in obtaining the number of signatures needed to submit the proposed amendment to the voters. It became known as "Proposition 14" because of its position on the ballot.

* Mr. Robison is National Director of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress. He serves as General Counsel to the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing.

"Proposition 14" was one of the principal issues in the 1964 election. It faced formidable opposition, including that of leaders of both parties, church groups, labor unions and other organizations, as well as most newspapers. In fact, all surface indications were that the proposition was most unpopular. Bumper stickers opposing it could be seen on every California highway while opposing stickers were very rare.

Nevertheless, the proposition was approved overwhelmingly. The vote was 4,526,460 to 2,395,747, just short of 2 to 1. Apparently, the people were not ready to proclaim their bigotry in public but they had no inhibitions about voting it in the privacy of the voting booth.

The proposition thus approved added a new Section 26 to Article I of the state constitution. Its principal paragraph read as follows:

> Neither the State nor any subdivision or agency thereof shall deny, limit or abridge, directly or indirectly, the right of any person, who is willing or desires to sell, lease or rent any part or all of his real property, to decline to sell, lease or rent such property to such person or persons as he, in his absolute discretion, chooses.

The California Supreme Court's Decision

The constitutionality of this provision was promptly challenged in a variety of lawsuits. Ultimately, seven cases reached the Supreme Court of California. That court was urged to hold Section 26 invalid on a number of grounds. These included claims that it was not properly adopted under the detailed provisions of the state constitution for adding constitutional amendments by referendum. Principal reliance, however, was placed on Federal constitutional guarantees.

On May 10, 1966, the California Supreme Court issued its 5 to 2 decision holding Section 26 unconstitutional. Its decision rested exclusively on the ground that the section was inconsistent with the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

The Fourteenth Amendment provides in part that "no State shall . . . deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It is this "Equal Protection Clause" that has been most widely used to strike down state constitutional provisions, statutes, regulations and other actions causing discrimination or segregation on the basis of race. Although the clause is clear in its condemnation of unequal treatment, the Supreme Court has consistently ruled since 1883 that it is subject to an important limitation; it applies only to "state action." This means that it does not prohibit discrimination by private individuals receiving no form of support from the state.

It was the contention of the defenders of Section 26 that it merely permitted individual citizens to make their own decisions as to whether or not to discriminate; consequently, no "state action" was involved. It was the position of the other side that the constitutional amendment placed the authority of the state behind discrimination in a manner reached by the Equal Protection Clause. The California Supreme Court sustained the latter argument.

Two of the cases that had come up through the California courts were then appealed to the United States Supreme Court and it was in these two cases that the Court issued its decision. The Court's judgment was announced in an 11-page opinion by Justice White, which had the support of Chief Justice Warren and Justices Douglas, Brennan and Fortas. Justice Douglas expressed additional views in a 6-page concurring opinion. The single 9-page dissent was written by Justice Harlan, with Justices Black, Clark and Stewart concurring.

The Court's Opinion

Justice White, in his opinion for the Court, first reviewed the decision of the California Supreme Court. He noted that, even though Proposition 14 contained no reference to race, the California court had reached the conclusion that its design, intent and effect were to overturn the state's antidiscrimination laws and to prevent enactment of such laws in the future. The California court further held that the effect of Proposition 14 was to involve the state in racial discrimination in the housing market. Justice White said there was no reason to reject the California court's conclusion "that § 26 unconstitutionally involves the State in racial discriminations and is therefore invalid under the Fourteenth Amendment."

The petitioners had argued that, on the reasoning followed by the California court, the repeal of any statute prohibiting racial discrimination could be said to encourage discrimination. Yet, they said, the Fourteenth Amendment could not be viewed as barring such a repeal. Justice White, however, said that the California court considered that Proposition 14 "expressly authorized and constitutionalized the private right to discriminate" and that this "would encourage and significantly involve the State in private racial discrimination contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment."

Justice White pointed out that Proposition 14 "struck more deeply and more widely" than a mere repeal of the Unruh and Rumfort Acts because "the right to discriminate on racial grounds was now embodied in the State's basic charter, immune from legislative, executive, or judicial regulation at any level of the state government."

Justice Douglas' Concurring Opinion

Justice Douglas, in his concurring opinion, treated the situation as "a problem in the realm of zoning" similar to the problem dealt with in the Supreme Court restrictive covenant decision of 1948 (Shelley v. Kraemer, 334, U.S. 1). He viewed Proposition 14, like the restrictive covenant, as a device "whereby a neighborhood is kept 'white' or 'Caucasian' as the dominant interests desire." He cited reports of the United States Commission on Civil Rights as establishing that real estate brokers, builders and mortgage lenders join in maintaining racially homogeneous neighborhoods. He said: "Proposition 14 is a form of sophisticated discrimination whereby the people of California harness the energies of private groups to do indirectly ~~when~~ what they cannot under our decisions allow their government to do."

Justice Douglas particularly stressed the fact that real estate brokers are licensed by the state and that discrimination by such licensees "constitutes state action in the narrowest sense...." He further urged that urban housing "is clearly marked with the public interest" and hence, like telephone facilities, drug stores and hospitals, must be made available to all.

The Dissenting Opinion

Justice Harlan, in his dissenting opinion, said: "In my view today's holding, salutary as its result may appear at first blush, may in the long run actually serve to handicap progress in the extremely difficult field of racial concerns." He pointed out that the Fourteenth Amendment neither requires nor forbids state legislation against discrimination in housing. He believed that, in approving Proposition 14, California had merely "decided to remain 'neutral' in the realm of private discrimination affecting the sale or rental of private residential property." He viewed Proposition 14 as a repeal of existing legislation and nothing more.

The dissenters argued that the majority had characterized Proposition 14 as "in effect an affirmative call to residents of California to discriminate." They found nothing to support that conclusion. They pointed out that there was nothing in the record to indicate that any discrimination had in fact been fostered by approval of the constitutional amendment.

Justice Harlan argued that no earlier decisions by the Supreme Court had found "state action" merely because discrimination had been "encouraged" and he believed this was "a slippery and unfortunate criterion by which to measure the constitutionality of a statute simply permissive in purpose and effect, and inoffensive on its face."

Justice Harlan believed that the decision would have ill effects because "Opponents of state antidiscrimination statutes are now in a position to argue that such legislation should be defeated because, if enacted, it may be unrepealable."

Direct Impact

There can be no doubt as to the great practical importance of this decision, wholly aside from its legal implications or its impact on the general structure of our constitutional law. Its direct, immediate effect is to remove all doubts as to the validity of fair housing legislation in the state of California. This decision by the United States Supreme Court reinforces the moral and legal impact of the California Supreme Court's invalidation of Proposition 14.

It is not surprising that housing complaints have again started to come into the State Fair Employment Practices Commission, which administers the state's antidiscrimination laws including, those on housing. During the period between approval of Proposition 14 and the ruling of the California Supreme Court, the Commission was receiving only four to five housing complaints a month. The level rose to about 15 a month after the state court's decision invalidating the Proposition. There has been a further rise in the two months since the United States Supreme Court's decision. Twenty-two housing complaints were filed in July and 28 in August.

Four of the seven members of the Commission are persons appointed by Governor Ronald Reagan. Nevertheless, there has been no indication that the Commission as presently constituted is faltering in its enforcement of the revived statutes.

The nation-wide impact is equally important. It seems almost certain that the National Association of Real Estate Boards and its local affiliates will abandon any attempt to obtain similar state constitutional provisions in other states. It is true that the language of the decision can be construed as permitting efforts to repeal fair housing laws by referendum. However, it will probably take a good deal of the steam out of such efforts.

Legal Significance

The legal significance of the Court's decision lies not so much in any broad principles plainly enunciated but in its potentialities. Only the future will tell whether it opened up a whole new field of constitutional protections or merely made a slight bulge in an existing area.

The Court majority took pains to make it clear that their decision does not apply to the mere repeal of an antidiscrimination law and that it does not impose on the states any requirement to have antidiscrimination legislation. In addition, the Court relied expressly on the fact that the California Supreme Court had found that Proposition 14 involved the state in discrimination. Consequently, the decision can be regarded as a very narrow one -- limited to the situation where a state has added a provision to its constitution barring anti-bias laws and where the state courts have held that that provision had a discriminatory intent and effect. Certainly, any attempt in the future to apply this case to situations where these factors are not present will be met by an attempt to confine it to this narrow situation.

However, experience indicates that the decision will not be so confined. Constitutional law frequently moves into new areas on the basis of just such narrowly worded decisions. In future cases, efforts will be made to find indications of state "encouragement" in other forms of official activity. Despite the limitations carefully written into this decision, the Court is quite likely to apply it more broadly in future cases. Today, the majority rejects the contention of the minority that it has, in effect, required a state to prevent discrimination in housing. Tomorrow, the Court may rule that it did just that in this decision.

The Court rejected a number of broad arguments that had been urged upon it. It could have made this case the occasion for overturning in whole or in part the "state action" limitation on the Fourteenth Amendment originally imposed in 1883 in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3. It had been urged to hold either that (1) the Fourteenth Amendment by the force of its own language bars discrimination in housing, or (2) that it empowers Congress to prohibit such discrimination and that Congress did so in the Civil Rights Acts of 1866 and 1870 (in the provision which is now 42 U.S.C. 1982). Neither the majority nor the minority discussed this argument.

Here, too, however, the decision is bound to contribute to the weakening of the "state action" limitation. Every decision that restricts the scope of that limitation makes it easier for the Court, in some future case, to overturn it. Many commentators will view this decision as giving no more than lip service to the state-action doctrine. Ultimately, the Court may be persuaded to undertake a fundamental reevaluation of the Equal Protection Clause and recast its interpretation along lines that deal realistically with the principal source of discrimination today, the concerted action of non-governmental agencies.

Implications for the South

It must be recognized that this decision will have its strongest impact in the North rather than the South. It is primarily in the North that the question of integration in housing is being agitated. Fair housing legislation is still only a remote possibility in the Southern states. For that area, the chief significance of the decision is its indication as to the present attitude of the Supreme Court and its individual members on civil rights.

A striking aspect of this decision is the close vote by which it was decided. For a period of ten years following the unanimous school segregation decisions of 1954 and 1955, the Court decided almost all civil rights cases that came before it by a unanimous vote in favor of broad interpretation of the constitutional guarantees of equality. In the last few years, however, divisions and unfavorable decisions have become more frequent. Thus, in the 1964-65 Term, six out of seven decisions dealing with civil rights were decided favorably to the persons asserting constitutional rights and all but one of these favorable decisions was decided unanimously. In the following Term, all but one of 11 civil rights cases was decided favorably, but the Court was divided in four of these cases. In the last Term, the Court decided four out of six cases favorably. One of these, the Reitman case, and both of the unfavorably decided cases were by votes of 5 to 4.

The increasing number of split decisions in civil rights cases suggests that the Court no longer finds a special need to maintain unanimity in this area. With the basic constitutional principles relating to segregation and discrimination settled, and a nation-wide consensus reached on the moral issues, the Court can deal with the finer points without concealing the differences of opinion that are normal to its operations. The lessened need for unanimity may in turn reflect the fact that, for a variety of reasons that cannot be reviewed here, the litigation process is no longer at the center of the arena of the civil rights struggle, having given place to legislation and, even more, to non-legal procedures.

The decreased value of civil rights litigation is underlined by the two civil rights cases decided unfavorably during the last Term of the Court. Those two decisions sharply curtailed the protections given by the Constitution to civil rights demonstrators and increased the power of the states to put them in jail. (One of the decisions, it will be recalled, affirmed jail sentences imposed on Rev. Martin Luther King and a number of his associates for parading in Montgomery, Ala.) The fact that favorable Supreme Court decisions in civil rights cases can no longer be counted on suggests that emphasis will be increasingly shifted to political action.

This in turn points to the increased need of encouraging Negroes in the South to register and vote.

The Role of Justice Black

Of particular interest, of course, is the fact that, both in the Reitman case and in the other two 5 to 4 decisions, Justice Black of Alabama voted against the party representing the civil rights point of view. In the last few years, the Court has been regarded as being divided into a liberal wing of five Justices (Chief Justice Warren, and Justices Black, Douglas, Brennan, and Goldberg or his successor Justice Fortas) and a conservative wing of four (Justices Clark, Whittaker, Stewart and White). This year, Justice Black frequently voted with the conservative wing.

In a study of the Court's operations made by the American Jewish Congress, it appeared that there were no less than 14 cases out of a total of 56 dealing with civil rights and civil liberties that were decided by votes of 5 to 4. Seven were decided in favor of the asserted constitutional right and seven against. In all but one of the latter, Justice Black voted with the conservative bloc. Of the seven cases decided favorably, Justice Black joined the liberal wing in four, Justice White in two and Justice Clark in one. In the Reitman case, of course, it was Justice White who provided the margin needed for a favorable decision. In that case as well as in the two cases involving civil rights demonstrations, Justice Black adhered to the conservative bloc.

It is because of the recent conservatism of Justice Black that the newspapers, in commenting on the appointment of Solicitor General Thurgood Marshall to the Court, replacing Justice Clark who has generally voted with the conservatives, have said that this appointment is likely to restore the preponderance of the liberal wing. That is certainly likely to be the case on civil rights issues.

FAIR HOUSING - TITLE VIII

Civil Rights Act of 1968

Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, the fair housing title, declares a national policy to provide for fair housing throughout the United States. To the Department of Housing and Urban Development is given the responsibility to administer Title VIII. The Department is charged to begin immediately educational and affirmative enforcement efforts to further the purposes of the Title. The Regional Administrator and his top staff must be prepared to advise his community of the scope of the statute, and assist in the development of compliance under it.

As a first step, the statute must be clearly understood. Hence, we have attached to this memorandum: (1) a copy of the Act, (2) a set of questions that are likely to arise under the Act and the answers, and (3) a memorandum outlining the prohibitions, coverage provisions and enforcement procedures contained in Title VIII. That memorandum follows:

SHORT EXPLANATION OF TITLE VIII(FAIR HOUSING) OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1968

I. Prohibited Acts

The following acts are prohibited if the action taken involves discrimination on account of race, color, religion or national origin:

A. Refusal to deal. To refuse to sell or rent or to negotiate for the sale or rental of a dwelling. (Section 804 (a));

B. Discrimination in terms. To discriminate against any person in the terms or conditions of sale or rental of a dwelling (Section 804(b));

C. Discriminatory advertising. To make any statement with respect to the sale or rental of housing, indicating any racial or religious preference, or an intention to discriminate (Section 804 (c));

D. False representations. To represent falsely to any person that a dwelling is not available for sale or rental (Section 804 (d));

E. Blockbusting. For profit, to induce owners to sell or rent dwellings be representations regarding the entry into the neighborhood of a person or persons of a particular race, color, religion or national origin (Section 804 (e));

F. Discrimination in financing. To deny a loan to any person, or to discriminate in the fixing of the terms or conditions of a loan. This prohibition is applicable to banks, building and loan associations, insurance companies, or any other enterprise whose business involves the making of commercial real estate loans (Section 805);

G. Discrimination in real estate organizations. To deny access to or participation in any multiple-listing service, real estate brokers' organization or other service relating to the business of selling or renting dwellings. (Section 806).

II. Coverage

A. Stages of Coverage. The prohibition against discrimination in financing and the prohibition against denying access to or participation in real estate organizations do not become effective until December 31, 1968. The prohibition of Section 804 (c) against discriminatory advertising became effective immediately upon enactment and applies to all dwellings. With respect to the other four categories of prohibited acts described above, namely, refusal to deal, discrimination in terms, false representation and block-busting, the prohibition becomes effective over a two-year period. The housing becomes covered in three stages, which are summarized in the following chart.

April 11, 1968	January 1, 1969	January 1, 1970
A-Dwellings owned by the Federal Government Example: Property acquired by FHA or VA B-Dwellings with Federal Financing that began after November 20, 1962 where payment was not make in full prior to enactment of the statute. Example: Low rent public housing C-Dwellings provided through loans insured or guaranteed by the Federal Government that began after November 20, 1962 where payment was not made in full prior to enactment of the statute. Example: FHA-VA housing D-Dwellings connected with a State or local public agency's slum clearance or urban renewal program that has received federal assistance since November 20, 1962 Example: Urban Renewal Housing	E-Single family houses not owned by private individuals. F- Single family houses owned by private individuals who own more than three houses or who sell more than one, in which he was not the most recent resident, in any two-year period. G-Multi-family dwellings with five or more units sold or rented whether or not the owner lives there. H-Dwellings containing four or or fewer units, if the owner does not reside therein.	I-Single family houses sold or rented by an owner who uses the facilities of a real estate dealer J-Single-family houses sold or rented after publication of discriminatory advertising

EXEMPTIONS

-Single family houses sold or rented by a private individual owner acting on his own behalf who owns three or fewer such houses and who has sold not more than one such house, in which he was not the most recent resident, in a two-year period.

-Multi-family dwellings with four or fewer units, if the owner of such dwelling resides therein. (Mrs. Murphy exemption.)

First Stage of Coverage. Upon enactment, approximately 1,000,000 housing units are made subject to the coverage of the statute. This first stage generally coincides with the coverage of the Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing (Executive Order 11063, November 20, 1962). Housing initially covered by the law includes:

1. Dwellings owned by the federal government (Section 803 (a)(1)(A);
2. Public housing provided with federal assistance since November 20, 1962, the effective date of Executive Order 11063 (Section 803 (a)(1)(B));
3. Housing secured by the credit of the federal government since November 20, 1962, the effective date of the Executive Order (FHA-VA housing)(Section 803 (a)(1)(C));
4. Urban renewal and slum clearance housing in which federal financial assistance was involved since the effective date of the Executive Order (Section 803 (a)(1)(D)).

Second Stage of Coverage. After December 31, 1968, coverage will be extended to some 18 to 20 million housing units, out of a national total of 69 million. Essentially, it will reach:

1. All dwellings containing five or more units;
2. Multi-family dwellings containing four or fewer units, if the owner does not reside in one of the units;
3. Single-family houses not owned by private individuals;

4. Single-family houses owned by private individuals who own more than three homes or who sell more than one in which he was not the most recent resident, in any two year period.

Third Stage of Coverage. After December 31, 1969, coverage will be extended to an estimated total of 55 million dwellings, because of additional limitations imposed at this point on the extent of the single-family house exemptions provided in the statute (Section 803 (b)(1). More specifically, the coverage will be extended to:

1. Any single-family house sold or rented with the aid of a real estate broker, and
2. Any single-family house sold or rented after publication of discriminatory advertising by the owner.

B. Exemptions. With respect to the prohibitions against discriminatory advertising (e.g., whites only), the prohibition against discrimination in financing, and the prohibition against discrimination in the provision of brokerage services, there are no exemptions. However, with respect to the other prohibitions, there are the following three exemptions:

1. A Mrs. Murphy Exemption. A "Mrs. Murphy" exemption permitting owners of dwellings containing four or fewer units to discriminate in the sale or rental of other units of such dwellings, so long as the owner resides in one of the units. (Section 803 (b)(2)).

2. Religious Organization or Private Club. An exemption permitting religious organizations or private clubs to prefer members of their own groups when making available housing owned or operated by such organizations for other than a commercial purpose. (Section 807).

3. Single-family Home Exemption. The most important exemption, and the most complex (Section 803 (b)(1)), will grant a partial exemption to private individual owners of single-family homes, under the following conditions:

Through 1969, any single-family home sold or rented by a private individual owner will be exempt from the title's prohibitions on discrimination. However, the exemption is not applicable if the owner owns more than three single-family houses at any one time. Furthermore, an owner of exempted houses may sell only one house (other than the house in which he was the most recent resident) in any twenty-four month period and remain free of the prohibitions on discrimination.

Beginning in 1970, the single-family house exemption is narrowed by two further limitations: first, the exemption is lost if the owner makes use of the sale or rental facilities of real estate dealer, i.e., he must sell or rent the house himself. Second, the exemption is lost if the owner publishes any written notice stating an intention to discriminate.

Thus, when the Act is fully effective, that is in 1970, the single-family home exemption will permit discrimination only when the owner sells or rents a house without professional assistance in securing the buyer or tenant, and when he avoids discriminatory advertising.

III. Enforcement

Title VIII provides three methods of obtaining compliance: suits by the Attorney General, administrative conciliation and private civil action.

A. Enforcement by the Attorney General. The statute authorizes the Attorney General to bring civil actions in federal courts whenever he has reasonable cause to believe that any person has engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to the enjoyment of fair housing rights, or whenever he has reasonable cause to believe that any group of persons has been denied such rights in a case of general public importance (Section 813). This is the basic authority for the enforcement program of the Department of Justice.

B. Administrative Conciliation. The Department of Housing and Urban Development has investigation and conciliation authority to resolve complaints alleging discriminatory housing practices. The Secretary of HUD will have 30 days after the filing of a complaint to investigate the matter and give notice to the person aggrieved whether he intends to resolve it. If the Secretary decides to resolve a complaint HUD will engage in informal conference and conciliation with the person alleged to have committed the discriminatory housing practice, and will attempt to obtain resolution of the complaint by that means. If conciliation fails or if the Secretary declines to resolve the charge or otherwise does not act within the 30-day period, the complaining party will have 30 additional days in which to file a civil action in federal court (Section 810).

If the complaint alleges acts constituting a violation of a state or local fair housing law, and that law provides rights and remedies

"substantially equivalent" to those provided in the bill, the Secretary shall refer the matter to the appropriate state or local agency, which will have at least 30 days to act on the matter before the Secretary could begin his own conciliation proceedings. In states with equivalent judicial rights and remedies, any suit filed following failure of conciliation efforts would have to be brought in the state courts (Sections 808-809).

C. Private Civil Actions. The third enforcement procedure is private suite in an appropriate federal or state court (Sections 810(d), 812). Such a suit can be brought following a failure of HUD to conciliate a complaint referred to it. However, a private suit can be brought immediately under Section 812 without referring the matter to HUD in any way. Such an action must be commenced within 180 days after the alleged discriminatory housing practice occurred. The statute authorizes, in appropriate cases, the appointment of an attorney for the plaintiff and the commencement of a civil action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Relief can include permanent or temporary injunctions, temporary restraining orders, or other appropriate order, as well as the awarding of actual damages and not more than $1,000 punitive damages.

IV. Interference, Coercion or Intimidation

The statute makes unlawful coercion, threats or intimidation of persons exercising or encouraging others to exercise rights granted or protected by the fair housing law. Section 817 provides for civil actions to enjoin such intimidation.

It should be noted that Title IX of the Act provides criminal penalties for forcible interference or injury because of race, color, religion or national origin and because a victim was seeking to sell, acquire, finance or occupy a dwelling, or to exercise other rights connected with housing. The right to freedom form forcible interference stated in Title IX goes substantially beyond the coverage of Title VIII.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1968

On April 10, 1968, the Congress enacted Civil Rights Bill H.R. 2516 by a vote of 250 to 171, and on April 11, 1968, it was signed by the President. (Title VIII is the Fair Housing portion of the Bill and is discussed at length below.)

- - - -

Title I provides for protection against violent interference with the exercise of specified rights including voting, public accommodations, public education, public services and facilities, employment, jury service, use of common carriers and travel in interstate commerce, and participation in federally-assisted programs.

Title I also establishes penalties for incitement to riot.

Titles II through VII concern protecting the rights of American Indians. In general terms, a bill of rights is established for American Indians and provision is made for assumption by States of civil and criminal jurisdiction over Indian country with the consent of the Indian tribes affected.

FAIR HOUSING

Title VIII declares: "It is the policy of the United States to provide, within constitutional limitations, for fair housing throughout the United States."

Coverage

The prohibition against discrimination on grounds of race, color, religion or national origin in the sale, rental or financing of residential housing takes effect in three stages.

A. Upon enactment, the ban applies to that housing now covered by Executive Order 11063 on Equal Opportunity in Housing subject to the exemptions listed on page 2

(1) Dwellings owned or operated by the Federal Government;
(2) Dwellings provided in whole or in part with the aid of loans, advances, grants, or contributions made by the Federal Government under agreements entered into after November 20, 1962, unless payment has been made in full prior to the date of enactment of this title;
(3) Dwellings provided in whole or in part by loans insured, guaranteed, or otherwise secured by the credit of the Federal Government, under agreements entered into after November 20, 1962, unless payment has been made in full prior to the date of enactment of the title. (Mortgages held by the FDIC or FSLIC institution and not otherwise included above are excluded from coverage);

(4) Dwellings provided by the development or the redevelopment of real property purchased, rented, or otherwise obtained from a State or local public agency receiving Federal financial assistance for slum clearance or urban renewal with respect to such real property under loan or grant contracts entered into after November 20, 1962.

B. After December 31, 1968, discrimination is barred in the sale, rental, or financing of other housing subject to the following three exceptions:

(1) Any single-family house sold or rented by a private owner who owns no more than three such single family houses at any one time. However, if the private individual owner is not a resident or was not the most recent resident of such house, this exemption applies only to one such sale within any twenty-four month period.

(2) Rooms or units in dwellings containing living quarters occupied or intended to be occupied by no more than four families living independently of each other, if the owner actually maintains and occupies one of such living quarters as his residence.

(3) Housing operated for other than commercial purposes, furnished to members of religious organizations, associations, or societies or members of private clubs.

Further, no person shall be denied access to or membership or participation in any multiple-listing service, real estate brokers' organization or other service, organization or facility relating to the business of selling or renting dwellings, or be discriminated against in the terms of such access on account of race, color, religion or national origin.

C. After December 31, 1969, the single-family exemption applies only if the sale or rental is made:

(1) without the use in any manner of the facilities or services of any real estate brokers, agent, salesman, or any person in the business of selling or renting; and

(2) without the publication, posting or mailing of any discriminatory advertisement or written notice.

Thus, an individual cannot utilize the professional services of persons in the business of renting and selling to effect a discriminatory purpose.

Prohibited Discriminatory Housing Practices

A. Discrimination is prohibited in:

(1) Sale or rental housing extended to:

a) refusal to sell or rent after a bona fide offer, or to negotiate or otherwise make available a dwelling

b) the terms, conditions or privileges of sale or rental, or the provision of connected services or facilities.

c) notices, statements or advertisements

d) representations respecting the availability for inspection, sale or rental.

e) certain representations as to the racial character of a neighborhood.

(2) Provision of financial assistance by businesses making commercial real estate loans.

(3) Brokerage and related services.

Administration

The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is responsible for administering this title; and an additional Assistant Secretary is provided.

The Secretary is directed to:

(1) Make studies with respect to the nature and extent of housing discrimination; and publish results of these studies.

(2) Cooperate with and render technical assistance to governmental and private organizations and the Community Relations Service in particular.

(3) Administer the programs and activities relating to housing and urban development in a manner affirmatively to further the policies of this title.

Education and Conciliation

The Secretary is directed to call conferences with the housing industry and other interested parties for their advice on programs of voluntary compliance and of enforcement.

Enforcement

Complaints must be in writing, verified and filed with the Secretary within 180 days after the alleged discriminatory housing practice occurred; copies will be furnished immediately to respondents.

There are three enforcement routes provided.

(1) Within 30 days of receipt of the complaint the Secretary shall investigate and may proceed to resolution through informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, all of which are to be kept confidential. However, wherever a State or local fair housing law provides rights and remedies which are substantially the same as those provided in this title, the Secretary shall take no further action if the State or local agency has, within 30 days of notice, commenced proceedings, or having done so, is proceeding with reasonable promptness.

The Secretary is vested with broad investigating and subpena power enforceable in Federal district court to secure access to records, premises, and individuals. Any person who fails to answer such subpena is subject to a fine of not more than $1000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

If voluntary compliance is not achieved under Federal, State or local law, the aggrieved party may, within 30 days thereafter commence a civil action in any appropriate Federal district court.

(2) Private persons may bring a civil action within 180 days of the alleged discriminatory housing practice. However, the court shall continue the case before bringing it to trial if it believes that conciliation efforts of the Secretary or a State or local agency are likely to result in a settlement.

The court may appoint Counsel for the plaintiff and waive fees, costs or security.

Remedies include granting of permanent or temporary injunctions, actual damages, together with court costs and reasonable attorney fees in the case of a prevailing plaintiff who is not financially able to assume such fees. Bona fide purchasers without notice of the complaint are protected.

(3) The Attorney General may bring a civil action when he has reason to believe that a pattern or practice of resistance exists or that the denial to a group of persons of the rights granted under this title raises an issue of general public importance. Preventive relief includes permanent and temporary injunctions, restraining orders against those responsible for such a pattern or practice or denial of rights.

Effect On State Laws

State and local laws that grant, guarantee or protect the same rights as are granted under this Title are preserved. However, any law requiring or permitting a discriminatory housing practice shall to that extent be invalid.

Cooperation with State and Local Agencies

The Secretary with the consent of State and local agencies and their employees may reimburse them for service rendered to assist him in carrying out this title.

Interference, Coercion, or Intimidation

Civil remedies are provided for interference with any person in the enjoyment of rights granted or protected by this title.

- - - -

Title IX on Prevention of Intimidation in Fair Housing Cases prohibits forcible interference with rights related to housing and provides criminal penalities for violations - a fine of not more than $1000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both; and if bodily inju ry results not more than $10,000 fine, nor more than 10 years imprisonment, or both; and if death results imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

Title X establishes three new Federal offenses and provides a penalty of a fine of $10,000, imprisonment up to five years, or both. The three new offenses are:

(1) Teaching or demonstrating the use or making of any firearm or explosive or incendiary device, knowing or having reason to know, or intending that it will be unlawfully employed for use in or in furtherance of a civil disorder which may in any way or degree obstruct, delay or adversely affect commerce, or the conduct or performance of any federally-protected function;

(2) Transporting or manufacturing for transportation in commerce a firearm or explosive or incendiary device, knowing or having reason to know, or intending that it will be used unlawfully in furtherance of a civil disorder;

(3) Committing or attempting to commit any act to obstruct, impede, or interfere with any firearm or law enforcement officer lawfully engaged in the lawful performance of his duties incident to and during the commission of a civil disorder which in any way or degree obstructs, delays, or adversely affects commerce for the conduct or performance of any federally-protected function. "Civil disorder" is defined as "any public disturbance involving acts of violence by assemblages of three or more persons, which causes an immediate danger of or results in damage or injury to the property or person of any other individual."

XI. CRIMINAL PENALITIES FOR INTIMIDATION IN FAIR HOUSING CASES

Explanation of the Fair Housing Title of the Civil Rights Act of 1968

I. POLICY AND CONSTITUTIONALITY

The opening section of the Title (Sec. 801) makes it "the policy of the United States to provide, within constitutional limitations, for fair housing throughout the United States." The qualifying language on constitutional limitations was the result of an amendment to the section during the course of the Senate debates. However, it seems clear that Congress has broad power to deal with the subject of fair housing under both the Commerce Clause and the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment and that the prohibitions against discrimination in the Fair Housing Title do not unconstitutionally infringe on private property rights. A comprehensive analysis of this question may be found in a memorandum placed in the Congressional Record by Congressman Celler during the House consideration of the bill (H2766 DCR, April 10, 1968).

II. DEFINITION "DWELLING", "TO RENT"

Coverage under the Title is based on "dwellings" which are broadly defined in section 802 to embrace any structure intended as a residence, including vacant land offered for residential construction or use. This definition would appear to cover virtually any kind of living quarters and any kind of land used for living quarters.

"To rent" is defined to include subleasing or otherwise granting a right of occupancy for consideration.

III. WHAT IS PROHIBITED BY THE LAW?

Sections 804, 805 and 806 of the Title prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, religion, color or national origin in three areas.

A. DISCRIMINATION IN SALE OR RENTAL - Section 804 applies to

(a) Refusal to sell or rent after a bona fide* offer is made or refusal to negotiate or otherwise make a dwelling available;

(b) Discrimination in terms, conditions or privileges of sale or rental;

(c) Discriminatory advertising with respect to sale or rental, whether in the form of a published advertisement or written notice or oral statement (i.e., a "white only" declaration in connection with a sale)

(d) False representations as to availability for inspection, sale or rental when a dwelling is in fact available;

(e) Blockbusting - discriminatory representations, made for profit, as to prospective neighbors in order to induce sale or rental.

*The term bona fide here does not mean that a legal determination of an offerors financial standing is necessary, but rather that the intention to rent or buy must be in good faith and not just a "test" of the sellers discrimination. If there is a failure to negotiate with a possible purchaser, of course, no offer need be made.

B. DISCRIMINATION IN FINANCING - Section 805 applies to the provision of financial assistance (for the purpose of purchase, construction, improvement, repair or maintenance) by any business making commercial real estate loans. Its protections extend not only to the applicant for financial assistance but to any person associated with him in the application and to prospective owners, lessees and applicants.

C. DISCRIMINATION IN THE PROVISION OF BROKERAGE SERVICES - Section 806 applies to access to, or participation or membership in, any brokerage service or facility related to the business of selling or renting dwellings, including multiple listing services.

IV. EFFECTIVE DATES AND SCOPE OF COVERAGE OF PROHIBITIONS

A. COVERAGE OF FINANCING AND BROKERAGE SERVICES PROHIBITIONS

The prohibitions against discrimination in finance and the provision of brokerage services both become effective January 31, 1968, and apply to all dwellings.

B. COVERAGE OF SALE OR RENTAL PROHIBITIONS

The prohibitions against discrimination in sale or rental of section 804 become effective in three stages and will, when fully operative, apply to roughly 80% of the dwellings in the country. These stages are delineated in Section 803 of the Title.

Stage 1 - Upon Enactment, the prohibitions of Section 804 (c) against discriminatory advertising apply to all dwellings. The prohibitions of Section 804(a), (b), (d) and (e) apply to all federally operated dwelling units and to certain other dwellings which have received the kind of Federal assistance covered by Executive Order 11063 (loans and grants, use of land developed with urban renewal assistance, mortgage guarantees etc. - but coverage shall not apply solely because of a mortgage purchase by an FDIC or FSLIC institution). The assistance must also be given under agreements which were entered into after November 20, 1962 and are still outstanding on enactment. Basically three kinds of dwellings receiving such Federal assistance are covered upon enactment:

1) Multi-unit dwellings of five or more units

2) Non-owner occupied two to four unit dwellings

3) Single family houses not owned by private individuals.

Additionally, a limited number of single family houses owned by private individuals and receiving such Federal assistance are covered where an individual has an equitable or legal interest in more than three such houses or where, in any two year period, he sells more than one such house in which he was not the most recent resident. The first such sale would be exempt from coverage.

Stage 2 - After December 31, 1968, the prohibitions apply to any of the kinds of dwellings described immediately above regardless of whether they are federally assisted.

Stage 3 - After December 31, 1969, single family houses owned by private individuals become covered if they are sold or rented through a broker or other person in the business of selling or renting dwellings, or if a discriminatory written notice or advertisement is used in the sale or rental

Persons in the business of selling or renting dwellings are broadly defined in section 803(c) to include anyone who owns a dwelling for five or more families and anyone who, in the preceding year, has been involved as a principal in three or more sale or rental transactions or has been involved as an agent in two or more such transactions. The definition would also include regular real estate brokers, agents or salesmen regardless of the number of transactions in which they are involved.

V. EXEMPTIONS, EXCEPTIONS AND LIMITATIONS TO COVERAGE

"Mrs. Murphy" Exemption. Under section 803(b)(2), the sale or rental of rooms or units in dwellings for up to four separate families (families include individuals) one of which rooms or units is occupied by the owner is exempt completely from the coverage of sections 804 (a), (b), (d) and (e), except that the sale of the entire dwelling would not be within the exemption, nor would the exemption apply if the owner-occupant moves out. Although the exemption is directed at small boarding houses, it could apply, by its language, to small apartment houses for two to four families.

Byrd Amendment - This refers to the language of section 803(b)(1) which allows a limited exemption from coverage for bona fide private individual owners of up to three single family houses. Prior to the amendment of the bill, the exemption of section 803 (b)(1) applied to sale or rental of single family houses only where the owner was also the most recent resident and thus would not have exempt so-called second or vacation homes. The first two provisos of section 803(b)(1) limit the number of sales to which the exemption would apply in any two year period and seek to provide roughly the same kind of safeguards as are found in the Internal Revenue Code against circumvention of the law by transferring property to a close relative or in other than an arm's length transaction

Single Family House - For purposes of the limited exemption of single family houses under section 803(b), the term is intended to have its generally understood meaning and to be distinguished from the broader term "single family dwelling" which could include an apartment occupied by one family. Single family house could include a semi-detached or row house but would not include ownership in a condominium or cooperative

Religious Organizations and Private Clubs (Section 807) - Religious organizations which do not discriminate in membership on the basis of race, color or national origin are permitted to give certain preferences to their members in the sale, rental or occupancy of dwellings which they own and operate for other than a commercial purpose. Private clubs, not in fact open to the public, are also permitted to give membership preference in the rental and occupancy of "lodgings" which they own or operate as an incident to their primary purpose.

Title Transfer Services - The prohibitions on discrimination in sale or rental and discrimination in financing of sections 804 and 805 are not intended to limit the provision of professional assistance by attorneys, escrow agents, abstractors, title companies or others in perfecting transfer of real estate. They would apply, however, to other professional services or activities by such parties which fall within the terms of the sections.

VI. HUD FUNCTIONS AND POWERS

A. ADMINISTRATION

Section 808 places in the Secretary of HUD, general responsibility for the administration of the Title. It authorizes an additional Assistant Secretary to assist in administering the law. The Secretary is authorized to delegate any of his functions, duties, or powers to employees or boards of employees of the Department. Hearing Officers may be designated in compliance with provisions in the United States Code.

The Secretary is directed to -- a) make studies; b) publish reports; c) cooperate with and give technical assistance to Federal, State, local and other public or private fair housing agencies; d) cooperate with and give technical and other assistance to the Community Relations Service; e) administer HUD programs in a manner to affirmatively further the policie of the fair housing law.

B. EDUCATION AND CONCILIATION.

Section 809 provides that immediately after enactment of the Title, the Secretary shall commence such educational conciliatory activities as will further the purposes of the law. The Secretary is to call conferences of persons in the housing industry and other interested persons to acquaint them with the provisions of the law and his suggested means of implementing it, and shall endeavor with their advice to work out programs of voluntary compliance and enforcement. He also is to consult with State and local officials and other interested parties to learn the extent of housing discrimination in their State or locality, and whether and how State or local enforcement programs might be utilized in conncetion with or in place of the Secretary's enforcement of the Title.

C. CONCILIATION

Section 810 provides for filing of complaints with the Secretary and conciliation efforts by him. The complaint and conciliation process is charted in greater detail below under section VIII.

D. INVESTIGATIVE AND SUBPOENA POWERS

Section 811 gives the Secretary broad powers to investigate, to subpoena records and individuals, to issue interrogatories and to administer oaths. He must also issue subpoenas for the party charged, upon request. The subpoena powers are enforceable in U.S. District Court upon a showing that there has been a refusal to obey the Secretary.

VII. ENFORCEMENT AND REMEDIES

The Title provides three methods of obtaining compliance with the law and enforcing its provisions.

A. CONCILIATION

Conciliation by the Secretary or resolution by State or local agencies pursuant to the complaint procedures of Section 810 (see Section VIII).

B. PRIVATE CIVIL ACTION BY AGGRIEVED PARTIES

(a) Under section 810, in U.S. District Court after exhaustion of complaint procedures

(b) Under section 812, in U.S. District Court or appropriate State or local court any time within 180 days after the alleged discriminatory housing practice occurred.

(c) Under section 817, in any court having jurisdiction over the subject matter, to redress interference, threats, coercion with rights granted under section 806 of the Title. This is in the nature of a tort action.

C. ACTION BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Under section 813 in cases of pattern and practice of resistance to the law or cases where the denial of rights to a group of persons raises an issue of general public importance.

VIII. THE COMPLAINT AND CONCILIATION PROCEDURE OF SECTION 810

A. FILING A COMPLAINT

Who Can Complain: Any person who claims that, as of the effective date of the Title, he has been injured or will be irrevocably injured by a discriminatory housing practice within the meaning of sections 804, 805, or 806 may file a complaint with the Secretary not more than 180 days after the alleged discriminatory practice occurs.

Form of Complaint: It must be in writing, verified, state the facts upon which the allegations of discrimination are based and contain such other information and be in such form as the Secretary requires.

Answers and Amendments: A respondent may file a verified answer and both complainant and respondent may amend at any time, if the Secretary finds it reasonable and fair to do so.

B. PROCESSING A COMPLAINT - THE SECRETARY'S FUNCTION

1) Upon receipt of a complaint meeting the above requirements, furnish a copy to the person charged with a discriminatory practice.

2) Determine whether a State or local fair housing law applies to the complaint and provides rights and remedies substantially equivalent to those provided by the Title. The test of equivalency will go to the effectiveness of State and local agencies in enforcing these laws and not just to the presence of an equivalent law.

If State or local law is equivalent	If State or local law does not apply or is not equivalent
A) Immediately notify the State or local agency. (The statute does not specify a time requirement although an intention to place an outside limit on this time of 30 days from receipt of the complaint may be inferred.)	a) Investigate and notify the aggrieved person within 30 days from receipt of complaint whether HUD intends to resolve it, i.e., he finds probable cause to believe a discriminatory housing practice has occurred.
B) Give the State or local agency 30 days to commence proceedings and "reasonable" time to carry proceedings forward.	b) If the Secretary decides to resolve it, he shall proceed with informal and confidential conciliation efforts, to be conducted insofar as practicable, in the location where the discriminatory practices allegedly occurred.
C) After 30 days without commencement of proceeding or if the proceedings are not carried forward with reasonable promptness, the Secretary may reassert jurisdiction. At such time, the case would be in the same posture as if State or local law did not apply. (See a) and b) in right hand column).
D) If the Secretary does not obtain voluntary compliance within 30 days, the aggrieved party may bring suit in the appropriate U.S. District Court within 30 days thereafter, provided he does not have an equivalent judicial remedy under a State or local fair housing law.	c) If the Secretary does not obtain voluntary compliance within 30 days after the complaint is filed, the aggrieved party may bring suit within 30 days thereafter in the appropriate U.S. District court.

C. TERMINATION OF CONCILIATION

The Secretary must terminate efforts to obtain voluntary compliance whenever an action brought by an individual in Federal or State or local court (pursuant to the above, or under section 812) comes to trial. Concomitantly, the court is directed to continue the case whenever it appears that conciliation efforts of the Secretary are likely to result in satisfactory settlement of a complaint to the Secretary which is also the subject matter of the court action. Unless the case is filed and comes to trial, termination of conciliation by the Secretary is discretionary.

IX. COMPARISON OF SECTIONS 810 AND 812 JUDICIAL REMEDIES

Sections 810 and 812 appear to provide somewhat similar judicial remedies. This can best be understood in light of the legislative history of the Title in that section 810 was originally intended to provide judicial review from an administrative enforcement procedure which was eliminated from the Title as a result of the Dirksen amendment. Section 812 was intended to provide an independent means of court enforcement. There are important differences in the two sections, however.

Section 810	Section 812
Actions can be brought only in Federal court. The section provides for injunctions and for such affirmative actions as may be appropriate by way of remedy. It is not entirely clear whether the court, under this broad mandate, may award damages or give the other relief specifically allowed under 812. The burden of proof in such actions is specifically placed on the complainant. Further, section 810 actions can only be brought after exhaustion of conciliation procedures and only if the person aggrieved does not have a judicial remedy under a State or local fair housing law.	Actions may be brought at any time within 180 days after the alleged discriminatory housing practice occur. They may be brought in either Federal court or in appropriate State or local courts and the penalties specifically include any appropriate temporary restraining order or other order, actual damages, punitive damages up to $1,000, cost and attorneys fees (where the court finds plaintiff is not financially able to assume such fees). Additionally, the section provides for court appointment of an attorney and waiver of fees, cost and security under such circumstances as the court deems just.

A plantiff would thus appear to have both a wider array of remedies and a smaller potential burden of expense under section 812 than under 810.

Under both sections 810 and 812, bona fide purchasers, encumbrancers or tenants without notice of the filing of the complaint or a civil action under the Title would not be affected if they are in possession of the property. This proviso has the effect of modifying existing judicial doctrine to make clear that actual notice of the existence of a complaint or civil action is necessary before an innocent purchaser's right would be endangered by an adverse judgement. However, a party would not be innocent, in the first instance, if he knew of a seller's or renter's discriminatory intent, regardless of whether he knew of the filing of a complaint or civil action.

X. EFFECT ON STATE AND LOCAL AND OTHER LAWS

Under section 815, State and local laws are preserved, except where they would be discriminatory themselves. Under section 816 the Secretary may enter into agreements or cooperative arrangements with State or local fair housing agencies to utilize their facilities or employees in carrying out the Title.

XI. CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR INTIMIDATION IN FAIR HOUSING CASES - TITLE IX

Title IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 protects persons from willful interference or injury because of race, color, religion, or national origin, and because they were seeking (a) to sell or acquire housing, (b) to finance or occupy a dwelling, or (c) to exercise other rights connected with housing. The law also prohibits willful interference with those who would aid or encourage others to exercise these rights or lawfully speak or assemble to protest denials of these rights. Criminal penalties are provided for the offenses described, including fines and imprisonment.

Ebenezer Baptist Church

Keynote Address Mr. Carl Ware

HOUSING

It is ironical for American History that racism which was essentially rural and Southern in its origin is today basically urban and national in its manifestations.

Pittsburgh, like Atlanta is a segregated city. According to 1960 census figures 94% (95,267) of the Negro population lived in 52 of approximately 183 census tracts. Estimates are that this number has significantly increased since that time.

Though Negroes comprised 16% of the population of the city in 1960 they occupied 33.3% of the substandard housing units. Of these 13,500 substandard units 10,500 (77.8%) were occupied on a rental basis.

Negroes spend 25.7% of their income for rent. Whites spend 18.2%.

Of the 183 census tracts comprising the city 14 have no Negro population, 45 have less than 1% Negro population.

Negroes make up approximately 18% of the city population but only 3% of the population outside of the city. Most of the Negro population outside of the city limits reside in 3 third-class cities in Allegheny County -- Clairton, Mckeesport and Duquesne.

In 1960, 72% of the white population lived outside the city limits compared wity 57.6% in 1950. This shows the flight of the white man to the suburbs leaving the inner city to the Negro.

Seventy percent of all Negro households are located on blocks that are 50% or more non-white.

Negroes that make from seven to ten thousand dollars per year are not as well housed as whites who make the same.

Nearly 7 of 10 non-white occupied households were located in the Upper-Lower Hill, the Strip, Garfield, East Liberty, Homewood-Brushton and Beltzhoover in 1960.

The majority of newly established non-white households are located in already highly concenttated areas of non-white occupancy.

Three-fourths of the city's residential blocks haae no racial integration. There were substantial differences in the housing conditions of Negro and white families relocated from the lower hill redevelopment area. Although 4 times as many non-white families were relocated, 23 times as many non-white families ended up in substandard housing.

To help prevent discriminatory practices in the sale and rental of properties, the City of Pittsburgh in 1958 adopted a fair housing ordinance which prohibits discrimination in the sale or rental of all units except those whose owner owner fewer than five units in the city.

The law is enforced through the compliance division of the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has an ordianance enforced by the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission which covers all housing accomodatinns except owner-occupied one-or two family dwellings. URBAN LEAGUE HOUSING PROGRAM

I. Statement of the Problem

It is an established truism that Negroes have been denied equal opportunity in housing both within the City of Pittsburgh, and in certain of the surrounding municipalities. This denial of opportunity to individual human beings has not been fostered by any personal shortcomings, but because of race, color of skin, or country origin. Housing discrimination decrees that all persons of a particular group, regardless of personal qualifications, may not live in certain neighborhoods, but only in certain neighborhoods, but only in certain others. These other neighborhoods, the black ghettoes, are, for the most part, less desirable.

The patterns of discrimination and segregation in Pittsburgh have become institutionalized and constitute a major component of the practices of the housing and real estate industry broadly defined to include real estate brokers and salesmen, landlords, builders, developers, mortgage lending institutions, and government housing agencies. When the normal commercial real estate channels are open to minorities without discrimination, the need for open occupancy programming becomes obsolete.

This problem of discrimination in housing and its effect on the general welfare of the country requires a program comparable to the magnitude of the problem. This means that our efforts must be directed toward changing the policies and practices of the housing and real estate industry.

Based on reports from the 8 participating Urban League affiliates covering the period January 1, 1965 to June 30, 1966, there were over 4,000 requests for the Housing Services, over 3,000 listings were received and over 375 families bought or rented homes. Over 200 complaints of discrimination were filed with state and city anti-bias agencies. The demonstrated success of this program in one region gave impetus to the view that the adoption of this program in other metropolitan areas would make a significant contribution toward achieving open-occupancy. The expansion of this program was made possible by a Ford Foundation Grant in the amount of $1.5 million for three years. The first city to participate in this project is Cleveland, Ohio. In the spring of 1967 two more cities are expected to join the program - Seattle, Washington and Pittsburgh Pennsylvania, Miami, Florida, Rochester New York, and New York,City.

Objective

The Major goal of "Operation Equality" is:

To establish a "truly" open-housing market where all families may live where they wish, based upon their ability to pay.

Program Inplementation

To establish an open-housing market, effective social forces within the communitymmust be mobilized. This will be accomplished through the utilization of the following program components:

Metropolitan Council

This council will be used to mobilizeeall the community resources to increase and improve the housing supply and to insure equal access to the supply by all segments of the population.

Neighborhood Offices

This facet of the operation would seek to locate and activate potentially mobile families.

Housing Infommation Services

A listing of housing opportunitées will be compiled by voluntary commitments as well as by those opportunities covered by the fair housing law.

A listing of families seeking these opportunities would also be established and maintained.

Fair Housing Activities

Community education programs in white suburbia and white areas of the center city will be conducted.

Volunteers

For each of these program components, volunteers must be recruited, oriented to the program, and trained to assistaand counsel families.

CHOOSE, as a clearing house, maintains a monthly listing of houses and apartments available for sale or rental on an open-occupancy basis in the Pittsburgh area. With the cooperation of groups concerned about fair housing, the service attempts to link the supply of available housing to the demand.

HISTORY

CHOOSE was begun in November, 1963 by the Public Affairs Committee of the Fisst Unitarian Church of Pittsburgh to help Negro and other minority group homeseekers to find suitable housing within their resorces. Realizing that within the deeply d discriminatory system operating in the Pittsburgh area there were individuals who believed in open housing, the group decided to establish a clearing house 1) of listings of properties available to all seekers, and 2) of families desiring such housing.

The service was begun in January 1964 with advice from a real estate broker, a lawyer, a human relations expert, and citizens who had participated in similar earlier attempts. A monthly listing of properties available on the open market was published and distributed by groups interested in the work. Under the direction of a Coordinator, with housing aides from among the church members were assigned to accompany prospective homeseekers in looking at homes and apartments. Aides were especially useful in locating housing for families moving to Pittsburgh from other cities.

By July, 132 families had used the service. CHOOSE had obtained 175 listings, and 318 referrals had been made to homes on the CHOOSE lists. In October of 1965, the Director began to give leadership in extending the service to the community by involving organizations interested in fair housing. Increasing demand for housing necessitated the system of Coordinators to work in various area.

Through fair housing groups CHOOSE has enlarged its list of volunteers from the original group to the broader community; it has begun to enlarge its role within the Pittsburgh area; and it has participated in a variety of ways in the fair housing movement.

REPORT OF ACTIVITIES

Attainment of Goals

A major strength of CHOOSE is the fact that such a service exists and provides an opportunity that is not available through any other group or agency. The goals of the organization have been identified by volunteers as the following:

To help minority group families to find suitable housing

To Promote integration

To Achieve open occupancy

The fact that there was a dedicated core of volunteers and leadership who are willing to devote much time and energy without hope of personal reward has been the outstanding reason for the continuance of the organization. An interested and dedicated individual may give as much or as little time as he or she wishes in any of several phases of the group activities. Those who have received service become part of the chain for its continuance.

The organized support of named and unnamed groups, churches, associations, and agencies concerned about the problem of fair housing was basic in extending the services of CHOOSE to the larger community in and around Pittsburgh. The cooperating groups secure listings, provide aides, and donate supplies for the maintenance of the service.

Through informing citizens of their rights and responsibilities under the fair housing laws of the City and State, volunteers have helped to interpret the Pittsburgh Human Relations Ordianance and the Pennsylvania Human Relations Act.

The Positive results of obtaining homes for minority group members, as shown by statistics, in no way indicates the time, attention, devotion, and indirect education which accomplishes the goals of CHOOSE.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

CHOOSE has worked with at least 1000 individuals or families within the 5 year period, January 1964 to January 1968. Through its direct or indirect efforts, 300 homeseekers found housing in the Greater Pittsburgh Area. Of that number, 244 secured units in areas which were 95 to 100 per cent white, and 96 moved into integrated (40 to 95 per cent) sections.

The data provided do not accurately measure the extent to which help given by Choose may have been a factor in the final move. Fifty-seven per cent of the registrants whose new address was known moved into predominantly white areas. Though thirteen per cent moved into integrated areas, efforts were made to prevent the formation of new ghettoes.

A far greater portion of registrants seek rental than sale housing. The number of persons who actually found housing shows five times as many rental units as houses bought. Of those who f found housing with CHOOSE help, 76 per cent secured rental units, and 20 per cent pruchased homes. Of a total of 282 housing units which have been listed by homeowners, only six per cent have been sold through advertising on the CHOOSE lists. Additional listings are secured from brokers, banks, FHA, VA, and universities in the area.

In terms of the total need, the activities of CHOOSE have not solved the problem of housing for minority group members in proportion to the need for decent housing. Nevertherless, in providing a tool by which some upward-mobile families have been able to find housing suitable to their needs and resources, CHOOSE has encouraged a greater number of Negroes to seek housing outside of overcrowded areas.

ADMINISTRATION

Volunteers give service in a variety of ways to accomplish the goals of CHOOSE:

The service is administered by an Advisory Committee made up of individuals from the various cooperating groups and others with specialized knowledge in the field of housing. The Advisory Committee names the Director and Assistant Directors, who are responsible for interpreting the policies to the public, organizing activities in relation to cooperating groups, and receiving and assembling listings and reports.

The fair housing groups associated with the service furnish Area Coordinators for the City, North , East, South, and West areas, and in outlying communities. Coordinators assume the responsibility of recruiting aides and locating homes in their areas. They accept all calls from homeseekers and homeowners and arrange for inspection of homes.

Aides are secured through fair housing groups to help and advise persons who are seeking homes in the neighborhood. The intensity of service provided by aides ranges from simply giving leads, encouragement and advice to locating available housing, discovering the suitability of units, and furnishing escort service.

Clerical Volunteers may not work directly with homeseekers but are responsible for organizing, assembling, and mimeographing listings, writing letters, publishing a newssheet, or designing displays.

Other volunteers perform specific tasks involved in the overall procedure of securing listings of available housing and helping to create a receptive community climate for non-white families moving into a neighborhood. A CHOOSE volunteer is a person dedicated to the ideal of equal housing for all people.

ACTIVITIES

A. LISTING SERVICE

The monthly or bi-monthly listing of homes available on the open market is the primary activity of the Clearing House for Open Occupancy Selections. A listings secretary collects the information concerning homes offered and prepares the list for duplication. Volunteers arrange for the distribution of listings to churches, clubs, and agencies which might bring them to the attention of potential clients.

The first CHOOSE list of January 1964 had nine homes for sale, ranging in price from $8,500 to $28,000 and five units for rent. The list of November -December 1966 showed 87 sale properties ranging in price from $5,000 to $38,000 with 52 homes in the $10,000-$20,000 category. The limited housing supply in the Pittsburgh area has made it impractical to list units offered for rent.

Thellistings provide the phone numbers of Area Coordinators and Rental Supervisor, but do not give the names of owners or locations of property advertised. A homeseeker calls the designated number and is referred to the seller, landlord, or broker who is handling the property. Homeowners who listtheir properties are informed of homeseekers who may be interested in viewing them.

Property listings are secured by members of fair housing gropps through phone calls to owners, visits to real estate brokers, and through the open housing lists of governmental agencies, universities, and banks. Listings are shared with prospective buyers, Negro real estate agents, and cooperating groups, with the owners permission.

Additional listing with a fair housing broker is recommended.

B. HOUSING AIDE SERVICE

Housing Aides are the direct link with the homeseeker in locating available housing in a neighborhood. Aides provide the family with information about the community, advertised housing, supportive individuals, and the fair housing laws, when necessary.

When a homeseeker phones an Area Coordinator for suggestions of listings, he is immediately assigned to an Aide who contacts him. To find the housing desired, intensive activity may be necessary, including phone calls in answer to all newspaper ads, visits to realtors, trips throughout the community seeking "For Sale" or "For Rent" signs, and actual inspection of properties.

The CHOOSE Aide maintains contact with the family, if desired, throughout the househunting process, which may be stretched into a lengthy period. Devious discriminatory practices make the process arduous and time-consuming. When discrimination is met or suspected homeseekers are encouraged to file complaints withthe Mayor's Commission on Human Relations or the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission, botthof whose services are available. The Commissions provide assistance inssecuring housing covered by the city and state laws.

It has been found necessary to extend the service of CHOOSE into all phases of the housing transaction: locating houses, visiting properties, choosing the residence, securing a fair lawyer, receiving financial advice, securing a mortgage, and moving into a new community.

A family may consult CHOOSE at any point in the househunting process for an Aide to provide information about a neighborhood, prices, values, fair brokers, or an explanation of other available services. A rewarding aspect of the often frustrating search for housing by a non-white family is the fact that the homeseeker may become a volunteer for CHOOSE and a member of a fair housing group.

SIGNIFICANCE OF CHOOSE

Open occupancy in housing depends upon the actions and activities of people living in thier communities. Volunteers have shown the important role thay can play in providing opportunities for minority group members to seek better housing. A core of concerned individuals in a neighborhood can promote a climate of acceptance which makes peaceful integration possible.

The process of meeting the vital and pressing housing needs of upward-mobile persons, as well as out-of-towners, whommeet discrimination has been time-consuming, frustrating, and often discouraging. The courage and tenacity of both volunteers and homeseekers have built trust and friendship between persons of varied backgrounds.

Cooperating of groups concerned with open housing has established a working venture which advances freedom of choice in the Pittsburgh area. The support of such groups encourages homeseekers to choose housing which meets their needs and resources in hitherto unintegrated areas.

Increased knowledge and acceptance of air housing laws broaden the opportunities of the homeseeker and strengthens the effectiveness of the homeseeker and strengthens the effectiveness of the work of the City and State human relations commissions.

In the Pittsburgh area, much of the good quality housing is in neighborhoodsswhich have not been open to minority group members. The success of these families in moving into new areas is vital in creating a firm, stable, and responsible community leadership.

As a volunteer group offering a free service in Metropolitan Pittsburgh since January 1964, the Clearing House for Open Occupancy Selections provides an opporunity for all concerned about human values to work together in creating a progressive and truly open community.

C. COOPERATING GROUPS

CHOOSE depends upon the support of a number of organizations and agencies for its activity and growth. Members of the Associations for Racial Equality in South Hills, Penn Hills, North Hills, Allegheny Valley, and Sewickley Valley have provided a liaison with their communities. The Urban League mimeographs the listings; the Catholic Interracial Council, the Jewish Community Relations Council, the Young Women's Christain Association, and the First Unitarian Church have provided other stenographic and mailing services. Aides are supplied by these groups, as well as the Council of Jewish Women, Citizens for a Better City, and the Society of Friends.

Additionally, Hill House Association, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Pittsburgh Area Religion and Race Council, Pittsburgh Presbytery, Methodist Board of Christian Social Concern, and numerous churches have provided support of various types. Through a cooperative venture of interested groups, a Workshop on Housing Opportunities was held in March, 1966. Specific proposals for future activiteis of fair housing groups were made and are being implemented.

D. Community Education

In broadening opportunities for minority groups to secure housing on the open market, CHOOSE has become involved in other phases of community life. Speakers from fair housing groups have sought the support of civic organizations. Representatives of CHOOSE participate in the Pittsburgh Fair Housing Movement, the Allegheny County Council on Civil Rights, the Citizen-Clergy Coordinating Committee, and other groups. Testifying before City Council for a stronger fair housing ordinance, working with real estate brokers, industries, banks, and universities to secure their willingness to share listings; training volunteers; and helping groups to plan activities relating to housing have been some other aspects of CHOOSE work.

Housing Guide to Equal Opportunities

Suitable living environments and stable, racially inclusive occupancy patterns do not occur through law or by choice. They result from motivation, imaginative planning, and painstaking management. Enough has been said about the evils of segor complaince with minimum requirements of the law. Racial balance can be achieved by affirmative marketing practices . If there is greater pressure from the Negro market, special measures can be taken to recruit more white families. If too few non-white are applying, special recruitment can be directed to the Negro market.

Physical Location Setting, convenience, design and price are more important then influencing families to live in integrated neighborhoods than the presence or absence of people of other races. Partially subsidized moderate income housing seems to offer the best prospect for integration. It is at this economic level that the greatest of the white and non-white market occurs.

The special government assistance available to non-profit and cooperatives sponsors is encouraging many socially motivated organizations and private firms to enter the housing field and the advantageous financial terms make it feasible to cater to a racially inclusive market.

There must be a policy decision and plan for racial inclusiveness, both public and private that heretofore has been employed in moving this country toward "two societies, one black, one white - sperate and unequal. A massive, well coordianted attack is essential to solve economic and social crises of urban areas, housing,employment schools, health, recreation and welfare all interact.

What we need now is sense of urgency, the kind of determined action that I think we could expect from businessmen if suddenly they were faced with a threat of the nationalization of industry or a tax bill which would work severe hardships on their businesses.

We should expect from the labor leaders of this country the kind or urgency and excitement and activity that we could expect if they were faces with compulsory collective bargaining legislation or strengthening of the Taft-Hartley Bill.

I think we should expect from the religious leaders the kind of commitment and urgency they would exhibit if they were suddenly told that they were no longer going to be tax exempt institutions.

Mr. Marvin Wall
Southern Regional Council

Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Wall:

Pursuant to your recent request, I am enclosing several copies of the Department of Housing and Urban Development's housing discrimination complaint form.

As an individual interested in fair housing, you can be of great assistance to victims of housing discrimination by:

1. Making these forms available to persons who have alleged that acts of discrimination in housing have been practiced against them.

2. Assisting such persons in properly completing the forms and in providing adequate details of the nature of the discriminatory act, and (if feasible) arranging for the form to be notarized.

3. Advising victims of discrimination of their choice of alternative legal remedies, so that an informed decision can be made concerning whether to complain to HUD, complain to the Department of Justice, or seek the advice of an attorney concerning the possibility of bringing private litigation.

Additional copies of the complaint form, if needed, will be furnished by this office on request. Copies will also be available in FHA offices in major cities. It is not absolutely necessary that a complaint be filed on the official form, although use of the form saves time and assures that the necessary minimum information on which determinations of coverage can be made is furnished to this Department. Before a complaint can be acted upon, however, it is necessary that it be notarized. If the services of a notary are not readily available, the complaint can be sent to HUD without verification and this office will assist the complainant in getting his complaint notarized.

If this office can be of service to you in connection with questions or problems related to fair housing, please do not hesitate to write or call:

HOUSING DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT

WHAT DOES THE FEDERAL FAIR HOUSING LAW PROVIDE?

The new law (Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968) declares that it is a national policy to provide fair housing throughout the United States and prohibits seven kinds of discriminatory acts regarding housing if the discrimination is based on race, religion, color or national origin.

1. Refusal to sell or rent or otherwise deal with any person.
2. Discriminating in the conditions or terms of sale, rental or occupancy.
3. Falsely denying housing is available.
4. Discriminatory advertising.
5. Blockbusting—causing someone to sell or rent by telling him that members of a minority group are moving into the area.
6. Discrimination in financing housing by a bank, savings and loan association or other business.
7. Denial of membership or participation in brokerage, multiple listing or other real estate services.

WHAT DOES THE NEW LAW DO NOW?

The first three acts listed above are prohibited now, except that:

1. These three prohibitions do not apply to units in houses for two to four families if the owner lives in one of the units;
2. Single family houses owned by private individual homeowners of three or fewer such houses will not generally become subject to these three prohibitions until 1970.

The last four acts listed above are prohibited now as applied to all kinds of housing, without exception.

NOTE: Coercion, threats or other interference with an individual's rights under the law, including the right to file a complaint, are also prohibited now.

WHAT DOES THE LAW DO IN 1970?

In 1970, the first three prohibitions will become applicable to any single family house where the owner seeks to rent or sell it through the use of a broker or through discriminatory advertising.

WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT VIOLATIONS OF THE NEW LAW?

Remember, the new law applies to discrimination based on race, religion, color or national origin. If you believe you have been, or are about to be, discriminated against or otherwise harmed by the kinds of discriminatory acts which are prohibited by the law now, you have a right, within 180 days after the discrimination occurred, to:

1. Complain to the Secretary by filing this form by mail or in person. HUD will investigate and if it finds the complaint is covered by the law and is justified, it will try to end the discrimination by conciliation. In cases where State or local laws give the same rights as Federal law, HUD must first ask the State or local agency to try to resolve the problems.
2. Go directly to Court even if you have not filed a complaint with the Secretary. The Court may sometimes be able to give quicker, more effective relief than conciliation can provide and may also appoint an attorney for you (without cost) in certain cases.

You Should Also Report All Information about violations to HUD or the Attorney General of the United States even though you don't intend to complain or go to court yourself.

WHAT OTHER FEDERAL LAWS APPLY TO FAIR HOUSING?

Both a Presidential Order and Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as well as the 1968 law, apply to discrimination in federally assisted housing. Your complaint under the new law may also be processed by HUD under Title VI or the Presidential Order when the facts indicate a violation of those laws. Additionally, the U.S. Supreme Court has determined that a prior law (the Civil Rights Act of 1866) prohibits any racial discrimination which interferes with the right to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold or convey any kind of housing, regardless of whether the housing is covered under any other law. This right is enforceable by private court action.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS

If you wish to explain in detail on a separate sheet what happened, you should consider the following:

1. If you feel that others were treated differently than you, please explain.
2. If there were witnesses or others who know what happened, give their names and addresses.
3. If you have made this complaint to other government agencies or to the courts, state when and where and explain what happened.

This form may be mailed by simply folding it, sealing it, and dropping it in a mailbox. You can obtain assistance in learning about the law or in filing a complaint at any HUD regional or field office (including FHA field offices), or by writing to the address below.

2. Single family houses owned by private individual homeowners of three or fewer such houses will not generally become subject to these three prohibitions until 1970.

The last four acts listed above are prohibited now as applied to all kinds of housing, without exception.

NOTE: Coercion, threats or other interference with an individual's rights under the law, including the right to file a complaint, are also prohibited now.

WHAT DOES THE LAW DO IN 1970?

In 1970, the first three prohibitions will become applicable to any single family house where the owner seeks to rent or sell it through the use of a broker or through discriminatory advertising.

WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT VIOLATIONS OF THE NEW LAW?

Remember, the new law applies to discrimination based on race, religion, color or national origin. If you believe you have been, or are about to be, discriminated against or otherwise harmed by the kinds of discriminatory acts which are prohibited by the law now, you have a right, within 180 days after the discrimination occurred, to:

1. Complain to the Secretary by filing this form by mail or in person. HUD will investigate and if it finds the complaint is covered by the law and is justified, it will try to end the discrimination by conciliation. In cases where State or local laws give the same rights as Federal law, HUD must first ask the State or local agency to try to resolve the problems.
2. Go directly to Court even if you have not filed a complaint with the Secretary. The Court may sometimes be able to give quicker, more effective relief than conciliation can provide and may also appoint an attorney for you (without cost) in certain cases.

You Should Also Report All Information about violations to HUD or the Attorney General of the United States even though you don't intend to complain or go to court yourself.

WHAT OTHER FEDERAL LAWS APPLY TO FAIR HOUSING?

Both a Presidential Order and Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as well as the 1968 law, apply to discrimination in federally assisted housing. Your complaint under the new law may also be processed by HUD under Title VI or the Presidential Order when the facts indicate a violation of those laws. Additionally, the U.S. Supreme Court has determined that a prior law (the Civil Rights Act of 1866) prohibits any racial discrimination which interferes with the right to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold or convey any kind of housing, regardless of whether the housing is covered under any other law. This right is enforceable by private court action.

If you believe you have been, or are about to be, discriminated against or otherwise harmed by the kinds of discriminatory acts which are prohibited by the law now, you have a right, within 180 days after the discrimination occurred, to:

1. Complain to the Secretary by filing this form by mail or in person. HUD will investigate and if it finds the complaint is covered by the law and is justified, it will try to end the discrimination by conciliation. In cases where State or local laws give the same rights as Federal law, HUD must first ask the State or local agency to try to resolve the problems.
2. Go directly to Court even if you have not filed a complaint with the Secretary. The Court may sometimes be able to give quicker, more effective relief than conciliation can provide and may also appoint an attorney for you (without cost) in certain cases.

You Should Also Report All Information about violations to HUD or the Attorney General of the United States even though you don't intend to complain or go to court yourself.

WHAT OTHER FEDERAL LAWS APPLY TO FAIR HOUSING?

Both a Presidential Order and Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as well as the 1968 law, apply to discrimination in federally assisted housing. Your complaint under the new law may also be processed by HUD under Title VI or the Presidential Order when the facts indicate a violation of those laws. Additionally, the U.S. Supreme Court has determined that a prior law (the Civil Rights Act of 1866) prohibits any racial discrimination which interferes with the right to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold or convey any kind of housing, regardless of whether the housing is covered under any other law. This right is enforceable by private court action.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS

If you wish to explain in detail on a separate sheet what happened, you should consider the following:

1. If you feel that others were treated differently than you, please explain.
2. If there were witnesses or others who know what happened, give their names and addresses.
3. If you have made this complaint to other government agencies or to the courts, state when and where and explain what happened.

This form may be mailed by simply folding it, sealing it, and dropping it in a mailbox. You can obtain assistance in learning about the law or in filing a complaint at any HUD regional or field office (including FHA field offices), or by writing to the address below.

WHAT DOES THE FEDERAL FAIR HOUSING LAW PROVIDE?

The new law (Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968) declares that it is a national policy to provide fair housing throughout the United States and prohibits seven kinds of discriminatory acts regarding housing if the discrimination is based on race, religion, color or national origin.

1. Refusal to sell or rent or otherwise deal with any person.
2. Discriminating in the conditions or terms of sale, rental or occupancy.
3. Falsely denying housing is available.
4. Discriminatory advertising.
5. Blockbusting—causing someone to sell or rent by telling him that members of a minority group are moving into the area.
6. Discrimination in financing housing by a bank, savings and loan association or other business.
7. Denial of membership or participation in brokerage, multiple listing or other real estate services.

WHAT DOES THE NEW LAW DO NOW?

The first three acts listed above are prohibited now, except that:

1. These three prohibitions do not apply to units in houses for two to four families if the owner lives in one of the units;
2. Single family houses owned by private individual homeowners of three or fewer such houses will not generally become subject to these three prohibitions until 1970.

The last four acts listed above are prohibited now as applied to all kinds of housing, without exception.

NOTE: Coercion, threats or other interference with an individual's rights under the law, including the right to file a complaint, are also prohibited now.

WHAT DOES THE LAW DO IN 1970?

In 1970, the first three prohibitions will become applicable to any single family house where the owner seeks to rent or sell it through the use of a broker or through discriminatory advertising.

You Should Also Report All Information about violations to HUD or the Attorney General of the United States even though you don't intend to complain or go to court yourself.

WHAT OTHER FEDERAL LAWS APPLY TO FAIR HOUSING?

Both a Presidential Order and Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as well as the 1968 law, apply to discrimination in federally assisted housing. Your complaint under the new law may also be processed by HUD under Title VI or the Presidential Order when the facts indicate a violation of those laws. Additionally, the U.S. Supreme Court has determined that a prior law (the Civil Rights Act of 1866) prohibits any racial discrimination which interferes with the right to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold or convey any kind of housing, regardless of whether the housing is covered under any other law. This right is enforceable by private court action.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS

If you wish to explain in detail on a separate sheet what happened, you should consider the following:

1. If you feel that others were treated differently than you, please explain.
2. If there were witnesses or others who know what happened, give their names and addresses.
3. If you have made this complaint to other government agencies or to the courts, state when and where and explain what happened.

This form may be mailed by simply folding it, sealing it, and dropping it in a mailbox. You can obtain assistance in learning about the law or in filing a complaint at any HUD regional or field office (including FHA field offices), or by writing to the address below.

HOUSING

Basic Need, Basic Problem—Basic Solutions?

Human beings have three relatively simple basic physical needs: food, shelter and clothing. But gone are the days when an American could grow his own food, make his own clothing, and construct his own home. In the urban industrial society of the 1960s he must parcel out his wages to others who specialize in providing such services.

While America has succeeded, to a greater or lesser extent, in delivering to its citizens adequate food and clothing, it has failed—to an extent which is growing greater every week—to provide him with housing.

Mid-century urban America hails its progress on every technological front, while its citizens are often hard put to find evidence of that progress in their homes; more often than not they are more crowded, their rents are higher and their chances of finding better homes are lower than ten years ago.

The American Builder magazine—hardly the place one would have expected to find such sentiments—summed it up this way on the cover of its November, 1968, issue:

WHO REALLY GIVES A DAMN ABOUT HOUSING?

Not the cities, they're headed for a decade of failure.
Not the suburbs, they couldn't care less.
Not the rural areas, everyone's leaving them.
Not the power structure, all they do is talk, talk, talk.

The magazine's blunt summation could not have come at a more appropriate time: the nation's housing starts had slumped to below-seasonal lows; a new Administration was about to move into Washington; a Congress had been elected whose duty it would be to pass legislation which would put some muscle into the sturdy but bare fibers of the 1968 Housing and Urban Development Act.

Yet it said nothing that had not already been shouted: our cities, as the saying goes, may be nice places to visit, but you wouldn't want to live there.

Now, we are going one better—you can't live there even if you want to.

NO CLASS

The problem cuts across all racial and economic lines. Suburban Washington home seekers bemoan the fact that prices of single-family houses have increased 25-30 percent in two years, and that new homes within easy commuting distance of the city are selling at $40,000 and up—mostly up.

New Yorkers are watching their rents soar in some cases by 60 percent.

These people must make do with what they have, scrape here and pinch there to maintain their style of life.

But they have flesh to pinch. The poor have not, and their plight has traveled a course roughly parallel to that of their better-heeled brothers.

Urban renewal, old-style—bulldozers and wrecking balls—has lost its impetus and is no longer providing even its minimal service of providing some public housing.

Urban renewal, new-style—model cities, rent supplements, mortgage subsidies, all the New Frontier, Great Society programs which resulted in the 1968 HUD Act—now amount to little more than words on pieces of paper—millions of pieces shuffled anxiously and helplessly by clerks in Washington.

The simple fact is this: as fine as the new programs are, there is not the money in the till to make them do the job. And as the new Administration turns its attention to the problem, there is the strong possibility that there will be no increase in that amount of money—not through malice, but through a not-so-subtle redirection of effort away from direct government assistance toward governmental "partnership" with private industry through tax writeoffs and other incentives.

WARNING

The National Commission on Urban Problems, headed by former Senator Paul Douglas of Illinois warned against such a program; time will tell whether his warning was valid, or will be heeded by President Nixon and his urban affairs council, headed by Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

There is evidence, however, that Douglas' warning is valid, and that it applies equally to the present program as well as future proposals. Any federal action tends to be effective only so far as the federal government can control the conditions of operation.

In housing, the control can't extend far. The building industry is a curiosity in this age of merger, mobility and megalopolis; it is a local business, governed by local laws—or non-laws—financed in most cases by local interests, dependent for its labor on local craft (not industry-wide) unions.

While the effects of suburban sprawl may weigh heavily on the residents of the core city, they cannot normally influence the suburbs. Nor can the suburbs affect city planning, although their interests may be at stake.

Concrete workers may favor prefabrication of homes; carpenters do not. Plumbers may prefer to use modern plastic piping; most building codes, however, specify costly, hard-to-work copper or steel. Multi-use buildings—shops on the first floor, offices a little higher, apartments at the top—may be the most efficient and attractive urban construction in many areas; in only a few have local zoning codes been amended to permit them.

SOMETHING, SOMEHOW

To be a reality, a national policy and national commitment must be accompanied by national tools. We do not yet have them.

Nevertheless, homes are built. There were 1.8 million housing starts in January, 1969—the highest level since 1964.

Nevertheless, the 1968 housing act is providing some money for low- and moderate-income housing.

Nevertheless, some states are offering programs of their own to spur low-rent construction and to open normal housing to low-income families.

And although the full measure of public commitment to providing decent shelter to all American citizens appears to be a long way off, there is much to be done by those who have a private commitment to this goal.

They cannot wait for the perfect tools; instead the available tools—many of which are under-used or completely idle—can make significant inroads on the problem.

THE TOOLS

Right now, the most readily available tool is money—not enough, it is true, but it seems to be all we have. The perfect tool would be a combination of money and social structures which would make the money go farther—simplified, unified construction codes, careful planning and comprehensive regional land-use policies, use of industrial techniques of automation and prefabrication, an end to competition between craft unions.

But now, as we know the tool is cash, and the problem for those with a private commitment to housing all men is finding it and using it.

On the surface it sounds simple: there are two major sources—federal and state government, and private. There is relatively more government money available than private—but it is available only in certain ways and under certain conditions.

But within those programs—which range from Model Cities programs for the reconstruction and restructuring of whole urban areas to simple, low-cost home improvement loans—there is ample room for creativity and ingenuity.

Many may be undertaken without local governmental approval—a flexible condition under which private organizations may prefer to work.

Others require community involvement and local governmental cooperation in a broad range of urban improvement programs; or, to put it another way, many cities and towns are missing federal aid because they have not developed some relatively simple plans and programs needed to qualify for help.

Religious and other private organizations can make this known and serve as catalysts for action.

WHERE ARE WE GOING?

Government housing programs have moved slowly but significantly away from the mere provision of housing which began with the Public Housing Act, toward the reconstruction of the urban physical, social and cultural environment, as in the Model Cities Act.

These are roughly the same goals of the professional urbanologists—Urban America, the Urban Coalition, and the foundations.

It's a tall order, and one nobody is certain can be filled. But the attempt is at least a recognition of the fact that housing—as important as it is—comprises only a portion of what has come to be known as the "urban problem." For example: Housing degenerates—a slum is created—for a variety of reasons; it crumbles because of overcrowding—we have not enough houses for all the people—through lack of care caused by discrimination on the part of landlords and hopelessness on the part of tenants, through neglect of essential urban services, such as garbage collection and sanitation facilities, through failure to enforce housing codes. Slums are created through neglect of—or thoughtless—planning, the kind which results in urban highways which make it more convenient to live in the suburbs than in the city, the kind which makes urban housing inessential and impractical for all but those who cannot afford to live elsewhere, or who the rest of us do not want to live elsewhere.

Nevertheless, there is evidence that despite the freeways, poor planning and crowding, urban housing is once more becoming attractive to these middle class persons who once fled in droves.

Or, if it is not becoming more attractive, the alternatives are becoming less attractive or less available. For example, a new single-family house in the Washington, D.C., suburbs cannot be purchased within reasonable commuting distance of the city for less than $35,000 or $40,000. The cause is primarily high land costs. As a result, builders who wish to remain in the middle-income housing market are therefore building suburban townhouses—the same kind of row structures found in most cities.

The choice, then, for the would-be suburbanite, is limited; he cannot afford the single-family home which was the major attraction in the suburbs, so then begins to look for more convenient urban housing.

The Washington trend is the result of accident, not policy. It is just now being identified, and its meaning for the future is somewhat of a mystery.

THE POOR PAY

It seems certain, however, that in the short run, urban housing for the poor will become even more of a problem than in the past. As wealthier "suburbanites" demand more urban housing, they will force the poor . . . where? The slums can hardly become more crowded. Will the urban poor trade homes with the suburban middle-class? That seems doubtful; there is still a net shortage of homes and will be for some time to come.

Where, then will they go?

That is a question many urbanologists would like to have answered. The answer will be, unless those whose private commitment to equality and justice moves them to prompt, effective action, they will be forced to retreat deeper into the sub-world of the ghetto and slum—until they explode once more in the streets of the cities.

That is not a happy prognosis, but fortunately it does contain an "if" clause. "If" we act, we can all live better and in peace. And if we believe in justice and peace, we will act.

J.R.S.

Federal Programs—Within the Limits,

LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

While this is a federal program, it is run by state and local agencies. And while it is government program, which excludes direct participation by churches and other groups, there is ample opportunity for them to contribute through indirect participation.

The laws do not say that housing authority must build monolithic high-rise slums for public housing. Unfortunately, that is the way all too many local public housing authorities read the law. And it is the way that many politicians, fearful of public reaction to some other programs, prefer that they read it.

Churches and private groups can, through public education and private influence on housing authorities and political leaders, change the climate of public opinion and convince authorities of the advantages of using all available resources and programs.

In addition to constructing the usual public low-rent housing "projects," local housing authorities can:

Purchase existing housing, either in good condition or in need of rehabilitation. Public housing can thus be spread throughout a city's residential neighborhoods without altering their "character."

Purchase new housing—the so-called "turnkey" projects which are built privately, then sold to public housing authorities. Washington, D.C., has utilized both programs extensively, purchasing a number of existing apartment houses and smaller multi-family homes, as well as new buildings.

The advantage of the "turnkey" projects is primarily this: it enables housing authorities greater flexibility in planning, often enabling them to get by with smaller staffs of hard-to-find professionals, and it enables a city to build variety into its public housing—these projects are constructed according to private developers' own plans, subject to approval by the housing authority.

Lease housing—the public authority leases new or existing housing, then sublets to tenants. An economic rent is agreed upon for each unit, and the city makes up the difference between that and what the tenant can pay.

Construct combination projects—the housing authority and private contractors can develop a complex of low-, middle- and high-rent buildings, combining rental and cooperative units. No partner owns a particular part of the project; subsidized tenants are not easily identified, and those tenants whose incomes rise above subsidy levels can remain in their apartments rather than being forced to move away from friends and neighborhood, as often happens when they live in public housing. The change in status is accomplished on the company ledgers, rather than by moving van.

Sell public housing to tenants. This is particularly useful in the case of existing units which are leased or purchased for public housing, whose tenants become ineligible for public subsidies.

RENT SUPPLEMENTS

These enable poor families to rent any new or rehabilitated housing financed by the Federal Housing Administration. They can be used in conjunction with a variety of other state and federal programs. Basically, the program works this way: The tenant pays a fixed 25-percent of his monthly income for rent; the difference between that and the actual price of the apartment is made up by the program. When income rises to make the tenant ineligible, the supplement stops, but his family may stay in the apartment.

It has the further advantage of enabling housing sponsors to mix economic classes within a building, although program rules tend to restrict the appeal of such projects to those who require assistance.

SECTION 221 (d) (3) RENTAL AND COOPERATIVE HOUSING

There are two programs under this section—below-market-rate interest for low and moderate income housing, and market-rate interest for moderate income housing.

This is the program most utilized by churches, labor unions, fraternal organizations and other non-profit organizations to construct low-income units. They have good reason for using it: they can receive 100 per cent financing at rates as low as 3 per cent for 40 years. The low interest rates permit sponsors to offer rents substantially below those normally set for such housing.

But the program has not been used to its full potential, and perhaps could be if churches and other organizations unable or unwilling to become landlords instead helped organize other kinds of groups which could utilize the program. These include:

- Cooperatives—Groups of prospective tenants could, with assistance from church or other organizations, obtain the same financing terms available to non-profit sponsors.
- Builder-sellers—Private builders can construct 221 (d) (3) housing for sale to nonprofit organizations or cooperatives.
- Limited-profit sponsors. Developers, builders and real estate firms can obtain 90 per cent financing at 6 per cent—still below current market rates—if they agree to a limited 6 per cent return on the 10 per cent investment. Income tax depreciation and investment allowances can increase the effective rate of return substantially.

SECTION 236 RENTAL AND COOPERATIVE HOUSING

Under the 1968 HUD Act limited-profit, non-profit or cooperative housing sponsors can receive FHA mortgage financing at rates as low as 1 per cent for 40 years for moderate-income housing.

The formula gets a little complicated, but it works roughly this way: tenants pay 25 per cent of their monthly salary for rent, and the difference between that and economic rents is made up by FHA interest subsidy.

SECTION 235 HOME OWNERSHIP AND COOPERATIVE HOUSING

Unlike other FHA low- and moderate-income programs, this one is open to private developers who are not interested in non-profit or limited-profit programs. And it can be used either for new construction or rehabilitation of single-family or multi-family housing.

For the buyer, it means almost no down payment, monthly payments of only 20 per cent of income and, of course, equity in his home.

For the developer, it means profits, guaranteed by FHA interest subsidies (which make up the difference between 20 per cent of income and the actual monthly payments).

Room For Imagination and Action

Nor does this program—unlike all others described above—carry a requirement that the community have a "workable program" (more on that later).

SECTIONS 221 (h) and 235 (j) – REHABILITATION

Under 221 (h) non-profit sponsors may buy, rehabilitate and sell houses to moderate-income families with $200 down payments and 3 per cent mortgages.

The 1968 law amended this to lower the interest rates in some cases to 1 per cent. It was under this section that Father Geno Baroni's Housing Development Corporation in Washington, D.C., plans to rehabilitate and sell more than 50 central city homes.

The principal difference between the two programs is in the manner of financing. Under 221 (h) the federal government assists the sponsor directly; under 235 (j) it makes assistance payments to the lender, who reduces monthly payments accordingly.

Both programs demand that the project include four or more units of housing—either four single-family homes or a four-unit apartment house.

Section 235 (j) also permits the buying and resale of homes which do not need rehabilitation—but all homes must be in "viable" neighborhoods. Again, no "workable program" is required.

SECTIONS 115 AND 312 – REHABILITATION GRANTS AND LOANS

Both Sections permit federal aid to owner-occupants of homes in urban renewal areas, code enforcement areas, or in areas planned for such activities, for repair and improvement of their homes.

Section 115 permits grants to low-income ($3,000 annually or less) owners. Section 312 permits 3 per cent loans to low- or moderate-income owners.

In addition, both sections can be used together to enable owners to repair their homes while keeping their total monthly housing cost (current payments plus cost of repair loan) within 25 per cent of monthly income.

These grants and loans are made through local urban renewal agencies or through private, non-profit groups designated by the agency—another opportunity for churches and civic groups to help save an area before it becomes slum.

State Programs—Action Needed

It is difficult to detail what all states are doing to improve housing for low-income families. Some are moving toward effective supplementation of federal programs. But many lack even the elementary benefits of a fair housing law which, despite the federal law, would enable state enforcement to take over where federal enforcement fails.

Despite the present activity of the federal government, there is a place for state action. In fact without it federal programs tend to be underfinanced, unheard of and ineffective.

The Urban Coalition and Urban America have identified eight areas in which state action is necessary and in which private, religious and civic organizations can aid in the creation of adequate housing in the nation:

- Increasing the housing supply. States can further participate in federal programs by providing seed money, administrative and planning costs grants, interim financing and technical assistance to non-profit and cooperative developers, and can develop programs of their own as well.
- Improving building codes. Many local codes are antiquated, and stand in the way of low cost. A single federal code has been asked by builders' groups, but it seems a long way off. State action can help localities update their codes, or replace them with regional or state codes. It can also establish professional standards for inspectors, provide inspection services to communities unable to afford them, and can establish appeals procedures which are often lacking in local codes.
- Improving relocation assistance. Urban renewal does not have to mean urban removal—if relocation procedures and aid are designed with the people in mind. Too often they are not, and again state action can upgrade standards and provide financial assistance to cities already hard-pressed to pay for their renewal programs.
- Equalizing tenant-landlord relations. Too often, the tenant is the victim—either he puts up with the landlord and shuts up or gets out. The result is urban strife and poor housing. Tenants should be able to begin code enforcement proceedings (in most cities they may not), retaliatory evictions should be outlawed, leases should assure that an apartment is habitable before the tenant moves in, housing authorities should establish regular procedures for hearing tenant complaints and suggestions. The states can—through their chartering of public housing agencies—remedy some of these conditions.
- Developing new communities. States could ease the difficult path toward such development by providing technical assistance to developers, by enabling them to purchase land without either paying premium prices or operating secretly. They can charter development corporations, provide tax incentives and help override local land-use restrictions.
- Centralizing administration of housing and community development programs. A cabinet-level department of housing and community affairs—similar to those in New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania—is perhaps the best means of providing overall coordination and control. However, several states have created administrations with narrower authority, or have created special assistants who can at least provide informal liaison between the state government and local authorities and among the local authorities themselves.

SECTION 202 – SENIOR CITIZENS

This has been in effect since 1959, and it provides 100 per cent mortgages at a rate of 3 per cent to non-profit or cooperative sponsors of housing for the elderly. It is designed to aid those whose income is too high for public housing, but too low for private, profit-making housing.

WHAT IS A "WORKABLE PROGRAM"

The 1954 Housing Act prohibited federal aid to urban renewal or low-rent public housing unless the community first developed a plan of action to combat all its problems of slums, blight and community development.

Any project requiring a community "workable program"–and most do–must be recertified every two years. There are four essential elements:

- Adoption of modern housing and building codes, together with an effective enforcement program.
- Development of a local planning and programming process.
- Local efforts to expand the supply of low- and moderate-income housing, together with the development of a coordinated relocation system.
- Development of specific plans for effective citizen involvement in the planning and development of federally assisted programs.

RESOURCE

URBAN AMERICA, INC. is a resource of exceptional value in the field of housing. Its main office is located at 1717 Massachusetts Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Urban America has a Non-Profit Housing Center which conducts regional seminars and institutes recommended for information and guidance of both experienced and neophyte personnel involved in non-profit housing sponsorships at every level.

The 1969 schedule includes Lower-Income Housing Seminars in New Orleans, La. (March 25-26), Seattle, Washington (May 1-2), Milwaukee, Wisc. (June 5-6), Philadelphia, Pa. (Nov. 20-21).

Information about meeting sites and further details concerning invitations, etc., may be secured by writing URBAN AMERICA NON-PROFIT HOUSING CENTER at the above address.

Those interested in the Management aspects of Housing should inquire about Institutes planned for Washington, D.C. (Summer, 1969) and Denver, Colorado. Regional offices of Urban America are located in Chicago and Los Angeles. The organization works closely with the National Association of Non-Profit Housing Organizations.

Despite the planners' efforts, the demand for urban housing seems to fluctuate according to rules of its own–and demand determines the future.

In most large cities, where federal programs are old hat, such programs exist. But–and again, religious and civic organizations can contribute in this area–most suburban or rural areas do not have them.

The effect of this is to limit federal assistance to housing programs in the central city at the very time when the need is being felt hardest in outlying areas–where many of the jobs are moving.

There is, of course, a degree of resistance to this kind of housing assistance in suburban areas which can be overcome through the help of industries which have moved from the central city and are now finding workers harder and harder to find, by pointing out to local governing bodies that federal assistance can be used to create housing for the very people they want to keep in their communities–enough of it, it is beginning to appear, to overcome the fear of people whom they think they "don't want."

The resistance can also be subverted (if that is the proper word) through the use of programs for which no "workable plan" is required, such as the newer home ownership and cooperative housing programs.

LOOKING FOR HELP

Administrators of federal housing programs depend heavily upon non-profit organizations and cooperatives sponsored by churches, charitable organizations, labor unions and the like. They are willing, where private developers are often not, to accept non-profit or limited-profit conditions. They tend to be better landlords. They tend to pay more attention to social and environmental considerations.

They also tend to be long on good will and short on technical knowledge and money.

They need not, however, consider these insurmountable obstacles to sponsorship of housing programs.

The 1968 HUD Act provides a limited amount of "seed money"–that which must be invested initially for planning and land purchases, but which is ultimately returned. Foundations also provide help in this area.

The Act also created a revolving fund from which sponsors can draw interest-free loans of up to 80 per cent of the advance costs of a project. The loan is repaid when permanent financing is made, but the Secretary of HUD can also cancel any part of the loan if necessary.

A certain amount of technical assistance is available from HUD and FHA. But these agencies cannot develop a proposal for interested sponsors. Instead, competent professional help is needed.

Urban America, Inc., in Washington has a housing staff and a stable of consultants available for work on such programs.

The Urban Coalition, whose staff does not specialize in housing, can nevertheless provide valuable informational assistance and help arrange contacts with federal officials.

However–the first contact for information should be made through the local or regional FHA and HUD offices.

OUTREACH—BEYOND THE LAW

The observation of the late John F. Kennedy is often quoted, i.e. that even a journey of a thousand miles must begin with one step. While the image is of a single person breaking from inertia or apathy, it is applicable to the whole of society or any of its parts. And in human society, the first and succeeding steps will be lighter, and advance steadier if others take them also towards the same goal. In the areas of our concern, individual Catholics can help to begin or to join existing parish human relations committees, or regional interracial councils. The clergy can belong to, or promote ecumenical conferences on Religion and Race. A state or municipal civil rights commission can take on new life and effectiveness, if concerned citizens attend its meetings, or utilize its services. The causes of Better Schools, Fair Housing, Comprehensive Health Services can all benefit from the interest of informed residents of the territories involved. The "Yellow Pages" are full of "Social Services Organizations" one can check to find out if his skills or talents can help. Local OEO Community Action Centers enlist volunteers for every phase of the WAR on POVERTY. Urban Coalitions are being formed in practically every city of any size. Businessmen are challenged to help make successful the JOBS programs of the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB); Women are needed by WICS (Women in Community Service) to assist the Jobs Corps training for females. There is no adult who cannot find some way (funds, facilities, moral support, various skills) to reach out to a neighbor in need.

It is obvious that Housing will never be adequate until it is also fair—available to all regardless of race, creed or color. We have multiplied federal and state laws and have passed open housing ordinances in cities and towns, but the hard facts of prejudice and discrimination have survived.

Here is an apostolate for individuals and organizations especially those dedicated to the promotion of family ideals and human dignity, e.g., Christian Family Movement, Parish Human Relations Committees, etc.

It begins with a base of accurate information about the laws and the problems, and builds on partnerships with other interested groups, e.g. Fair Housing Councils, Municipal Commissions or Human Rights, Interreligious and Interracial Conferences.

It is personal and individual, as each examines himself and his neighborhood and does what he can to promote equal opportunity in real estate offerings, financing, rentals, sales, and acceptance of newcomers to neighborhoods. It is social and communal, stressing the ideal of one society based in the reality of this united community.

N.B.: Besides the publications of official Civil Rights Divisions of State and City, and the National Committee against Discrimination in Housing noted elsewhere as a Resource, there are excellent materials available from many sources. One such recent packet, a National Study on Fair Housing, has been prepared by the League of Women Voters of the U.S., 1200 17th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036. For explanations of the Federal Fair Housing Act of 1968, the U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development (Washington, D.C. 20410) has two publications for the asking:

Fair Housing, 1968 (Title VIII of Civil Rights Act of 1968)

Fair Housing (What it Means to You), Guide for Owners, Buyers, Renters.

A NEW GENERATION OF LOWER-INCOME HOUSING:

A PROPOSAL

FOR

CONSOLIDATION AND REFORM

Herbert M. Franklin
December 22, 1969
The Urban Coalition
2100 M Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037

MAR 10 1970

MEMORANDUM February 27, 1970

TO: NRHC Board of Directors

FROM: Clay Cochran

The attached, as the cover-sheet indicates, was prepared by Herbert Franklin at the Urban Coalition. It represents what I consider a refreshingly basic approach to the problem. It is clear from conversations with him that Franklin is:

(1) very cognizant of the fact that this is a national problem on which urban and rural forces must unit;

(2) more conscious than the proposal spells out of the failure of public housing to serve rural and small town America, and of the fact that an approach along the lines he indicates should be more able to do so;

(3) anxious to work with us in developing a coordinated approach, both in terms of the basic legislative package to be sought, and the job of seeking it.

He advises that his thinking has progressed beyond the stage represented by the initial document and he is furnishing us a copy of a subsequent legislative memorandum.

I find the idea of joining forces on this both logical and appealing and would welcome comments from you on both the Franklin memorandum and the idea of a coordinated effort.

INTRODUCTION

In the main, the major problems in housing fall into the two categories of money and institutional inadequacies. With respect to low-income housing, however, the problems of institutional inadequacy loom very large and are susceptible to change in the near term.

A generation ago the federal government launched its most ambitious housing assistance program for low-income Americans. The basic pattern of the United States Housing Act of 1937, which established the public housing program, has remained substantially unchanged.

It has produced in this thirty-two year period about 800,000 dwelling units providing shelter (sometimes little else) for around 2.5 million people. Comparing the past record of production with the ten-year goal of the 1968 Housing Act, which calls for 2.2 million units of low-income housing, it is apparent that our national needs require the equivalent of almost a tenfold increase in average annual production.

One of the fundamental mechanisms of the public housing program -- the method of providing funding -- is also one of the elements of great potential attraction for private enterprise participation. Existing local housing authorities receive an annual contributions contract which assures federal support over the life of the contract and enables them to borrow money and issue tax exempt obligations. More importantly, however, under the existing system of financing the congressional authorizing committees establish from time to time a maximum limitation on the authority of the government to enter into contracts for annual contributions. This means that this program -- alone among federal housing programs -- is not subject to annual review by congressional appropriations committees who are not familiar with the importance of housing and the need for private enterprise involvement. Substantial private enterprise involvement requires just such continuity and forward funding at the federal level. If for no other reason, then, this aspect of stability in the existing public housing program provides a significant foundation on which to build an "all-income" program of subsidized housing.

The nation's goal is not only vastly increasing the volume of subsidized housing. Where this housing is constructed is very central to our future. The Housing Act of 1969 has now removed the workable program requirement from low-income housing, striking down a major inertial barrier to the use of this subsidy in the overwhelming majority of localities in the United States. This sets the stage for the comprehensive attack proposed in this report.

Two national commissions, the National Commission on Urban Problems and the President's Committee on Urban Housing, have documented an urban population trend that is apparent to even casual observers. Our central cities are increasingly inhabited by the poor, minority groups, aged, handicapped, sick or the underemployed. Our suburbs are the homes of increasingly affluent, white, young, healthy people who live near new jobs that are being generated by the economy. No one can doubt that this pattern of human settlement is laden with deep trouble for the society.

As a nation, however, we lack any meaningful tools to meet the problem of balanced distribution and production of housing for low-income households. But it would be a mistake to regard subsidized housing as solely or primarily a way to empty the black ghettos. No program that by design or practice meets the needs of one race can lay claim to the support of the nation. Indeed, the suggestions which follow are premised on rescuing the program from its increasingly perceived role as housing only poor urban blacks.

Closely related to this goal is the similar one of avoiding, to the greatest degree possible, the "product identification" which has caused public housing to stand out visibly in the urban fabric. This can only be done through vastly increased use of leased existing housing on a "scattered site" basis, reduction in the number of new units placed in any one place which is made economically more feasible by adopting more flexible technologies.

With these general goals in mind, one major conclusion must be drawn. Over the past few years many new and desirable ideas have been tested in the low-income program. But unless the basic federal-state-local relationships are changed, few of these innovations will move from paper to reality.

This report, therefore, focuses on the low-income program to indicate ways in which it can, with substantial alteration, become the spine of a new generation of subsidized housing. It identifies the need for change, and spells out how the changes might be brought about in these substantial respects:

1. More direct federal involvement in subsidized housing development, hand in hand with new incentives to spur comprehensive action at other levels of government, particularly the states;

2. Consolidating the system so that it may realize economies of scale, respond to innovative ideas, decentralize many aspects of administration, become more accountable for performance, and serve a wider spectrum of incomes;

3. Reforming the relationship between landlord and tenant in subsidized housing to enable the beneficiaries of the program to have a greater voice in management;

4. Linking up a new national urban land policy to the attainment of national housing goals through a federally financed advance land acquisition program.

The old comforting notion that the housing supply will "filter down" is being replaced by a newer understanding: housing problems are filtering up. The cost of newly built housing, whether for sale or rent, exceeds the ability to pay of over half of all U. S. households. This can set the stage for a dramatic revitalization of the primary public institutions on whom we depend to work on this critical problem.

There are some who would do away with publicly subsidized housing altogether on the assumption that simply augmenting the income of the poor will enable them to obtain acceptable housing "in the market". An increase in ostensible purchasing power, however, would not increase the general supply of housing available unless other major changes in capital markets that finance the supply are made at the same time. The poor are now overcharged for housing and other life essentials, and unless there is a vast increase in the supply an increased income will not benefit the housing situation of the recipient. It will merely bid up the cost of the inadequate supply.

Even were the nation to fall back on a "housing allowance" strategy with major changes in the capital markets, however, it is not clear that increased demand would induce automatically a supply of standard housing, particularly for large families, those with health and social problems, or the elderly. The need to assure the quality as well as the quantity of the supply would require a range and detail of administration enormously more complex than any yet attempted.

Consequently, for the calculable future the nation will need new institutions, directly responsive and accountable to national policy, to stimulate the supply for lower-income households.

Nevertheless, low-income subsidized housing cannot be considered in isolation from the non-subsidized housing supply. We must devise new ways of allocating additional resources for housing production generally if we hope to subsidize a significant portion of the supply for the most needy. The scarcity of resources for housing has weakened our ability to use what we have effectively. But with new resources must come new ways of using them. It is those ways that are suggested here. In its future deliberations the Task Force might turn its attention to the question of assuring a growing and stable supply of financial resources for housing generally.

A NEW GENERATION OF LOWER INCOME HOUSING: A PROPOSAL FOR CONSOLIDATION AND REFORM

The Federal low-income housing program began in the depths of the Depression as a pump-priming mechanism. It was promoted principally as a self-liquidating public works program to stimulate employment in the construction industry and to increase the demand for building materials. The notion that low-income households could be given shelter at the same time was, of course, an added attraction.

For a short time the emergency Federal Public Works Administration built low-income housing itself. This activity was legally crippled, however, by a Federal District Court ruling in 1935 holding that the federal government could not construct buildings for the purpose of renting them to private citizens. A Supreme Court then hostile to the New Deal never passed on this decision. The government, nevertheless, abandoned the direct construction program. If the lower court decision accurately reflected the law of 1935, it can be assumed that it does not reflect the law today. Yet this legal twist of fate has chilled thought and frozen action for over a generation in federal-state relations as they affect our national housing needs.

The way around the legal pitfall was the United States Housing Act of 1937. This set the fundamental pattern whereby the Federal government removed itself from direct construction and management of housing. Local elected officials in effect were given the option to decide whether the federal subsidy could aid low-income households in that community. Where they decided to act, however, they lost control of the processes set in motion since they appointed an independent authority which typically became insulated from City Hall. The overwhelming majority of local elected officials, of course, have never decided to act. The 1937 Act thus decentralized the critical policy determinations but, ironically, maintained strong federal control over many financial and architectural details of operation, possibly because the new program inevitably drew on the experience of the former PWA direct construction program. The 1937 federal law stimulated the passage of state laws which left entirely to local bodies (towns, cities, counties -- although the state itself was also eligible) the decision to organize a local authority to use the federal subsidies in the first place.

After a generation of experience it is apparent that this powerful federal subsidy has not even been introduced into most of the United States. In some cases the interests that opposed the passage of the federal program in the first place have transferred their opposition to the local arena.

In none of the 233 Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas recognized by the Census Bureau is there a low-income housing operation able to function actively throughout the metropolitan area. Moreover, 44 have an authority that operates only in the central city. Many more have only a central city authority and one or two relatively inactive authorities in the entire metropolitan area.

Indeed, 27 metropolitan areas -- some of them of significant size -- have no organized housing authority at all. The central cities have plainly produced almost all of the low-income housing in urbanized areas.

As a consequence, the most potent and flexible Federal subsidy for low-income housing is not being used in a substantial part of our urban areas.

If we examine statistics on another basis -- state by state -- it becomes apparent that the subsidy has not been available at all in many populated areas. Only nine states have more than 50% (and none more than 60%) of their population residing in jurisdictions where this subsidy has been used. Well over half of the population of the United States, therefore, lives in a place where for one reason or another poor households cannot even get on a waiting list for low-income housing. Even where low-income housing has been introduced, of course, it has seldom been used in any degree sufficient to begin meeting the need.

Since low-income housing has been financially starved by the federal government for most of its history until very recently, the question arises as to whether the infusion of money alone would stimulate the use of the subsidy. The answer must be negative. The program as structured cannot respond to the stimulus of money alone. As designed, the program permits parochial interests to frustrate action and innovation. In many localities the federal requirement of a "workable program" has been cited as a principal barrier to the use of the subsidy. This required that federal aid could go to a locality only if it were actively carrying out a locally adopted workable program for community improvement certified by HUD. This requirement, as a condition for receiving low-income housing subsidies has now been removed by the Housing Act of 1969. Will the battle for low-income housing be confined to each locality now?

The federal government, in the face of the most critical housing problem in a generation, cannot remain neutral on where and to what degree this subsidy is used. Just as the first (although inadequate) steps have been proposed to set national minimums for welfare assistance, so there must be a national minimum for housing production for low-income families on a national basis. To leave the politics of low-income housing to be played out at the most parochial level is to deprive the nation of the tools to meet a national problem.

Our publicly assisted housing program suffers now from what might be called "upside-down federalism". The central government concerns itself with the smallest operational questions -- what kind of doorknobs will be used in a project -- but remains neutral on the biggest questions -- to what degree a state or locality will permit subsidies to be used at all. The existing system also defeats the best efforts of those who want it to work. It is almost impossible for all but a few to learn why something does not happen and to whom to turn for corrective action. Local officials blame federal officials, and federal officials hide behind the rubric of "local autonomy". The resulting frustrations of the citizen trying to get answers contributes to a civic malaise. It corrodes confidence in public institutions to take action to meet the need.

Side by side with the blockade of action in many populated areas is the utter proliferation of tiny authorities throughout some less populated areas. There are now in existence over 2,600 local housing authorities in the United States, and HUD anticipates there will be nearly 3,000 by the end of the fiscal year. Over half of the authorities now in existence are run by one full-time staff person or merely by part-time staff administering a single project. Recent figures indicate that each small authority averages a development program of less than 60 housing units. New authorities of this type are continually being formed.

Often the authority must try to learn the complicated processes of financing, designing, constructing, and managing low-income housing for just a single small project, or for two or three, at most. It is likely to have difficulty keeping up with new programs, requirements and methods. Often it does not have the experience or breadth of operation to develop and apply cost savings techniques, or the opportunity to learn from experience. Even the small and usually untrained staff may be wasteful because of the intermittent character and intensity of work in the case of a small development.

This proliferation of LHA's, moreover, is a staggering management and educational load for HUD. It undoubtedly requires more man-hours per dwelling unit to process applications from many sources of relatively inexperienced applicants than to deal with larger, better staffed authorities. It is therefore no wonder that confusion often reigns over the implementation of policy through this loose network.

One undesirable by-product of this situation has been the tendency of the federal government to develop excessively detailed procedures, requirements and reviews that add to delays, and thus to costs. Every authority from the largest to the smallest is caught in a procedural net whose mesh is really intended for the smallest and least capable.

There is also evidence that many persons appointed to housing authority boards are out of sympathy with the program they are charged with running. A recent study indicated that one-third of the persons holding these positions oppose the further development of public housing in their community. In a survey earlier this year of all authorities, HUD asked each to indicate in advance what development subsidies they intended to apply for during fiscal year 1970. Of the 2,500 authorities to whom the request was made, less than one-fourth indicated an intent to make application to HUD for any assistance at all. This illustrates how the federal government stands simply as a passive resource of last resort on one of the most critical questions facing the nation.

Public housing development agencies, unlike private landlords, are not motivated by profit. Yet the admission and eviction of tenants, the rules of occupancy and the rent levels have proven to be a source of controversy and friction in public housing.

There is a growing gap between housing authority commissioners and the tenants they are supposed to be serving. In larger authorities (those administering over 1,000 units) almost half the commissioners are over 55 years old, almost 90% are white and their median income is over $20,000. It is probable that the smaller authority boards reflect similar characteristics. These policy making boards are in a critical position to determine whether any new development will occur at all and the management policies in new and existing projects.

Only a tiny percentage of these boards have ever lived in public housing and, with a handful of exceptions, none live in the projects they administer. They are in no sense representative of the group for whom the housing exists, a group which has changed over the years. Where formerly the program was designed to help the temporarily submerged middle class, it now increasingly serves the needs of the disadvantaged poor. Yet the housing authority itself is often a paternalistic intermediate wall between our national housing goals and adequate performance to meet them.

The authority is insulated, furthermore, from those exercising executive political responsibility in the American system. A system of staggered terms for commissioners means that governors and mayors are able only through strenuous effort and prolonged periods of time to reshape the authority to a politically responsive program. This contributes to the frustration felt by federal officials, political leaders and, most importantly, the poor themselves, in trying to get the system to respond.

Moreover, a recent study suggests that a substantial number of those who do not actively oppose the program are unaware or disinterested in the use of newer techniques now possible under the law and administrative regulations.

Congressional and administrative innovations have made the low-income housing program potentially the most flexible, imaginative and rapid generator of subsidized housing. Turnkey, leased housing (for new, existing or rehabilitated houses), home ownership devices, among others, have brought into this program a range of tools that have changed the basic nature of the program. Yet, when the potential is made available it is only slowly seized, or when the Department is slow or lax in making new techniques available quickly, the fragmented clientele agencies are either slow or not very influential in making Congress or HUD heed their complaints.

The facts are thus incontrovertible on the critical deficiency of the existing pattern: introducing vitality and innovation into this system would be more difficult than threading a needle with rope.

The existing fragmentation also undercuts "Operation Breakthrough". Few entrepreneurs interested in supplying subsidized housing on a volume basis will want to deal with so highly fragmented and understaffed a source of demand. The potential market of 10,000 units "purchased" by 250 separate understaffed authorities tenuously committed to the program will not attract the same investment as will 10,000 units "purchased" by one or two well-staffed and experienced authorities with enhanced prestige and power. This would constitute "market aggregation" in a powerful form.

"Market aggregation" refers to the idea that more highly capitalized entrepreneurs will be attracted to producing subsidized housing for which demand is sufficient to amortize the investment in plant or equipment in a reasonable time. Most low-income family housing, for example, will follow the low rise multifamily pattern of development. The multiplicity of demand sources, and the relatively small average development program of each authority, however, prevents economies of scale that can evoke major entrepreneurial interest in producing for this common design criterion.

The natural play of market forces is calling into being entrepreneurs interested in meeting our national housing needs who are increasingly able to call on new sources of capital, in both corporate and partnership forms. Even in the current period of credit restrictions these building corporations have had the staying power to marshal money and manpower. Through September of 1969, 73 housing-related companies went public, and another 90 shelter industry companies have proposed new offerings. At this rate the housing industry could account for 20% of the estimated $6 billion in equity to be raised in 1969 during an otherwise unpromising market trend. Unless the public market for subsidized housing is rationalized to take advantage of these new sources of initiative and risk, and potential efficiencies, our lower-income subsidized housing program will slide into an economic backwater compared to the non-subsidized housing market.

In summary, the institutional framework of the present system for producing low-income housing cannot respond to the present and future needs of the nation because it:

a. leaves the most basic decisions on housing policy to the most parochial forum;

b. leaves critical decisions to a group isolated from the political leadership of the community, the intended beneficiaries of the program, and innovative ideas;

c. stimulates the proliferation of small, inefficient entities that cannot become attractive public markets for private highly capitalized entrepreneurs or able to effect economies of scale in management;

d. tolerates the involvement of the federal government in the smallest details of project financing and development while preventing federal initiatives to get action;

e. leads to an unnecessarily cumbersome educational and management task on the part of HUD.

A recognition of the inadequacies of public institutions in housing has often led to the conclusion that they must be altogether ignored or circumvented. The proposals that follow, however, are aimed at the goal of making the housing produced or subsidized less visible -- but the institutions that are responsible for the task more visible and accountable.

No elaboration is required on the benefits of scattered site housing, leased housing as a technique for new construction and rehabilitation, the need for more sensitive design and management, comprehensive social services for tenants, the desirability of greater income spectrums, rent supplements for tenants in public housing, homeownership possibilities, and a number of other wholesome reforms and novel approaches that have recently been identified or tried.

What is required is the recognition that the existing institutional framework for decision making on these matters assures that new ideas are not readily adopted, that the transfer of goals and innovation from paper in Washington to benefits for the people cannot take place without a change in how key decisions are made, and who makes them.

Consolidation and Reform

What steps can be taken in the near term to correct these deficiencies?

The federal government finances the existing system almost completely. The allocation of responsibilities was decided upon at the federal level in 1937. Consequently, changes in the system will require a re-examination of that decision, and the development of new federal authority, together with new incentives at other levels of government.

Clearly, some form of consolidation of public entities is required to rationalize the public market for low-income housing and to reduce the number of entities whose performance needs to be monitored. Since the present pattern permits virtually every city, town, village or hamlet to use the subsidy or not as it chooses, the need for consolidation suggests operations at some higher or broader jurisdictional level.

The following options present themselves for consideration:

A. Direct exclusive federal construction throughout the nation through a federal instrumentality or instrumentalities (possibly regionally organized);

B. Development through state instrumentalities for all jurisdictions within a state;

C. Development through state instrumentalities for only some jurisdictions within the state, such jurisdictions being basically nonurban, with metropolitan agencies handling production in metropolitan areas;

D. Development through State instrumentalities for non-urban and suburban areas, with central city entities receiving direct federal subsidies as at present.

E. Establishment of federal authority to develop housing on request of any governmental entity or on its own initiative under appropriate circumstances as a "last resort". This would be inherent in options B, C, or D above.

Opinions will vary as to which option is best, but two critical observations stand out:

1. Housing for lower income groups is a critical national problem, and the federal government cannot continue to be the traditionally passive financier, unable to meet national needs because of parochial indifference or incapacity. Therefore, while it devises new incentives and new institutions at other levels of government which are freed of hobbling constraints, it must itself be empowered to act directly when circumstances require.

2. State government has generally not been receptive to meeting the social and physical needs of more urbanized areas. Until there is a far more promising relationship between states and their larger urban areas, the direct links developed between central cities and the federal government should not be disturbed or interrupted. On the other hand, as the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations has observed, states need to act rather than react on pressing national problems simply because under our federal system they determine many of the details of the specific structure, form and direction of urban growth.

Many opponents of state action justifiably fear the blunting of federal purposes that has been experienced by use of the state as a conduit for aid to the cities. In low-income housing, however, state action in a consolidated program should be viewed as the substitution of the state for the myriad of tiny authorities in non-urban areas or smaller urban places. Over the past five years, 44% of the housing units in the low-income program have been built in localities of less than 50,000 population, many of them quite small. State action should be considered, therefore, as a market aggregation formula and not as a rigid response to conventional constitutional wisdom, on the one hand, or as a threat to the integrity of federal purposes, on the other.

Direct, exclusive federal development to meet the nation's housing problem commends itself as a simple and expedient course of action, especially in view of a housing emergency that is approaching wartime dimensions. But in a vast and heterogeneous country it may yet be possible to trigger action at other levels of government before centralizing the development of subsidized housing.

The next operative level of government is the state. In housing as in other pressing national problems, the question is: How can state government most effectively help federal efforts to meet our national problems? Can we not assume that a strong lead at higher levels of government will stimulate rather than inhibit local initiative?

One answer to the institutional problems confronting the low-income housing program is to consolidate the lower-income housing program at the state level for non-urban (and possibly suburban) areas.

Since rural housing needs cannot be separated from urban housing needs, a vigorous state program in smaller towns and less urbanized areas can have positive impact on urban housing problems. First, it can provide a market that will attract private investment in plant and equipment that can meet urban housing needs, and if these plants are properly located they can create jobs that will slow urban immigration from rural areas. Second, the more comprehensive support from less urban areas can put the program on a sounder political footing than it now has.

The state is the natural level of government to employ for nonurban areas. With respect to metropolitan areas, the objective must be the introduction of subsidized housing into the urban fringe. This can be accomplished by state action in such areas, or by entirely new metropolitan-wide agencies. These two options must be opened by federal incentives, for decision on a state by state basis.

With some exceptions states have not played an active role in generating subsidized housing. Accordingly, they ought not to be asked to shoulder new responsibilities without new resources from the federal government to help them. Therefore, in addition to the overhead that normally would become available to develop low-income housing (other than through"turnkey" processes), federal grants should be made available to underwrite the new state agencies and the planning and development capability this new pattern would require. The same new aid should be available for metropolitan agencies. In this connection it should be noted that most states have established metropolitan or other areawide planning agencies and that in over half the states councils of governments are operating in metropolitan areas. In housing the problems relate principally, however, to the absence of an agency to develop on an areawide basis.

Therefore, the federal government must take the lead in requiring some form of rational consolidation which will both aggregate and enlarge the public market for subsidized housing. This pattern for consolidation might permit states to decide whether state action would replace smaller authorities in both nonurban and suburban areas, or whether metropolitan agencies would develop housing in suburban areas.

Since most central cities have been actively pursuing solutions to housing problems, they would not lose their existing jurisdiction under any circumstance, but could conceivably obtain extraterritorial powers to operate in a metropolitan context if the state declined to act in suburban areas itself or to create a new metropolitan agency.

There are other essential ingredients of consolidation. The new housing development vehicles must have the power to preempt local zoning in appropriate circumstances.

Both Massachusetts and New York have adopted techniques for state pre-emption of local zoning -- in the former case a pre-emption specifically to facilitate the construction of low- and moderate-income housing in localities that heretofore have prevented its development. The idea is not novel, but it will not be adopted widely or quickly without a federal incentive behind it.

It should not be assumed that zoning is a problem only outside central cities. To stem the outmigration of industrial and commercial employment, zoning policies are intended to increase the land base available for nonresidential purposes. As a result the bulk of the vacant land remaining in most central cities is zoned out of use for housing (particularly subsidized housing) if there is any prospect of industrial or commercial use. A comprehensive attack, in all jurisdictions, is needed on this problem.

In addition each housing development agency would submit a plan at appropriate intervals, satisfactory to the federal government, indicating the manner in which it proposes to meet low-income housing needs in the area of its operation (state, central city, or metropolitan area). This plan should be sufficient to establish goals by which the federal government and the general public may judge the performance of the agency.

HUD must, accordingly, affirmatively assist in the translation of national housing goals into statewide and metropolitan housing goals. It must spur this process and become a part of it.

Besides reducing the number of agencies and increasing their jurisdiction and ability to function, and thus both aggregating and enlarging the market for publicly assisted housing, a consolidation would facilitate administrative decentralization of the program. At present the federal government processes each project application as though it were a case of first impression, particularly to maintain fiscal and design control. Each project is reviewed, for example to meet (statutory) room cost and (administrative) total development cost limitations and to determine the feasibility of location.

HUD is now actively considering a "proclaimer" policy which would limit federal review to a "post-audit" of project accounts and legal findings. A "post-audit" on the basis of unworkable or rigid formulae will not achieve the degree of decentralization required.

Reducing the number of agencies and enhancing staff capability, together with a more comprehensive planning process with active federal participation and approval, can permit a totally different method of cost accounting and review. Under a new, consolidated approach, the federal cost limits should relate to average cost per person housed over an approved development period -- perhaps two years. Individual dwelling unit cost-formulae (even with special allowances) are loaded against meeting the needs of large poor families, for whom the need is greatest. This would also permit, for example, an "averaging process" to work so that lower land costs in some places can permit land acquisition at a somewhat higher rate elsewhere that would not ordinarily be allowable.

There are overhead costs that would also be saved by consolidation. Some points would be saved, for example, on bond financing. Purchase of equipment on a consolidated basis, which HUD has been trying to get individual authorities to adopt voluntarily, would become part of the new system automatically.

The reduction in number of grantee agencies would vastly simplify HUD's monitoring of the development process. For example, program fund reservations and plans could receive federal approval annually or biennially in accordance with an overall program, without contractual restriction to a particular project or locality. The state, metropolitan area or central city agency could shift its energies and resources readily to apply them to projects that are most important and ready to move. A single contract would govern the relations between the Government and the grantee agency.

Provision for the recapture of excessive expenditures could be made by a cooperation agreement in advance with the state, or the deposit of funds in escrow by the state in return for the advance approval to use federal funds subject only to spot audit or post-audit. Such an account or cooperation agreement might be easier to obtain from states than tiny jurisdictions and, if the incentives below are adopted, would constitute the only non-federal monetary contribution to the program.

This would confine the federal role to overseeing general matters of national policy -- standards of design and technology (only within broad limits), revision of tenant-landlord relations, nondiscrimination, and general contracting methods, and -- most important -- the overall plan for meeting housing needs.

From past experience doubt may arise that federal monitoring of state action in particular will actually go beyond the ministerial acceptance of whatever is proposed. This passivity has resulted in many programs where the federal government could not accomplish directly what it was urging other levels of government to do. With a direct federal power as "last resort", however, it may be expected that the monitor role would be sharpened.

Building Codes

Hand in hand with consolidation and reform at the state and local level must come corrective action to simplify the application of building codes to federally assisted housing. The Housing Assistance Administration and the Federal Housing Administration are attempting to utilize uniform minimum property standards, encompassing building systems certified by HUD in "Operation Breakthrough". The multiplicity of building codes is a demonstrated impediment to interstate commerce. It is time for HUD and the Congress to recognize this and to take action contemplated by the Constitution to regulate this process insofar as federally assisted construction is involved.

Reform of Landlord-Tenant Relations

Consolidation can be made the occasion for the reform of the landlord-tenant relationship. As has been observed, there is a growing gap between the local housing authority commissioner and the beneficiary of the program. This gap underlies some of the tension and malaise which affects the entire program. Consolidation can become the occasion, therefore, for the restructuring of the landlord-tenant relationship.

One alternative would be to abolish housing authority boards and to establish the subsidized housing development process as a direct administrative responsibility of the governor or the mayor of the appropriate jurisdiction and the creation, for each project or group of projects as appropriate, of a board of tenant affairs. The tenant board would be empowered to review and make determinations with respect to admission policies, rent increases, evictions, rules of occupancy, modernization programs, maintenance and other similar matters within guidelines established by the federal government. The tenant board ought to have a staff chosen by it and paid directly by federal funds, to serve its interests in dealings with the housing administrator.

In this way the economies of scale which flow from consolidation can be combined with a mechanism for responsiveness to the intended beneficiaries. The tenant affairs board should also be brought into the process of designing new projects so that their perceptions can influence decisions at the earliest stages.

Under Michigan law, a board of tenants affairs has been created in Detroit's public housing, and a similar measure in Rhode Island applies this idea to projects in that State. Another alternative would retain the present system of housing authority boards or commissions but adopt new rules regarding the representation of tenants on the board. A substantial portion of the board might be elected from among program beneficiaries.

It should not in any event be necessary for these reforms to work their way into 50 state laws when the federal government can open avenues to wholesome change throughout the program in the entire nation.

Better Design and Development

The most imaginative and sensitive designers will inevitably be drawn more readily to a consolidated and reformed program than to the existing system. It will have more "visibility", will have greater continuity and will be lifted out of the depths of patronage which afflicts many local programs. Because it will also attract the more responsible entrepreneurs it will permit a design sensitivity which is thwarted by the fragmented processes now employed. With fewer but potentially better staffed agencies, more mature design review processes will become possible. The greater flexibility of new cost formulae may also breathe life into a program that reaches high levels of design only by the determination of a relatively small group working at odds with the system.

The Ways and Means of Consolidation and Reform

The foregoing recommendations require an interweaving of new patterns of federal and state law.

It first of all requires the creation by the federal government of the following incentives to the states to move to this new level of activity:

1) The payment of full ad valorem real estate taxes on all new low-income housing projects through federal funding for projects undertaken under the new pattern, or existing projects converted to the new pattern. At present public housing (other than leased housing) pays in lieu of taxes well under half what such projects would normally pay to taxing units of government. Yet it is generally recognized that lower-income families will impose higher costs on public services. This rational source of opposition to low-income housing should be removed by federal payment in lieu of taxes of the entire amount that would be paid if such projects were taxed. This new incentive should be made available, however, only for those states which consolidate and reorganize existing and new projects on the basis described.

2) "Supplemental payments" for new projects in metropolitan areas that contribute significantly to a more balanced distribution of low-income families in a metropolitan area, to be used for any public purpose of the local community to meet educational, transportation, health, welfare or other needs of the beneficiaries of the program. For example, the construction of a health clinic or the establishment of transportation facilities serving larger projects may aid significantly in finding sites that would otherwise be inappropriate.

3) Encouraging commercial shopping and recreational facilities as a part of projects undertaken in the new pattern.

Locating suitable sites for new subsidized housing is a problem that would not disappear with new powers of zoning in the development agency and the payment of full taxes. Less expensive land in metropolitan areas or smaller towns is likely to be located on the fringe of the urbanized area, some distance from shopping and other commercial facilities. The introduction of commercial facilities, some of them run cooperatively by tenants themselves in larger projects, would be salutary for projects in the inner city as well as fringe areas. At present the federal subsidy cannot be used to finance commercial facilities and such facilities as exist cannot serve the surrounding neighborhood. Both restrictions should be removed and this incentive made available to projects developed under the new pattern where a commercial use would enable the economic development of project residents without harming competitive enterprises in the area.

4) Enabling consolidated housing development agencies to use the full range of low- and moderate-income housing subsidies. At present the low-income and moderate-income housing programs are compartmentalized. Each has a different vehicle for production at the local level. HUD, however, has now reorganized to place all of its housing production programs under one Assistant Secretary instead of two as formerly was the case. This can facilitate a merger where it is equally in need: at the level where development takes place. If the new development agencies, by contract with private developers or non-profit organizations, trigger development of a full range of housing, some of the political problems surrounding the housing program in many localities would be reduced. This would also rationalize the impenetrable web of regulations entwining the determination of income limits for eligible applicants. At present, income limits for public housing are determined locally but limits for moderate income projects are determined by the Federal government. Both ought to be determined federally.

5) Withdrawing federal funding of low-income housing from all entities other than central cities (of SMSA's) or consolidated entities (state or metropolitan areas) after Fiscal Year 1973, and the withholding of other HUD grants (community facilities, urban renewal, open space, sewer and water) after Fiscal 1973 from localities not participating in a consolidated lower-income housing program by that time.

One way to "stage" this withholding provision would permit states to have the option of consolidation on a State-wide basis (for non-urban areas) or allow state planning regions, for example, to be the "building blocks" of the public market for subsidized housing. In other words, the door could be left open for decision at the state level for "regionalizing" low-income housing providing that the region involved would have a demand sufficient to merit consolidation. In any event, federal incentives alone, without the withholding of related grants, have not proved adequate to spur comprehensive action.

6) New authority for federal direct action when there has been non-performance at State or local levels.

Both the Douglas Commission and the Kaiser Committee have recommended that federal power be used directly, especially where states or localities fail to perform in meeting housing needs. The Kaiser Committee recommended federal powers to pre-empt local zoning codes, and any exclusionary state codes and ordinances, from application to federally subsidized projects, as well as new authority to enable the federal government itself to acquire land for lease to private or public developers of subsidized housing and related facilities. The Douglas Commission would have the federal government act as the "builder of last resort".

The existing system, whereby only about 7% of the units of local government in the nation have ever permitted the use of low-income housing subsidies, is a poor foundation on which to build a "last-resort" mechanism. If we were to conclude that the existing weak incentives and passive federal administration were sufficient to justify direct federal construction in the event of non-performance, the stage would now be set for federal involvement in all but a small number of jurisdictions.

As the preceding discussion has indicated, however, there are resorts ahead of the "last" one which remain to be tried.

As an initial phase it would, therefore, be more fitting to put the energies and resources of the federal government into expanding and improving its programs of assistance to a consolidated system and devising strong incentives and pressures for performance at other levels of government. But a generation of experience has shown that this will not suffice in the absence of a new form of federal involvement in the entire process.

This new form of federal involvement should consist of:

a) The creation of new consolidated institutions with broad powers and jurisdiction as described;

b) The approval by the federal government of a plan by each grantee of its production goals and the "mix" of tools it proposes to use (leasing, "turnkey", 236, 235, elderly housing, contracts with non-profit organizations, etc.) to achieve it;

c) A mechanism whereby a failure at these levels of government would bring into play the full panoply of federal power to acquire land, pre-empt zoning, building, occupancy and other regulations where these new institutions failed to submit a satisfactory plan as required under the consolidated program, did not adequately perform according to an approved plan, or a state declined to adopt consolidation in the first instance.

It is unlikely that the exercise of direct federal power would ever by required. In the event that certain states decline to take any legislative action, however, the stage would clearly be set for federal action. In the event of inadequate planning or poor performance under an approved plan, a "good offices" approach might precede the triggering of federal action. HUD might then initiate meetings with local public and private leaders to make proposals for action and to secure their support for necessary measures. Public meetings or hearings might be held under federal sponsorship, and reports to the Congress might precede federal action.

But the central government must have the power to act to spur responsible leadership at all levels. The system must be designed to stimulate action. It is now designed to frustrate action.

This "package " of incentives and prods would bring about the re-invigoration of the low- and moderate-income housing development process. Indeed, if this comprehensive pattern is not adopted, there is a danger that the low-income housing program will become weakened enormously by the removal of existing residence requirements in public housing.

At present, each locality in the program determines the residence eligibility requirements. One authority, for example, is reputed to require residence for 11 of the preceding 13 years in its projects. The obvious purpose of these requirements, outside central cities, is to prevent new racial balances from being stimulated in this program.

It should be pointed out, in this connection, that residence requirements now in effect in public housing are possibly rendered unconstitutional by virtue of the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Shapiro v. Thompson decided in April, 1969.

In that case the Court held that the one-year residence rule commonly employed by states under welfare assistance legislation "for the purpose of inhibiting migration by needy persons into the state is constitutionally impermissible". It added that"Congress is without power to enlist state cooperation in a joint federal-state program by legislation which authorizes the states to violate the Equal Protection Clause". That is precisely what the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 now does.

Residence requirements for admission to low-income housing will be made uniform throughout the nation, either by court decree or administrative action. When that happens, the program will suffer a severe political setback in many localities unless there is a national comprehensive approach to the program. Without such a comprehensive approach we are in danger of many communities "opting out" because they will fear "attracting" low-income persons from localities that are doing nothing to meet the need.

Advance Land Acquisition

One of the most powerful incentives for housing production deserves special mention. Dissatisfaction with the present and likely future course of urban development in metropolitan areas has led many observers to call for a "national land policy". Such a policy would come into focus if it were linked up particularly with the achievement of already specified national housing goals.

Speculation in land, greatly inflating land costs, is at work in most of the nation's metropolitan areas. A 1965 study of the metropolitan Washington area concluded that raw land values were rising at a rate of fourteen percent a year. Undeveloped land on the fringes of suburban development in Montgomery County, Maryland, in the period 1960 to 1966 increased at a compound rate of twenty-three percent annually. According to a study prepared for the Kaiser Committee, raw land represents the "fastest rising element" of all major housing costs.

This escalation of land costs soon prices low- and moderate-income housing (and needed public facilities) out of the market, even for sites zoned at a density which might otherwise accommodate such housing.

High land costs could be avoided and land reserved for low- and moderate-income housing in suburban areas through the extension and enlargement of the federal advance land acquisition program.

At present, a little known section of the Housing Act of 1965 authorizes only twenty-five million dollars in federal grants to cover the interest costs of advanced acquisition of land for public purposes by localities. This program should be expanded to include sites for low- and moderate-income housing as a public purpose, for which the price of land would be written down. In addition, the funds available for the advance land acquisition program should be greatly increased, possibly through the use of a revolving fund or trust fund concept.

By preserving sites in developing suburban areas for low- and moderate-income housing, opportunities for lower-income families to reside in a suburban area could be gained before there were neighbors to oppose the housing.

Such "land-banking" would permit the public to share in the increased land values resulting from urbanization. Much of the economic benefit generated by public investments in highways and other facilities is now captured by speculators who gain from land-value increments without making much or any contribution themselves. If this gain could be directly recaptured by public authorities it could be used to finance other advance land acquisition investments without imposing added taxes. It might also reduce the impact of land speculation on land prices generally.

In addition to creating low- and moderate-income housing sites, the expanded advance land acquisition program would encourage rational land development in suburban areas by allowing private development to be guided by public facility decisions instead of the other way around.

The new statewide, metropolitan area and central city housing development agencies should be eligible for federal advance land acquisition grants to encourage much larger annual outputs of new housing units.

This could be done by a process similar to that used for federally assisted urban renewal but would involve many parcels that are vacant or largely vacant. The state or metropolitan agency would buy land from existing private owners and resell or lease it to public or private developers at a below-market price in return for guarantees by the purchaser or lessee that development would be carried out in accordance with specific plans.

There are ways of accomplishing this objective by reducing the public cost in the initial stages of the acquisition program. One device would use the sale and lease-back arrangement whereby the public agency would acquire the property but immediately lease it to the present owner, with the proceeds of the lease deposited to the revolving fund.

In 1952 the California legislature created a fund for the advance acquisition of highway rights of way. Properties purchased are rented until it is time to build the highway. The Highway Commission has estimated that $72 millions worth of property would have cost about $400 millions were acquisition deferred till needed immediately.

In addition, housing development agencies should have the power to acquire land condemned by other public bodies, such as state highway commissions or other public works agencies to hold for later development. Land values are created by public investment in highways, particularly at interchanges. Federal-aid highway grants account for nearly half of total outlays for civil public works in 1970: over $4.5 billions. This enormous resource can be tapped to acquire land in advance of need for public purposes and at land values that will permit these expenditures to pay for themselves.

Our national housing goals cannot be met in isolation. They need the help of every facet of our allocation of public resources.

Other techniques are also available:

a. A contingency reserve to acquire sites made available by natural disasters, for example, or those made available by unpredictable offers;

b. Installment purchasing of portions of larger acreages;

c. Pre-emptive purchasing of strategic parcels that prevent speculative development;

d. Excess condemnation in connection with major public works, particularly highways or mass transit facilities.

The federal government would absorb the losses on such sales, if any occurred, but would also benefit from the more likely increase in value from the date of acquisition to the date of disposition.

Land is at the core of our housing problems today. A solution must be fashioned that deals with the problem. Unless this is done we will not have a "national housing policy" worthy of the name, much less a national land policy.

Low Cost Housing Seminar

Statements by Persells and Johnson in the morning session displayed problems of attitude by these representatives of the A.H.A. and F.H.A. that create difficulties because of bureaucratic attitude; these attitudes must be changed in order to achieve more and better housing for low-income families:

a. Distrust of non-profit sponsors, and lack of desire to help them (as opposed to encouraging and helping them).

b. Housing for low-income families should be different or cheaper or of poorer quality; it should encourage a desire to move into better housing (it should be adequate but should not be so nice that people would rather stay than leave).

c. Mr. Persells said that there is no such thing as low-cost housing.

d. Mr. Persells said that the A.H.A. wants tenants to organize, and encourages them to do so, but that it gets a very low rate of response and interest.

Mr. Bruce Gruber provided an excellent history of the evolution of housing programs, mainly Federally-assisted:

a. Public housing

b. Mortgage insurance

c. Housing supplements

He included a discussion of interest rates, and forecast the future results of present programs;

a. Decreasing emphasis on budgeting total housing costs.

b. Problems of future accumulations of interest subsidies.

He mentioned that present aid programs for families' housing ends when the family moves; what is needed is housing assistance that moves with the family.

Confrontations between Mrs. Mandy Griggs and Mr. Persells, and the statements made by Mrs. Griggs, indicate that a vast gap in communications exists between the A.H.A. and its tenants.

THX The audience was advised to contact the A.F.S.C. office for direction in finding advice or assistance on housing.

A number of questions were raised in the form of suggestions on housing policies:

a. Should public housing be taken over by tenants and managed by themselves with a direct subsidy, or sold to private investors and managed with a subsidy, or should the management be handled under a contract with professional real estate managers?

b. In regard to a. above it was noted that most non-profits use such management services.

c. Should any more public housing be built? The whole amount must be appropriated by Congress, instead of just an interest subsidy.

d. Why not provide a housing subsidy for each family that needs it which can be used to obtain the housing it needs off the market anywhere? This would provide instant housing, cost less, be forecastable and controllable year to year, and would take advantage of and stimulate the private housing market. No controlls should be placed on the cost of such housing, no "cost-certification" should be used, and any and all housing should be subject to such use. It is believed that this practice and approach would actually result in lower cost conventional housing since it would tend to lower land costs by removing the "exclusiveness value" from the price of land.

HOUSING

Pittsburgh is a segregated city. According to 1960 census figures 94% (95,267) of the Negro population lived in 52 of approximately 183 census tracts. Estimates are that this number has significantly increased since that time.

Though Negroes comprised 16% of the population of the city in 1960 they occupied 33.3% of the substandard housing units. Of these 13,500 substandard units 10,500 (77.8%) were occupied on a rental basis.

Negroes spend 25.7% of their income for rent. Whites spend 18.2%.

Of the 183 census tracts comprising the city 14 have no Negro population, 45 have less than 1% Negro population.

Negroes make up approximately 18% of the city population but only 3% of the population outside of the city. Most of the Negro population outside of the city limits reside in 3 third-class cities in Allegheny County -- Clairton, McKeesport and Duquesne.

In 1960, 72% of the white population lived outside the city limits compared with 57.6% in 1950. This shows the flight of the white man to the suburbs leaving the inner city to the Negro.

Seventy percent of all Negro households are located on blocks that are 50% or more non-white.

Negroes that make from seven to ten thousand dollars per year are not as well housed as whites who make the same.

Nearly 7 of 10 non white occupied households were located in the Upper-Lower Hill, the Strip, Garfield, East Liberty, Homewood-Brushton and Beltzhoover in 1960.

The majority of newly established non-white households are located in already highly concentrated areas of non-white occupancy.

Three-fourths of the city's residential blocks have no racial integration.

There were substantial differences in the housing conditions of Negro and white families relocated from the Lower Hill Redevelopment area. Although 4 times as many non-white families as white families were relocated, 23 times as many non-white families ended up in substandard housing.

-- help prevent discriminatory practices in the sale and rental of properties, the City of Pittsburgh in 1958 adopted a fair housing ordinance which prohibits discrimination in the sale or rental of all units except those whose owner owns fewer than five units in the City. The law is enforced through the compliance division of the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has an ordinance enforced by the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission which covers all housing accommodations except owner-occupied one- or two-family dwellings. I. Statement of the Problem

It is an established truism that Negroes have been denied equal opportunity in housing both within the City of Pittsburgh, and in certain of the surrounding municipalities. This denial of opportunity to individual human beings has not been fostered by any personal shortcomings, but because of race, color of skin, or country origin. Housing discrimination decrees that all persons of a particular group, regardless of personal qualifications, may not live in certain neighborhoods, but only in certain others. These other neighborhoods, the black ghettoes, are, for the most part, less desirable.

The patterns of discrimination and segregation in Pittsburgh have become institutionalized and constitute a major component of the practices of the housing and real estate industry broadly defined to include real estate brokers and salesmen, landlords, builders, developers, mortgage lending institutions, and government housing agencies. When the normal commercial real estate channels are open to minorities without discrimination, the need for open occupancy programming becomes obsolete.

This problem of discrimination in housing and its effect on the general welfare of the country requires a program comparable to the magnitude of the problem. This means that our efforts must be directed toward changing the policies and practices of the housing and real estate industry.

When the normal commercial real estate channels are open to minorities without discrimination, the need for open-occupancy programming becomes obsolete.

CHOOSE, as a clearing house, maintains a monthly listing of houses and apartments available for sale or rental on an open occupancy basis in the Pittsburgh area. With the cooperation of groups concerned about fair housing, the service attempts to link the supply of available housing to the demand.

HISTORY

CHOOSE was begun in November, 1963 by the Public Affairs Committee of the First Unitarian Church of Pittsburgh to help Negro and other minority group homeseekers to find suitable housing within their resources. Realizing that within the deeply discriminatory system operating in the Pittsburgh area there were individuals who believed in open housing, the group decided to establish a clearing house 1) of listings of properties available to all seekers, and 2) of families desiring such housing.

The service was begun in January 1964 with advice from a real estate broker, a lawyer, a human relations expert, and citizens who had participated in similar earlier attempts. A monthly listing of properties available on the open market was published and distributed by groups interested in the work. Under the direction of ~~Mrs. Edith Buss, who acted~~ as Coordinator, with the assistance ~~of Mrs. Joy~~ Falk and the Reverend ~~Philip~~ Silk, housing aides from among the church members were assigned to accompany prospective homeseekers in looking at homes and apartments. Aides were especially useful in locating housing for families moving to Pittsburgh from other cities.

By July 1965 ~~when Mrs. Buss moved from the city~~, 132 families had used the service. CHOOSE had obtained 175 listings, and 318 referrals had been made to homes on the CHOOSE lists. In October 1965, ~~Mrs. Inez McDonald began as~~ the Director began to give leadership in extending the service to the community by involving organizations interested in fair housing. Increasing demand for housing necessitated the system of Coordinators to work in various areas.

Through fair housing groups CHOOSE has enlarged its list of volunteers from the original group to the broader community; it has begun to enlarge its role within the Pittsburgh area; and it has participated in a variety of ways in the fair housing movement.

REPORT OF ACTIVITIES

ATTAINMENT OF GOALS

A major strength of CHOOSE is the fact that such a service exists and provides an opportunity that is not available through any other group or agency. The goals of the organization have been identified by volunteers as the following:

More differe To help minority group families to find suitable housing;
To promote integration;
To achieve open occupancy.

The fact that there ~~is~~ was a dedicated core of volunteers and leadership who are willing to devote much time and energy without hope of personal reward has been the outstanding reason for the continuance of the organization. An interested and dedicated individual may give as much or as little time as he or she wishes in any of several phases of the group activities. Those who have received service become part of the chain for its continuance. (explain)

The organized support of named and unnamed groups, churches, associations, and agencies concerned about the problem of fair housing has been basic in extending the services of CHOOSE to the larger community in and around Pittsburgh. The cooperating groups secured listings, provided aides, and donate supplies for the maintenance of the service.

Through informing citizens of their rights and responsibilities under the fair housing laws of the City and State, volunteers have helped to interpret the Pittsburgh Human Relations Ordinance and the Pennsylvania Human Relations Act.

The positive results of obtaining homes for minority group members, as shown by statistics, in no way indicates the time, attention, devotion, and indirect education which accomplishes the goals of CHOOSE.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

CHOOSE has worked with at least 1000 ~~345~~ individuals or families within the five-year period, January 1964 to January 1967. Through its direct or indirect efforts, 300 homeseekers found housing in the Greater Pittsburgh area. Of that number, 244 secured units in areas which were 95 to 100 per cent white, and 45 moved into integrated (40 to 95 per cent white) sections. ~~No records have been kept of additional moves into an area after the arrival of a pioneer family.~~

The data provided do not accurately measure the extent to which help given by CHOOSE may have been a factor in the final move. Fifty-seven per cent of the registrants whose new address was known moved into predominantly white areas. Though thirteen per cent moved into integrated areas, efforts were made to prevent the formation of new ghettoes.

A far greater portion of registrants seek rental than sale housing. The number of persons who actually found housing shows five times as many rental units as houses bought. Of those who found housing with CHOOSE help, 76 per cent secured rental units, and 20 per cent purchased homes. Of a total of 282 housing units which have been listed by homeowners, only six per cent have been sold through advertising on the CHOOSE lists. Additional listings are secured from brokers, banks, FHA, VA, and universities in the area.

In terms of the total need, the activities of CHOOSE have not solved the problem of housing for minority group members in proportion to the need for decent housing. Nevertheless, in providing a tool by which some upward-mobile families have been able to find housing suitable to their needs and resources, CHOOSE has encouraged a greater number of Negroes to seek housing outside of overcrowded areas.

Include

ADMINISTRATION

Volunteers give service in a variety of ways to accomplish the goals of CHOOSE:

The service is administered by an Advisory Committee made up of individuals from the various cooperating groups and others with specialized knowledge in the field of housing. The Advisory Committee names the Director and Assistant Directors, who are responsible for interpreting the policies to the public, organizing activities in relation to cooperating groups, and receiving and assembling listings and reports.

The fair housing groups associated with the service furnish Area Co-ordinators for the City, North, East, South, and West Areas, and in outlying communities. Coordinators assume the responsibility of recruiting Aides and locating homes in their areas. They accept calls from homeseekers and homeowners and arrange for inspection of homes.

Aides are secured through fair housing groups to help and advise persons who are seeking homes in the neighborhood. The intensity of service provided by Aides ranges from simply giving leads, encouragement and advice to locating available housing, discovering the suitability of units, and furnishing escort service.

Clerical volunteers may not work directly with homeseekers, but are responsible for organizing, assembling, and mimeographing listings, writing letters, publishing a newssheet, or designing displays.

Other volunteers perform specific tasks involved in the overall procedure of securing listings of available housing and helping to create a receptive community climate for non-white families moving into a neighborhood. A CHOOSE volunteer is a person dedicated to the ideal of equal housing for all people.

ACTIVITIES

A. Listing Service

The monthly or bi-monthly listing of homes available on the open market is the primary activity of the Clearing House for Open Occupancy SElections. A Listings Secretary collects the information concerning homes offered and prepares the list for duplication. Volunteers arrange for the distribution of listings to churches, clubs, and agencies which might bring them to the attention of potential clients.

The first CHOOSE list of January 1964 had nine homes for sale ranging in price from $8,500 to $28,000, and five units for rent. The list of November-December 1966 showed 87 sale properties ranging in price from $5,000 to $38,500 with 52 homes in the $10,000-$20,000 category. The limited housing supply in the Pittsburgh area has made it impractical to list units offered for rent.

The listings provide the phone numbers of Area Coordinators and Rental Supervisor, but do not give the names of owners or locations of property advertised. A homeseeker calls the designated number and is referred or introduced to the seller, landlord, or broker who is handling the property. Homeowners who list their properties are informed of homeseekers who may be interested in viewing them.

Property listings are secured by members of fair housing groups through phone calls to owners, visits to real estate brokers, and through the open housing lists of governmental agencies, universities, and banks. Listings are shared with prospective buyers, Negro real estate agents, and cooperating groups, with the owner's permission.

Additional listing with a fair housing broker is recommended.

B. Housing Aide Service

Housing Aides are the direct link with the homeseeker in locating available housing in a neighborhood. Aides provide the family with information about the community, advertised housing, supportive individuals, and the fair housing laws, when necessary.

When a homeseeker phones an Area Coordinator for suggestions of listings, he is immediately assigned to an Aide who contacts him. To find the housing desired, intensive activity may be necessary, including phone calls in answer to all newspaper ads, visits to realtors, trips throughout the community seeking "For Sale" or "For Rent" signs, and actual inspection of properties.

The CHOOSE Aide maintains contact with the family, if desired, throughout the househunting process, which may be stretched into a lengthy period. Devious discriminatory practices make the process arduous and time-consuming. When discrimination is met or suspected, homeseekers are encouraged to file complaints with the Mayor's Commission on Human Relations or the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission, both of whose services are available. The Commissions provide assistance in securing housing covered by the city and state laws.

It has been found necessary to extend the service of CHOOSE into all phases of the housing transaction: locating houses, visiting properties, choosing the residence, securing a fair lawyer, receiving financial advice, securing a mortgage, and moving into a new community.

A family may consult CHOOSE at any point in the househunting process for an Aide to provide information about a neighborhood, prices, values, fair brokers, or an explanation of other available services. A rewarding aspect of the often frustrating search for housing by a non-white family is the fact that the homeseeker may become a volunteer for CHOOSE and a member of a fair housing group.

SIGNIFICANCE OF CHOOSE

Open occupancy in housing depends upon the actions and activities of people living in their communities. Volunteers have shown the important role they can play in providing opportunities for minority group members to seek better housing. A core of concerned individuals in a neighborhood can promote a climate of acceptance which makes peaceful integration possible.

The process of meeting the vital and pressing housing needs of upward-mobile persons, as well as out-of-towners, who meet discrimination has been time-consuming, frustrating, and often discouraging. The courage and tenacity of both volunteers and homeseekers have built trust and friendship between persons of varied backgrounds.

Cooperation of groups concerned about open housing has established a working venture which advances freedom of choice in the Pittsburgh area. The support of such groups encourages homeseekers to choose housing which meets their needs and resources in hitherto unintegrated areas.

Increased knowledge and acceptance of fair housing laws broadens the opportunities of the homeseeker and strengthens the effectiveness of the work of the City and State human relations commissions.

In the Pittsburgh area, much of the good quality housing is in neighborhoods which have not been open to minority group members. The success of these families in moving into new areas is vital in creating a firm, stable, and responsible community leadership.

As a volunteer group offering a free service in metropolitan Pittsburgh since January 1964, the Clearing House for Open Occupancy SElections provides an opportunity for all concerned about human values to work together in creating a progressive and truly open community.

C. Cooperating Groups

CHOOSE depends upon the support of a number of organizations and agencies for its activity and growth. Members of the Associations for Racial Equality in South Hills, Penn Hills, North Hills, Allegheny Valley, and Sewickley Valley have provided a liaison with their communities. The Urban League mimeographs the listings; the Catholic Interracial Council, the Jewish Community Relations Council, the Young Women's Christian Association, and the First Unitarian Church have provided other stenographic and mailing services. Aides are supplied by these groups, as well as the Council of Jewish Women, Citizens for a Better City, and the Society of Friends. Operation Equality.

Additionally, Hill House Association, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Pittsburgh Area Religion and Race Council, Pittsburgh Presbytery, Methodist Board of Christian Social Concern, and numerous churches have provided support of various types. Through a cooperative venture of interested groups, a Workshop on Housing Opportunities was held in March, 1966. Specific proposals for future activities of fair housing groups were made and are being implemented.

D. Community Education

In broadening opportunities for minority groups to secure housing on the open market, CHOOSE has become involved in other phases of community life. Speakers from fair housing groups have sought the support of civic organizations. Representatives of CHOOSE participate in the Greater Pittsburgh Fair Housing Movement, the Allegheny County Council on Civil Rights, the Citizen-Clergy Coordinating Committee, and other groups. Testifying before City Council for a stronger fair housing ordinance, working with real estate brokers, industries, banks, and universities to secure their willingness to share listings; training volunteers; and helping groups to plan activities relating to housing have been some other aspects of CHOOSE work.

Based on reports from the 8 participating Urban League affiliates covering the period January 1, 1965 to June 30, 1966, there were over 4,000 requests for the Housing Services, over 3,000 listings were received and over 575 families bought or rented homes. Over 200 complaints of discrimination were filed with state and city anti-bias agencies. The demonstrated success of this program in one region gave impetus to the view that the adoption of this program in other metropolitan areas would make a significant contribution toward achieving open-occupancy. The expansion of this program was made possible by a Ford Foundation grant in the amount of $1.5 million for three years. The first city to participate in this project is Cleveland, Ohio. In the Spring of '67 two more cities are expected to join the program - Seattle, Washington and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, miami, Fla. Rochester New York, New York City.

Objective

The major goal of "Operation Equality" is:

To establish a "truly" open-housing market where all families may live where they wish, based upon their ability to pay.

Program Implementation

To establish an open-housing market, effective social forces within the community must be mobilized. This will be accomplished through the utilization of the following program components:

Metropolitan Council

This council will be used to mobilize all the community resources to increase and improve the housing supply and to assure equal access to the supply by all segments of the population.

Neighborhood Offices

This facet of the operation would seek to locate and activate potentially mobile families.

Housing Information Services

A listing of housing opportunities will be compiled by voluntary commitments as well as by those opportunities covered by the fair housing law.

A listing of families seeking these opportunities would also be established and maintained.

Fair Housing Activities

Community education programs in white suburbia and white areas of the center city will be conducted.

Volunteers

For each of these program components, volunteers must be recruited, oriented to the program, and trained to assist and counsel families.

Housing Guide to Equal Opport.

Suitable living environment and stable, racially inclusive occupancy patterns do not occur through law or by chance. They result from motivation, imaginative planning, and positive management. Enough has been said about the evils of sheer compliance with minimum requirements of the law. Racial balance can be achieved by affirmative marketing techniques. If there is greater pressure from the Negro market, special measures can be taken to recruit more white families. If too few nonwhites are applying, special recruitment can be directed to the Negro market.

Physical Setting

Location, convenience, design and price are more important than allowing influencing families to live in integrated neighborhoods than the presence or absence of people of other races.

3) partially subsidized moderate income housing seems to offer the best prospect for integration. It is at this economic level that the greatest of the white and nonwhite market occurs.

4. The special Govt assistance available to non-profit and Cooperative sponsors encourages many socially motivated organizations and private firms to enter the housing field, and the advantageous financial terms make it feasible to cater to a socially inclusive market.

5. There must be a policy decision and plan for racial inclusiveness

What we need now is a sense of urgency, the kind of determined action that I think we could expect from businessmen if suddenly they were faced with a threat of the nationalization of industry or a tax bill which would work severe hardships on their businesses.

We should expect from the labor leaders of this country the kind of urgency and excitement and activity that we could expect if they were faced with compulsory collective bargaining legislation or strengthening of the Taft-Hartley Bill.

I think we should expect from the religious leaders the kind of commitment and urgency they would exhibit if they were suddenly told that they were no longer going to be tax exempt institutions.
